DURING the period in the field, the writer's attention was devoted entirely to sociological and religious investigation, and no attempt was made either to analyse the intricacies of the Bella Coola language or to record texts. This part of the monograph consists only of words which were collected fortuitously, and no effort was made to compile an exhaustive list, or even a representative one. This explains the preponderence of proper names, and the large number of nouns connected with rituals of all kinds, some of which are rapidly disappearing from common usage. Many of these were used by the writer continually in gathering technical data, and their interpretation is unquestionably correct. A few words, however, were not rechecked on different occasions, or from different informants, so that some errors may have crept in, either in translation or in recording. No terms have been employed of which the writer has any real doubt, but the same accuracy is not claimed for this vocabulary as for the monograph as a whole. Lack of knowledge of Bella Coola grammar made it impracticable to utilize the words recorded in the songs, since many of them include affixes and other structural elements that affect the root.

128 ● 192* [114] [193]

In listing the words alphabetically, the following arbitrary system of letter order has been followed and all symbols have been disregarded, for example, a and á are not separated.

a follows a.
ə follows a.
e follows e.
i follows i.
l follows L. u follows u.

A

a'alk: 1—Loosely organized society of which the members can perform four types of dance.
2—Member of the society.
Ahnkha: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Abeikim: Chief of sea-lions in the beginning of time.
ábenk, vocative, ábeenk: Resident.

192* [575]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948

NE6 Bellacoola NE6

102
103
131
133

Map of the Bella Coola area

[facing p. 1]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

101
102
131
133

Map of the Bella Coola area

[P. X]

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

SYMPATHETIC MAGIC AND WITCHCRAFT AMONG THE BELLACOOLA

By HARLAN I. SMITH

177 754 789 [797] [658] [464] MANY OF the Bellacoola Indians today believe in sympathetic magic and witchcraft, after over a hundred years of contact with white men. Most of them live within hearing of the bells of the mission church, and the government school. Not a few of the men take logging contracts; some of them build and operate motor boats; many of them join the fishing fleets of the salmon canneries; most of the women work in the canneries; and all deal at the white men's stores.

101 ●131 [160] The Bellacoola lived at the heads of the long inlets half way up the Pacific Coast of Canada and in the tributary Bella Coola valley. Now, numbering perhaps two hundred and fifty, they, with the exception of a few families, are concentrated on one reservation at the mouth of the Bella Coola river. The Bella Coola valley has been called the Norway of Canada. This was where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada overland, reached the sea.

105 Aboriginally, the Bellacoola were of the North Pacific Coast culture of America, which is characterised by the extensive use of red cedar and sea products, particularly salmon, the making of graceful, sea-going canoes, each hewn from a single cedar, the erection of large rectangular houses made of cedar planks, with carved house posts and totem poles, lack of pottery, and expertness in carpenter work, carving, and painting. This culture belongs to the barefoot area, but the Bellacoolas wore moccasins to a certain extent. The art of the area was that best known from the paintings and carvings of the totem poles, largely of conventionalized animal forms. The life centred around a very highly developed social organization, an extensive and powerful financial system, and property rights to names, rituals and honors. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. They

4: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6, Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

ENTOMOLOGY AMONG THE BELLACOOLA AND CARRIER INDIANS

By HARLAN I. SMITH

B 131

THE Bellacoola Indians live in the Norway of Canada, about midway of the Pacific Coast, where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada, reached the sea; that is, about half way between Vancouver and Prince Rupert. Their country is around the head of the inlets about sixty miles in from or east of Ocean Falls and the usual route of the steamers up and down the coast. This island passage is with few exceptions protected by the outer fringe of islands. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. The people are of the typical North Pacific Coast culture, characterized by the extensive use of red cedar and sea products, especially salmon, huge houses of split cedar planks with carved house posts, and totem poles, and immense seagoing canoes dug out of cedar. They were expert carpenters and had a peculiar art, especially in painting and carving, largely of conventionalized animal forms—a valuable contribution to the art of the world. This art may become of great financial value to the manufacturers of this country as well as a magnet capable of exploitation to bring in tourists with money from foreign lands. These Indians had a very highly developed social organization, many dramas and rituals, and a complex financial system popularly known as the potlatch.

B 105

C 101 [131]

The Carrier Indians of Ulkatcho, on the other hand, live in the high plateau of the semi-arid region, perhaps 75 miles northeast of the Bellacoola. They differ from the Bellacoola in language, appearance, and culture perhaps as much as do the Turks from the English. They had a less realistic art, which was largely geometric and pictographic, highly conventionalized and symbolic. Their social organization and financial system also were less highly developed.

B C 114 104

From time to time during 1920-1923 inclusive, I have secured from both these peoples data about their use of materials. Part

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE8
Carrier NE9
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

MATERIA MEDICA OF THE BELLA COOLA AND NEIGHBOURING TRIBES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

By Harlan I. Smith

INTRODUCTION

This paper describes the materia medica of four tribes of British Columbia, the Bella Coola of Bella Coola valley, the Gitksan of Skeena river, the Carrier who live in the territory behind both of these tribes, and the Sikani of the headwaters of Peace river. Among the Bella Coola the medicines are largely family possessions known to a few individuals only, so that two families may have different remedies for the same specific complaint; but this is not the case among the other tribes. Everywhere magical practices enter largely into the treatment of disease, but are not touched upon in this report. It was impossible for the Indians to diagnose many of their maladies, so that the identifications given here are in many cases problematical.

Most of the information relating to the Bella Coola was given the writer in 1920-22, by Joshua Moody, apparently a full-blood Bella Coola Indian, born about 1868. As he did not speak English he gave the data in Chinook jargon, which has been interpreted and arranged in logical order. Joshua is an Indian scientist with great knowledge of the local plants and animals. He remembers when Mr. John Clayton was the only white man living in Bella Coola valley, and when the inhabitants saw only one other white man every year or two. Consequently he can recall the old Bella Coola material culture before it was much affected by European ideas.

Some of the information relating to the Bella Coola was given the writer in 1922-23 by the late Captain Schooner, also, apparently, a full-blood, born about 1848, who used the Chinook jargon. Alec Davis, Alexander Clelman, Louie Hall, and other Bella Coola Indians likewise gave information and corroboration.

Most of the information relating to the Southern Carrier Indians of Ulkatcho was secured during 1920-1922 from Charlie West, alias Pretty Charlie or Handsome Charlie, a native of that place, born about 1871. Charlie used the peculiar form of broken or pidgeon English commonly employed for communication between the whites and the Carrier and Chilcotin Indians of this region.

The information about the Sikani and the Northern Carriers of Hagwelget is from stray field notes kindly supplied by Mr. D. Jenness.

The information relating to the Gitksan was secured in 1923-26 from the late John Fowler and Abraham Fowler of Kitwanga, Luke Fowler and Bob Robinson of Hazelton, with additions and corroboration from a few others, all old Gitksan Indians, apparently full-blood. The information was secured mainly in English, although Abraham Fowler used also the Chinook jargon.

The method the writer employed was to submit specimens of the plants to his informants and question them concerning all their uses. Of the information thus obtained only the medicinal portion has been presented here. The plants were later identified by Mr. M. O. Malte, of the National Museum, Ottawa.

B
E
S 121
757
101
31
B 424
B 115
191
C 115
C 198
S 127
T
115
T 191
B
E
S 129
122

18:Ernst E-4, 5 (1932-1940)1952
NEII Nootka NEII
Quileute NEIL Makah NEIM
Bella Coola NEL
[p4]
NSK
102
103
131
133
B 102
131

From map prepared by W. A. Newcombe for the Provincial Museum, Victoria, B.C.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

824 their houses. Dishes, benches, cooking-boxes, cradles, totem-
[322] poles, canoes, all were carved from this wood. The bark was [285] woven into baskets, and when dyed formed the most common [531] ceremonial decoration.

Even within the forty miles of the river valley formerly 132 occupied by the Bella Coola there are considerable variations in climate. At the mouth of the river the typical Pacific coast type is found, without great extremes of temperature and with much rain, especially in winter time. During winter, the moisture is precipitated as snow a few hundred feet above the valley, and the limit of the snow can be watched on the mountain slopes, rising or falling a few feet from day to day. Farther up the valley, the winters are colder and in many cases snow lies for weeks on the ground, and in the upper part of the Bella Coola area the winters are severe, although much more moderate than on the upper regions immediately to the east.

173 What has been the history of the inhabitants of this land?
[776] They believe that long, long ago, Ałquntām, the supreme god, caused their first ancestors to be created in his house, Nusmāt·a, in the land above, and sent them down to populate the Bella Coola valley. These first people came in groups of two or three, brothers and sisters, or occasionally man and wife, each group descending, in many cases in animal form, to a certain mountain and then making their home at its foot. They brought with them animals and fish, tools and houses, also the knowledge of ceremonial dances. In fact, they differed from the Bella Coola of the recent past only in having greater supernatural power. These first people increased with extraordinary rapidity, until each group grew into a village, bound together by a knowledge of their first ancestor. In 173 course of time the occupants of certain villages combined, as 361 some increased more rapidly than others, but on the whole each settlement maintained its character of being the descendants of one group of the first settlers of this world.

[175] This mythological belief is a fair picture of Bella Coola life as it was when the first white man visited the valley. Mac-

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 194
N
Bellacoola NE6

102
103
131
●133

Map of the Bella Coola area

[facing p. 1]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER I

LOCATION AND ENVIRONMENT

Location—Bella Coola Villages—Tribal Organization—Neighbouring Tribes

Location

"BELLA COOLA" is the common designation of those Indians who, until a few years ago, inhabited the valley of the Bella Coola River in central British Columbia. Boas has recorded[1] that the name is a mis-pronunciation of Bilxula,[2] a Kwakiutl word of doubtful origin which white pioneers assumed to be the appellation of the people in question. There is no term in their own language to include the groups treated in this monograph. Linguistically, the Bella Coola form an isolated island of Salish-speaking people, separated from others of the same stock by tribes of Athapascan and Kwakiutl lineage.[3] Culturally, they belong to the central section of the North Pacific coast area.[4]

The Bella Coola River rises among the mountainous uplands of central British Columbia. Its two main branches fall rapidly, about forty-five miles from the sea, into two deep gorges which unite, some five miles farther on, to form the valley of the Bella Coola. Down this the river rushes in serpentine curves (see Plate 5). Too shallow and too rapid for the use of large boats, even if such had been known to the Bella Coola, it serves to bear their dug-out canoes, each hewn from some mighty cedar. The valley is never wider than two or three miles and is hemmed in by lofty snow-capped moun-

[1] The Mythology of the Bella Coola Indians (Memoirs of the American Museum of Natural History, 1898), vol. II, part 2, p. 25. Repeated reference will be made to this work, and when Boas is quoted without further description, the reference will be to this memoir.

[2] Pronounced Bilxwala by a Kimsquit man endeavouring to quote a Kwakiutl.

[3] Boas, p. 26.

[4] Clark Wissler, The American Indian (2nd ed., New York, 1922), p. 227.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 tains. From each pocket between these mountains an ice-
137 cold affluent comes swirling down to the main river. The predominant tree in the river valleys is the cedar[1] which in many cases attains great girth and height. Cottonwoods flourish in places, and everywhere there is an almost impenetrable undergrowth of devil's club, berry bushes, and other shrubbery of almost tropical density. On the lower slopes of the mountains, moss-festooned pines and spruces are the most common trees, gradually becoming smaller and fewer until the 133 barren peaks are reached. The mountains rise so precipitously that their snowcaps and glaciers seem to overhang the valley, a narrow ribbon of green winding far below. The range of vision from the bank of the river is limited by the all-encircling mountains. Here and there a distant vista opens up to expose peak after peak, but on the whole there is a feeling of confinement, in contrast with the open wastes of the upper country where the Bella Coola rises. Mountains, forests, flowing water, these are the three dominant impressions of the country (see Plate 6).

136 The mammals of central British Columbia, although comparatively common, have never been of primary importance.
[291] The marten, the wolverine, the lynx, and bears, both black and grizzly, were formerly hunted for their skins to serve as [262] cloaks. Deer were killed whenever possible, but formed a negligible item of diet. The beaver also was prized for its [439] flesh. The skins of moose and caribou were traded from the Carrier Indians, but neither of these animals was found in the [286] Bella Coola area. The mammal of greatest economic importance was the mountain goat, the wool of which was woven into [237] blankets. Smoked goat meat was formerly found in every [251] house and was almost the only flesh available during the winter. Small game was abundant, but seals were a luxury.
[262] Neither were birds of great importance to the Bella Coola.
[223] Members of the tribe resident near the sea-coast used to kill

[1]Appendix C contains a glossary of the scientific names of the flora and fauna mentioned in this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 [164] [177] [182]

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 [124] [175]

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nulxₓtskwan·e winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Necleetsconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe·ɜslo, a small stream rising 133 [103]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 on the northern side of the Bella Coola valley, east of the Necleetsconnay. Before merging their waters with North Bentinck Arm the three flow more slowly and there are extensive tide-flats (see Plate 8). Several villages formerly clustered 361 around their mouths.

(1) Q̓āmeux: on the west bank of the Necleetsconnay about three-quarters of a mile from the sea. Nothing is known of this long-abandoned village of which even the name is uncertain. The mountain that rises behind its site is called Q̓āmeux, and it is supposed that the village had the same designation. Some of the older people state that there was no town, only a temporary hunting station, at this spot.

(2) T̓əsällumx̣, "Short Feet": on the very shore of North Bentinck Arm, west and north of the mouth of the Necleetsconnay. The fiord terminates in a tolerably square end, running north and south, and this town was at the northern edge. It was built on piles and the inhabitants could step to the ground only at low tide. This is the explanation given of the peculiar name, a reference to the curtailed walking space. Long ago it was a large town, but was probably occupied only [166] during the winter. In summer the people are believed to have moved to Numäm·uc, "The Place of Flies," on the north side of North Bentinck Arm, about one mile from its head.

[712] *(3) Ält̓qäläxl, "The Fenced Town," so called because it was stockaded: near the south bank of the Pe·əslə, about a quarter of a mile from the sea, near the site of the present mission church. It was inhabited until about 1870. According to one informant this village was founded by a certain T̓äxlexwam, a descendant of T̓aiakwala, who decided to move close to the river.

(4) T̓łoq̓o·tl, "Small Mound," so called from the knoll on which it was situated: above Ält̓qäläxl, and about one-half mile to the north of the present Bella Coola River. Its site is crossed by the road connecting the Indian village of Bella Coola with the white settlement of the same name.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 the north bank of the Bella Coola,[1] near the lower slope of the mountain, and about three miles from the sea. It is probable that there was a town at this spot very long ago, according to the statement of one old man, and the numerous repositories (II, p.8) in the vicinity support this view.

*(11) Sınxł, "Sunny," or "Fallen Sun": on the south side of the Bella Coola opposite the preceding. It was deserted about 1907. This was a fairly large town, though never as big as Q̣omqo·ts. The name is derived from Sun, sınx, and there [173] are two explanations given for it. One informant states that [178] the name came from the many revelations of the Sun to the first people there; another that the first chief, said to have been named Stälımx, erected a large totem-pole, decorated with the figure of a sun. This blew down, in consequence of which the people called their town Sınxł, "Fallen Sun."

*(12) Sqomełł: on the south side of the Bella Coola about three miles from the sea, and a short distance below the end of the present bridge. The meaning of the name is unknown.

*(13) Tcımotł, "Where the River Is Sufficiently Deep to Cover the Stones, but Shallow Enough for Rapids": the upper continuation of the last-named. It was deserted during the [164] smallpox epidemic. The name of the chief who came there [173] at the beginning of time was given as Ṫswakilak.

(14) Sno'oniqwlx, "On the Point": on a curving promontory on the south bank of the river about four miles from the sea. It was long ago swept away when the river changed its course.

(15) Nu'exmäq, "The Place of Foul Water": on the north [133] bank of the Bella Coola a little above the preceding, at a place where there were a number of stagnant pools between the river and the mountains. No one knows how long ago this town was abandoned; but as the names of people living there figure in stories which are said to be of no great antiquity, it [133] [1]The river frequently changes its course, so that village sites now at a considerable distance from it may once have been on its banks.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 able for axes, which occurs in the valley of a small stream on [316] the slope of the mountain.

*(23) Nulleax, "The Place Where There Are No Falls": an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this creek about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still [175] standing about 1870. Mackenzie reached the Bella Coola River at this place. At the time of his arrival the population was [166] larger than usual, because the salmon-weir had withstood
[226] some heavy freshets which had destroyed several weirs on the Bella Coola, and driven the inhabitants of other villages to Nulleax.

[133] It is said that the affluent at Nulleax, the stream Xaiqts, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a ravine leading to the main river. Its source is a spring at the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down these. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Nusnäxıngkt, and it is said that some families living on the Skeena sing of it as the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

*(24) Stuux: on the point between the La'xılx (Atnarko) and Sla·kl (Whitewater) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name is unknown.

(25) Qwliutl, "The Place of Herbage": on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the forks. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was [137] given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

[133] (26) Snuhk·tl, "The Place of Falls," so called from the strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point: on the north side [173] of the river about ten miles from the forks. This large town was long ago deserted when a large rock in the midst of the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indians from both of these areas were interviewed and it was found that, except for minor details in certain beliefs, their customs were identical with those of the Bella Coola proper. Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bella Coola" will be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of that valley, but of South Bentinck Arm and the head of Dean Channel. Those living on South Bentinck Arm will be referred to as Täl·io people, the Bella Coola term for them; those of Dean Channel as Kimsquit, the name by which they are generally known. It is an anglicized form of the word Kimgkwit, meaning "Canyon," by which the Bella Bella designate the people of Dean River. 101 619

VILLAGES ON SOUTH BENTINCK ARM

(28) Sätlia: on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junction with North Bentinck Arm. Food was obtained from an ocean fish-trap.[11] Long deserted except as a summer camp. 361 [226]

(29) Qankilst, "Island": east side of South Bentinck Arm, slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Springs on the west side of the fiord. The town took its name from this island. In summer the numerous inhabitants lived immediately opposite it, at a place where they had an ocean salmon-trap; in winter they moved to a fortified spot at the base of a mountain slightly farther to the north. This village was blotted out by a landslide one spring long ago, and the few survivors were unable to re-establish it. [133] [226] [221] [731]

*(30)[14] Tsaoltmem: on the east side of the fiord about four miles above the last-named. A small town, whose inhabitants lived on the catch from their ocean fish-trap; it was recently deserted. [226]

[11]Ocean fish-traps work as follows:—A pen is made by a series of stakes, into which the salmon enter at high tide. It is then closed and, as the falling tide lays bare the mud, the imprisoned fish can be scooped out by hand or in hand-nets.

[14]Mackenzie did not visit either South Bentinck Arm, or Kimsquit, but it will be convenient to continue the use of asterisks to mark those towns which are said to have been inhabited at that time. [175]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 (31) Ḱxdis, "Ocean Fish-Trap": on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the Nuik" River. [226] It is doubtful whether this was a town, or merely a camping place of the people of Nuik" when using their salmon-trap.

*(32) Nuik": on a raised mound at the south side of the mouth of the Nuik" River, which enters the head of South [731] Bentinck Arm from the east. The meaning is unknown. This [164] was a populous town until the inhabitants were decimated by an epidemic of smallpox.

*(33) Täl·io: on the west side of the mouth of the river of the same name which flows into South Bentinck Arm from the south. The location of this village was constantly changed, [133] owing to destructive variations in the course of the river. It was formerly a large town, and has been deserted only since 1900. This village had another name, Ṭqwantłos, "Facing," so called because its houses faced those of the town of Nuik".

*(34) Ȧs·ux", "At the Head": at the head of South Bentinck Arm there is a bay running south-west, into the upper end of which a small stream empties. The trail leading to the [487] lake at the head of Rivers Inlet follows this valley. Ȧs·ux" was located on this creek, at some little distance from the ocean; the name was derived from the geographical location of the town. It has not long been deserted and must have been a populous place to judge from the numerous repositories (II, p. 8).

(35) Q̓wapx: on the east side of the mouth of a creek flowing into the bay at the head of South Bentinck Arm, from the south. This town was of moderate size. The meaning of the name is unknown. It is thought to be in the Rivers Inlet language.

VILLAGES AT KIMSQUIT

[133] Two rivers, the Dean from the east, and the Kimsquit from the north, flow into the head of Dean Channel, and the villages of this area can be grouped according to the two rivers.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

THE ıstämx[1]

BB
BC
563
361
[164
101
197]

Before the smallpox epidemic, about 1865, there were towns on the fiords and villages of Dean Channel between Kimsquit and Bella Bella. The inhabitants were called ıstämx by the Bella Coola, and ıstaitx by the Bella Bella. Their settlements were at Elcho Harbour, Green River, Cascade Inlet, and at several unidentified places. Their language is said to have differed slightly from that of the Bella Bella, but the people themselves married freely with both Kimsquit and Bella Bella, thus forming a connecting link between these tribes.

A list of ıstämx towns was obtained from one old man, who claimed to be a descendant of the people. It was impossible to verify this information, and since he himself was not an ideal informant, the following can be regarded only as approximately correct.

(1) Ällko: at Elcho Harbour.

(2) Kılde·t: on a fiord one mile above the last-named.

(3) Ällhk or Yuqwa·t: on a river three miles above the preceding.

(4) Nuwaisä·x: on a river two miles above the preceding.

(5) Nusqatl: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(6) 'Omlıom: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(7) Ṣuxwlk: on a river two miles above the last-named and thirty miles below Kimsquit.

According to the old man from whom the above list was obtained, Nuxwlst, at Kimsquit, recorded earlier as village no. 45, was also populated by ıstämx people. There was so much intermarriage between the two groups that it is now impossible to ascertain whether the inhabitants not only of Nuxwlst, but of Suxwlk as well, were predominantly Kimsquit or ıstämx.

BC
484
133
[648]

The open plateau in which the Bella Coola River rises has always made travel possible for long distances, so that not only

1 [A Bellacoola term for the people of mixed Bellabella - Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of Dean Channel" - See 2: McIlwraith, cat. 116, p584 - Analyst]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NF5

133 the neighbouring Carriers, but Chilkotin as well sometimes 484 descended to the valley. On the coast, though the dense under-[648] brush prevented travel along the shore, the long fiords, sheltered from the open Pacific, were ideal for the use of canoes.[16] [501] Comparatively lengthy journeys were neither difficult nor 648 uncommon. The Täl·io people were usually on amicable terms with the inhabitants of Rivers Inlet, and the Kimsquit with the Kitlobe. The Bella Coola were accustomed to attend [574] potlatches at Alert Bay and Fort Rupert,[17] Knight's Inlet, and Bute Inlet, receiving their hosts, in turn, at Bella Coola.
On the other hand, there was little friendly intercourse with the northern tribes, of which the Kitkatla especially were dreaded by the residents of the central coast. Until recent years the Bella Coola had no direct knowledge of other Salish-speaking peoples, although some of the Chilkotin told them of a tribe living far to the south, in the interior, whom they encountered in some of their wanderings and used to term Nuxälkumx, recognizing the similarity between their language and that of the [197] Bella Coola. A few years ago several Bella Coola attended a [871] boarding-school and were amazed to find that many of their words were understood by fellow-students from Chilliwack.

648 To sum up: The Bella Coola were in close contact with 177 the neighbouring coastal tribes, with the members of which they felt themselves to have cultural affinities. They recognize that they have received many ceremonial rites from their neighbours, and must have adopted other elements of culture which they now consider indigenous. It is probable that certain Bella Coola customs must likewise have been transmitted to other tribes, but such lie without the scope of this monograph. The outlying villages were in close contact with foreign neighbours, and tended to assimilate elements of their culture, [101] but, on the whole, the Bella Coola present a tribal unity with distinctive local customs, falling within the general pattern of coastal culture.

[16]For types of canoes, see Appendix A.
[17]The principal Kwakiutl villages.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

●133

PLATE 1

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Mouth of the Bella Coola valley looking west

[4 26 (A)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 5

[オ26(E)]

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

On the Bella Coola about ten miles from the sea

133
137

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

133
137

PLATE 6

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Looking across the Bella Coola and up a side valley about three miles from the sea

[426(F)]

1; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 7

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Looking down North Bentinck Arm. The river on the right is the Necleetsconnay, the Bella Coola enters at the extreme left.

[ナ26(G)]

133
137

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133

PLATE 8

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

The tide-flats at the head of North Bentinck Arm

[Gp 26 (H)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

782 next day the weather was fine. This particular method of 424 praying had been learnt by one of his ancestors in the begin-821 ning of time, and was afterwards transmitted in his family.
[785] With the coming of the white man and consequent decay of [177] customs, it has not been exercised since the death of the grand-father of the man from whom the information was obtained.

SACRIFICE

782 It might be expected that a clear division should be made between the subjects of prayer and sacrifice, but in practice they merge into one another. A mountain goat hunter, when camped near a glacier which he knows to be the haunt of some dreaded supernatural being, asks help from him. He wears [824] dyed and undyed cedar-bark decorations to make his request more ceremonious, and after the prayer throws them into the fire, saying:

"Please accept these, supernatural one," thus making an offering to supplement his verbal petition.

If he is even more cautious, or eager not to offend any [824] supernatural being in the vicinity, he throws on the fire tufts [825] of cedar-bark, eagle down, and scraps of food as well. Whether [261] or not the objects thus destroyed by the flames reach the being to whom the request has been made, is a matter upon which the Bella Coola do not theorize; but the generosity and self-denial of the donor is appreciated, and a favour is often granted in return. A man who frequently hears in his dreams the voice of some supernatural being, knows that it is taking an interest in his doings and endeavours to propitiate it, by placing on a fire titbits of any food he has obtained, saying at the same time:

"Wai, wai, wai," "More, more, more," that is, "May I receive more of the same."

A foolish person fails to show his appreciation of favours received, but a wise man never forgets to do so.

Likewise a person is careful to propitiate supernatural [502] powers when in peril. Both at Kwatna and at Mesatche Nose, [133]
[756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the point between Labouchere Channel and Bentinck Arm, there is danger from treacherous currents, so, when a shaman passes either of these places, he lays some food on the water and puffs eagle down into the air as he asks for help. If no shaman is in the canoe, this is done by the captain. 782 133 502 756

The being to whom offerings are most commonly made is Ṫłitcäplilän·a, the supernatural woman who cures the sick and gives power to shamans. Whenever a hunter kills an edible animal in the forest, he cuts off four pieces of flesh and throws them into his fire to gain her goodwill. Long, long ago, Ṫłitcäplilän·a appeared to a hunter, seized some of his quarry, and told him of her wishes with regard to presents; these have since been obeyed by wise people. Similarly, the relatives of a man absent in the mountains or at sea throw scraps of food on the fire and ask the protection of Ṫłitcäplilän·a for the one in danger. In this case, it is clear that objects thrown into flames are received and appreciated by Ṫłitcäplilän·a. 776 224 773

Mınakais, although usually propitiated by prayer, is also given presents. Frequently, when a man is praying, he accompanies his words by blowing up into the air small particles of eagle down. Prayers in connection with the departure of war or hunting expeditions have already been mentioned, but before starting on any journey by canoe, the captain is careful to pray and to throw upon the water four pieces of red, and four of yellow cedar-bark. The blowing upwards of eagle down is a common accompaniment to all kinds of prayers, but, if none is available, cedar-bark can be used equally satisfactorily. If possible, this is cast on the surface of water, otherwise into a fire, as a request is being made. The Bella Coola do not believe that such presents are actually used and considered valuable by Ałquntäm, but they emphasize and accompany the vocal prayer, and demonstrate the petitioner's sincerity. 776 484 824 825

Ghosts, on the other hand, depend almost entirely on presents given them by mortals, since food is not abundant in the land below. The relatives of a dead person always throw 775 782

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133
342
361

PLATE 9

[P 186 (A)]

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

The site of Q̓omqo·ts, with the remains of the old village

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

101
102
131
133

Map of the Bella Coola area

[P. X]

seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. 721 575 622

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuux and Ałqäläxł in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. 648 685 626 556 688 628 727 777

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Täl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. 642 648 133 161

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133
137
501

PLATE 21

Photograph by the author

River canoe

[p 532 (A)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 tains. From each pocket between these mountains an ice-cold affluent comes swirling down to the main river. The 137 predominant tree in the river valleys is the cedar[4] which in many cases attains great girth and height. Cottonwoods flourish in places, and everywhere there is an almost impenetrable undergrowth of devil's club, berry bushes, and other shrubbery of almost tropical density. On the lower slopes of the mountains, moss-festooned pines and spruces are the most common trees, gradually becoming smaller and fewer until the 133 barren peaks are reached. The mountains rise so precipitously that their snowcaps and glaciers seem to overhang the valley, a narrow ribbon of green winding far below. The range of vision from the bank of the river is limited by the all-encircling mountains. Here and there a distant vista opens up to expose peak after peak, but on the whole there is a feeling of confinement, in contrast with the open wastes of the upper country where the Bella Coola rises. Mountains, forests, flowing water, these are the three dominant impressions of the country (see Plate 6).

●136 The mammals of central British Columbia, although comparatively common, have never been of primary importance. [291] The marten, the wolverine, the lynx, and bears, both black and grizzly, were formerly hunted for their skins to serve as [262] cloaks. Deer were killed whenever possible, but formed a negligible item of diet. The beaver also was prized for its [439] flesh. The skins of moose and caribou were traded from the Carrier Indians, but neither of these animals was found in the [286] Bella Coola area. The mammal of greatest economic importance was the mountain goat, the wool of which was woven into [237] blankets. Smoked goat meat was formerly found in every [251] house and was almost the only flesh available during the winter. Small game was abundant, but seals were a luxury. [262] Neither were birds of great importance to the Bella Coola. [223] Members of the tribe resident near the sea-coast used to kill quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild-fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet. The same is true of grouse. Always plentiful, these birds were commonly killed, but never in large numbers. 223 [136] [262]

[4]Appendix C contains a glossary of the scientific names of the flora and fauna mentioned in this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, hump-back, dog, and cohoe salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steel-head could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the olachen, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,[8] allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to eat berries without olachen grease. Trout and bull-heads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance. 226 262 [251] [252] [263] [237] [735] [556]

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the corner-stone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed 262 [241] [251] [178] 824 322

[8]See Appendix A for a description of olachen fishing.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

hers, which, with her supernatural power, she was able to do. She reluctantly granted his request, and Raven became very proud of his splendid locks. 539*

Next year, when Raven caught sockeye salmon he obeyed his wife's instructions by carefully hanging the fish up to dry without removing the heads. One day, however, his long hair became entangled with the teeth of a drying salmon, and in a fit of anger he wrenched off its head, throwing it outside the door. His wife was so vexed and grieved that she cried and cried until her face was swollen and Raven became frightened at her continued lamentation. After he had left the house, Sockeye Salmon told her sisters-in-law to make a fire and put on it all her personal possessions. She said that she intended to leave that night, and that the smoke would animate her husband's salmon, but not those caught by his sisters. When it was dark she carried out her threat. She whistled, and Raven's fish came to life; then she ran to the river, raised the edge of the water as if it had been a blanket and plunged beneath, followed by them.

Raven tried in vain to pursue, but lost both his wife and his salmon.

Animal Stories

Raven is more frequently endowed with human characteristics to serve as the central figure in stories than any other bird or mammal, but the following are examples of similar tales centring around other figures. 538 825

MINK AND CAT-FISH[32]

539*

Once upon a time, long, long ago, before men and animals had grown so unlike one another, Mink went to the home of a Cat-Fish woman, who politely invited him to stay for a meal. When he had finished eating he said to his hostess:

"Are you afraid of anything?"

"No," she replied.

"Are you not afraid of Grizzly Bear?"

"No," answered the woman again.

Mink repeated his question with regard to Wolf, Black Bear, Wolverine, Cougar, and all the other fierce animals, but Cat-Fish assured him that she feared none of them. At length he asked:

"Are you afraid of Owl?"[33]

[32]There are no true cat-fish in Bella Coola; the species so designated is probably one of the sculpins. [136]

[33]He meant the western horned owl.

[see pp. 419-433. — ANALYST]

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B C 137 757 Fomes Laricis (Jacq.), more generally known as Polyporus officinalis Fries, A SHELF FUNGUS

Bella Coola: This (?) fungus ground, steeped in water, and the decoction taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Southern Carrier: If found on the Douglas fir tree, dried, powdered, a handful steeped in boiling water and the hot decoction taken internally as an emetic and purgative. Said to act within an hour. Not used if found on any other tree.

B C [171] (According to Dr. John Dearness, this is a medical polypore, perhaps the only fungus used by pharmacists. Park, Davis, and Company make a fluid extract and a triturate which is prescribed for the relief of night sweats in tuberculosis. The fungus is a cathartic in large doses. Its medicinal virtues have long been known in the old world.)

B 137 757 Bovista pila B. and C., PUFF BALL

Bella Coola: Spores dusted on wounds, sores of gonorrhoea, and suppurating sores other than boils.

LICHEN

Bella Coola: A certain long, white lichen, if found on the red alder tree, warmed, and applied to a broken boil or suppurating sore.

Sticta sp., LICHEN

Bella Coola: Entire plant, if from red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.) or crab apple (Pyrus diversifolia Bong.), but not from willow (Salix sp.), boiled, and five cupfuls of the hot decoction taken internally daily for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting. Neither a purgative nor an astringent.

C [757] Entire plant boiled and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

Entire plant pulverized and applied to skin.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

KELP

B 757 Bella Coola: A small kelp found on the rocks sometimes used for a sweat bath. See western dock, page 56.

WOOD SAP

Bella Coola: The sap that oozes from any kind of wood when burning considered a good remedy for sores.

MOUNTAIN GOAT

B ●136 757 Oreamnos Montanus, Ord., MOUNTAIN GOAT

Bella Coola: Mountain goat fat boiled with droppings of geese that had fed on roots, and the mixture given to babies once or twice a day for colds.

Goat meat with droppings of the bushy-tailed woodrat, commonly called packrat (Neotoma cinerea), taken internally with water as a remedy for nursing babies when they had colds.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE 15

SKUNK

Spilogale, Spotted Skunk, or Mephitis, Striped Skunk

Bella Coola: Oil not used as a remedy.

Southern Carrier: Oil warmed, and a cupful taken as a purgative for worms.

HARE

Lepus americanus columbiensis Rhoads, The British Columbia Varying Hare

Northern Carrier: Hare opened, ruminating stomach containing something like the white of an egg removed, and the liquid applied to a foot blistered by frost-bite. Considered a sure cure.

RED SQUIRREL

Sciurus hudsonicus Erxleben

Bella Coola: Opened along the under side and applied as a remedy to badly broken chancres in the groin.

GIANT SLUG

Bella Coola: Slug made to crawl into a baby's mouth to cure loss of skin on the inside of its mouth.

Slug opened, and bound tightly over large cut.

SEA CUCUMBER

Bella Coola: Decoction of the water in which the sea cucumber was boiled, taken internally as a specific against heartburn. Not a purgative.

SPITTLE INSECT

Cercopidae, Spittle Insect, Frog Hopper

Bella Coola: "Fly spit," i.e., the material surrounding a nymph of a spittle insect, applied to sores.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

WOODWORMS

Gitksan: Pulverized and applied to cuts.

COPPER

Bella Coola: Fine particles scraped from clean copper (but not from a weathered green surface) placed in sore eyes.

Gitksan: Copper ground, poured into a vessel of cold water, first water poured off, and second water taken internally as a harmless contraceptive.

CHARCOAL

Northern Carrier: Charcoal daubed under the eyes to prevent snow-blindness.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 tains. From each pocket between these mountains an ice-cold affluent comes swirling down to the main river. The 137 predominant tree in the river valleys is the cedar[4] which in many cases attains great girth and height. Cottonwoods flourish in places, and everywhere there is an almost impenetrable undergrowth of devil's club, berry bushes, and other shrubbery of almost tropical density. On the lower slopes of the mountains, moss-festooned pines and spruces are the most common trees, gradually becoming smaller and fewer until the 133 barren peaks are reached. The mountains rise so precipitously that their snowcaps and glaciers seem to overhang the valley, a narrow ribbon of green winding far below. The range of vision from the bank of the river is limited by the all-encircling mountains. Here and there a distant vista opens up to expose peak after peak, but on the whole there is a feeling of confinement, in contrast with the open wastes of the upper country where the Bella Coola rises. Mountains, forests, flowing water, these are the three dominant impressions of the country (see Plate 6).

136 The mammals of central British Columbia, although comparatively common, have never been of primary importance.
[291] The marten, the wolverine, the lynx, and bears, both black and grizzly, were formerly hunted for their skins to serve as [262] cloaks. Deer were killed whenever possible, but formed a negligible item of diet. The beaver also was prized for its [139] flesh. The skins of moose and caribou were traded from the Carrier Indians, but neither of these animals was found in the [286] Bella Coola area. The mammal of greatest economic impor-[237] rance was the mountain goat, the wool of which was woven into blankets. Smoked goat meat was formerly found in every [251] house and was almost the only flesh available during the [262] winter. Small game was abundant, but seals were a luxury.
Neither were birds of great importance to the Bella Coola.
[223] Members of the tribe resident near the sea-coast used to kill

[4]Appendix C contains a glossary of the scientific names of the flora and fauna mentioned in this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

was probably deserted not many years ago. Probably a large town since it was a good fishing place. 361

(16) Ṫsilkt, "Bald Eagle": also on the north shore of the river, a little above the last-named. Probably washed away by a flood long ago, although traces of the salmon-weir were still visible recently. [226]

(17) Nuqāxmāts, "The Place of Much qāxmāts" (the fern Asplenium cyclosorum): on the north side of the river about one mile above the preceding. This large town is believed to have been deserted long ago, though, in apparent contradiction, traces of it are said to be still visible. [137]

*(18) Snulǝli, "The Place of Dog Salmon": on the south bank, above the last-named, at a place where a small stream enters the Bella Coola River; this divided the town into two sections. It was long deserted and the river has carried away that part of the village below the creek. The name is derived from an enormous dog salmon which is believed to have been seen at long intervals in a waterfall near this spot, always with a water ouzel perched on its back. [825]

(19) Oq̓mikumx̌: on the lower end of the island near Hagenburg post office, eleven miles from the ocean. Although long deserted, traces of this village can still be seen. The meaning of the name is unknown.

*(20) Nukils, "The Place of the Whirlpool": on the south side of the river, eleven and a quarter miles from the sea. It was a village of moderate size, recently abandoned. The first occupant was said to have been Ł̓kamkila, which means, "The First of All." [173]

*(21) Ǎsān·ān·i, "The Concave Town," so called because it spread around the shore of a bay scooped out by the Bella Coola: south side, slightly above the influx of the Nusālum River, thirteen and a quarter miles from the sea. It was deserted about 1880.

*(22) Nusq̓alst, "The Place of Sq̓alstutl": on the north side of the river, opposite the mountain of the same name. It also was deserted about 1880. Sq̓alstutl is a kind of stone suit- [316]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 able for axes, which occurs in the valley of a small stream on [316] the slope of the mountain.

*(23) Nalleax, "The Place Where There Are No Falls": an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this creek about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still [175] standing about 1870. Mackenzie reached the Bella Coola River at this place. At the time of his arrival the population was
[166] larger than usual, because the salmon-weir had withstood
[226] some heavy freshets which had destroyed several weirs on the Bella Coola, and driven the inhabitants of other villages to Nalleax.

[133] It is said that the affluent at Nalleax, the stream Xaiqt, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a ravine leading to the main river. Its source is a spring at the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down these. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Nuxwáuxqki, and it is said that some families living on the Skeena sing of it as the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

*(24) Stuax: on the point between the La'xale (Atnarko) and Sle-ál (Whitewater) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name is unknown.

(25) Xwlaal, "The Place of Herbage": on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the forks. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was [137] given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

[133] (26) Swalk'al, "The Place of Falls," so called from the strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point: on the north side of the river about ten miles from the forks. This large town [173] was long ago deserted when a large rock in the midst of the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133
137

PLATE 3

Photograph by H. L. Smith, National Museum of Canada

On the Bella Coola about ten miles from the sea

[#26(E)]

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133
•137

PLATE 6

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Looking across the Bella Coola and up a side valley about three miles from the sea

[4-26(F)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 7

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Looking down North Bentinck Arm. The river on the right is the Necleetsconnay, the Bella Coola enters at the extreme left.

[p 26 (G)]

133
137

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575
778
137

PLATE 6

Photograph by H. I. Smith National Museum of Canada

Repository of a dog-eating cannibal

[p. 84 (F)]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133
137
501

PLATE 21

Photograph by the author

River canoe

[p 532 (A)]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

137
501

PLATE 22

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Ocean canoe

[p 532 (B)]

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE 15

B
C

POLYPODIACEAE, FERN FAMILY

137
757

Polypodium vulgare L., Polypody, Parasitic Sword Fern

Bella Coola: Roots—sometimes mixed with leaves of the red cedar (Thuja plicata Donn) or with other medicinal roots which the informant had forgotten—boiled, and the warm decoction taken internally for pains in the stomach, but not for vomiting or diarrhoea. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.

Roots chewed for swollen sore throat.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Asplenium cyclosorum Rupr., Lady Fern

Bella Coola: Little roots cleaned off, from five to ten centres, mixed at times with roots or branches of the currant (Ribes laxiflorum Pursh. var.), boiled strongly, but for a short time only, and the decoction used as a wash for sore eyes.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

B [752]
[262]

Aspidium spinulosum Sw., Shield Fern

Bella Coola: Root eaten raw to neutralize poisoning from eating several kinds of shell-fish in the early part of the summer.

C
137
757

Fern, species uncertain

Northern Carrier: Root boiled and the decoction taken internally for worms.

Gitksan: The large, round, green root-stock, but not the rootlets, mashed with bark of balsam fir (Abies grandis Lindl.) and devil's club (Fatsia horrida Sm. B. and H.), a little gum of scrub pine (Pinus contorta Dougl.) or tideland spruce (Picea sitchensis Carr), and root of skunk cabbage (Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott), warmed a little, and applied to a boil or ulcer, which it brought to a head. Also used for rheumatism, and as a plaster on the chest for hemorrhage of the lungs.

C

LYCOPODIACEAE, CLUB MOSS FAMILY

137
757

Lycopodium clavatum L., Common Club Moss

Southern Carrier: Inserted in the nose to cause bleeding and cure headache.

B

TAXACEAE, YEW FAMILY

137
757

Taxus brevifolia Nutt., Yew

Bella Coola: Branches with leaves boiled, and the decoction taken internally for the lungs. Neither a purgative nor an emetic.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

CONIFERAE, PINE FAMILY

Juniperus communis L., JUNIPER

B
E 137
757

Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, branches, and bark boiled, and the decoction taken internally as often as desired for many ailments, including a cough from the lungs, and pain in the stomach. Neither a purgative nor an emetic.

Southern Carrier: Branches boiled, and the vapour inhaled for headache and pain in the chest.

Northern Carrier: Tips boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative, also for a cough.

Juniperus sp.

B
J
137
757

Gitksan: Entire plant, including roots and berries, boiled for a day, and the decoction, when cool, taken internally for many ailments, including hemorrhage and kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.

Thuja plicata Donn, RED CEDAR

Bella Coola: Very soft bark used to bind up wounds, and to cover poultices of false bugbane (Trautvetteria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Leaves, sometimes with the gum-coated cones, boiled, and the hot decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.

Leaves powdered by pounding, mixed with a little cold water and taken internally for pain in the stomach, also externally for coughs and internal pains, as heart trouble, rheumatism, swollen neck, and pain in the stomach. See also Polypody, page 48.

Gitksan: Not used.

Chamaecyparis nootkatensis (Lamb) Spach, YELLOW CYPRESS, YELLOW CEDAR

B
137
757

Bella Coola: A little soft bark used to cover poultices of false bugbane (Trautvetteria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Pinus contorta Dougl., SCRUB PINE, JACK PINE

B
[752]

Bella Coola: Gum applied to cuts.

Gum chewed and applied to broken skin.

B
[164]

Gum at the ends of branches, collected in November, December, and January, boiled and the decoction taken internally for "consumption."

Gum—like that of tideland spruce (page 51) and western hemlock (page 51)—mixed with the baked stems and leaves, or the dried and pulverized bulb, of false hellebore (page 53), and applied as a poultice (sometimes spread on red cedar bark) to the chest for heart trouble, and to the arms for rheumatism. Burned the skin within two or three days, but was sometimes left on as long as two weeks.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14
Chilcotin NE8

Ca
I
5
137
757

Southern Carrier: New shoots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Resembled the decoction made from the bark of the aspen (page 54), or from the new shoots and bark of the tideland spruce (page 51), but the last-mentioned considered most efficacious.

Northern Carrier: Needle tips mixed with large needle tips of the "British Columbia pine" (Pinus sp.?), the inside bark of the wild gooseberry (Ribes sp.?), bark of the red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.), the inside pulp of raspberry canes (Rubus sp.), stems of the "bearberry" (?black twin-berry, Lonicera involucrata Banks?), and the inner bark of the wild rose (Rosa sp.), placed in a vessel holding four gallons of water, boiled down to a thick decoction, strained, and bottled. About two tablespoonfuls taken, at sunrise and sunset, for constitutional weakness or paralysis, or if the body were covered with sores.

Gum obtained by heating a green piece of pine (sp.?) painted on the eye to remove white scum and to cure snow-blindness.

T

Sikani: Pitch chewed and the saliva swallowed for a cough.

[912]
[362]

Gitksan: Inner bark (scraped from the trunk with a bone scraper after the outer bark had been removed) eaten both for food and as a blood purifier. Purged the body in from half an hour to an hour.

T
[164]

Shavings of the yellow resinous timber found after removal of the bark boiled, the decoction placed in oil, and taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for many serious ailments, including gonorrhoea. Said to produce beneficial results in "consumption."

Young needles plucked in June and eaten as a purgative and diuretic.

For use with a fern, see page 48.

B
Ca
137
757
164

Abies grandis Lindl., White Fir, Balsam Fir

Bella Coola: Bark of root or of stem boiled, and the decoction taken internally every day for tuberculosis and stomach trouble. Said to have cured many cases of tuberculosis.

Gum from bark blisters found on young trees warmed, mixed with mountain goat tallow, and taken internally for sore throat; also drawn on a hair across sore eyes.

Young, green leaves baked, mixed with fruit of skunk cabbage (Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott.) gathered in October, or the buds gathered in April, split, dried on top of the house, roasted, mixed with a small quantity of slightly roasted roots of the cow parsnip (Heracleum lanatum Michx.), one or two cupfuls of the gummy buds of the black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.), and four or five cupfuls of fresh eulachon oil, allowed to stand one day, then boiled and kept in a box for a hair perfume. Kitimat Indians said to be more expert in its preparation.

B
[302]
[171]
Cn
[757]

Southern Carrier: Tree used for medicine, but details not obtained.

Chilcotin: Not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE8
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

Abies sp.

Northern Carrier: Bark boiled in water and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gum used as an ointment on wounds, and especially on burns.

Sikani: Gum applied to wounds.

Gitksan: Juicy inner bark, scraped from the trunk of the tree, after removal of the outer bark, taken internally for constipation.

Gum from the bark blisters taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for "consumption," gonorrhoea, and many other serious ailments. Applied externally to cuts and sores, especially the sores of gonorrhoea.

The young cones, obtainable in August, sliced across, mashed, and used for the same purposes as the gum from the bark blisters.

See also fern, page 48.

C
S 137
757
S [752]
T
[64]

Pseudotsuga taxifolia Britt., Douglas Fir

Bella Coola: Gum boiled and taken internally, while warm, as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Gum, spread on red cedar bark, applied to cuts. (One informant said that although gum of scrub pine (see page 49), hemlock (see page 51), and tideland spruce (see page 51) were good, Douglas fir gum made cuts worse.)

Gum mixed with dogfish (shark) oil or, if that were not available, eulachon oil, taken, two spoonfuls at a time, with warm water, as an emetic and purgative for colds, rheumatism, gonorrhoea, constipation, intestinal pains, and diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

B
T 137
757
B
[64]
[752]
B
[237]

Tsuga heterophylla (Raf.) Sarg., Western Hemlock, and Tsuga Mertensiana Carr, Mountain Hemlock

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.
See also scrub pine (page 49).

Gum warmed and applied to cuts. Not boiled for a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Burning twigs applied to the skin for various internal ailments.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

B [752]

Picea sitchensis Carr., Tideland Spruce

Bella Coola: Tips of small, but not of large, spruces mixed with blue currant (Ribes bracteosum Dougl.), young juneberry (Amelanchier florida Lindl.), and crushed branches (leaves and stems) of garden snowberry (Symphoricarpus racemosa Michx.), boiled and taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Sap from the peeled trunk taken in doses of from half a cup to a cupful as a laxative from May to August.

B
137
757

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

B •137
757

Ripe cones boiled, and the decoction taken internally for a pain. Neither an emetic nor a laxative. A bed consisting of a sack of ripe cones, placed on top of hot stones, used by rheumatics. Cones also burned to fumigate rheumatics.

A piece of the bark 5 feet long by 2 feet wide used as a mat in a hot bath for rheumatism. Many stones were heated, a little sand strewn over them, the bark spread above with the inside uppermost, and the patient, naked, lay on the bark, covering himself with one or more blankets. A similar bed, but with the bark covered with a few leaves of devil's club (Fatsia horrida Sm. B. and H.), used for chronic backache.

B
[752]

Gum applied to small cuts, broken skin, and suppurating sores.

Branches used to whip a burned arm or leg until the blood came.

Gum boiled and taken internally while hot as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

See also scrub pine (page 49).

For use with fern. See page 48.

C
T 137
757

The buds or new shoots, with the gum sometimes found around the outside when they are about half an inch long, boiled in water, and the decoction taken internally for tuberculosis.

Southern Carrier: New shoots and bark of small branches boiled for about two hours, and the decoction taken internally, one or two cupfuls at a time, for pain in the stomach, but not for vomiting, diarrhoea, or constipation. Said to effect a cure in one day, and preferred to the decoction made of scrub pine (page 49) or aspen (page 54).

Gum from new shoots and small branches, scraped out with a little stick, placed in the eyes for snow-blindness.

S
[757]

Sikani: Inside bark scraped and chewed for a cough.

Needles chewed, and the saliva applied to external sores.

Gum, obtained by splitting the tops, applied with a stick to white spots on the eye.

The "flower" boiled and the decoction taken internally for pain in the chest.

T
[237]
[164]

Gitksan: Gum extracted from the wood by boiling in water, added to eulachon oil, salmon oil, bear grease, ground-hog fat, lard, etc., and taken internally before meals for consumption.

Twigs bearing both leaves and bark boiled with entire roots of scapolallie (Shepherdia canadensis Nutt.); one cupful of the strong decoction taken internally three times a day for rheumatism.

B
T

ARACEAE, ARUM FAMILY

Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott., Skunk Cabbage, Yellow Arum

137
757
B [302]

Bella Coola: Roots used with oil as a hair tonic.

Roots boiled, and the sweet decoction taken internally for stomach trouble.

See also white fir (page 50).

Gitksan: Root well mashed with water and applied externally for blood poison and boils. Said to bring boils to a head. For use with a fern (see page 48).

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE5

Smoke from the burning roots inhaled for bad dreams, influenza, and rheumatism (a remedy avoided by medicine men, lest it destroy their magical power). Roots themselves considered poisonous.

Leaves used to sit or lie on when taking a sweat bath for rheumatism; also spread over the afflicted parts.

Calla palustris L., WATER ARUM

Gitksan: Roots well boiled and the decoction taken internally for cleaning the eyes of the blind, for hemorrhage, for short breath, and influenza.

LILIACEAE, LILY FAMILY

Clintonia uniflora Kunth., QUEENS CUP

Bella Coola: Boiled and used to wash the body. One leaf toasted and applied as a poultice to eyes or wounds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Smilacina racemosa L., FALSE SOLOMON'S SEAL

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Roots boiled and decoction taken internally as a very strong medicine for rheumatism, sore back, and kidney trouble. A purgative. Bark and leaves useless. Roots mashed and bound on cuts.

Veratrum viride Ait., FALSE HELLEBORE

Bella Coola: Small bulbs or scrapings of large bulbs, boiled, and one cupful or less of the decoction, according to the strength of the patient, taken internally for chronic cough, gonorrhoea, constipation, pain in the stomach, and many illnesses. Two or three cupfuls acted as an emetic. Said to be poisonous if eaten raw.

Small pieces of the raw root swallowed with a little cold water as an emetic for pains in the stomach. More water taken if all the pieces not vomited. Overdose considered fatal.

See also scrub pine (page 48).

Southern Carrier: Entire roots dried in the sun, and powdered by rubbing on a stone. About a dessertspoonful of the powder taken in hot water as an emetic for sickness. Too strong a decoction considered fatal.[1]

SALICACEAE, WILLOW FAMILY

Salix lasiandra Benth., WILLOW

Bella Coola: Six sticks about a foot long charred, and pulverized on a stone. A teaspoonful of the powder taken in a cupful of cold water for diarrhoea. Said to effect a cure in two or three hours.

A piece of the inner bark folded once and the folded edge inserted into a knife cut; other edges then separated and flattened down, and the wound covered with eagle down. Thought to make the pus come out. Same process used to heal incisions in the abdomen made by those who tried to cure pain in the stomach.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

[1] The late Dr. C. F. Newcombe informed the writer that this plant seems to be used by every tribe in whose territory it grows.

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Cayiee NE7
Tsimshian NE5
Sekani NE14

T
B
C 137
957
B
[152]

Salix Scouleriana Hook., WILLOW

Bella Coola: Folded inner bark used like that of Salix lasiandra Benth. for cuts; but charcoal from the stick not used for diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Salix sp., WILLOW

Sikani: Young willow chewed and the saliva applied to external sores.

White powdery tops chewed for a cough.

Populus tremuloides Michx., ASPEN, TREMBLING POPLAR

Bella Coola: A quantity of bark from the roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally from seven to ten times a day for gonorrhoea with hemorrhage from the urethra. A very bitter decoction, said to be a good remedy that stopped the hemorrhage.

Southern Carrier: Bark used instead of tideland spruce bark (page 37) to make a decoction for pain in the stomach. Considered inferior to the spruce bark.

Sikani: Bark pulverized by pounding, moistened with water, and applied as a paste to wounds.

Bark scraped, scrapings steeped in hot water, and the decoction taken internally for worms. Caused a stool immediately.

Gitksan: Bark of roots chewed or mashed and put on cuts.

Bark alone boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative. Not an emetic.

B
C 137
957
B [302]

Populus trichocarpa T. and G., BLACK COTTONWOOD

Bella Coola: Leaves, ten to fifteen years old, from the lower layers lying rotting on the ground, boiled, and the decoction used as a bath, the patient sitting in it up to his neck for about two hours to cure pain in the body, not rheumatism. A hot stone added from time to time, and the bath repeated the next day.

The buds with their resin boiled and the decoction used as a hair wash. See also white fir (page 50).

Half a cupful of buds, picked some time between December and March, mixed with two roots of cow parsnip (Heracleum lanatum Michx.), a half cupful of buds of mountain alder (Alnus tenuifolia Nutt.), and a little water, mashed, and applied warm, but uncooked, as a poultice for pains in the lungs or hips like rheumatism. Said to effect a cure in two days, but harmful if left on longer.

See also western dock (page 56).

Southern Carrier: Buds with their resin boiled for one or two hours, and the decoction taken internally for coughs and lung affections.

C [302]
[826]

Resin from the buds applied to the face as a cosmetic, or, with the addition of oil, to repel mosquitoes, black flies, and gadflies.

Roots and bark not used; buds not boiled to make a hair wash.

C
[152]

Northern Carrier: Green roots chewed to a pulp and applied to wounds to stop bleeding.

Inside bark boiled and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

T
[302]
I [957]

Gitksan: Gummy buds boiled and the resin mixed with bear grease for a hair perfume.

Roots, leaves, and seeds not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6 ●
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

MYRICACAE

Myrica Gale L., Sweet Gale

Bella Coola: Branches, secured at any time of the year, pounded with their bark, boiled, and the decoction taken internally for gonorrhoea. A diuretic. The decoction, which was kept in a box made of red cedar wood with a little cover to keep out the dust, soured in two or three days and became useless.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

BETULACEAE, BIRCH FAMILY

Alnus sitchensis (Reg.) Sarg., Green Alder

Bella Coola: Cones used as a remedy for some unspecified complaint.

Alnus tenuifolia Nutt., Mountain Alder

Bella Coola: Cones used as a remedy for some unspecified complaint.

See also black cottonwood (page 54).

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Pistillate catkins crushed, and the mass eaten raw as a laxative.

Pistillate catkins and shavings eaten raw, or else boiled in water and the decoction taken internally three times a day, as a diuretic for gonorrhoea. Said to effect a cure in one week.[1]

Alnus rubra Bong., Red Alder

Bella Coola: Bark boiled, and a cupful of the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Southern Carrier: Sap applied to cuts. Not used for a medicinal decoction.

Northern Carrier: Inside bark ground, steeped in water, and injected with a syringe made from the crop of a bird, for biliousness.

Gitksan: Bark and roots boiled for about six hours and the decoction drunk in the morning for a cough.

Bark from the stem, but not from the roots, scraped, mixed with water, and the infusion taken internally, as an emetic and purgative, for headache and many other maladies.

URTICACEAE, NETTLE FAMILY

Urtica Lyallii Wats., Western Nettle

Bella Coola: Used for a form of paralysis where the patient had been unable to walk for a long time. Limbs stung daily, causing sores and gradual revival of sensation. In one case said to have effected a cure in ten days.

See also western dock (page 56).

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally for many illnesses, including hemorrhage and bladder troubles.

Stinging not used.

---

[1] Gitksan informant stated that the Tsimshian of the coast made a decoction of this tree which served as an emetic, purgative, and diuretic, and was used for poisoning yourself by eating too much.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Cartier NE7
Tsimshian NE16

ARISTOLOCIHACEAE, BIRTHWORT FAMILY

B
C ●137
757

Asarum caudatum Lindl., WILD GINGER

Bella Coola: Boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting.

Boiled, and applied externally for headache, intestinal pains, and pain in the knees.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

POLYGONACEAE, BUCKWHEAT FAMILY

Rumex occidentalis Wats., WESTERN DOCK

Bella Coola: Roots roasted for a short time in a hole in the earth among the ashes of a fire, covered with earth, mashed, and applied in quantity as a poultice for boils. Both leaves and roots used, according to another informant, and the poultice applied to wounds as well as boils.

Leaves used for a sweat bath for pains similar to rheumatism all over the body. Stones were heated, a little cold sand spread over them, and leaves spread on the sand; or else the leaves were spread on hot ashes. The patient sat or lay naked directly on the leaves, and was covered with blankets. Western Nettles (Urtica Lyallii Wats.), small branches of black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.) with the leaves on them, or the small kelp found on rocks were sometimes used when leaves of the western dock could not be obtained.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

LORANTHACEAE, MISTLETOE FAMILY

Arceuthobium americanum Nutt., SMALL MISTLETOE

Bella Coola: Boiled, and decoction taken as a potent medicine for hemorrhage of the lungs.

C
[164]

Southern Carrier: Boiled, and decoction taken freely for hemorrhage from the mouth, tuberculosis of the lungs, and emaciation.

NYMPHACEAE, WATER-LILY FAMILY

B
137
757
[765]

Nymphaea polysepala (Engelm.) Greene, YELLOW POND-LILY

Bella Coola, old custom: Used in a magical way for pain in all parts of the body. A root in many cases as large as a man's leg was cut free from the bed of a pool with a hemlock pole sharpened like a shovel. A hollow was made in it, water placed in the receptacle, and hot stones added. The stones were changed four times, after which the patient drank one or two cupfuls of the water. He repeated the dose each day for four days. To be effective the root had to be thrown back into the water, not on the ground.

B
[164]

Present custom: Root boiled twelve hours, and decoction taken internally for pain in any part of the body, such as "consumption", rheumatism, heart disease, and gonorrhoea. Considered good for the blood. Not used as a diuretic, or for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting.

T
757
[842]

Gitksan: Infusion of scrapings of toasted root (or according to another informant, heart of root, boiled) taken internally for hemorrhage of the lungs and as a contraceptive.

9: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE4 Bellacoola NE5
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

RANUNCULACEAE, BUTTERCUP FAMILY

Anemone globosa Nutt. (A. multifida Poir.), Wind-Flower

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Plant, except roots, boiled and decoction taken internally for any sickness. Aroma of crushed leaves inhaled for cold in the head or lungs; for this purpose leaves sometimes placed in water and heated.

Gitksan: Handfuls eaten in sweat bath for rheumatism. A decoction of the plant sometimes used for the same purpose.

Trautvetteria grandis Nutt., False Buckeye

Bella Coola: Roots pounded in a little water, and the resulting mass, covered with a little soft bark of the red or yellow cedar, applied as a poultice to boils and left on for half a day or a day. Said to promote suppuration and opening of the boil, but to cause such intense burning that it could not be applied to children. Considered less strong than the tall buttercup (page 57), but, like it, preferred to the cow parsnip (page 61), which was used in the same way.

Thalictrum occidentale Gray, Meadow Rue

Gitksan: A small piece of the root chewed, and some of the juice swallowed, for headache, eye trouble, and sore legs. Lessened phlegm and possibly ameliorated the circulation of the blood.

Ranunculus acris L., Tall Buttercup

Bella Coola: Roots used as a poultice for boils in the same way as those of the false buckeye (page 87), but considered stronger and better.

CRUCIFERAE, MUSTARD FAMILY

Sisymbrium tenuiflorum Eng., A Hedge Mustard

Gitksan: Mashed and applied to bad cuts.

CRASSULACEAE, ORPINE FAMILY

Sedum spathulifolium Hook., Stonecrop

Bella Coola: Leaves of the plant before it blossomed eaten to start the flow of milk. Said to take effect in one day. Leaves warmed and applied externally for the same purpose.

SAXIFRAGACEAE, SAXIFRAGE FAMILY

Ribes bracteosum Dougl., Blue Currant

Bella Coola: See tideland spruce, page 81.

Ribes lacustrum Pursh. var., Currant

Bella Coola: Roots boiled in a very small box with hot stones and the weak decoction used each day for washing the eyes when filled with matter.

See also lady fern (page 48).

Southern Carrier: Not used.

St Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NEA Bellacoola NEA CAYUCT NE 9
TLIMSHIAN NE 15

Ribes lacustre Pur., Swamp Gooseberry

Bella Coola: Roots boiled and the decoction taken internally many times a day to cure constipation.

Leaves shaved and rub tied on sores caused by the pricks of the plant; if leaves unobtainable the bark substituted after singing off the prickers.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Others: Bark boiled and used as a remedy for some unspecified malady.

Ribes divaricatum Dougl., Coastal Gooseberry

Bella Coola: Bark or roots, sometimes mixed with those of the wild crab apple (Pyrus diversifolia Doug.), boiled, and the decoction used as an eye-wash three times a day for soreness and approaching blindness.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Ribes sp., Gooseberry

Further Carrier: See notch pine, page 48.

Saxifraga Bongardii Fenz., Saxifrage

Bella Coola: Roots and leaves gathered in the autumn, placed in a very small box with a very little water, and boiled. Decoction taken cold, or preferably hot, in quantity to cure strangulation of the bladder. Said to effect a cure in one day.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

ROSACEAE, ROSE FAMILY

Prunus emarginata Dougl., Wild Cherry

Bella Coola: Roots and inside bark boiled with fresh water and the decoction taken in quantity daily for heart trouble.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Others: Not used.

Rubus spectabilis Pursh., Salmon Berry

Bella Coola: Bark of roots boiled and taken internally for certain stomach troubles, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Others: Not used.

Rubus sp., Raspberry

Further Carrier: See notch pine, page 48.

Fragaria bracteata Heller., Strawberry

Bella Coola: Not used, but said to be used by Haida of Queen Charlotte Islands to cure vomiting.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Others: Not used.

9: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

Rosa sp., Wild Rose

Bella Coola: Roots and branches boiled, and the decoction taken internally, even ten cupfuls a day if desired, as a purgative for pain in the stomach.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Northern Carrier: See marsh pine, page 63.

Sekani: Roots crushed, steeped in water, and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

Gitksan: Not used.

Physocarpus opulifolius (L.), Maxim., Nine-Bark

Bella Coola: Inner bark boiled for two hours, and two to four cupfuls of the decoction at blood heat taken internally as an emetic for persons dizzy with pain. Four or five cupfuls of lukewarm water then taken as a cleansing emetic and repeated about five times.

Inner bark boiled a long time (when it seemed to have emetic properties), one cupful of the hot decoction taken internally, and thereafter applied externally as a wash twice a day for gonorrhoea and scrofulous glands in the neck. Said to be a laxative that caused the glands to break, discharge fully, and heal. A cupful taken internally daily in advanced cases.

Southern Carrier: Bark (gathered near the west) boiled for two hours, and two cupfuls of the decoction taken as an emetic, or one cupful as a purgative. Said to act in half an hour, and to be an excellent remedy, but fatal in too large a dose.

Arnica sylvestris Kuntz., Goat's Beard

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and one or two cupfuls of the decoction (or as much as desired) taken internally for pain in the stomach and gonorrhoea. A diuretic, but neither a laxative nor an emetic.

Roots boiled in grease of mountain goat. (Oreamnos montanus Ord.) for a day and the decoction taken internally for smallpox.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Geum macrophyllum Willd., Large-Leaved Yellow Avens

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea, or vomiting. Leaves, usually chewed but sometimes brained, applied to boils.

Southern Carrier: Leaves boiled and the decoction taken internally for any sickness.

Leaves boiled and applied to bruises.

Pyrus sitchensis (Roem.) Piper., Mountain Ash

Bella Coola: Bark of the roots, and sometimes the inner bark of the stem, collected at any time of the year, boiled for an hour, and the hot decoction, weak or strong, particularly the latter, taken internally for the stomach or rheumatism. Said to effect a cure in from one to seven days. Not taken for diarrhoea, or vomiting; and for rheumatism sometimes poured into a large box and used as a bath. Used also as an eye-wash.

Southern Carrier: Bark chewed for colds.

Gitksan: Fresh fruit crushed and eaten raw as a strong purgative.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

P 137
757

Pyrus diversifolia Bong., CRAB APPLE

Bella Coola: See common gooseberry (page 58).
Gitksan: Juice, scraped from peeled trunk, used as an eye medicine.

Trunk and branches, or scrapings from inside of bark, boiled until thick, and the decoction taken internally over a period of from four to six months for "consumption" and rheumatism. Said to be a fattening medicine, both laxative and diuretic.

Amelanchier florida Lindl., JUNEBERRY, SASKATOON

Bella Coola: See tideland spruce (page 51).

EMPETRACEAE, CROWBERRY FAMILY

Empetrum nigrum L., CROWBERRY

Bella Coola: Green leaves, with or without berries, boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

P
137
757

VIOLACEAE, VIOLET FAMILY

Viola adunca Sm. var. glabra Brain., VIOLET

Bella Coola: Not used.
Southern Carrier: Entire plant boiled and one or many cupfuls of the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting.
Gitksan: Not used.

ELAEAGNACEAE, OLEASTER FAMILY

Shepherdia canadensis Nutt., SOAPBERRIES

Bella Coola: Not used.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Northern Carrier: Root boiled in water and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

[1]4

Gitksan: Roots, stem, and branches boiled, and the decoction used as a wash for gonorrhoea.

Bark, branches, and leaves without roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for chronic cough.

See also tideland spruce (page 51).

ONAGRACEAE, EVENING PRIMROSE FAMILY

Epilobium angustifolium L., FIRE WEED

Bella Coola: Root roasted in ashes, mashed between hands or stones, and applied to boils.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Serani NE14

UMBELLIFERAE, PARSLEY FAMILY

Osmorrhiza sp., Sweet Cicely

B 137 757

Bella Coola: Ten to fifteen little pieces of root, as large as the end joint of the thumb, ground by rubbing on a stone; two cupfuls placed in water warmed to blood heat, and two cupfuls of the decoction (according to the strength of the patient) taken internally as an emetic. Decoction acted (sometimes as a purgative instead of an emetic) within five or ten minutes, but lost its power if heated too much. Warm water taken afterwards until the patient vomited four or five times and the stomach was entirely cleaned. Used also for pneumonia.

C [757]

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Heracleum lanatum Michx., Cow Parsnip

B C T S 137 757

Bella Coola: Roots crushed, baked (or boiled in a box with hot stones), and applied as a poultice for boils. If too hot a poultice injured the skin.

Raw, uncrushed root inserted in an opened boil and left from half a day to a day. Pus said to come away with the boil.

See also white fir (page 50), balsam fir (page 50), black cottonwood (page 94), and false bugbane (page 57).

C [751] B 75

Southern Carrier: Blossoms steeped in eulachon or other oil and the mixture rubbed on the body to keep off flies and mosquitoes.

Northern Carrier: Roots applied to swellings and bruises.

Sikani: Roots mashed and applied to swellings of neuralgia or rheumatism.

Gitksan: Roots mashed and applied to boils, rheumatic and other swellings.

Angelica genuflexa Nutt.

B T 137 757

Bella Coola: Roots boiled and decoction taken internally as a purgative. Not an emetic. Sometimes used raw, but never roasted.

Gitksan: Roots well boiled with twigs of squashberry (Viburnum pauciflorum Raf.) from which the bark had not been removed, and decoction taken internally for headache and weak eyes.

Ligusticum scothicum L., Lovage

B C 137 757

Bella Coola: Leaves spread over a hot stone or stones and used as a medicinal bed for the sick.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Cicuta Douglasii (DC.) C. and R., Water Hemlock, Poison Parsnip

Bella Coola: Roots used as a purgative.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

ARALIACEAE, GINSENG FAMILY

Aralia nudicaulis L., Sarsaparilla

B [272]

Bella Coola: Roots boiled in a box with hot stone, and decoction taken internally as often as desired for pain in the stomach, or merely as a beverage. Nowadays sweetened with a little sugar. Stem, or the bark, not used.

T [757]

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

BCT 137 757 Fatsia horrida Sm. (B. and H.), DEVIL'S CLUB

Bella Coola: Bark of roots chewed, and juice swallowed with a little water as a powerful purgative.

Bark of roots and stems boiled, and three or four cupfuls of the decoction taken internally as a purgative; or one cupful, three times a day for a week or two, to cure rheumatism.

C [844] Southern Carrier: Bark boiled, and one or two cupfuls of the decoction taken internally before and after childbirth as a purgative.

Northern Carrier: Inside layer of the inner bark rolled into pills and swallowed for cramps in the stomach and bowels, especially after a purgative. Acted also as a purgative, especially if much hot water taken with it.

T [752] Gitksan: A decoction used as a purgative in the treatment of gonorrhoea. Believed to assist the knitting of broken bones if taken continually.

Boiled, together with entire plant of squashberry (Viburnum pauciflorum Raf.), and the decoction taken internally as a diuretic and purgative, for strangury or any sickness. Used continuously for rupture.

For use with a form (See page 48).

CORNACEAE, DOGWOOD FAMILY

Cornus canadensis L., BUNCHBERRY, DOGWOOD, DWARF CORNEL, PIGEONBERRY

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Whole plant, without berries, boiled, and the strong decoction used as an eye-wash.

Northern Carrier: Used as a medicine for some unspecified malady.

Gitksan: Not used.

Cornus stolonifera Michx., RED-OSIER DOGWOOD, RED WILLOW

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Northern Carrier: See scrub pine, page 49.

Gitksan: Not used.

BC

ERICACEAE, HEATH FAMILY

137 757 Pyrola secunda L., WINTERGREEN

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Roots, gathered at any time of the year, boiled, and the strong decoction used as an eye-wash.

Pyrola bracteata Hook., WINTERGREEN

Bella Coola: Not used.

BCT Southern Carrier: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

137 757 Pyrola asarifolia Michx., WINTERGREEN

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Leaves and roots, gathered at any time of the year, boiled for about two hours, and the warm decoction used as an eye-wash.

Gitksan: Not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

Ledum groenlandicum Oeder, LABRADOR TEA
Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a simple beverage, or for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.
Southern Carrier: Not used formerly, now as a beverage only.
Gitksan: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a diuretic, or merely as a beverage.

Gaultheria shallon Pursh, SALAL
Bella Coola: Leaves toasted, pulverised by rubbing, and applied to cuts.
Southern Carrier: Not used.

LABIATAE, MINT FAMILY

Prunella vulgaris L., HEAL-ALL
Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, and blossoms washed, boiled, and a cupful of the weak decoction taken internally for the heart. Not used for diarrhoea or vomiting.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

Mentha canadensis L., MINT
Bella Coola: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally, as often as desired, for pain in the stomach. Not used for vomiting, constipation, or diarrhoea.
Southern Carrier: Entire plant boiled, and a cupful of the decoction taken internally for the stomach, colds, lung affections, and various ailments.
Gitksan: Not used.

SCROPHULARIACEAE, FIGWORT FAMILY

Castilleja miniata Dougl., PAINT-BRUSH
Bella Coola: Not used.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally for bleeding, stiff lungs, sore eyes, and lame back, possibly caused by kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.
Seeds boiled and the decoction taken internally for coughs.

CAPRIFOLIACEAE, HONEYSUCKLE FAMILY

Lonicera involucrata Banks., BLACK TWIN-BERRY
Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and cud applied for itch.
Leaves chewed and applied to boils, after they were cut open, to draw out the poison.
Leaves crushed and applied to burns and sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark toasted, pulverized, and applied to sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark boiled and decoction taken internally for cough.
Southern Carrier: Bark boiled for five hours, and the decoction used daily as an eye-wash. Roots, leaves, and berries not used.
Northern Carrier: See scrub pine (page 49).
Gitksan: Fresh juice of berries used in sore eyes. Inner bark (when berries not available) soaked in water, and the milky solution used in the eyes.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

B C T 137 757 B [164]

Symphoricarpus racemosa Michx., GARDEN SNOWBERRY

Bella Coola: Branches, large and small, with the bark left on, boiled, and the decoction taken internally daily as the best cure for gonorrhoea. A diuretic. Roots, blossoms, and berries not used for medicine, unless, as one informant stated, the berries were used with the branches.

See also tideland spruce (page 51).

Southern Carrier: Juice of ripe berries used in sore eyes.

Gitksan: Not used.

B C T 137 757

Sambucus racemosa L., RED-FRUITED ELDER

Bella Coola: Bark of the roots placed in water, a few hot stones added until water reached blood heat, and decoction used as a powerful emetic and purgative for pain in the stomach.

Bark of the roots peeled with the teeth, chewed, preferably with a little cool water, and juice swallowed as an emetic and purgative. Said to act within half an hour.

Southern Carrier: Roots boiled, and two cupfuls of the warm decoction taken internally twice a day as a purgative.

Northern Carrier: Roots brewed, the first water discarded and the second taken internally as a purgative.

Sikani: Bark boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gitksan: Bark of roots scraped off, water added to the bark, and the infusion taken internally as an emetic and purgative.

B C T 137 757

Viburnum pauciflorum Raf., SQUASHBERRY

Bella Coola: Bark chewed, and the juice swallowed for whooping cough and cold on the lungs.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Northern Carrier: Inside bark crushed, steeped in cold water until the water turned green, and one cupful of the infusion taken internally as a purgative and for dysentery.

Gitksan: Bark and twigs boiled, and one cupful of the decoction taken internally in the morning for coughs and "consumption". Said to be always taken in conjunction with devil's club (page 62). See also Angelica genuflexa Nutt., page 61.

VALERIANACEAE, VALERIAN FAMILY

B T 137 278 T C [302] [237]

Valeriana septentrionalis Rydb., VALERIAN

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Roots, mixed with grease, used for perfume.

Northern Carrier: Valerian? blossoms crushed, and the oil, often mixed with fat from a black bear hide, applied as a hair tonic. Believed to make the hair smooth and shiny, to help its growth, and to give it a fragrance.

Gitksan: Entire plant steeped in bear grease and the grease applied to hair and face as a perfume.

C [302]

Valeriana sitchensis Bong., VALERIAN

Southern Carrier: Leaves mixed with grease used as a perfume for the hair.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

COMPOSITAE, COMPOSITE FAMILY

Achillea Millefolium L., YARROW

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.

Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the roots, boiled, and the decoction taken internally at frequent intervals for colds.

Leaves chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.

Gitksan: The young plant, except the roots, gathered between June 1 and July 15, boiled, and the decoction gargled for sore throat. Roots, marked by the dead stalks, dug out at other seasons and used instead.

Artemisia discolor Dougl., SAGEBRUSH, GREEN WORMWOOD

Bella Coola: Used for medicine.

Southern Carrier: Chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.

Northern Carrier: Sageorush (sp. ?) steeped in water and the hot decoction taken internally for headache.

Antennaria Howellii Greene, EVERLASTING

Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pains in the body, but not for pains in the limbs. Not used for colds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Taraxacum officinale Weber., COMMON DANDELION introduced

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Remedy said to have been learned from white men.

Gitksan: Not used.

Lactuca spicata (Lam.) Hitchc., TALL LETTUCE

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and many cups of the decoction taken internally for heart trouble, hemorrhage, pains in the body (but not in the limbs), for vomiting, or for diarrhoea. Neither an emetic nor a purgative. Milky juice not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Prenanthes alata (Hook.) Gray, RATTLESNAKE ROOT

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily for colds. For a baby only a small spoonful given three or four times a day.

Bella Coola: Chewed, and applied to burns or to any painful part of the body.

Boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily.

Mnium affine Bland, MOSS

Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the "roots", boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction used to bathe a swollen face.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B C 137 757 Fomes Laricis (Jacq.), more generally known as Polyporus officinalis Fries, A SHELF FUNGUS

Bella Coola: This (?) fungus ground, steeped in water, and the decoction taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Southern Carrier: If found on the Douglas fir tree, dried, powdered, a handful steeped in boiling water and the hot decoction taken internally as an emetic and purgative. Said to act within an hour. Not used if found on any other tree.

B C [171] (According to Dr. John Dearness, this is a medical polypore, perhaps the only fungus used by pharmacists. Park, Davis, and Company make a fluid extract and a triturate which is prescribed for the relief of night sweats in tuberculosis. The fungus is a cathartic in large doses. Its medicinal virtues have long been known in the old world.)

B 137 757 Bovista pila B. and C., PUFF BALL

Bella Coola: Spores dusted on wounds, sores of gonorrhoea, and suppurating sores other than boils.

LICHEN

Bella Coola: A certain long, white lichen, if found on the red alder tree, warmed, and applied to a broken boil or suppurating sore.

Sticta sp., LICHEN

Bella Coola: Entire plant, if from red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.) or crab apple (Pyrus diversifolia Bong.), but not from willow (Salix sp.), boiled, and five cupfuls of the hot decoction taken internally daily for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting. Neither a purgative nor an astringent.

C [757] Entire plant boiled and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

Entire plant pulverized and applied to skin.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

KELP

B 757 Bella Coola: A small kelp found on the rocks sometimes used for a sweat bath. See western dock, page 56.

WOOD SAP

Bella Coola: The sap that oozes from any kind of wood when burning considered a good remedy for sores.

MOUNTAIN GOAT

B 136 757 Oreamnos Montanus, Ord., MOUNTAIN GOAT

Bella Coola: Mountain goat fat boiled with droppings of goose that had fed on roots, and the mixture given to babies once or twice a day for colds.

Goat meat with droppings of the bushy-tailed woodrat, commonly called packrat (Neotoma cinerea), taken internally with water as a remedy for nursing babies when they had colds.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE 15

B
C 136
757

SKUNK

Spilogale, Spotted Skunk, or Mephitis, Striped Skunk

Bella Coola: Oil not used as a remedy.

Southern Carrier: Oil warmed, and a cupful taken as a purgative for worms.

HARE

Lepus americanus columbiensis Rhoads, The British Columbia Varying Hare

Northern Carrier: Hare opened, ruminating stomach containing something like the white of an egg removed, and the liquid applied to a foot blistered by frost-bite. Considered a sure cure.

C
[D52]

RED SQUIRREL

Sciurus hudsonicus Erxleben

Bella Coola: Opened along the under side and applied as a remedy to badly broken chancres in the groin.

B
137
757

GIANT SLUG

Bella Coola: Slug made to crawl into a baby's mouth to cure loss of skin on the inside of its mouth.

Slug opened, and bound tightly over large cut.

B
[D52]

SEA CUCUMBER

Bella Coola: Decoction of the water in which the sea cucumber was boiled, taken internally as a specific against heartburn. Not a purgative.

SPITTLE INSECT

Cercopidae, Spittle Insect, Frog Hopper

Bella Coola: "Fly spit," i.e., the material surrounding a nymph of a spittle insect, applied to sores.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

B
C 136
757

WOODWORMS

Gitksan: Pulverized and applied to cuts.

T
136
757
[D52]

COPPER

Bella Coola: Fine particles scraped from clean copper (but not from a weathered green surface) placed in sore eyes.

Gitksan: Copper ground, poured into a vessel of cold water, first water poured off, and second water taken internally as a harmless contraceptive.

B
T 757

T [842]

CHARCOAL

Northern Carrier: Charcoal daubed under the eyes to prevent snow-blindness.

C
751

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 2

115
142
291
302

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Joshua Moody

[p 26 (B)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 3

115
142
302
291

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Captain Schooner

[y 26 (c)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 4

115
142
291
302

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Jim Pollard

[726 (D)]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 11

142
231
291
516
622

Photograph by the author

A Bella Coola couple with their dogs; the one on the left is a chief.

[p 186 (c)]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 3

575*
796*
142
342
292
791

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Sôi producing a crystal from his stomach

[p. 84 (c)]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575*
196*
142●
342
292
787

PLATE 5

Photograph by M. J. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Camified with incubus in form of a bear

[p. 84 (E)]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 10

575
746
532
142

Photograph by the author

Dancer carrying the fungus

[p. 164 (D)]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 13

142
291
302
342
516

Photograph by the author

Mrs. Joshua Mandy (left) and Mrs. Willie Mack, two Bella Coola women

[p 516 (A)]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 14

142
291
302

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Mrs. Jim Pollard, a Kitsaquit woman

[p 516 (B)]

2; McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

PLATE 11

142
291
302

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Mrs. Jim Pollard, profile

[p 516(3)]

162
391
392
392

PLATE 16

Photograph by the author

Brother Schumacher, a Bella Coola man, and his children

[p 516 (7)]

PLATE 17

142
E91
302
W3

Photograph by A. J. Hanna, National Museum of Canada

Lame Charlie, a Bella Coola man

[p 516 (E)]

PLATE 10

142
201
302

Photograph by R. J. Cantin, Forestry Branch, of Canada

Eugenia Wynne, an aged Bella Coola man

[p 516 (F)]

2:McDowell E-5 (1923-1924) 1948
NEL Bilacoola NE6

PLATE IX

142
291
302

[illegible]

Gladys Wary, a Kitsegukla woman

[p 516 (G)]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 30

1420
291
302

Photograph by the author

Alec Davis, a full-blooded
Bella Coola

[p 516 (H)]

CHAPTER VI

THE MAN HIMSELF

Physique — Character

Physique

142 144 IN central British Columbia there are two types of Indian; one represented by the Carriers and Chilkotin of the interior, the other, by the coastal peoples. The first are relatively slight of build with graceful carriage, and thin, rather delicate-featured faces. The younger people, particularly, are lithe and handsome, resembling bronze statues. On the other hand, individuals of the second type are characterized by stocky, heavy physique, with thick-set, powerful bodies, muscular arms and legs; their faces have wide mouths and prominent cheek-bones and noses (see Plate 13). Undoubtedly the Bella Coola belong with these latter.[1] No measurements were taken to substantiate this statement, but the general affinities of the tribe are obvious. Stature, build, physiognomy, and especially that intangible impression of heaviness, unite to demonstrate even to one with slight knowledge of British Columbia Indians that he is dealing with a people who are predominantly of the coastal type. Of course there are individuals of the interior type, but they are decidedly in the minority (see Plates 14 and 15). The Bella Coola claim that they can distinguish a coastal man from one of the interior people, and that every coastal tribe has its own peculiarities sufficiently marked to be recognizable on sight. Probably no white observer can make this fine distinction, though the difference between the two main types is clearly apparent.

142 145 Judged by white standards the Bella Coola are far from prepossessing in appearance. Even the children are plain and stolid, with little if any of the grace and appeal of childhood.

[1] Cf. Boas, p. 10.

As they grow older the plainness of feature is more pronounced, accompanied by increasing heaviness of body (see Plate 16). Many of the adults are corpulent and move with slow, awkward gait. As a rule the men have great strength and are capable of prolonged and arduous exertion, particularly in paddling; in fact, constant use of canoes may have developed this powerful, ungainly build. Few are good walkers or packers; such, if they are found, usually belong to the lighter interior type. Among the grown people the face, though unbeautiful, often has a kindly expression, even becoming attractive in laughter or when a friendly grin spreads from ear to ear. With advancing age the prominent nose seems to grow larger, frequently becoming almost aquiline (see Plate 17). Many of the older people assert that this was even more common in former times. In time the face becomes lined with wrinkles and the body appears to shrink (see Plate 18). The teeth are in many cases worn down to the gums; this seems to cause no discomfort, though an old person cannot utter the glottal stops and velar sounds with which the language abounds without emitting a fine spray of saliva. They are absolutely unable to pronounce several of the Bella Coola words, while the constant spitting is a disagreeable feature of their conversation, particularly to an investigator striving, often vainly, to record sounds accurately. The deep wrinkles of old women give them a benign "grandmotherly" expression, which makes them more attractive in extreme age than in youth (see Plate 19). Senile decay is so frequent that the return to infancy in mind as well as in physical powers is regarded as normal.

Among the coastal tribes hair on the face is not uncommon, but in this characteristic the Bella Coola are pre-eminent. Nearly all the men have sparse moustaches, at least; many have a heavy growth, and several are full-bearded. That this was due to white mixture was assumed at first, but no evidence could be found to support this view. There are a number of half-bloods in the community but they are no more hirsute than the full-blooded Indians. Razors are now almost univer-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

142 144 [302] sally used but the older people state that beards were by no means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Potlas, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white [648] traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with [567] slave women and others of low family was not uncommon, but [622] it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to misconduct herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Potlas himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

142 144 Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be overlooked in the case of this one individual, one must not disregard the opinion of the people themselves on hairiness in general. They are proud of it and regard beards and moustaches as marks of virility given to them by Alqaxniw; baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hairy than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride [186] that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say in scorn, "hairless like Chinaman." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate 20), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.[1]

Character

181 It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have

[1] This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been caused by Aino mixture.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not likely to occur at the present time; in fact, they belong to the golden age of the distant past. In addition, a few tales are popularly told, not for their wealth of interesting detail, but as historical incidents. Some of these contain exaggerations that verge on mythology, whereas others, especially those dealing with certain individuals not long deceased, have clearly a foundation of truth. The themes include tales of travel, hunting exploits, the experiences of criminals, and varied subjects. 538 173

THE WIFE WHO WAS SOLD AS A SLAVE 539*

This story describes the adventures of a Bella Coola woman, daughter of a chief named Tsakwum, who was married to a Bella Bella chief. The latter's father sold her as a slave to Trahse, a Kitkatla chief and ancestor of the chief with the same name who was so feared by the Bella Coola. This was, of course, contrary to all established custom. Trahse carried the woman away to Kitkatla, whence there seemed little hope for her return.

Trahse owned a number of crabapple trees at Kitlobe which he visited every autumn to collect and preserve the fruit. The woman had been with him for some time when he went as usual for the ripe apples. Members of different tribes can be distinguished by their different physique and a Kitlobe, recognizing that the woman was a Bella Coola, asked her how she came to be with Trahse. She told him how she had been sold, disgracefully, and he promised to help her return home. Telling her to conceal her plans, he bade her to be ready to flee early the following morning. At the appointed time he appeared, bringing dried eulachon, grease, moccasins, and other equipment, wrapped in a seal's stomach. He sketched on the ground the overland route to Kimsquit, telling her how many affluents of the Kitlobe River she must pass before fol- [144] lowing one to the south, thence across the divide, and down the Kimsquit River.

The woman started out, but after several days of travel realized that she had passed the place where she should turn south, and was lost. In point of fact, she was at this time near Ootsa Lake. She headed back in the hope of recovering her trail, but snow fell and she could go no farther; to make matters worse she had consumed all her eulachon, and most of the grease. The unfortunate woman sought shelter under a big tree, where in time she was completely covered with snow. Every day she ate a small

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER VI

THE MAN HIMSELF

Physique — Character

Physique

142 144 IN central British Columbia there are two types of Indian; one represented by the Carriers and Chilkotin of the interior, the other, by the coastal peoples. The first are relatively slight of build with graceful carriage, and thin, rather delicate-featured faces. The younger people, particularly, are lithe and handsome, resembling bronze statues. On the other hand, individuals of the second type are characterized by stocky, heavy physique, with thick-set, powerful bodies, muscular arms and legs; their faces have wide mouths and prominent cheek-bones and noses (see Plate 13). Undoubtedly the Bella Coola belong with these latter.[1] No measurements were taken to substantiate this statement, but the general affinities of the tribe are obvious. Stature, build, physiognomy, and especially that intangible impression of heaviness, unite to demonstrate even to one with slight knowledge of British Columbia Indians that he is dealing with a people who are predominantly of the coastal type. Of course there are individuals of the interior type, but they are decidedly in the minority (see Plates 14 and 15). The Bella Coola claim that they can [824] distinguish a coastal man from one of the interior people, and that every coastal tribe has its own peculiarities sufficiently marked to be recognizable on sight. Probably no white observer can make this fine distinction, though the difference between the two main types is clearly apparent.

142 145 Judged by white standards the Bella Coola are far from prepossessing in appearance. Even the children are plain and stolid, with little if any of the grace and appeal of childhood.

[1] Cf. Boas, p. 56.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

As they grow older the plainness of feature is more pronounced, accompanied by increasing heaviness of body (see Plate 16). Many of the adults are corpulent and move with slow, awkward gait. As a rule the men have great strength and are capable of prolonged and arduous exertion, particularly in paddling; in fact, constant use of canoes may have developed this powerful, ungainly build. Few are good walkers or packers; such, if they are found, usually belong to the lighter interior type. Among the grown people the face, though unbeautiful, often has a kindly expression, even becoming attractive in laughter or when a friendly grin spreads from ear to ear. With advancing age the prominent nose seems to grow larger, frequently becoming almost aquiline (see Plate 17). Many of the older people assert that this was even more common in former times. In time the face becomes lined with wrinkles and the body appears to shrink (see Plate 18). The teeth are in many cases worn down to the gums; this seems to cause no discomfort, though an old person cannot utter the glottal stops and velar sounds with which the language abounds without emitting a fine spray of saliva. They are absolutely unable to pronounce several of the Bella Coola words, while the constant spitting is a disagreeable feature of their conversation, particularly to an investigator striving, often vainly, to record sounds accurately. The deep wrinkles of old women give them a benign "grandmotherly" expression, which makes them more attractive in extreme age than in youth (see Plate 19). Senile decay is so frequent that the return to infancy in mind as well as in physical powers is regarded as normal.

Among the coastal tribes hair on the face is not uncommon, but in this characteristic the Bella Coola are pre-eminent. Nearly all the men have sparse moustaches, at least; many have a heavy growth, and several are full-bearded. That this was due to white mixture was assumed at first, but no evidence could be found to support this view. There are a number of half-bloods in the community but they are no more hirsute than the full-blooded Indians. Razors are now almost univer-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

142 sally used but the older people state that beards were by no
144 means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made [302] concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly-beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Potlas, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white [648] traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with [567] slave women and others of low family was not uncommon, but [622] it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to misconduct herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Potlas himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

142 Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be over-
144 looked in the case of this one individual, one must not dis-
[302] regard the opinion of the people themselves on hairiness in general. They are proud of it and regard beards and moustaches as marks of virility given to them by Alqawim; baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hirsute than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride
[186] that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say in scorn, "hairless like Chinamen." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate 10), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.[5]

Character

181 It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have

[5] This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been caused by Jesuit mixture.

I.

105 The Bella Coola are a small tribe inhabiting the coasts of Dean Inlet and Bentinck Arm, two long and narrow fords situated in about latitude 52° north, in British Columbia. Their habitat extends along Bella Coola River, which empties into North Bentinck Arm. The name "Bella Coola" is a corruption of the word "Bilhula," by which name the tribe is known to the Kwakiutl. There is no term in their own language embracing all the tribes speaking the Bella Coola language. It seems that at a former time the tribe was quite populous; but, owing to various epidemics and the introduction of other diseases, its numbers have dwindled down, so that at the present time it has been reduced to only a few hundred souls. The 105 language spoken by the tribe belongs to the Salishan family, more par-
(47) ticularly to the group of dialects spoken along the coast of Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia. The great similarity between the Bella Coola and the other Coast-Salishan dialects leads me to assume that at one time the tribes speaking these dialects inhabited contiguous areas. At the present time the Bella Coola are separated from other tribes speaking Salishan languages by a considerable stretch of country, which is inhabited by tribes of Athapascan and Kwakiutl lineage. Vocabulary and grammar have been slightly modified, particularly by an extensive choice of words. The relation of their language to the other dialects of the Coast Salish is similar to that of the Tillamook, another language belonging to the Salishan family, which is spoken on the coast of Oregon, to so were separated from the rest of the Salishan territory by the tribes inhabited by the Chinook.

105 Physically the Bella Coola bear evidence of longcontinued contact with (48) the northern Coast tribes, and also with the Athapascan tribes of the interior. Culturally, intermarriages have been quite frequent, so much so that their present physical appearance differs considerably from that of the southern Salishan tribes, of whom they form a branch. The same is true in regard to their customs and beliefs, which differ fundamentally from those of the southern Salishan tribes.

(51) In the present paper I shall describe the mythology of the Bella Coola, and discuss its development.

II.

114 The previous knowledge of the mythology of this tribe is based on studies made by Albert Jacobsen, Philip Jacobsen, Gladstone, and the writer. In 1895 I published a few brief notes on their traditions.[1] Gladstone pub-

115 [1] Verhandlungen der Berliner Gesellschaft für Anthropologie, Ethnologie und Urgeschichte, 1895, p. 416.

Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)990 NEB Bellacoola NEA

174 exhibited by Salish tribes refer to the early separation of the Bella Coola tribe from the related tribes of the Gulf of Georgia, and that in their traditions they have retained the memory of the emigration of part of the tribe from the southern territory. It seems also probable that the allusion to the origin of one family of the tribe on Skeena River refers to a mixture with the tribes inhabiting northern British Columbia.

171

The traditions of the tribes also describe the style of houses used by the 174 inhabitants of certain village communities; and it is interesting to note that 177 some of these houses correspond to the subterranean lodges that were in use 342 among the Chilcotin, while others correspond to those that were in use among the Carriers. It is said that the ancestor of the Nuxalk used the subterranean lodge which is called tsi'pa (see p. 83), while the ancestor of the Nuq'a'ni used the skin lodge which is called skoxs (see p. 94).

174

Since the Bella Coola retain the fundamental traits of the social organization of their congeners in the south, and since their traditions bear evidence of an emigration from that region, and since, furthermore, the linguistic evidence proves that the Bella Coola and the Coast Salish at one time inhabited contiguous areas on the coast, we are justified in assuming that the general culture of the Bella Coola at the time of their emigration must have resembled that of the Coast Salish. The question then arises, How did the peculiar endogamic system and the remarkable mythology of the Bella Coola originate from the much simpler forms that we find among the Coast Salish?

174

One of the most remarkable features in the inner life of the tribes of 177 the northern coast of British Columbia is the great importance of the clan 324 legend, which is considered one of the most valuable properties of each clan 614 or family. It is carefully guarded in the same way as material property, and an attempt on the part of a person not a member of the clan to tell the tradition as his own is considered one of the gravest offences against property rights. The possession of a clan tradition is felt by the Indian to be one of the most important prerogatives. When, therefore, the Bella Coola settled on Bella Coola River, and were thrown into contact with the northern Coast tribes, the lack of a well-developed clan tradition must have been felt as a serious drawback. The physical appearance of the Bella Coola proves that [144] at one time they must have intermarried to a great extent with the Bella Bella. Through these marriages the peculiar customs of the Coast tribes were first introduced among them. This is shown by the fact that a great deal of the mythological names can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin, of which stock the Bella Bella are a branch. Thus the name for their [illegible] [illegible] Kwakiutl, word [illegible] [illegible] 174
[illegible] may be translated as "the wealthiest one." The great frequency of 176

CHAPTER VI

THE MAN HIMSELF

Physique — Character

Physique

142 144 In central British Columbia there are two types of Indian; one represented by the Carriers and Chilkotin of the interior, the other, by the coastal peoples. The first are relatively slight of build with graceful carriage, and thin, rather delicate-featured faces. The younger people, particularly, are lithe and handsome, resembling bronze statues. On the other hand, individuals of the second type are characterized by stocky, heavy physique, with thick-set, powerful bodies, muscular arms and legs; their faces have wide mouths and prominent cheek-bones and noses (see Plate 15). Undoubtedly the Bella Coola belong with these latter.[1] No measurements were taken to substantiate this statement, but the general affinities of the tribe are obvious. Stature, build, physiognomy, and especially that intangible impression of heaviness, unite to demonstrate even to one with slight knowledge of British Columbia Indians that he is dealing with a people who are predominantly of the coastal type. Of course there are individuals of the interior type, but they are decidedly in the minority (see Plates 14 and 15). The Bella Coola claim that they can distinguish a coastal man from one of the interior people, and that every coastal tribe has its own peculiarities suffi- [824] [illegible] observer can make this fine distinction, though the difference between the two main types is clearly apparent.

142 145 Judged by white standards the Bella Coola are far from prepossessing in appearance. Even the children are plain and stolid, with little if any of the grace and appeal of childhood.

[1] Cf. Boas, p. 36.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

As they grow older the plainness of feature is more pronounced, 142 145 accompanied by increasing heaviness of body (see Plate 16). Many of the adults are corpulent and move with slow, awkward 481 gait. As a rule the men have great strength and are capable 147 of prolonged and arduous exertion, particularly in paddling; in fact, constant use of canoes may have developed this powerful, ungainly build. Few are good walkers or parkers; such, if they are found, usually belong to the lighter interior type. Among the grown people the face, though unbeautiful, often has 142 a kindly expression, even becoming attractive in laughter or 145 when a friendly grin spreads from ear to ear. With advancing age the prominent nose seems to grow larger, frequently becoming almost aquiline (see Plate 17). Many of the older people assert that this was even more common in former times. In time the face becomes lined with wrinkles and the body appears to shrink (see Plate 18). The teeth are in many cases worn down to the gums; this seems to cause no discomfort, [194] though an old person cannot utter the glottal stops and velar sounds with which the language abounds without emitting a fine spray of saliva. They are absolutely unable to pronounce several of the Bella Coola words, while the constant spitting is a disagreeable feature of their conversation, particularly to [124] an investigator striving, often vainly, to record sounds accurately. The deep wrinkles of old women give them a benign "grandmotherly" expression, which makes them more attractive in extreme age than in youth (see Plate 19). Senile decay is 886 so frequent that the return to infancy in mind as well as in 145 physical powers is regarded as normal.

Among the coastal tribes hair on the face is not uncommon, 142 but in this characteristic the Bella Coola are pre-eminent. [illegible] 111 have a heavy growth, and several are full-bearded. That this 302 was due to white mixture was assumed at first, but no evidence could be found to support this view. There are a number of half-bloods in the community but they are no more hirsute than the full-blooded Indians. Razors are now almost univer-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

As they grow older the plainness of feature is more pronounced, accompanied by increasing heaviness of body (see Plate 16). Many of the adults are corpulent and move with slow, awkward gait. As a rule the men have great strength and are capable of prolonged and arduous exertion, particularly in paddling; in fact, constant use of canoes may have developed this powerful, ungainly build. Few are good walkers or packers; such, if they are found, usually belong to the lighter interior type. Among the grown people the face, though unbeautiful, often has a kindly expression, even becoming attractive in laughter or when a friendly grin spreads from ear to ear. With advancing age the prominent nose seems to grow larger, frequently becoming almost aquiline (see Plate 17). Many of the older people assert that this was even more common in former times. In time the face becomes lined with wrinkles and the body appears to shrink (see Plate 18). The teeth are in many cases worn down to the gums; this seems to cause no discomfort, though an old person cannot utter the glottal stops and velar sounds with which the language abounds without emitting a fine spray of saliva. They are absolutely unable to pronounce several of the Bella Coola words, while the constant spitting is a disagreeable feature of their conversation, particularly to an investigator striving, often vainly, to record sounds accurately. The deep wrinkles of old women give them a benign "grandmotherly" expression, which makes them more attractive in extreme age than in youth (see Plate 19). Senile decay is so frequent that the return to infancy in mind as well as in physical powers is regarded as normal.

Among the coastal tribes hair on the face is not uncommon, but in this characteristic the Bella Coola are pre-eminent. Nearly all the men have sparse moustaches, at least; many have a heavy growth, and several are full-bearded. That this was due to white mixture was assumed at first, but no evidence could be found to support this view. There are a number of half-breeds in the community but they are no more hirsute than the full-blooded Indians. Razors are now almost univer-there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by members of the Secret society that none would dare go there. If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-place of the Sisnaq'a chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village. The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cul-de-sac, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can come. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing songs; they pecked out the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had beneath the surface, and throw it to a second time. Repeat this four times. If the wrapping has been carefully fastened, little water leaks in and the child suffers no discomfort. This causes him to grow up confident and brave with regard to canoeing and every kind of activity on the river. Like the last medicine, this is not proper for one who has held sexual intercourse. It cannot be applied to a girl since heavy sea unfavourable to women who must observe many taboos concerning them.

To Cause Modesty and Respect for One's Elders

When a boy is about six or eight years of age, his father leaves him lightly, four times, with a cane-end. This is done in the early morning, then he takes his son to work immediately. Four days later the beating and washing are repeated. From this time on, a person should whip his son four times every fourth morning until he is old enough to marry. The force of the chastisements increases as the lad grows older, so that when he is about fourteen years of age, he is beaten with the full force of his parent's arm. It is a point of honour for a lad to endure his whippings without whimpering; one who shows the pain he is suffering is laughed at by his fellows and not allowed to work with them. This medicine makes a child strong, manly, respectful to his elders, and, generally, the type of individual to whom supernatural beings are likely to show favour.

This practice has long been discontinued and it was impossible to learn whether or not it had ever been carried out with full vigour. Several of the older men stated that in their childhood they had been beaten periodically by their fathers, but none had had this last over a period of years. It was claimed that such had been the case in earlier times, but it seems almost certain that this type of chastisement could never have been carried out regularly. During the winter, for example, when social dances were taking place, the whole community used to sleep late and it is impossible that a father was every fourth

[illegible]

[illegible] 575°
196°

[illegible]

During the following day a hole is dug behind the fire of sufficient depth to conceal X, when standing in it, to high as the thighs. Towards dusk he takes up his position in the pit, his face is blindfolded and he wears the customary cotton-bark collar and a belt upon to hold the frame in place. Six assistants lay down on the floor immediately in front of him with his head in the hole beside X's feet so that the two men, instead of appearing as such, seem to be only one extend upon the ground. To right hole the Initiator take their places and the more influential members of the society pass forward to see that X and his assistants are properly disguised so that the fact that they are really two is not apparent. When all is in readiness, the Bella Coola proceed to for a bewitch to summon the waiting uninitiated, but in Kimsquit one of the mandala orders some of the younger men to extinguish the fire, before this is done, so that as the non-members come to the dance they have not be warned by finding the house in deep darkness. The bewitch guide them to their places in the front corners, where they sit in shuddering expectancy for about an hour. The silence is broken only by the occasional sound of a whistle and the bizarre bewitching of the gongs. Suddenly the hush is shattered by the voice of a dancer calling out four times as he at, the consecration song is pass.

To the spellbound uninitiated it seems as if the supernatural beings surrounding him had become too much for him, so that he cried out in the agony of his soul. Immediately the lamp have been placed in readiness and a fire is quickly kindled. The Cannibals growl savagely in their corners and the uninitiated shrieks. From this point forth the ritual in Bella Coola and Kimsquit is identical.

X circles the fire, screeches, four times and appears to sustained on the floor with outstretched legs though in reality he is standing in the hole. One of the dancer stands up and announces:

[The Dance of the Supernatural Charmer]

575*
796*
[522]
[609]
[152]

and dance. This for strangers is not a song Bello Conio sentiment and the audience laughs heartily at the spectacle of the doddering old man in vain pursuit of heartless women who is forever young. A considerable number of kokoriri always accompany the procession, pushing our way out with Bo'lilimalum and Singerer. Several of them carry whistles concealed beneath their aprons and the use of these serves to maintain the dignity of the occasion.

[522]

[593]

So many masked figures are said that all must accompany Sarasarand into each house. These usually do go remain on the sidewalk outside, holding one of her horn, a live male mountain goat. In the next house another group of the charmer's victims enters and the ceremony just described is repeated. The same is carried out in every dwelling in the village. Sarasarand and her followers stay a few minutes in X's house before starting out on a second rund, in which the same ritual is carried out. This is done one more, so that each house is visited four times.

By this time dusk has fallen and all to kokoriri except those acting as escort to X have gathered in his house. Presently the uninitiated are called in. Sarasarand is standing on a low box behind the fire, encouraging or mocking lovers to come to her, and bestowing her affection indiscriminately in a heartless manner. The rituals dance up other to and fro ceaselessly and though blows are not usually exchanged, great care must be taken to prevent maidens falling in the [522] much excitement. The efforts of the unfortunate Singerer to each his dance are always a source of merriment. Bo'lilimalum is said explain the significance of it all. Sometimes a cradle is brought in, over which Sarasarand croons while a [593] song is sung, describing her as the mother of many creatures of whom the fathers are animals. It is uncertain whether this part of the ceremony takes place before or for the dance fight or, indeed, whether it is not another type of nakawa which X can use at will. The ritual concludes in a normal way with the expulsion of the uninitiated, the dancers of Bo'lilimalum,

X:McIlwraith E-9 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

(d) That is: I incorporate myself into.

(e) The reference is to another of Sisaqal's myths dealing with the coming to earth of Humai over Kimsquit. Sisaqalmit was the name of his house. 533*

(f) Referring to Green Island once more.

(g) That is: Green Island where our relatives, the Bella Bella, get their food, had just emerged and become visible. It was impossible to obtain a separate translation of these two subdivisions.

(h) Referring again to Green Island. This small piece of land is shaped like a whale, and, as already described, it was originally one. Hawaiim bade the animal come to the surface to be changed to stone; then Wanko settled down as soon as the water had dried from what had been its back. [773] [823]

(m) The literal translation of each subsection may be inaccurate.

Song Used for Yetlin of Kimsquit(a)

A Yuwalwaskw	mahwahwahal	ninwaxilwaskw	skwaqWaskw
It is good(b);	mai(c)? —	has lifted	the sky(d).

[music not correct]

B Kyawaqalwaskw(e)	skwaxwaskw	skwajalkwaskw
He was Raven(f),	the supernatural one	where he descended skwahwhwaskw

the pass(g).

[music not correct]

C Swaqwin-ulwaskw	skwinkwaqlal	xyalkwaskw	xalqlkwaskw
He is bright(h),	the chief	Yetlin,	he marries xwawhkhkhkwaskw	ahhhkwa-sakw

a unique	copper(i).

(a) Recorded on song VII D 47a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pelkmit. This song is said to have been composed over one hundred years ago and since used repeatedly.

(b) With the significance of: It is highly satisfactory.

(c) The meaning of this word is obscure. It refers to the coming of Yetlin with the added implication of a memorial. It applies to the memorial rite being given. [765]

(d) When a chief dies, it is said that the people in their grief feel as if the sky were pressing them down. A memorial rite lessens their sorrow and lifts the burden. [152]

(e) When this word was being sung for the phonograph, the singer erred and replaced it by part of the first word of the third part.

(f) That is: He was in the form of a raven. The reference is to one of the five ancestors of Yetlin.

(g) Meaning one of the pass which stretched between earth and sky in the beginning of time. [773]

(h) This refers to Yetlin. He was formerly weighed down with grief, but by giving a memorial rite he is like the sun as it shows our brilliantly from behind the clouds.

(i) A reference to a special kind of copper mentioned in the chief's origin myth.

§57 horse-shoe hunting birds and small animals with miniature bows and arrows, or snaring them in nooses of grass or string. Little girls make playhouses in which they cook wonderful meals of berries, with perhaps the addition of a wooden fish. On the whole, however, the children do not seem into play as boisterously as white boys and girls, nor do they seem to derive as much pleasure from it. In former times, when clothing was scanty, small lads used to delight in pulling nettles and beating one another with the stinging branches; this must have caused considerable pain, but it was a point of honour not to cry out, and anyone, perhaps caught unawares, who showed discomfort, was laughed at as a coward. Both boys and girls are fond of swinging, and even adult women sometimes find time to enjoy themselves by swaying to and fro at the end of a rope.

Young Bella Coola do not have as many toys as white children, and none of them is complex. Some girls have crude wooden dolls, though elaborate figures are reserved for use in Dance dances. Perhaps the most cherished plaything is a small puppy or, in more years, a kitten, though the unfortunate animal is handled and mauled without consideration. A good carpenter may make for his son a wooden top or a bullroarer, to the envy of his less fortunate friends. Both types of toys are said to be used in Kwakiutl and at some Dance dances the medical figures carry them to play with.

There is one game, ilili, which the salmon are said to delight to watch, and which is accordingly played by boys as soon as the first spring salmon have been dispatched with fishing rods. Each makes for himself, or is given by his father, a wooden spear with a projecting barb, fastened as shown in the accompanying sketch (see Fig. 6). A loop of branches is made and thrown into a pool of eddy-water, or slow-moving water, on each side of which stands a rival group of competitors. At a signal, all throw their spears simultaneously, with the intention of passing them through the ring, so that the barb of each will

Fig. 6
"Fish spear."

515 cionally, in a half-hearted manner, but it is not unusual for a man to allow the hair of years in which to make his ablutions to remain matting for two or three weeks. Not many years ago the Carrier taught their neighbours to make a kind of soap from the ashes of burnt cottonwood sticks thrown into water; with this clothes are washed irregularly and in most cases from sheer necessity only. In former times bathing was a semi-sacred rite, but this fell into disuse with the passing of the old religion, and the use of soap and water merely for the sake of cleanliness has not become a daily habit. The women have more vanity; the younger girls especially like to have new clothes, though they wear them continually, bandana of fr. An effort is often made to dress up for ceremonial dances, but it usually lasts more than the removal of the more obvious dirt and the putting on, over unchanged underganments, of a costume. Pride in personal appearance, love of cleanliness, delight in a clean house, are all quite foreign to the Bella Coola.

356 Probably the reason for lack of comforts in the houses is simply that the people do not feel the need for them. They consider it no hardship to sit on a rickety chair, scoop up food from a common dish and, if they think of it, throw scraps down to the dog or the cat. The smell, the flies, the dirt, the chaos do not concern them. Capable of undergoing privations, hardships, and even sufferings, they think neither of the comfort of themselves nor of others. Their domestic animals are often treated abominably, not through lack of affection or cruelty, but from carelessness. More than once the writer has seen a favourite dog steal a piece of food from the table. In reason, after a furious blow or kick or it, would suddenly, as if by inspiration, throw a choice bit to the animal, saying:

"Why, he must have been hungry!"

Though the Bella Coola feel a kinship with animals unknown to the white man, it is not combined with any recognition of their feelings as living creatures. There are, of course, many exceptions, but on the whole public opinion demands generosity and kindness only towards human members of the group. The moral data is not concerned with animals.

APPENDIX D

[illegible]

[illegible]: Level of attainment.
[illegible]: 1.—Illness or misfortune, such as precedent the outbreak of smallpox, famine.
2.—Smallpox.
[illegible]: Type of emigrating scene with raised green and small moon.
[illegible]: [illegible]
[illegible]: Separate girl when addressed to groups.
[illegible]: Eternity.
[illegible]: Personal family, practically equivalent to children when used by an old person.
[illegible]: The commencement of a chief's publicities and other major ceremonies for access of plant grain crushed near his grave.
[illegible]: Supernatural being.
[illegible]: Man successful in a coup.
[illegible]: Supernatural being who gives pensions to social class.
[illegible]: Conventional expression used for the betrayal with reference to the way in which supernatural beings govern the length of human lives.
[illegible]: 1.—The position of being within range of speech and vision. The term is used to describe relationships formerly existing between the dead and the living.
2.—To vary, term used with reference to the marriage of a medicine man, ceremonies of a chief's grandsons, the significance is similar to that ascribed to the first meaning.
[illegible]: Powerful, third water-hole used in dances, ceremonial objects.
[illegible]: Meeting of water-hole men by tribal ceremony in the upper Bulla Creek valley.
[illegible]: Sun.
[illegible]: Kalkaroo south.
[illegible]: Man grade.
[illegible]: Ceremonial dance-dull carvings worn by initiatedate girls during initiation.
[illegible]: Hand axe for cooking chicken.
[illegible]: Fallen water stone deserved with cross feathers such as is worn by a Wyanny dance.
[illegible]: Wrestling.
[illegible]: Dance take man living in the last century.

[illegible]

[illegible]: Day of the first man to guide a Dutch Lake in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Bulla Bulla village, the Daylighted Sun in Yuma.
[illegible]: Grinding lake.
[illegible]: Place received from Grinding Stone for a Kinnapin man in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Earlier name of a Kinnapin man.
[illegible]: Day of the first man to guide an Ilma in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Day of the return of Mount Kinnapin to Alpa.
[illegible]: Non-commercial weighing, usually individual, and always with cast fishing.
[illegible]: Subcommission healthy in the distant past.

to him and takes him up to the sun, where he is initiated. Early one morning he returns, and is found outside the lodge. He has lost all his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn out by the strong breeze blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and tells everyone where he has been and what he has seen. If he has not taken anyone to will bite his own arm. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shaman must try for two days to recapture his soul. The night after they have recovered it the shaman's dances, clothed in a loincloth and wearing a large head ring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of red cedar bark, demonstrate his success wearing the mask of the Oyegyak (Fig. 200), the spirit which initiated him. This mask corresponds exactly to that of Sachakonkanchal'ent of the Kwakiutl. Some shamans do not bite people, but merely throw red cedar or sea-bags to pieces and disembowel them. Those who bite people will also devour corpses. The shaman has to observe a number of regulations. For four years after his initiation he must not gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not have his hair cut.

Fig. 200
Mask of Oyegyak, shaman.
[illegible]

The Ulo'ko (the laughter) and the Ha'ma (the thunder) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The Ulo'ko "makes fun of everything" and ridicules people with his voice. The Ha'ma carries stones and sticks and begins boisterously gamble and amuse. If he has forgotten some object during his fast, he pays for it at eight o'clock in the morning. The Ulo'ko and Ha'ma, after they have danced, must stay in their houses for one month.

If a person transgresses the laws of the Oyegyak, for instance, when the shaman gambles, or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person disturbs the ceremonies or makes a mistake in handling his paraphernalia, he is liable. The chief summons to council and the offender is called before the court. After he offense has been proved, he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing and one of his relatives is found willing to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared and the relative killed in his stead. The execution of the judgment is intrusted to the shaman, who furnishes the mechanical power by throwing the man into fire or by pulverizing him in some other (mechanical?) way. The object thrown by the shaman is a stick, bone, or finger-nail, around

E. McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bella Coola NEB

[577] [124] ally until complete confidence was established, simplifying work in the field to an enormous extent. Equal trust could be placed on these men in other respects; articles of value were repeatedly left in their houses with the absolute certainty that they would be guarded with care. Some few individuals there were, however, who were neither honest nor trustworthy. [77] [126] Bella Coola religion is not concerned with ethics, but public opinion demands honour in dealing with relatives or friends. In former times, for example, debts incurred by an individual [577] [424] were considered a liability by his relatives. If a man died after buying goods on credit for a potlatch, his family were disgraced [601] [177] if they failed to pay his bills; now, unfortunately, nothing concerns the younger people, many of whom try to avoid meeting even their own debts, much less those of dead relatives. Individual conscience has not replaced the tribal and, more specifically, family influence. Dishonesty in small matters is not [648] [177] uncommon, particularly in dealing with white people who, according to the Bella Coola, were the first to corrupt them. The older people bitterly lament the lack of morality of the younger and state, probably with some justification, that they would have been prevented by the open life which prevailed when several families shared a single house. On the whole, however, the average Bella Coola is probably no less honest than the average white man.

● [153] [124] Individuals vary enormously in mental ability. In making this investigation, it was necessary to interview all the older people of the tribe. Disregarding those unwilling to provide information, it was found that some absolutely lacked the ability to explain matters with which they were familiar; some did not have sufficient patience to be good teachers; some were so forgetful that they would omit necessary points in a story or account; some were downright stupid, whereas others displayed mental ability of no mean order. In reading ethnological literature, one is apt to think of the troubles experienced by the author, and to overlook the fact that natives have as

Bibliography E-3 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

153
124 great difficulties in explaining their customs, as the white man has in understanding them.

115
177
[123]

The writer was impressed by the brilliance shown by several of the natives. Joshua Moody, for example, is essentially the philosopher. More individualistic than most of his tribesmen, he was one of the first to adopt Christianity and has been a faithful follower of the new creed. Deeply interested in religious questions, he has stored up what he has been told him of the Bible and pondered deeply on all problems of life. Not particularly practical, subject to fits of anger or moroseness, but with a malicious temperament which delights in seeking biblical parallels and synonyms for Bella Coola practices, he is the kind of mind which, in other walks of life, would have produced the professor of philosophy. Jim Pollard is quite another type. Essentially practical, he has devoted his energies to keeping abreast of changing conditions. He is the best singer and composer in Bella Coola, the best canoeman for miles; he has learnt to handle a motor-boat engine, to aid prospectors for minerals, and has succeeded in amassing and saving a considerable amount of money. Jim excelled all other informants in clearness and logical presentation of his explanations, though he showed a slight tendency, intelligible enough, to gloss over aspects which he knew would be considered unpleasant. If Jim had been a white man, he would undoubtedly have made his mark in the world of business. The late Captain Schooner differed from either of the preceding. Older than they, and unconverted, he, perhaps, came nearest to the original, unsophisticated Bella Coola type. Heavy in build, coarse in humour and expression, he had a heart of gold and was a fine example of a native gentleman. He was glad to assist most patiently in recording ancient lore, being immensely proud of the traditions of his ancestors. A friendship developed from this which is one of the writer's happiest memories. Often in the evenings life in general was discussed, the war, the rush of progress in big cities, the quest for wealth, the spread of white civilization, and the problems raised by the contact of peoples.

[123]

Schooner lacked the moral acumen of Joshua and Jim, but he revealed himself as a tribal patriarch, proud of his family's history and eager to assist his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, but feeling himself lost and helpless in the struggle before them. With culture, but without literature, he used to speak of the approaching end of Bella Coola culture, and his words brought home the tragedy which the spread of civilization brings to so many, and the responsibility resting upon the white people as a whole.

Until an intelligence test is devised to correlate the mental ability of the white man with that of the native, it is impossible to compare the two scientifically. None the less, the writer deliberately expresses the opinion that Joshua Moody and Jim Pollard are two of the most brilliant men he has met in any walk of life. They are undoubtedly the most able of the Bella Coola; others have only slightly less ability, while the mass of the population compares favorably with an average white community. Their ability, however, is definitely conditioned by their conservatism. Absolutism even in the traditions of their ancestors has checked speculation, so the established explanation is never questioned; new inventions, unauthorized by custom, have been reported as almost sacrilegious; the force of public opinion, while valuable as a deterrent to anti-social practices, has effectively restrained innovations. The Bella Coola are a good example of a community where development has been retarded by extreme conservatism fostered by religious beliefs.

Taking into account the material character, the achievements of these people have not been insignificant. In former times, provided only with tools of stone and occasional copper, they built graceful canoes, made watertight boxes, hewed planks from mighty cedars, and erected large houses which called for considerable engineering skill. Judged by native standards, their carving and painting lacked artistic delicacy, but it required no mean ability to portray crest designs to meet their own standards. Passing from the purely mechanical to the authors, their skill in dancing and dramatics is noteworthy; no one who has witnessed a native dance can fail to have been impressed by the performance of the participants and the stage craft of the organizers. The fact that no system of writing had ever been devised has prevented the establishment of a native literature, but the practice of passing down an extensive folklore by word of mouth shows their memorizing powers as well as their facility for remembering details. At present it is difficult to appreciate what must have been their energy in earlier times when they faced the struggle for existence, armed with stone tools. Abundant salmon gave them adequate food, but only when weirs had been built with great labour. Though game was plentiful, the hunter was equipped with nothing more formidable than a bow and arrow. The singlets and required patience and skill unknown of by the average white man. If the reader will allow his imagination to carry him backwards two hundred years, he will realize that the mere provision of food and clothing necessitated constant effort and cealess exertion.

Hand in hand with many admirable characteristics, the Bella Coola display others which strike the white man as unpromising. A first impression is the untidiness of their homes. Externally, they are often fairly neat, but confusion reigns within. Clothing, instead of being hung up, is left lying on the floor; bedcoverings are piled carelessly; dirty dishes cover the tables, dogs and children crawl over the floor, flies abound; all is dirty and slovenly. The house itself may be uncomplicated; a window lacks glass and has been boarded up; the roof leaks, or the steps are falling down. Nor are the surroundings more attractive. There is no struggling flower bed in the village, but elsewhere the houses are surrounded by wastes of mud where hogs and cattle wander, dogs prowl, and children play. In the distance the mountain peaks rise in splendour, but near at hand all is squalid and unkempt.

They are only slightly more particular about their personal appearance. Men does not discuss them. They wash occa-

1:66:Dovetik E-5 (1922-1924)949
NEA Dollecode NEA

these just described. The giving of these at this time is not obligatory, nor does it affect the validity of the coming marriage. It is merely a mark of friendly feeling between the two groups of relatives, and, by adding to the importance of the event, increases the personal strength of the unborn children. 58

If either X or Y should die during the period of engagement, the presents, or their equivalent, must be returned to the donors. No formal methods are employed to ensure this, but the force of public opinion suffices to compel a man to do that which is proper; in fact, he is anxious to do so. If Y should die, an effort is made to replace her with a sister, cousin, or other near relative, so that the friendly relations entered upon by the two families may not be lost. The gifts mutually given by the two families may be returned and redistributed or the substitute simply takes Y's place without further arrangement. Sometimes, in spite of the wishes of their parents and the elaborate rites carried out, either X or Y breaks the engagement by going to live with somebody else. It is then a mark of pride for the family of the offender to return the gifts they have received, and almost equally a mark of honour for the aggrieved party to give back what has been bestowed upon them, in order to demonstrate how little value they place on the possession of goods. 584 [583] [624] [154] [583]

Though a lengthy engagement is desirable, it may be curtailed. If, for example, one of X's relatives should die before the usual period has elapsed, Y's father may suggest an immediate wedding. He knows that X's family will have heavy expenses in connection with the burial and mourning rites, hence it is courteous to offer a quick marriage with the financial advantages accruing to them at the ceremony. In this case, X either does not work at all for Y's family, or for only a short time. Moreover, if Y reaches marriageable age without her father receiving suitable proposals, he can himself take the initiative by consulting the parents of an eligible young man. If the suggestion is agreeable, the engagement is announced in the manner already described, and the marriage takes place [964]

Lib. Danish E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

Dances portraying supernatural beings, carried out with full vigour until a few years ago, further fostered belief in them among participants and uninitiated alike. Consequently, many of the young and middle-aged men claim to have seen visions similar to those of their elders. The incident already described (I, p. 30) of the stump which was thought to be a grizzly bear is a case in point. On another occasion a young man mentioned casually that a few evenings before he had seen a headless man walking along the road and that, wishing to view the monstrosity more closely, he had tried unsuccessfully to strike a match. The reason was obvious to him; the power of the supernatural visitor prevented the match from lighting. The man, who was undoubtedly convinced of the apparition, may have seen something, perhaps a wheel of fog, somewhat resembling a headless body. A white man would have considered such a sight impossible and absurd, whereas the Bella Coola felt little surprise at the appearance of such a creature and promptly accepted it for what it seemed to be.

Mental activities as well as optical illusions are likewise ascribed to supernatural agency. These include profound agitations of the mind, and even what a white man would consider a passing thought. For instance, one morning when about to start work, a certain man stated that he would have good fortune during the day, that a dream had foretold it. At the time he was moving to a new house and needed help to shift a heavy stove. During the course of the day a number of white men happened to pass by and stopped to speak to him; the stove was mentioned, they offered to move it for him, and did so easily and quickly.

"There you are," said the man, "I told you I was going to have good fortune today."

On another occasion the same man claimed to have felt that misfortune had happened to him and soon learnt that one of his sons had been arrested on a charge of drunkenness and disorderly conduct. The man affirmed that he had this premonition before being aware of its cause.

1:66:Swanton E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

and those who have knowledge of them are sorcerers. Even a man of this kind is not outside the pale of society unless he practises indiscriminately; members of the Sacrat society, for example, frequently employ one to kill an individual who has offended against their regulations (I, p. 740). A man is regarded as a sorcerer not on account of his knowledge but on account of the ends to which he applies it.

Closely related to, if not identical with, the belief that certain consequences follow certain acts, is the conviction that the infraction of ritual prohibitions brings disaster. There are many such taboos, for so they may be called. Though most important at the critical periods of life, puberty, pregnancy, while observing ceremonial chastity, and so forth, there are many which must be obeyed at all times.

Restrictions pertaining to the river and regulations at birth and death have already been described. Like magical acts, these often verge on the religious owing to the belief that disregard offends supernatural beings. On the whole, however, it seems as if most infractions bring their own punishment without intervention of higher powers, a concept which throws taboos into the category of magic rather than of religion, with the ever-present proviso that the two cannot be separated entirely from one another. With them may be associated a number of ritual acts connected with fishing and hunting in which, though the element of propitiation is not absent, it is satisfied by the performance of definite rites. Finally, there have been included in this chapter a number of unimportant beliefs, the psychology of which cannot be analysed.

What is the basis of these rites defined as Medicine, Magic, and Taboo? As already described, the Bella Coola either do not explain their origin and function, or merely state that Alpoxtow is responsible, as he is for every activity of life. This is unsatisfactory because many which, viewed scientifically, have neither curative nor causative power, produce the desired end. A child who has been "made" a carpenter during infancy, usually grows up to be proficient in that profession; the person

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

154 who has been "cured" of an illness, recovers; the man whose 791 death has been "caused" by magic, dies. An average white 789 man would consider such statements to be erroneous, but they not only figure in stories and beliefs, but some of them have been actually observed by the writer. The explanation lies in the susceptibility of the Bella Coola to suggestion. The conviction that he is to die so weakens a man that death often results; belief that he is to recover, aids a sick person to throw off the malady. This sentiment, intelligible in case of disease, is equally applicable in other matters. The child who has been [868] endowed with carpentry skill grows up with the conviction to assist his labours. Moreover, his relatives and friends are also aware of it, and he receives every opportunity to practise, so that the outcome desired is often the consequence of the act.
789 Though the Bella Coola do not appreciate that psychological 828 and sociological factors may be the real cause of the result, they realize the importance of the power of thought. For [771] example, if a group of people is unanimous in wishing some end, or expects some event to happen, it is believed that their thoughts are strong enough to bring about its occurrence. The following examples illustrate this point:

It is said that when the white man first came to British Columbia, a tribe of Indians was living in a secluded valley, far to the south. As more and more settlers arrived, the occupants were driven from their homes and forced into the barren [789] mountains. One night, Alqwstáw came in a vision to one of the natives, saying:

"I see what you desire; you want the white men to withdraw. You, yourself, are helpless. But if all your fellows wish the same, the white men will depart."

The man told all his friends and they agreed to concentrate the next night on their wish to expel the white man. A few failed to do so, and nothing happened. The second night there was the same lack of unanimity. The desire to drive away the intruders grew stronger in course of time, until one night this was the centre of the thoughts of all; next morning the white

1:34c:Dwratch E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

itself to be by withstanding the crushing weight of stone and earth. An old Kimsquit man expressed the firm conviction that his great age was the result of this treatment soon after birth. 789 856 816 [824]

To Cause Imperviousness to Cold

Kill a water ouzel, warm it at a fire, then press it against every part of the infant's body. This makes him as heedless of cold water as the bird. A merganser may be used in the same way, or the foot of one be placed in the child's hand and patted as his fingers clutch it. 789 825 856

To Cause a Quarrelsome Disposition

Burn the nest of wasps and rub the ashes on the infant's face. He will become as bellicose and quick to resent injury as the insects. One old man who habitually beats his wife explains that this is involuntary, since he was treated in this way when a child. Fighting is no longer allowed, so the only person on whom he can exercise his martial ardour is his wife. The woman regards this treatment as a matter of course and the reason is accepted as valid by her associates. [155]

To Cause Success in Thieving

Kill a pack-rat, warm it at a fire, and rub the carcass lightly over the infant's body. This will make him as successful a thief as the animal. Other methods are to cut off a foot and pat this as the infant clutches it in his fingers, or to rub its hands with the ashes of a burnt rat.

To Cause Success in Singing

Catch a live robin or smurmuxels (probably one of the thrushes), warm it at a fire, and rub it lightly against the infant's throat, saying: 533 789 825

"May he be a singer like you." 856

Then release the bird, and the child will grow up a songster. The following story is told of the power of the smurmuxels's song: [539] names to their dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate xx) and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have received the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the women and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death.

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Pathe, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Pathe had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Pathe gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic foray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage.

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tsilaa, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their booty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be-

[See art. 116, p 186 (c) - ANALYST]

(a) The strengthening of the donor's sect.

(b) The strengthening, or initial establishment, of sects for a number of young relations of the donor who may, or may not, be those who are being initiated into the sunet society. Other youths may also be established as sects by their relations.

The duration of a potlatch varies with the number of sects being performed. The preliminaries, including the beginning of seclusion for sunet initiates, requires at least several weeks, in some cases months. There is further delay of a week or more after the arrival of the first guests, so only when the last party has arrived can the actual potlatch begin. This can then be completed in three days and nights, although if many initiates are performing their sunet dances, a longer time is required.

What are the consequences of giving a potlatch?

In the first place the donor spreads the fame of his name far and wide, also the myth with which it is incorporated. Thus he increases the renown of his ancestors, a source of intense pride and gratification.

More important even than this, it elevates the donor himself. With the proper carrying out of the complicated ritual and the knowledge that his name is now known among different tribes, a man experiences a feeling of mental superiority which enables him to take a leading part in the affairs of his community. In Bella Coola a chief (ntlhaq) is a person whose influence is paramount owing to his success in giving potlatches.* If several chiefs in one village have given potlatches, he who has given most is generally of greatest importance, although often a man of forceful character who has held, for example, five potlatches will be regarded with greater respect than one of lesser weight, even if he has given six. The whole system is exceedingly fluid, as might be expected where chieftainship depends on individual prowess. In theory, the man who holds the name of the first person to occupy a village, or was being feared and hated by all. Yet his prerogative was so strong that he could not cease to act. He found by chance a cave near the top of precipitous Mount Nuxmalk, not far from his village, and told everyone that he would die there, where no one would ever be able to spit or urinate upon his grave. One autumn, when an old man, he disappeared, and although search parties scoured the woods for him, they were unsuccessful. Next spring, some young men visited the cave in which they found his badly decomposed corpse; the warrior had kept his promise.

*Particularly if he has given four potlatches and was accordingly be described as a nuxnit chief (I, p. 172). In sunet songs the archaic word ntlhaqmix is also sometimes employed for "chief."

701 693

The profession of warrior carries with it prohibitions and requirements other than with regard to killing. Such men are thought always to be so wild and restless that they cannot sleep at night, but prowl around the village watching for possible foes. In actual fact, warriors seldom sleep quietly throughout the night. They have one restriction of a social nature, in that they can never be confined in the back-room [575] or intrude into the nuxmalk society. Consequently, no tsawiwas ever comes to one of them. When one gives a potlatch, a rather beautiful song is sung for him so he remains in the central part of the house. What affiliation this brings him with the nuxmalk society is obscure.

701

It is difficult to say to what extent a professional warrior believes in his own powers, since there is, and must always have been, great individual variation. The white man finds it difficult to understand the psychology of a man who considers himself bound to kill on request, simply because presents have been distributed to make him a warrior. It must be remembered that this is one of the most pervasive features of Bella Coola life; functions of all kinds depend upon validated prerogatives, and there is no doubt that a man who has one of this kind is actually influenced to such an extent that he begins to believe in his own prowess. It was unusual for a warrior to exercise his powers as freely as did the Ititi-ne-i man, but the Bella Coola have no difficulty in explaining this:—his prerogative had been confirmed with more lavish expenditure

156 701

901 than that of anyone else. The Bella Coola do not rationalize 156 in a scientific manner; if a man holds a belief firmly, he acts on it without questioning its logic. Moreover, if a professional warrior functions a number of times, this in itself is enough to strengthen his conviction that he must act henceforth in the same way. It can be said with confidence that the owner of [463] a professional prerogative has considerable belief in his own powers, that this acts on himself to render him proficient, and that the majority of the community have respect for his capabilities.

555 THE PROFESSION OF SINGER

424 Singing is one of the professions open to a Bella Coola
533 either through natural ability or an ancestral prerogative. There is a constant need for men able to sing and compose [463] songs for every kind of ceremonial, so a young man of talent has little difficulty in gaining admittance to the choir. He may even win great distinction and become recognized as the leading authority on musical matters. None the less, his success is considered to be accidental and unsubstantial, lacking the foundation that comes from the possession of a duly validated professional prerogative. A person made a singer by the latter means may be entirely unable to compose; in this case he is not a member of the choir, although he enjoys the social distinction which he has won by distributing goods to confirm his professional name. The singer most respected is he who combines with natural ability a confirmed prerogative to give substance and power to his position and composi-[553] tions. At the death of such an one, an effort is always made 428 by the members of his ancestral family to transmit the name [578] to a youth who has shown musical promise. Arguments and differences of opinion are common among the members of the choir and in such cases the self-assurance and influence of a man whose position has been made strong by the distribution of presents often outweighs that of one who can rely only on his actual ability.

(g) The bearing of exceptionally well-behaved children; 614
(h) The bearing of exceptionally naughty children; 827
(i) Disposition to steal;
(j) Uncontrollable sexual desires;
(k) Sudden death, that is, members of certain unusual families are less apt than others to die of disease or old age;
(l) Death by drowning. One informant, in whose family this is a tendency, has twice been thrown into the water and barely escaped. He fully expects to meet his fate in this manner;
(m) Insanity (not a common malady); [158]
(n) Dribbling at the mouth with increasing age;
(o) Liability to contract the skin disease known as tinkah. 614
With regard to the transmission of this disease the surprising 827 information was received that if a relative of a sufferer should 783 drink from the same bucket or use the same spoon as the 177 patient, he is likely to contract the disease, whereas another person can use them with impunity. This statement may be based on a knowledge of germs learnt from the white man, and warped by a belief in inheritable tendencies, although it is amazing that the theory of germs could have reached the elderly Bella Coola. Possibly this statement is a relic of an old belief in the transmissibility of disease through contact, but it is more reasonable to ascribe it to white influence.

In a later chapter an account is given of certain occupa- 614 tional abilities, including that of carpentry, which must be 827 confirmed and validated by presents. The above are quite different; they are either present or absent without any action on the part of the individual.

The Village Community

The village community referred to in the preceding section 614 consists, fundamentally, of the descendants, traced in the 621 patrilineal line, of the reputed first settlers to occupy a site. Since a Bella Coola always describes himself as a native of such-and-such a town, it follows that the village community heart caught fire, his goods were destroyed, and he, himself, barely escaped. The Bella Coola regard coincidences of this kind as confirmation of their beliefs.

As in the last instance, death does not always follow the hearing or seeing of an omen; it may simply presage some calamity. It is dangerous for a person to be addressed by a dog, although it is well known that dogs understand human speech and can talk if they desire. At the time of the writer's visit, it was a matter of general knowledge that a dog had spoken to a middle-aged Bella Coola woman a few years earlier. The animal was shot immediately, and the woman never revealed what it had said, but in spite of these precautions she became insane and has never fully recovered.

The green man, Tsyalempt, near Kimsquit, who figures so prominently in Bella Coola mythology, is another death omen. In early times, all who passed his station used to call out to him, and it was thought that those whom he failed to answer would die within a year. In that case, the voice was welcome, but the speech of an owl is still regarded with dread. If one of these birds utters the name of a dead person, the individual hearing it will soon die.

Besides these well-recognized omens, the Bella Coola believe that any peculiar visitation or hallucination is a probable precursor of disaster. In many cases these fears are unjustified, but there are always sufficient accidents and misfortunes to corroborate their belief. An old Kimsquit man told of the manner in which his son had once come rushing into the house saying that he had seen a strange, black-faced creature. His father feared that it might have been Sasiaruas.—

"Perhaps it was," continued the old man, "for my boy soon died."

Irrespective of the actual cause of death, about which the father is uncertain, he is convinced that he knew of its coming by his son's omen-apparition.

U.S. Geological Survey 1922-1924 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEB

scribed, in spite of some repetition entailed thereby, both to record customs surviving the decay of Bella Coola ritual, and as a means of illustrating the sentiments of the participants. To avoid native terminology, white man's names will be used throughout. It will be necessary to understand the relationships of those taking part in the ceremony, as shown in the following pedigrees:

764 [114] 601 764

PEDIGREE I*

PEDIGREE II

Samuel King was a widower with one daughter at the time of his marriage to Jessie, by whom he had no children. His company, George Nelson, had not been living with his wife for about one year.

764 159

*No attempt has been made to record the complete pedigrees; only those who took part in the ceremony are indicated.

Early in the afternoon of June 27, Captain Schooner was notified by telephone of the serious illness of his daughter at the cannery where she was working. He set out immediately, but found her dead on his arrival. Without waiting to consult Samuel King, he called together the chiefs who happened to be in the vicinity, Willie Mack, Jim Pollard, Billy Pollard, Bobby Nobby, and Alexander Clellaman.[29] He informed them that he did not propose to let his daughter be thrown carelessly into the ground like a dog, but that he was going to hold a memorial potlatch immediately after the funeral. Schooner, being a nemid chief as well as father of the dead woman, was able to do as he liked, and no one objected to this plan, although in former times such a ceremony neither took place at once, nor in summer. If Samuel had been present, he would have been consulted as a matter of course. It was quite fitting for Jessie to be buried by her father, since she had borne her husband no children, and had been rebought several times. Moreover, Samuel lacked the determination and prestige of his father-in-law. Having settled this main point, Captain Schooner intimated that as Jessie's granddaughter, Dan Nelson's infant, was at the point of death, it would be well to combine the mourning for both at the single ceremony. No mention was made of the amount to be used for the rite. Schooner himself had $200 to expend for the purpose which would have been sufficient, and his attitude was that he neither knew nor cared whether his relatives would assist him. Soon after the other chiefs had left, Reuben Schooner arrived from the logging-camp from which he had been summoned. Father and son discussed arrangements not only for the actual interment, a simple matter, but for the memorial potlatch. It was decided that the dead woman should return as a composite figure consisting of Eagle, Raven, and Blackfish, three of her crests of which the masks were available. They agreed that Timothy Snow[20] was the best carpenter available and that he should be commissioned to put them in shape and arrange their use. Reuben wanted to sing a sacred mourning song, to which he had a prerogative derived from his Bella Bella mother, and it was also decided that the band[21] should play. Reuben informed his father that he would contribute $50 towards the expenditure.

[29] None of these was closely related to the Schooner family.

Meanwhile Jessie had been washed by female friends, clad in her best clothing, and laid in her coffin. This was a rough box, contributed by the manager of the cannery and shaped like a white man's coffin. At intervals, women came near and wailed dolorously without bending others similarly engaged. The news was carried to all the Bella Coola, those men who owned gasoline launches taking the word to the logging-camps without being requested to do so. A Carrier Indian who happened to be returning from the cannery spread the word through the village, where each woman who received the message hurried off to some friend, with whom she began to wail.

Early on the following morning, Captain Schooner returned home with his wife, Jessie's stepmother. He had been crying and was sad, but seemed willing to talk. He spoke of the proposed memorial potlatch, and expressed the sentiments recorded on vol. I, p. 473. He was grave and dignified, absolutely determined to perform what he considered to be the necessary ritual, oblivious of consequences, and heedless of what he held to be an unjust law. During that summer, Captain Schooner had been a rather heavy drinker, but on this occasion he abstained from wine, and said that he hoped no one would show disrespect to his daughter by appearing in a drunken condition either at the funeral or the subsequent rites. It is worthy of record that his wishes were scrupulously obeyed. During the morning he was visited by the singers and other chiefs to discuss details of the coming ceremonial.

[20]He was not closely related to the Schooners.

[21]Most of the younger Bella Coola were members of the band, performing white man's music on white man's instruments. Andy Schooner was bandmaster, but it is unlikely that this influenced the decision, since the performance of the band was customary at funerals when the writer was in Bella Coola.

Meanwhile Samuel King had been summoned from his logging-camp. He wished to show his own grief, and also his sorrow that the union between his family and the Schooners, forged by his marriage to Jessie, should be terminated. No children had been born to cement the bond. He consulted his brother and sister, who agreed with him that a marriage between his daughter, by a former wife, and George Nelson would be desirable. The girl was consulted and raised no objections. Samuel then addressed Captain Schooner who was favourably disposed, as it was decided that this ceremony should take place in connection with the memorial potlatch. It would be a real, not a fictitious marriage, as the girl had reached adolescence several years previously.

Another visitor to Captain Schooner that morning was Joe Williams. Several years earlier, when he had given a ceremony in honour of two of his children who had died, Captain Schooner had contributed $100 as "A Blanket for George Nelson's Wife." This was really part of the marriage transaction, although deferred for a number of years after the actual time of the wedding. This sum had been divided as follows: $20 to Joe Williams; $20 to Mrs. Joe Williams; $10 to Mrs. George Nelson; $10 to her brother; $20 to Lame Charlie; and $20 to Mrs. Lame Charlie. Joe consulted the recipients and found that all were willing to repay their indebtedness at this time. Captain Schooner did not ask for it, but Joe was glad of the opportunity to do the proper thing at the right time and thus rise in popular estimation. He and his relatives decided to return $150, a sum which he mentioned to Captain Schooner that morning.

Joe Williams, his wife, and Mrs. George Nelson also decided to take advantage of the gathering to rebuy the last named from her husband. The fact that they had been separated for at least a year and that the woman had been living an immoral

He did not stop the ceremony of rebuying her "to make good the peck" of her children. For this purpose they decided to give a copper and a sum of money; it was impossible to know the exact amount. Joe told Captain Schooner of their intention.

About noon the body was brought in a canoe from the cemetery to its closed coffin and lifted where on a convenient spot near the cemetery. Those manning the canoe were young men who happened to be at the cemetery, irrespective of whether or not they were related to Jessie. The coffin was laid on a grassy place and Captain Schooner seated himself beside it. People were passing and repassing, some sat down for a time, then moved off to dinner. Occasionally, a woman would sit and wail, the most constant being Reuben's married daughter; Captain Schooner moved around talking to his friends amidst the mild wailing. About 1.30 p.m. everyone in the village had assembled, including a number of Carrier Indians, anxious to see the sight. Captain Schooner withdrew to his house after asking Bobby Nobby to summon the chiefs to meet him there. The messenger, who thus acted as herald, went around the gathering whispering to each; in addition to those notified at the cemetery the preceding evening he called all the older and most influential Bella Coola, Albert King, Samuel King, Joe Williams, Joshua Moody, Alec Davis, Lame Charlie, Judas, and Nebuchadnezzar. Captain Schooner requested the last named, an important chief, to take charge of the ceremony. At this time Samuel King told Nebuchadnezzar, who informed the others, what had been arranged for his daughter and they agreed that it was good. It was tacitly assumed that George Nelson would be delighted; probably he had been on friendly terms with the girl for some time. Joe Williams also told Nebuchadnezzar the two business propositions that he intended to carry out, the return of the money to Captain Schooner, and the rebuying of his daughter. Nebuchadnezzar informed the people concerned. At this meeting it was decided that various chiefs should speak after the Christian service at the grave.

764 139 Meanwhile the rest of the population was sitting near the coffin. They wore no special dress or other mark of grief. Samuel King and some of his relatives had brought bundles containing Jessie's clothing, pots, pans, and other personal possessions, which they set down near the coffin. About two [533] o'clock the band gathered and began to play, the favourite [177] selection being "Annie Laurie." This went on for some time after the return of the chiefs from Captain Schooner's house. They had decided that Tál·ia Jenny, one of Captain Schooner's distant relatives, should carry the fire in front of the body. When all was ready she lit a bundle of rags, placed it in a pot, and set off for the cemetery, followed by all in a straggling and orderless procession. Some strong young men bore the coffin, for Jessie must have weighed over two hundred pounds; some brought tools for digging the grave; others took the bundles of clothing. There was no fixed allotment of tasks; a man or woman carried anything or nothing according to his or her wish.

The cemetery is situated about fifty yards behind the old village of Qemqo·ti. The heavy timber has all been cut away and second growth has sprung up everywhere except around the newer graves. Captain Schooner had decided that his daughter should be buried near several of her relatives, and it was to this spot that Jenny led the procession. She set the pot down near the site of the grave, and the coffin likewise was placed on the ground nearby. Captain Schooner, Jim Pollard, and a few of the other old men chose the exact situation and a number of the young men began to dig. Jenny, and other women, added pieces of Jessie's clothing to the fire so that a constant small blaze was kept up. As the grave was being dug [533] the band performed at intervals, while the women sat wailing near the fire. Other men and women were seated on the ground or walking around idly near the grave, talking but [852] seldom laughing, while the Carriers were a little farther away. Children were playing around. The grave was dug about five feet deep, in shape corresponding to the coffin, but orientation was not carefully observed. Those wishing to dig took turns with the tools; there was no supervision, and no orders given. When the grave was ready, Jim Pollard asked Judas to perform the rite with the spruce bough, which he did with a branch brought by one of the youths. The young men lowered the coffin into the grave while the band continued to play. The missionary then read the Christian burial service, after which he withdrew. Some of the young men brought planks from old houses near-by, sawed them to the size of the grave and laid them over the coffin as a cover. At this juncture Judas, one of the oldest and most conservative of the Bella Coola, rose to speak. First he offered consolation to the mourning relatives by pointing out that all must travel the same road. Then he spoke to Jessie, telling her not to linger, but to travel back the path of her ancestors from generation to generation until she reached the place where they first came down from above, and thence to ascend to Nuxmāl-a. It was impossible to obtain a literal translation of the speech, which was punctuated by calls of "Ye" from the male Bella Coola. The next speaker was Jim Pollard, the most influential Kimsquit and a personal friend, though not a relative, of Captain Schooner's.

Libr. Dowsith E-5 (1922-1924)969
NEB Bellacoola NEB

764 159 [593] [797] 764 159 537

"Go," he said to the dead woman, "Go to the localities from which came your first forefathers in the beginning of time. There you will find your most valuable ancestral possessions. Go at once, do not linger and lose yourself on the road from generation to generation."

Turning to George Nelson, he went on, "Do not be downhearted, all of us must travel the same road. It was made by no man, it is the work of Alquntām."

Looking back once more to the grave, he said, "In Qomqo-ts are buried many illustrious relatives of yours. You will be among friends, whereas we are left to lament your departure."

It was impossible to write down the words at the time and the above record is not literally correct, although it expresses the gist of the speech. [126]

Captain Schooner whispered to Robert Hood, another of the 764 159 203 769 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

older Bella Coola, asking him to announce that he, Schooner, with Dan and George, was going to hold a memorial potlatch that evening to which all were invited. Robert is not a herald but undertook this duty owing to the absence of qualified heralds. Meanwhile the grave had been filled in and the people began to drift away as it rose to ground level. Their attitude throughout had resembled that of white people at a funeral, and the hilariousness that characterizes so many Bella Coola gatherings was entirely absent except among the playing children. By 4.30 P.M. all had left the scene.

In view of the large number of guests expected it had been decided to hold the memorial potlatch, not in one of the old-fashioned houses, but in the village hall, built according to the white man's style of architecture and illuminated with swinging gasoline lamps. This is a large, rectangular building, undivided by partitions, with a stage at one end and a door at the other. About 6.30 P.M. the singers, Nebuchadnezzar, Jim Pollard, Billy Pollard, Alec Davis, Kimsquit Alec, and Robert Hood, gathered at the hall and seated themselves below the stage. Billy Pollard had prepared a mourning song during the day, Kimsquit Alec another, and it was decided to use two others that were well known to all. The singers sat and practised these four for some time, while at intervals various Bella Coola strolled in, listened for a few minutes, then walked out again. Anyone was allowed to do so, but few availed themselves of the opportunity. Meanwhile Captain Schooner had brought $10 worth of rice, raisins, and condensed milk which he placed beside a huge iron cauldron outside the front door. Jim To-Morrow, a Bella Coola of no great intelligence, volunteered to act as cook and soon had a fire blazing and the food boiling.

About 8.00 P.M. the people began to assemble, bringing their own plates and other utensils. After considerable delay and chatter, the guests took their places in the hall, seating themselves regardless of rank on benches ranged along the two side walls and massed at the rear. By mutual consent a portion of the single row of benches along the left wall was reserved

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

The explanation of these manifestations of the supernormal, 987*
for such they are considered to be, lies in the conviction that 811 every activity of the mind is due to supernatural causation, [828]
the functioning of the spirit. In the round of daily life there [774] are always good and bad incidents; the person who wakes expecting to meet one or other before nightfall recognizes the fulfilment of his premonition in some small occurrence, and narrates it to his fellows as proof of what he had told them in the morning. In case of some major event, such as death or disaster, the Bella Coola assume that some previous indication must have been given. Looking back after the event, a man easily persuades himself that he "felt" a warning, and is more than ever convinced that his spirit, the cause of his thoughts, [774] has supernatural ability.

Conviction in the near presence of the supernatural has had 177
somewhat surprising results with regard to Christian Bella 987*
Coola. A man converted in middle life carries all the fervour and realism of the old religion with him to the new, and feels 781 thoroughly familiar with the atmosphere of the Old Testament. 797 Visitations, such as therein described, are similar to those experienced by his fathers and himself, and he scorns the white man who questions their literal accuracy. He continues to hear the voices of supernatural beings, and to interpret mental [828] pictures as visions, but he ascribes them to the beings of the white man's religion. The following is a rather striking illustration of this point:

A number of years ago a devout Christian, who may be 157● designated X, was a patient in the hospital at Bella Bella. In 177*
the same ward was a young Bella Bella lad whose sickness refused to yield to treatment. X, becoming interested in his 787* neighbour, began to ponder about his condition, until presently 781
he felt convinced that the sufferer would be better by seven 797 o'clock the following morning, and told him so. A marked improvement was noticeable by the time predicted, but the white doctor foolishly (according to X) gave his patient some

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

●159 177 more medicine and he became worse. The same thing happened
* 787 on the following day. The sick boy grew steadily worse until, 781 nine days later, he felt that he was dying and asked X to help 797 him.

"No," replied X, "I am no doctor. But you will be all right. I see Holy Ghost, Holy Spirit, Baptism, and Believe-it [Faith?] by your bed. Repent and you will be saved."

X added that the Bella Bella saw and repented before his death so that he has undoubtedly been saved.

X is a friend of the writer's and a man with whom he worked for a number of months and whom he feels that he knows intimately. He is almost invariably truthful, and any falsehoods he uses are clumsy and easily detected. In this case there is no doubt but that he believes he saw these four figures as four white human beings. He was in an emotional condition at the time, hoping and expecting to see something of the kind. In earlier days he would have seen supernatural beings of the Bella Coola pantheon with equal conviction. On quite another occasion, when he was preaching, the same man felt what seemed to be a heavy drop of water fall on his head. He was in the open at the time and, looking up, was surprised to find nothing from which it could have fallen. He realized that it must have been power which had come to him, and forthwith he began to preach as he had never preached before. He expected supernatural assistance, and the belief that it had been granted to him undoubtedly strengthened his efforts.

* 787 All Bella Coola are not equally liable to visions and mental 781 visitations. Some, such as X, are constantly experiencing
159 them, whereas others of more stolid disposition do not feel the presence of the supernatural to the same extent. None the less, beings of the other world are constantly around them and, before the introduction of Christianity, it is unlikely that any individual passed through life without coming in contact with some manifestation of the supernatural. Consequently, stories
* 787 descriptive of this are intelligible to the Bella Coola, bizarre

778 the rock shelter half a mile away. Here he must lie alone, 755 without food, for four days. If he is in a pure condition from the observance of chastity, he then feels the earth shake and [787] hears a sound like a mighty landslide, though it is inaudible to those waiting in the cave. If the patient is frightened and tries to flee, he will die, but if he lies still he will be able to spit out the dead frog, or it will become so soft that it can drip from his nose. He then washes in the stream that flows through the ice-cavern, thus completing the cure. The malady [785] will return unless chastity is practised for one year.

Finally, in dreams a man is sometimes carried away to one 756 or other of these curing places, or to several of them, and is 787 there made a shaman. It will be noted that this method of acquiring the ability differs from those previously described, but his functions are the same as those whose power has been obtained in one of the usual ways.

Dreams

787 The last type of contact with the supernatural is by means of dreams. Psychologically, these are akin to visions; indeed, it is often impossible to learn whether the experiences described in an ancient story occurred during sleep or when awake. The [774] Bella Coola believe that dreams are caused by the spirit of the individual; they are, therefore, supernatural and worthy of attention, but in spite of this, it was difficult to obtain detailed accounts. The reason seems to lie in the intangibility of the experiences themselves. Unless one is sufficiently striking, it passes into oblivion as a fruitless manifestation of the workings of the spirit. Many of the visions seen in ancient times by those who had fasted or otherwise reached an emotional state, must have been dreams, but they have ceased to be recognized as such in the course of generations. The Bella Coola of today [159] state emphatically that they receive warning of future events during sleep, but the only individual from whom it was possible to obtain coherent descriptions was the elderly man previously described as X (I, p. 515).

Lillooet Swalth E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In his younger days X was somewhat wild, taking his full share in the frivolities of the village, and having a fondness for wine which he brewed himself. On one occasion he prepared a barrel of the mixture, half of which he promptly consumed with the aid of a few friends, then, semi-intoxicated, he fell asleep. He dreamt that there came to him what must have been a male being, although all that was visible was the lower half of his body, which was gleaming white. The apparition seized X by the nape of the neck, lifted him from the floor, and carried him across the house to the barrel of wine, revolving sunwise on himself the while. 159 ● 787 * [273]

"You made this fearful stuff," said his supernatural visitor. "It will make your life dirty, as dirty as this."

Still turning sunwise on himself, with these words he carried X to the doorstep and held him suspended, face downwards over it. Everyone who enters must tread there, so that it is recognized as being the dirtiest part of the house, and X had no doubt about the meaning of the apparition's remark. This experience was so vivid and impressive that X asserted he immediately became a Christian and abandoned his evil ways. At the present time he is one of the few Bella Coola not addicted to home-brew. [797] [273]

A few years later the same being came a second time. X had been ill for a number of months with a sickness caused, so he believed, by a sorcerer. His friends had carried him to baths in the Hot Springs and the treatment helped his condition considerably, but a little later he suffered a relapse, and was so wretched that he told his mother he would die presently. The same night he was visited by his apparition, but this time he could see the whole body; it was a man with large, powerful frame and a face so white that he could not bear to look at it. The figure was clad in undyed cedar-bark, and X immediately realized that he would recover, though he knew he would not be granted the same power as if the clothing had been of dyed cedar-bark such as is worn by supernatural shamans. The dream-man told X that he had come to him because of the clean condition he had attained by washing in the Hot Springs, followed by continence, and warned him that he must continue this for a year from the time of his immersion or he would die, but that if he obeyed this injunction he would recover. His visitor, who was, of course, a supernatural being, took X under one arm and carried him far to the south, where he washed him in a hot spring at the base of a steep mountain. Then he vanished; X arose and prepared to make his way home, but, lo, he was there already. Reflecting later, X concluded that his body must have remained in his house, and that it was either his spirit or his life that had been carried away. [755]

As X lay asleep the next night, the same being came to him and

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

159
* 787

carried him far away to the west, where he was washed in another spring, and as before found himself at home immediately after his immersion. The following night the apparition took him to the north; he found himself on the shore of a lake where an expert carpenter, Qwaistsamlaix, was making tiny canoes of jack pine. The trees were only about six feet in height, smaller than any human craftsman would think of using. The supernatural being told Qwaistsamlaix to make a canoe for X; he did this within a few minutes and the apparition vanished as soon as X was aboard. The craft moved with the speed of light and X was carried across the lake, only to find himself once more at home. The fourth night the being bore him to the east, washed him in a hot spring, and vanished as he had done on his first and second appearances. The repetition of this experience four times fully convinced the patient that he would recover. His health improved at once; in fact, his appetite had returned after his first dream.

As X lay sleepless[11] the next night, it suddenly seemed to him that the world had become flat and open. From his couch he could see in all directions; the trees had disappeared, the mountains had vanished, and the walls of the houses did not bar his vision, so that he could watch what was happening in Tsmoti several miles up the valley. He saw a naked, black creature, with curly hair like that of a negro, rise from one of the small ponds on the south side of the Bella Coola valley about two miles from the sea. Helpless, he watched the being draw nearer; it entered his own house, seized him, and rolled him to and fro on the floor with wild contortions. Then it passed on to the next house where X saw it grip a sick girl lying there and treat her in the same way. After a few minutes the black apparition fled far away to the south where at length it vanished from view. In the morning he told his mother what had happened, adding that he thought he would lose his senses.

His mother, worried at her son's hallucinations, agreed to remain awake with him the following night. Again he saw the black monster rise from the lake, and he called to her in fear, but she could see nothing. Once more it came nearer, entered the house, and rolled X over and over, in spite of his struggles and in spite of his mother's presence. She could see his movements, but could neither restrain him nor see the cause. When the being left him it entered the adjacent house and again attacked the sick girl lying there, then disappeared southward. The same procedure was repeated on the third night, but on the fourth, after pummel-

[11] As already mentioned, it is often difficult to differentiate between dream and vision. X definitely stated that he was awake at the time, but the experience seems to be of the nature of a dream and has, therefore, been included in this section.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ling X, the monster carried away the girl. X watched and knew that it must have taken her life; so it transpired, for in the morning she was found dead. The black being did not reappear the following night. 159 787

X soon became fat and well, to the surprise of all, and many of the chiefs asked him to give a shaman's dance. He declined, not having received name, instructions, song, or tangible object from the white, supernatural being who had befriended him. He did not even know his benefactor's name. [756]

At intervals during his life-time, X has seen the white supernatural being and, more rarely, the black one in his dreams. The most vivid occasion was when he heard a sound in the attic of his house and climbed up outside to investigate. The ladder broke, precipitating him through an unglazed window into the loft with a broken leg. All night he lay there in agony, and it was not until the next day that his friends were able to lower him in a sling and take him to Qomqo-ts en route to the hospital at Bella Bella. Their departure was delayed by a storm and as X lay suffering he told his wife that it would have been better if he had broken his neck instead of his leg. That night, while half-asleep, the world again became open to him and he saw the black creature come bounding along the trail towards him; it entered the house, jumped around him, and finally leapt into his body. He called to his wife to burn dried salmon beneath his bed to expel the evil monster; this had the desired effect though he did not see its actual departure. The next night the white apparition came to him, telling him that he had erred seriously in wishing for death, that one should accept what was in store for one and not oppose Alqwastám's wishes. The being went on to say that it was wicked to prepare too far in advance, and intimated that X's misfortune was the result of having made ready tools for clearing an unnecessary tract of land.[18] [755]

The white being has even appeared during his waking hours. On one occasion he felt it coming when he was in the mission-house, where the missionary was writing a letter for him. Although still invisible, X knew what was approaching and tried to close the door but he was helpless. In came the apparition, at sight of whom X swayed so violently that the missionary asked what was the matter. It went away again in a moment, leaving X shaken and bathed in perspiration. [797]

The experiences just described lie on the border-line between dream and vision. X has frequently seen the apparition

[18]This occurred during the first war, and X remembered having heard that the Germans had laid up stores of munitions. He concluded that this must be evil and that they would fail accordingly. He repeated this statement on many occasions and claims to have foretold the result of the war from his vision.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in his sleep, and hopes that it will grant him specific supernatural power. He realizes that he could increase the probability of obtaining this by ceremonial chastity, and believes that it would come to him if he went alone to the woods and lay fasting for some time. Another means would be to concentrate his thoughts upon the desired end, but X is too good a Christian to do so; he is in the unhappy position of knowing too much of two religions to be able to practise either unreservedly. Such experiences are not likely to occur to any but a man of high-strung, imaginative temperament, to whom dreams and mental excitements appear especially vivid. X is intensely religious, so that it is easy for him to interpret every phenomenon in terms of the supernatural. It will be noted that most of the dreams just described took place when he was sick, precisely the time when hallucinations are to be expected. They were more coherent than those of most Bellà Coola, though the difference is one of degree rather than of kind.

Most dreams are comparatively simple, and the information received in them is intelligible. They come to all, irrespective of rank or prerogative. Nevertheless, it is believed that an inheritable tendency runs in some families; this does not mean that all members of such a group dream constantly, but they are more likely to do so than others. Those occurring at the winter solstice are more carefully observed than at other times, since it is then that the supernatural beings decide events for the coming year and a man's spirit may be able to inform him of what has been decided. Consequently, as soon as Alqunùm enters Nusmùt a, wise men separate from their wives and concentrate on dreaming, hoping to learn what is in store for them. For instance, if a man sees himself seated before a large pile of goods, he knows that he will have the good fortune to do this during the coming year; on the other hand, if he foresees ill luck, it means that he will be unfortunate. Another time when dreams are especially desired is before the summer solstice when hunters in particular observe ceremonial chastity. This purification not only increases the likelihood of such experiences, but adds to the reliability of their prognostications. At that season, if a hunter dreams that he will not be successful, he remains at home knowing that it will be useless for him to seek game. 787 [785 224]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Though dreams are considered and remembered most carefully at the solstices, it must not be imagined that they are disregarded at other seasons. Often there is neither mental picture nor apparition, merely a voice, the sound of which indicates that the hearer will be fortunate the following day. Instead of a voice without body, a dream may consist of a speechless apparition which indicates by gestures the fate in store for the dreamer. One elderly Bella Coola who keeps a small shop states that he can usually tell in this way whether or not he will sell much goods during the coming day. Many years ago, after frequent visits from a being of this kind, the man became the leading fisherman for one of the canneries; he attributed his success to his nameless benefactor, for whose benefit he threw a number of small pieces of food into the fire. Occasionally, specific information or advice is received. On one occasion, when this same man was ill, he dreamt that a supernatural being appeared and told him to wash in the river, that it was breath to all human beings; he did so regularly, and was soon restored to health. Sometimes the information is with regard to the future. On the night of January 15, 1924, he dreamt that two naked Carriers were standing beside his bed. He asked them what they wanted, and why they were without clothing. 159 787

"We always appear as an omen of trouble in the land," they answered.

Next day there was a heavy fall of snow which he regarded as fulfilling the prophecy. The dreamer was X, the man of imaginative temperament who had beheld the white and black supernatural beings. These instances illustrate the manner in which the same individual has repeated experiences of similar type. X claims that he began to dream when a small child,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

787 and that his mother stated that all her ancestors had done [859] likewise.

Another instance of advice conveyed in this manner was 756 told by a Kimsquit man who related that a number of years 787 ago a pregnant woman had dreamed that Alqunàm appeared to her and told her not to destroy what she would presently bear. In due course she was delivered, but the infant was a [847] repulsive cripple, blind and deformed. Remembering the admonition, the mother refused to slay her child as many of her friends advised. Soon it was apparent that he was super-naturally endowed; as proof of this he repeated comments which had been made to his mother within a few minutes of his birth. As he grew older he developed shamanistic powers so that he was able to converse with the dead, the only instance known of this ability being granted from birth. He also had wonderful talent as a singer and, though he must have died about 1850, the Bella Coola still recount his skill in this respect.
[847] He would unquestionably have been killed but for his mother's warning.

787 Instead of imparting verbal information, dreams frequently foretell the future by means of images of events about to happen. For example, if a man dreams of owning large num-[224] bers of pelts, it signifies that he will have success in hunting, and he starts for his trap-line without delay. So, too, warnings are conveyed. A number of years ago a slave woman of Sinxl, who was not a member of the kusiut society, dreamt that she saw herself bitten in many places and lying covered with blood.
Within a few days she met a Cannibal dancer (II, p. 71), who was supposed to have vanished into the land above; he killed her and lacerated her body, as she had seen. A Kimsquit man told of a similar instance that happened to a member of the party with which he had been hunting a number of years previously. One night he was wakened by one of his companions, Tsàlits, calling out that he was afraid because he had dreamt that one side of their canoe was shattered. The hunters were impressed, because they knew he had long ob-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PREFACE

THE term Bella Coola can be applied to the Indians who formerly occupied more than twenty villages on the lower Bella Coola River in central British Columbia, to their near kinsfolk on the Kimsquit River, and to those living at the head of South Bentinck Arm. Disease and changed conditions consequent upon the coming of the white man have so reduced their numbers that the last two groups of settlements have been virtually abandoned, while only one village remains in the Bella Coola valley. This is located on a reserve near the mouth of the river, and its four hundred inhabitants comprise practically all the survivors of what was once a tribe of several thousand people, with a distinctive language and culture of their own.

The material contained in this monograph was collected in this one village many years ago for the National Museum of Canada.[1] I was in the field during two periods that extended from March to August, 1922, and from September, 1923, to February, 1924. My field notes were worked up and the completed manuscript submitted to the Museum in 1926. Since that time it has suffered various vicissitudes. Recommended for publication by the Chief of the Anthropological Division, it passed through the hands of various editors; questions were raised about its size and the suitability of detailed studies of social anthropology in a government publication, and by the time these matters were adjusted, funds for extensive publications were unavailable and the manuscript was put aside. Since the aim of the investigation was to record, as far as possible, the sum-total of the complex and interwoven social life of the Bella Coola, I did not think it desirable to prepare short articles[2] summarizing different aspects, preferring to await an

[1] Then the Victoria Memorial Museum.

[2] The only exception was a short article on Bella Coola supernatural animals published in the Ontario Annual Archaeological Report for 1924-25, pp. 17-27.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 [164] [177] [182]

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 [124] [175]

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nulqatskwan-e winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Necleetsconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe-xlb, a small stream rising 133 [103] seldom a chief who had given many potlatches. Successful raiders rarely slew such an one; his position placed him above the dangers to which lesser men were subject. [721] [575] [622]

Raids appear never to have been carried out solely for the purpose of giving warriors opportunities to display their prowess, or of permitting young men to prove their mettle. Scarcity of food was the commonest cause for forays when, of course, the victims were chosen for their accumulated supplies. The Kwakiutl especially, lacking abundance of salmon, often attacked the Bella Coola. Even more dreaded were the Kitkatla, the most warlike people of the central coast, who used to raid for many miles to carry off slaves whom they sold or traded for other commodities. Trespassing, too, was a source of friction which often led to hostility. In such a case, the offenders were usually held up to ridicule at potlatches, and the irritation gradually increased until wiped out in bloodshed. Members of a tribe which had suffered from a raid prompted by any of these motives would await a suitable opportunity for retaliation; this in turn would be avenged, and a vendetta often ensued lasting for generations. As already described, a ceremonial error brought punishment from a neighbouring tribe; this was the only motive which caused fighting between different Bella Coola villages. In the last century there was a struggle of this kind between the people of Stuax and Ałqāłxl in which the former were victorious and took many slaves who were later ransomed. When ill-luck had dogged a village or a group of villages for some time, the inhabitants sometimes endeavoured to wipe out their misfortunes by attacking another tribe. [648] [685] [626] [556] [688] [628] [727] [777]

The teeming salmon at Bella Coola, Kimsquit, and Tāl·io, made it unnecessary for the Bella Coola to wage aggressive war for which they were unfitted both on account of their unmilitary attitude and their lack of central authority. On the other hand, they were tempting victims for more belligerent neighbours. The narrow Bella Coola valley, however, far removed from the open sea, and densely populated, was difficult to attack. [642] [648] [133] [161]

105 of their omnipresence; the guiding force of public opinion is 182 seen as a check on individual licence, fostered or inculcated by [626] the ties which hold together ancestral families and make it impossible for a man to lead an isolated life where others will not be affected by his actions. If the white man is willing to receive new ideas, he will learn much from the comments of the Bella Coola on his own customs. Many have been to [556] Victoria or Vancouver, and they feel that the contrasts of wealth observable in such big cities are atrocious; they ask [602] how this is compatible with Christianity. They feel that it is unnatural for a man not to receive support from his cousins of [956] all degrees; that the hoarding of wealth for the mere gratification of personal desires is selfish; that the selling of land is extraordinary; and that failure to ascribe every incident to supernatural causes is sacrilegious. These differences of viewpoint on so many matters explain the first impression of strangeness. A careful investigator comes to realize that he is among a people who fundamentally differ but slightly from his compatriots, though outwardly they have little in common. With respect to love, ambition, parental affection, sense of honour, pride, intelligence, even humour and vanity, the Bella Coola are essentially similar to ourselves. Unfortunately, these characteristics are expressed in ways unintelligible and often repellant to the casual traveller. If he will only look beneath the surface, he will find a people who are neither saints nor sinners, but essentially human, with the faults and follies as well as the elements of strength and wisdom which comprise, as Kipling puts it, "Men in a world of men."

177 The coming of the white civilization has been cataclysmic
[161] to the Bella Coola. Within two generations they have been reduced to a mere handful; instead of living in scattered vil-
[361] lages, roaming the mountains for game and fishing at will, they now dwell in a single settlement and the taking of animals and fish is subject to law; the introduction of metal tools and mechanical appliances has revolutionized their mode of life; new foods, new clothing, new furniture has altered their living conditions; fermented drink has presented a factor unknown

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

SYMPATHETIC MAGIC AND WITCHCRAFT AMONG THE BELLACOOLA

By HARLAN I. SMITH

177 754 789 [797] 658 [464] MANY OF the Bellacoola Indians today believe in sympathetic magic and witchcraft, after over a hundred years of contact with white men. Most of them live within hearing of the bells of the mission church, and the government school. Not a few of the men take logging contracts; some of them build and operate motor boats; many of them join the fishing fleets of the salmon canneries; most of the women work in the canneries; and all deal at the white men's stores.

101 131 [161] The Bellacoola lived at the heads of the long inlets half way up the Pacific Coast of Canada and in the tributary Bella Coola valley. Now, numbering perhaps two hundred and fifty, they, with the exception of a few families, are concentrated on one reservation at the mouth of the Bella Coola river. The Bella Coola valley has been called the Norway of Canada. This was where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada overland, reached the sea.

105 Aboriginally, the Bellacoola were of the North Pacific Coast culture of America, which is characterized by the extensive use of red cedar and sea products, particularly salmon, the making of graceful, sea-going canoes, each hewn from a single cedar, the erection of large rectangular houses made of cedar planks, with carved house posts and totem poles, lack of pottery, and expertness in carpenter work, carving, and painting. This culture belongs to the barefoot area, but the Bellacoolas wore moccasins to a certain extent. The art of the area was that best known from the paintings and carvings of the totem poles, largely of conventionalized animal forms. The life centred around a very highly developed social organization, an extensive and powerful financial system, and property rights to names, rituals and honors. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. They

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Since the end of the last century they have dwindled down in numbers, and a few only of their once populous villages are still inhabited, namely, Sâtaq, at the head of Dean Inlet; Nûtl'ɛ'l, at the mouth of Salmon River; Nuqa'lkn (which embraces five villages, at the mouth of Bella Coola River; Stû'in, twenty-eight miles up Bella Coola River; and Tâ'lio, at the head of South Bentinck Arm. The dialect of Nûtl'ɛ'l and Sâtaq differs slightly from that of the other villages. The following is a list of their ancient villages, most of which are still inhabited at certain seasons, although not regularly:— 161 361 [197] 103 361

1. Sâtaq.
2. Nûtl'ɛ'l. The tribe of this place is called Sôtalɛmn.
3. Nuqa'lkn, embracing the villages K·ômkô'tza and Stakê'etl on the north side, Pê'iɛzla and Nutnê'intakônê on the south side of the river.
4. Sɛnqtl.
5. Tsômô'otl.
6. Snû't'alè.
7. Nû'knits.
8. Asɛ'nanê.
9. Nuk·â'aqmats.
10. Tsqosqk·â'nê.
11. Nû'sk·'ɛlst.
12. Nûtltlê'iq.
13. Stû'in, twenty-eight miles from the sea.
14. Snû'tl'ɛlstl. Nos. 4 to 14 are situated along Bella Coola River, and are given as they are met with in ascending the river.
15. Slâ'aqtl, at the confluence of Bella Coola and Driver (?) Rivers.
16. Tâ'lio, at the head of South Bentinck Arm, embracing K·'on'pq, Tâ'lio, Nû'ik', A'sêq.
17. K·oâ'tlna, at the bay of that name in the southern entrance of Bentinck Arm. On the north entrance of Bentinck Arm were the Kiltê'itl, but it is doubtful whether they belonged to the Bilqula or to the Hê'iltsuk. The latter call the people of Dean Inlet Kî'mkuitq. [101]

Each of these tribes is subdivided into gentes, which appear to be arranged in exogamic groups. I learnt the names of the following gentes, which bear the names of their ancestors:— 614

Gentes of the Nuqa'lkmn:

1. Tok·oâ'is (=looking down on his family).
2. Spuqpuqô'lɛmq; Qê'mtsiɛs name: Mâ'lakyilatl (see p. 415)
3. Siatlqêlâ'aq.
4. Kɛ'ltâqk·aua.
5. Pô'tlas.

Gentes of the Nusk·'ɛ'lstɛmn:

1. Tî'ak·anmô'ot.
2. K·ôoqôtlâ'nê.
3. ?

Gentes of the Tâlio'mn:

1. Ialo'stɛmôt (=making good fire); Qê'mtsiɛs name; T'â't'ɛnatsît (=a cave protecting from rain).
2. Spatsk'ûi.
3. Tsmqoâ'akyas.
4. Ha'mtsît.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(5) Anutsqwa xstl, "Labretted": the eastern continuation of the last mentioned.[1] The name is explained as follows: 361

One of the people who came to the earth in the beginning of time, Taiakwala by name, travelled to the Skeena River, and there saw women wearing labrets. On his return to Bella Coola he settled at Anutsqwa xstl and carved on his totem-pole[2] the figure of a woman with an abalone-shell labret as a memorial of his voyage. Visitors coming to his potlatches named the town from this figure. [173]

This was one of the largest towns in the valley.

?*(6) Aimā ts: a small town to the north of the last, not far from the Pe xsls. It is assumed that it was founded by a descendant of Taiakwala named Aimā ts. The consensus of opinion is that it has not been occupied for many years, but one informant recently dug up a clay pipe on the alleged site. 172

*(7) Slskistl, "What Has Been Divided": on the south shore of the Bella Coola River about a quarter of a mile from the sea. This village was founded by a certain Sril.

*(8) Somqo ts, meaning doubtful, perhaps "Salty": this, the most populous village of the valley in the recent past, is still inhabited by one or two families. The inhabitants of other towns explain its large population by marriages with slaves. This is the upper, or eastern, continuation of the preceding, and the two in combination formed a row of houses stretching for three-quarters of a mile (see Plate 9). 162 572 569

(9) Ooosskpamy, "The Treeless Place": on the north side of the Bella Coola, supposedly about half a mile above Aimā ts. This village was long ago deserted.

(10) Tsuskuwulpa ts, "Where There Is Much kuskuwulp," a kind of hollow-stemmed plant: some distance from [1] Several towns, each consisting of a single row of houses, are regarded as forming two villages. In such cases there is no visible boundary mark.

[2] The Bella Coola believe that their early ancestors used totem-poles; repeated reference to them will be made, even though the work of Barbeau and others on the recent origin of totem-poles on the North-West Coast indicates that the Bella Coola concepts are not historically accurate. [778]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601 Coola social organization, and of the absence of standardized obligations based upon specific relationships.

Slaves

567 Since a slave was[11] without status in the Bella Coola com-[554] munity, it is perhaps incorrect to include a description of slavery in a chapter on social organization; but as slaves lived in the Bella Coola villages, it seems reasonable to include them when dealing with the different units of the tribe. It was 162 impossible to obtain an accurate estimate of their number in 567 Bella Coola; slavery has been so long abandoned that the present natives could only hazard vague guesses. Judging from conversational remarks by elderly men, it seems probable that in the old days there was a considerable slave population in every Bella Coola village, comprising at times as much as thirty to forty per cent of the total population.

567 When a party raided a village most of the inhabitants were 927 slain, but some, especially children, young adults, or famous chiefs were captured. As far as could be learned, once a captive had reached Bella Coola he was in little danger, since torture or systematic slaying after the heat of battle had subsided was not a Bella Coola characteristic. The leader of the expedition retained many of the captives as his own slaves, and distributed others among his followers. Anyone, chief [422] or commoner, could own slaves in the same way that he could own any other type of goods.

567 Like any other commodity, slaves were bought and sold.
437 The Bella Coola were usually so well provided with salmon that they were able to exchange these fish with the members [622] of other tribes for slaves. Lack of strong chieftainship among 726 the Bella Coola hindered their success in war, so that most of [431] their slaves were obtained by trade. To the same category 773 belong those obtained as presents at potlatches. If, however, a member of one of the tribes on the lower Fraser River was [648] [11]One of the first efforts of the white man's establishment in British Columbia was the freeing of all slaves. Consequently the past tense is used in this section.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, 837 some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to [648] white men. This is not considered creditable, but the Bella 548
Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, [183] which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often hunt together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice [171] could be found in Bella Coola.

POLYGAMY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are 595
monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of 556 white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common [177] for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Potlas, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Few attained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learnt, [162]
the number of the sexes seems always to have been about equal, in itself a check to polygyny in a community where practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused. The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had

721 to attack. It is said that the Fort Rupert people once raided
648 it, but their hair became entangled in the thorns growing near the tide-flats and they were easily slain while struggling to free themselves. Two warriors escaped and hid in the branches
[727] of a huge spruce tree. They used to slip down at night and steal food, thus supporting themselves for several weeks, but [628] were at last discovered and enslaved. On such occasions the villages of the lower and central valley usually rallied to the help of Xemqo-ti, the most exposed one, although there was no mechanism to enforce such assistance. The inhabitants of [776] this town attributed their protection to Alquntám, and used to claim that he had decreed that they should be immune owing to their close association with him. Though Bella Coola [361] itself was comparatively free from molestation, Kimsquit and [162] Tálio, with smaller populations and less strategic positions, were subject to frequent attacks. At least one of the villages at 712 the head of South Bentinck Arm was defended with a stockade of cedar trunks, set upright in a double row and entered by a water-gate with a drop-door.[1] This water-gate protected the [648] residents on many occasions, and it is remembered that one [726] Fort Rupert raiding-party was annihilated while endeavouring to batter down the door with a huge ram. The defenders, armed with muskets, picked off the attackers as they struggled in the open.

721 All the older men were emphatic in stating that most of their raids were in revenge for such attacks. Although such statements were partisan, they were confirmed in every way
[642] and were probably tolerably correct. Lack of a strong govern-
[623] ment was a serious handicap to the Bella Coola. After being assailed, the members of the town would discuss retaliation, [622] and if unanimity of opinion was reached, that course was de-[701] cided upon. Public opinion alone selected the leader, usually a man who had given a number of potlatches, especially one whose position had been made stronger by previous validation be made more powerful by magical means or the ritual acts of relatives. Although these often entail great labour and expense, parents seldom neglect their duty; in fact, care for their children is one of the strongest Bella Coola characteristics, though the methods used are so foreign to the white man that he has difficulty in realizing their meaning. The hope of both parents is to have children to carry on their names; infanticide is unknown and the death of an infant is mourned almost as much as that of an adult. Sterility and impotency are frequent causes for divorce.

[1] It is said that such stockades surrounded other villages, but definite information on this point was unavailable.

I: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

At the present time there is a high birth-rate in Bella Coola, although the heavy infant mortality prevents any appreciable increase in the population. In the old days, it is said, there were always large families, though much confidence cannot be placed in this statement. In families where there are several children, the first-born, whether boy or girl, assumes an important position. His or her influence, as eldest, is naturally considerable, and the parents foster this through the vague feeling that it is proper for the eldest to be the most important in the family. In adult years, and after marriage, the influence of the eldest of a family continues to have considerable weight with younger brothers and sisters.

If a man is poor he cannot hope to have more than one wife, and his family circle will be limited to their children, and perhaps to elderly parents. On the other hand, a wealthy and powerful man usually has a larger family. Not only may he have several wives, but his aged relatives, and those of his wife, look to him for support and assistance. Such are usually welcome to live in his house; they lend what aid they can in collecting food, and it gratifies a man's pride and sense of power to be closely surrounded by a large family. The Bella Coola are, on the whole, considerate to their aged relatives.[10]

[10]This is not true of the present. During the winter of 1923-4 a feeble old man, living alone, was often in actual want of food. Disliked and degraded, of a mean disposition himself, none of his surviving relatives, of whom the nearest were nephews, would take him into their houses. Commenting on this man's fate, several informants pointed out how, in the old days, such a one could have found

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

CHAPTER VII

BIRTH, ADOLESCENCE, MARRIAGE

Birth—Childhood Instruction—Puberty Rites—Marriage

Birth

IT was impossible to obtain definite data on the fertility of Bella Coola women, or on the period elapsing between marriage and the birth of the first child. Sterility is rare, though by no means unknown; on the other hand, there are several families with as many as eight or nine children. The changed conditions which have followed the advent of the white man seem to have had little influence on the high birth-rate, although infant mortality has increased enormously. Within the last few years this has diminished, so that the Bella Coola are now holding their own. Children are always desired, and although methods of abortion and infanticide have been known for many years, neither practice seems to have been sufficiently common to have produced an appreciable effect on the population.

Pregnancy usually occurs during the year following marriage. Though its actual dependence upon coition is fully realized, yet the Bella Coola, religiously minded in this as in all other aspects of life, ascribe the condition to the four Mesmesälänx acting on the behest of Alquntäm. It is believed that the Carpenters carve out the child who is to be born in the same way that a human craftsman manufactures some complicated object. Most individuals do not theorize to any extent upon the course of biological development, but are content to assume that Alquntäm has made the coming birth possible.

During pregnancy the expectant mother must observe certain restrictions. If she chews gum, she will have a difficult delivery; if she eats salmon tails, the feet of the infant will appear before the head, and although skilled assistants can usually rotate a child, this is a painful process which should be avoided.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 [164] 177 [182]

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 [124] 175

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nulxuxtskwan·e winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Necleetsconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe·ssb, a small stream rising 133 [103]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 the north bank of the Bella Coola,[1] near the lower slope of the mountain, and about three miles from the sea. It is probable that there was a town at this spot very long ago, according to the statement of one old man, and the numerous repositories (II, p.8) in the vicinity support this view.

*(11) Sınxl, "Sunny," or "Fallen Sun": on the south side of the Bella Coola opposite the preceding. It was deserted about 1907. This was a fairly large town, though never as big as Qomqo·ts. The name is derived from Sun, sınx, and there [173] are two explanations given for it. One informant states that [178] the name came from the many revelations of the Sun to the first people there; another that the first chief, said to have been named Stältımg, erected a large totem-pole, decorated with the figure of a sun. This blew down, in consequence of which the people called their town Sınxl, "Fallen Sun."

*(12) Sqomell: on the south side of the Bella Coola about three miles from the sea, and a short distance below the end of the present bridge. The meaning of the name is unknown.

*(13) Tcımotl, "Where the River Is Sufficiently Deep to Cover the Stones, but Shallow Enough for Rapids": the upper continuation of the last-named. It was deserted during the [164] smallpox epidemic. The name of the chief who came there [173] at the beginning of time was given as Tswakilak.

(14) Sno'oniqwlg, "On the Point": on a curving promontory on the south bank of the river about four miles from the sea. It was long ago swept away when the river changed its course.

(15) Nu'exmäq, "The Place of Foul Water": on the north [133] bank of the Bella Coola a little above the preceding, at a place where there were a number of stagnant pools between the river and the mountains. No one knows how long ago this town was abandoned; but as the names of people living there figure in stories which are said to be of no great antiquity, it [133] [1]The river frequently changes its course, so that village sites now at a considerable distance from it may once have been on its banks.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

stream, on which the salmon-weir rested, was carried away.[10] 361

The following village may be included with the above: [173]

(27) Nusxeq: on the shore of North Bentinck Arm, to the east of the creek that flows into it at Green Bay. This long-deserted village was built so close to the ocean that high tides reached almost to the houses. According to one informant, the name was derived from that of the first chief sent down from above to that spot; while another connected it, etymologically, with Nusx, the name of the barren district some four and a half miles up the valley of the creek. In recent years this village site has been used only as a summer camp. [173]

The name given to the Bella Coola valley is Nuxälk; that given to the inhabitants of the valley, excluding those of village no. 27, is Nuxälkımx.[11] 101 103

Two points must be considered with regard to the above list of towns: In the first place, can it be regarded as an accurate list, or do the towns belong to the realm of mythology? In the second place, are the customs and beliefs of the inhabitants of the different towns sufficiently similar to be described without reference to local differences? 128 173 361

The first question is difficult to answer. The Bella Coola undoubtedly consider the existence of these towns to be an historical fact, but so do they regard the peopling of the earth by men created in the land above. Nevertheless, the above list appears to be substantially correct. The Bella Coola, although now collected into a single village, still remember their ancient homes. One man, for example, stated as a matter of course that he was a man of Snuləli. Further inquiry elicited the information that he had been born at Sunxl, where his father had moved at the time of the smallpox epidemic. It later appeared that my informant's father was born at Tcumotl, had married there, and that it was his father who had moved [164] [166]

[10] This explanation may be only legendary.

[11] Boas, p. 49, states that Nuxälk is only applied to the lower villages of the valley. All the writer's information was contrary to this view. [114]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 (31) Ḳxdis, "Ocean Fish-Trap": on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the Nuik" River. [226] It is doubtful whether this was a town, or merely a camping place of the people of Nuik" when using their salmon-trap.

*(32) Nuik": on a raised mound at the south side of the mouth of the Nuik" River, which enters the head of South [731] Bentinck Arm from the east. The meaning is unknown. This [164] was a populous town until the inhabitants were decimated by an epidemic of smallpox.

*(33) Tāl·io: on the west side of the mouth of the river of the same name which flows into South Bentinck Arm from the south. The location of this village was constantly changed, [133] owing to destructive variations in the course of the river. It was formerly a large town, and has been deserted only since 1900. This village had another name, Ṭqwantlos, "Facing," so called because its houses faced those of the town of Nuik".

*(34) Ȧs·ux", "At the Head": at the head of South Bentinck Arm there is a bay running south-west, into the upper end of which a small stream empties. The trail leading to the [487] lake at the head of Rivers Inlet follows this valley. Ȧs·ux" was located on this creek, at some little distance from the ocean; the name was derived from the geographical location of the town. It has not long been deserted and must have been a populous place to judge from the numerous repositories (II, p. 8).

(35) Ḳwapx: on the east side of the mouth of a creek flowing into the bay at the head of South Bentinck Arm, from the south. This town was of moderate size. The meaning of the name is unknown. It is thought to be in the Rivers Inlet language.

VILLAGES AT KIMSQUIT

[133] Two rivers, the Dean from the east, and the Kimsquit from the north, flow into the head of Dean Channel, and the villages of this area can be grouped according to the two rivers.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

175 The Dean River is called Nulɔl, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sutslmx. About eighty years [101] ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kims- [164] quit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the [731] Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one [164] epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people [731] survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have [628] always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sä·tsk'

361 *(44) Sä·tsk': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nuxwdst: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manitou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

619 The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

342 Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, 361 built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

THE ıstämx [1]

BB
BC
563
361
[164
101
197]

Before the smallpox epidemic, about 1865, there were towns on the fiords and villages of Dean Channel between Kimsquit and Bella Bella. The inhabitants were called ıstämx by the Bella Coola, and ıstaitx by the Bella Bella. Their settlements were at Elcho Harbour, Green River, Cascade Inlet, and at several unidentified places. Their language is said to have differed slightly from that of the Bella Bella, but the people themselves married freely with both Kimsquit and Bella Bella, thus forming a connecting link between these tribes.

A list of ıstämx towns was obtained from one old man, who claimed to be a descendant of the people. It was impossible to verify this information, and since he himself was not an ideal informant, the following can be regarded only as approximately correct.

(1) Älko: at Elcho Harbour.

(2) Kıldeıt: on a fiord one mile above the last-named.

(3) Älllık or Yuqwa t: on a river three miles above the preceding.

(4) Nuwaisä·x: on a river two miles above the preceding.

(5) Nusqatl: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(6) 'Omllom: on a fiord three miles above the preceding.

(7) Suxwlk: on a river two miles above the last-named and thirty miles below Kimsquit.

According to the old man from whom the above list was obtained, Nuxwlst, at Kimsquit, recorded earlier as village no. 45, was also populated by ıstämx people. There was so much intermarriage between the two groups that it is now impossible to ascertain whether the inhabitants not only of Nuxwlst, but of Suxwlk as well, were predominantly Kimsquit or ıstämx.

BC
484
133
[648]

The open plateau in which the Bella Coola River rises has always made travel possible for long distances, so that not only

1 ["Bellacoola term for the people of mixed Bellabella - Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of 'Dean Channel' - see 2: McIlwraith, cat. 116, p584 - Analyst]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

621
623 ters, and the village constitutes a unit for all dances; in fact [535] this ceremonial unity is its most important function.
[796] With the exception of a few villages built on the seashore, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the 361 river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built [184] type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them [342] stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many [171] cases have piles beneath their front ends, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there
[481] is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies; before the smallpox [164] epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others, only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses; anyone may build where there is a vacant space.
[433] Much the same arrangement occurs in the sea-coast villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an ocean fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

342 The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, [354] often sunk a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the side-walls are raised the partitions, forming bedrooms for the different families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The [592] number of families occupying a house depends on its size; an [622] important chief, with many relatives, often builds an enormous house which is occupied by ten or more families; smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open; people are constantly passing in and out, and any-[261] one present when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with [353] carved upright posts and paintings on the beams and back-wall.
[535] A door through the latter leads to the back-room, so important in dances.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

835 and influence may have won for him. One or two instances 556 are known of contact between parent and child, a matter in which it is the duty of no one to interfere; if a person thus flouts public opinion, it is his own affair.

648 In view of the firmness of the marriage bond and the ab-
167 sence of professional prostitutes, it is difficult to explain the wholesale exodus of Bella Coola women to Victoria in the last century. In some peculiar manner this came to be regarded as socially proper. The daughters both of chiefs and commoners trooped off for a varying period of months or years
[164] and those who returned brought back venereal diseases which appear to have been unknown before that date. Few of them bore children afterwards, a factor of prime importance in estimating the reasons for the decline of the Bella Coola. The motives which led the women to the city seem to have been: (1) the desire for wealth; (2) the influence of strong liquor; (3) the lure of a strange environment; (4) the attraction of the white men, on account of their higher culture.

It is fortunate for the Bella Coola that this fatal custom has ceased to be considered estimable, although the harm already done may be irremediable.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

tries to speak to living relatives, but his whistling language is unintelligible and frightens the hearer. Ghosts dislike urine, and the only means known to keep them away from a house is to sprinkle this liquid outside the door, a common Bella Coola custom. There is no actual danger in hearing a ghost, and little even in seeing one, provided the observer does not relate his experience, but should he try to do so, something happens to his mouth as if an invisible hand had been clamped over it to prevent his words issuing forth. He can neither eat nor drink and soon dies.[46] It is possible that other beings are responsible for this same affliction, but as no sufferer has ever been able to explain the cause of his ailment, no one knows. The most dangerous ghost is that of a person who, buried without a nose-ring, is unable to disintegrate into his elements. The sight of such an apparition causes almost immediate death through contraction and closing of the mouth.

775 [789] 761 775 753 [764]

An unpleasant habit of ghosts is the throwing of stones at the living. This is done partly from a love of mischief, and partly to remind their relatives of their needs. An old Kimsquit man described how, when encamped on King Island, he had almost been struck by a stone which seemed to fall from a tree. He realized that it must have been thrown by a ghost, and his opinion was confirmed when he found he could not speak. He instantly built a fire and cast on it both food and clothing as offerings to the dead, which had the effect of loosening his mouth. Pondering on the reason, he remembered that one of his relatives had died not far away, and that he had failed to give him any crumbs for a long time. In this case, as in many others, the stone was visible, though the thrower remained invisible.

775 [753] [755]

Even near approach to ghosts is sometimes dangerous. The same man related how, when hunting, he heard what he thought was the note of a water ouzel, and passed by heedlessly. In a few minutes he thought he heard the cackling of geese, but the sound, instead of continuing to come from a pond a few hun-

[46]The disease attributed to the actions of ghosts may be lock-jaw.

[164]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

obtained two wives, the name of one being Thisla. He returned to Bella Coola with them.

Nänalskwitl knew that presently he was fated to become immobile, a seat of petrified power. Since he was able to select where this was to be, he chose the site of Mount Nusqalst, midway in the Bella Coola valley, as a convenient place to overlook the doings of men. Before he transformed himself into this mountain, he determined that he would have people visit him; accordingly he changed his axe, Nuskumidjusta, which he carried concealed beneath his blanket, into sqalst, a stone much used for axes and adzes. Until the introduction of white man's tools his wish was gratified; people came from far and near to obtain the necessary material.

The human origin of the mountain is still remembered, since it is often spoken of by its chiefly names, Nänalskwitl and Thisla, relics of its existence as a man. This story is regarded as an origin myth, and as such might have been included in vol. I, chap. VI.

This mountain is regarded with awe by the Bella Coola on account of its great height, but it seems to lack most of the characteristics ascribed to other places where power has been petrified.

(10) On one of the mountains above Cascade Inlet there used to be a stone eagle with outstretched wings which came to this earth with the first people, but was petrified one day when drying its wings after fishing. About 1860 part of its beak fell away. A change in the condition of any of these places had long been regarded as an omen of misfortune, so the epidemic of smallpox that soon after ravaged the coast was not unexpected.

(11) Allssmos: An unidentified spot where a smuq of the mountain was petrified. At this place there is a small pool which is the repository (II, p. 8) of a certain kusiut dancer.

(12) uxsekam, "The Walker," the name both of a supernatural being and the spot where it is localized. This is not far from the glacier that lies near the junction of the trails from Snuhsli and Täl·io; it is the largest one in the vicinity of Bella Coola and is said to move its position. The being is in some way connected with it, hence the name.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 539 * 787 777 Bella Bella man was fishing when a salmon jumped into his canoe and died at once, without the usual flopping and struggling. The fisherman took it home and ate it, though his wife refused to touch it, as being uncanny. Presently the man's lower jaw became diseased and he lost his teeth. The salmon must have been a sisiutl.[18]

The mere sight of a sisiutl does not bring the misfortune which follows the killing of one by faulty means. On the other hand, if slain in the proper manner great good fortune will result. One method is to put a stick near it in the water, whereupon the fish will jump ashore and flop around, shedding its scales. The hunter should then kill it and, crouching down, say:

"I wish I had a salalberry leaf, or a piece of dead alder."

Both of these have sharp-cutting edges. If he then puts his right hand behind him, whichever he has asked for will be there, though no one knows how it comes. Then he must cut the fish lengthwise into two parts, throw away the right half and the head, wrap the left in his cape,[19] and run from the spot, taking care to go neither up nor down hill. Soon a landslide will take place, sweeping away the ground on which he has stood, even though it be level. He must hide the half sisiutl in a hole in a cedar tree for one year without saying anything about his treasure. During this period he must not hunt or embark on any other important enterprise.

When the year has elapsed he may tell the people of his experience and sell tiny fragments of the sisiutl for large sums. The purchasers wrap these fragments in cedar-bark and with them daub fish-weirs and traps, thus attracting animals and fish. A man obtaining a sisiutl in this way can show his children where it is concealed, and so transmit his power to them.

THE CATCHING OF A Sisiutl

Not many years ago, a certain Owlxān·i constructed an ocean salmon-trap below Kimsquit. One moonlight night he saw in it a white, gleaming salmon and at once jumped to the conclusion that it was a sisiutl. Being a wild, reckless fellow, he determined to try to obtain supernatural good fortune from his prey, though he was ignorant of the proper procedure. Waiting until the receding tide had almost laid bare the floor of his pen, he leapt down from the weir and clubbed the salmon to death, heedless of the scales which it was shedding in all directions. Then Owlxān·i cut it [18]It appears that the fisherman was a victim of pyorrhœa, in consequence of which his teeth were extracted by a dentist, but the patient is convinced that his misfortunes are due to the salmon which entered his canoe.

[164] [823]

[19]The left of anything is said to be more valuable than the right because when a man dances it is the left side which is nearer the sun.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"Please remedy the invalid." 755

This is virtually a prayer, addressed to the deceased owner of the skull, and accordingly verges on appeal to the dead. None the less, there is no concept of active supplication to any individual ghost, but rather of acquiring aid by the use of a supernatural object.

For one year after this treatment, sexual intercourse is forbidden to both practitioner and patient. The latter, though not the former, dies if either fails to observe this taboo. The use of an old man to apply the medicine is to lessen danger from this source. The owner of this remedy is always liberally rewarded and some old men carefully preserve a skull under a rock-ledge in order to be ready if called upon. [785] [761]

For Smallpox

Pick up a toad, and tear off its head with the teeth, swallowing some of the blood. 757

This is an ancient remedy for some other ailment which was tried as a last resort during the smallpox epidemic. One man who succeeded in practising it on four successive days was cured of the dread disease.

For Consumption

Boil leaves and stems of a certain fleshy plant (not identified) in water and drink the decoction. The potency of the medicine increases accordingly to the number of plants used.

This medicine was a Nootka Indian's hereditary cure for a cough which was found to be effective for consumption as well. The malady was so prevalent on the coast in the last century that it seemed as if the inhabitants were doomed; this remedy was allegedly discovered at that time and knowledge of it spread rapidly from tribe to tribe, saving the lives of hundreds. The Bella Coola recognize that this was a private medicine, but have ceased to regard it as such and have no hesitation in applying it whenever required. [177] [164]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

(3) Pound bark and wood of the black hawthorn in water and drink the brew. 757

(4) The following medicine must be prepared by the patient himself. It is not generally known, but the woman from whom the information was obtained claimed that it had been used with success by her brother.

Obtain a human bone, or a piece of a coffin, and burn it secretly in the forest at some distance from the village. Mix the ashes with dog-fish oil. After preparing the medicine the patient must remain alone in the woods for four days. He can then return home and rub the mixture on his genital organs to reduce the swelling. The sufferer must remain continent for one year or the disease will return with increased malignancy.

It was impossible to learn which types of venereal disease are believed to be curable by these medicines. Nor could definite information be obtained concerning the length of time that the Bella Coola have suffered from these maladies. Most of the old people affirmed that they were unknown before the coming of the white man, although one elderly woman was emphatic in stating that they had experienced them for many generations. 164

For Difficult Delivery (three means) 757 845

(1) The usual remedy, which has been described already, is to apply hot ashes to the woman's feet as soon as the pangs of delivery are felt.

(2) If delivery has been delayed beyond the usual time, it can be accelerated by giving the woman a morsel of the testicle of a beaver mixed with water. This causes the infant to be born at once.

(3) In case of extremely protracted delivery, a husband can help his wife by urinating upon her head.

For Breast Trouble 757

The cure for a pain in a woman's breast is to make a deep incision so that the blood flows freely.

Z: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 575 kukuziut send back X's call in the usual manner. Then, two
* 996 by two, the masks are cast on to the fire and the ceremonial is over.

THE DANCE OF THE TALLY POSTS

[773] As previously described, a tally post is erected in the land [777] above for every Bella Coola at birth. As long as this memorial [753] is upright and firm, the individual to whom it refers enjoys health and prosperity, but if it becomes crooked he falls ill.
[424] The uninitiated believe that several kukuziut have the prerogative of climbing to the land above during the ceremonial season and straightening leaning tally posts. This is such a
[178] useful ability that it must have exercised great influence on the uninitiated in early days, but the rite has not been properly
[64] carried out since the smallpox epidemic in the last century. The following account was obtained from two old men [115] who remembered the manner in which a certain Onikutl of Tsmoil performed a year or two before "The Great Sickness." Neither of the informants was a kuziut at the time, but they were able to supplement their recollections of the dance with what they afterwards learnt when initiated, so the following account is probably accurate in outline though deficient in detail. It will be convenient to refer to the dancer as X, and describe the ceremony in the present tense. It was also performed at Kimsquit many years ago.

The rite resembles kuziutem dances in many respects. X must obtain the consent of the marshals during the preceding summer, and their permission is refused unless the prospective dancer is a man of proved discretion. If they agree, X asks a [283] number of kukuziut women to help him by making a very long and strong rope of nettle fibre. At intervals the work-women gather for the purpose in the back-room of X's house, taking [688] care that no uninitiated see what they are doing. Every effort is made to ensure that there is no flaw in the rope as a break would be a serious matter, punishable by death.

Near the winter solstice the marshals choose a suitable time

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923):1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

CONIFERAE, PINE FAMILY

Juniperus communis L., JUNIPER

B 137 757

Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, branches, and bark boiled, and the decoction taken internally as often as desired for many ailments, including a cough from the lungs, and pain in the stomach. Neither a purgative nor an emetic.

Southern Carrier: Branches boiled, and the vapour inhaled for headache and pain in the chest.

Northern Carrier: Tips boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative, also for a cough.

Juniperus sp.

B 137 757

Gitksan: Entire plant, including roots and berries, boiled for a day, and the decoction, when cool, taken internally for many ailments, including hemorrhage and kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.

Thuja plicata Don, RED CEDAR

Bella Coola: Very soft bark used to bind up wounds, and to cover poultices of false hughane (Tronsmitria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Leaves, sometimes with the gum-coated cones, boiled, and the hot decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.

Leaves powdered by pounding, mixed with a little cold water and taken internally for pain in the stomach, also externally for coughs and internal pains, as heart trouble, rheumatism, swollen neck, and pain in the stomach. See also Polypody, page 48.

Gitksan: Not used.

Chamaecyparis nootkatensis (Lamb) Spach, YELLOW CYPRESS, YELLOW CEDAR

B 137 757

Bella Coola: A little soft bark used to cover poultices of false hughane (Tronsmitria grandis Nutt.) and of tall buttercup (Ranunculus acris L.).

Pinus contorta Dougl., SCRUB PINE, JACK PINE

B [152]

Bella Coola: Gum applied to cuts.

Gum chewed and applied to broken skin.

B [164]

Gum at the ends of branches, collected in November, December, and January, boiled and the decoction taken internally for "consumption."

Gum—like that of tideland spruce (page 51) and western hemlock (page 51)—mixed with the baked stems and leaves, or the dried and pulverized bulb, of false hellebore (page 53), and applied as a poultice (sometimes spread on red cedar bark) to the chest for heart trouble, and to the arms for rheumatism. Burned the skin within two or three days, but was sometimes left on as long as two weeks.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE5
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14
Chilcotin NE8

Ca
I
5
137
757

Southern Carrier: New shoots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Resembled the decoction made from the bark of the aspen (page 54), or from the new shoots and bark of the tideland spruce (page 81), but the last-mentioned considered most efficacious.

Northern Carrier: Needle tips mixed with large needle tips of the "British Columbia pine" (Pinus sp.?), the inside bark of the wild gooseberry (Ribes sp.?), bark of the red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.), the inside pulp of raspberry canes (Rubus sp.), stems of the "bearberry" (?black twin-berry, Lonicera involucrata Banks?), and the inner bark of the wild rose (Rosa sp.), placed in a vessel holding four gallons of water, boiled down to a thick decoction, strained, and bottled. About two tablespoonfuls taken, at sunrise and sunset, for constitutional weakness or paralysis, or if the body were covered with sores.

Gum obtained by heating a green piece of pine (sp.?) painted on the eye to remove white scum and to cure snow-blindness.

T

Sikani: Pitch chewed and the saliva swallowed for a cough.

[912]
[262]

Gitksan: Inner bark (scraped from the trunk with a bone scraper after the outer bark had been removed) eaten both for food and as a blood purifier. Purged the body in from half an hour to an hour.

T
[164]

Shavings of the yellow resinous timber found after removal of the bark boiled, the decoction placed in oil, and taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for many serious ailments, including gonorrhoea. Said to produce beneficial results in "consumption."

Young needles plucked in June and eaten as a purgative and diuretic.

For use with a fern, see page 48.

B
Ca

Abies grandis Lindl., White Fir, Balsam Fir

137
757
[164]

Bella Coola: Bark of root or of stem boiled, and the decoction taken internally every day for tuberculosis and stomach trouble. Said to have cured many cases of tuberculosis.

Gum from bark blisters found on young trees warmed, mixed with mountain goat tallow, and taken internally for sore throat; also drawn on a hair across sore eyes.

Young, green leaves baked, mixed with fruit of skunk cabbage (Lysichiton kamtschatcense Schott.) gathered in October, or the buds gathered in April, split, dried on top of the house, roasted, mixed with a small quantity of slightly roasted roots of the cow parsnip (Heracleum lanatum Michx.), one or two cupfuls of the gummy buds of the black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.), and four or five cupfuls of fresh eulachon oil, allowed to stand one day, then boiled and kept in a box for a hair perfume. Kitimat Indians said to be more expert in its preparation.

B
[302]
[171]
Cn
[757]

Southern Carrier: Tree used for medicine, but details not obtained.

Chilcotin: Not used.

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923):1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
CARRIER NE9
THOMPSON NE15
SEMAN: NE14

Abies sp.

Northern Carrier: Bark boiled in water and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gum used as an ointment on wounds, and especially on burns.

Sikanni: Gum applied to wounds.

Gitksan: Juicy inner bark, scraped from the trunk of the tree, after removal of the outer bark, taken internally for constipation.

Gum from the bark blisters taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for "consumption," gonorrhoea, and many other serious ailments. Applied externally to cuts and sores, especially the sores of gonorrhoea.

The young cones, obtainable in August, dried across, mashed, and used for the same purposes as the gum from the bark blisters.

See also here, page 68.

Pseudotsuga taxifolia Britt., Douglas Fir

Bella Coola: Gum boiled and taken internally, while warm, as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Gum, spread on red cedar bark, applied to cuts. (One informant said that although gum of scrub pine (see page 68), hemlock (see page 81), and tideland spruce (see page 81) were good, Douglas fir gum made cuts worse.)

Gum mixed with dogfish (shark) oil or, if that were not available, eulachon oil, taken, two spoonfuls at a time, with warm water, as an emetic and purgative for colds, rheumatism, gonorrhoea, constipation, intestinal pains, and diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Tsuga heterophylla (Raf.) Sarg., Western Hemlock, and Tsuga Mertensiana Carr., Mountain Hemlock

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.

See also scrub pine (page 68).

Gum warmed and applied to cuts. Not boiled for a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Burning twigs applied to the skin for various internal ailments.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Picea sitchensis Carr., Tideland Spruce

Bella Coola: Tips of small, but not of large, spruces mixed with blue currant (Ribes bracteosum Dougl.), young juneberry (Amelanchier florida Lindl.), and crushed branches (leaves and stems) of garden strawberry (Symphoricarpus racemosus Michx.), boiled and taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Sap from the peeled trunk taken in doses of from half a cup to a cupful as a laxative from May to August.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NES Bellacoola NES COTTIER NES
TSIMSHIAN NES

ARISTOLOCHIACEAE, BIRTHWORT FAMILY

B 139
[16]

Asarum caudatum Lindl., Wild Ginger

— Bella Coola: Boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting.

Boiled, and applied externally for headache, intestinal pains, and pain in the knees.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

POLYGONACEAE, BUCKWHEAT FAMILY

Rumex occidentalis Wats., Western Dock

Bella Coola: Roots roasted for a short time in a hole in the earth among the ashes of a fire, covered with earth, mashed, and applied in quantity as a poultice for boils. Both leaves and roots used, according to another informant, and the poultice applied to wounds as well as boils.

Leaves used for a sweat bath for pains similar to rheumatism all over the body. Stones were heated, a little cold sand spread over them, and leaves spread on the sand; or else the leaves were spread on hot ashes. The patient sat or lay naked directly on the leaves, and was covered with blankets. Western Nettles (Urtica Lyallii Wats.), small branches of black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.) with the leaves on them, or the small kelp found on rocks were sometimes used when leaves of the western dock could not be obtained.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

LORANTHACEAE, MISTLETOE FAMILY

Arceuthobium americanum Nutt., Small Mistletoe

Bella Coola: Boiled, and decoction taken as a potent medicine for hemorrhage of the lungs.

C
[164]

Southern Carrier: Boiled, and decoction taken freely for hemorrhage from the mouth, tuberculosis of the lungs, and emaciation.

NYMPHACEAE, WATER-LILY FAMILY

B
[165]

Nymphaea polysepala (Engelm.) Greene, Yellow Pond-Lily

Bella Coola, old custom: Used in a magical way for pain in all parts of the body. A root in many cases as large as a man's leg was cut free from the bed of a pool with a hemlock pole sharpened like a shovel. A hollow was made in it, water placed in the receptacle, and hot stones added. The stones were changed four times, after which the patient drank one or two cupfuls of the water. He repeated the dose each day for four days. To be effective the root had to be thrown back into the water, not on the ground.

B
[164]

Present custom: Root boiled twelve hours, and decoction taken internally for pain in any part of the body, such as "consumption", rheumatism, heart disease, and gonorrhoea. Considered good for the blood. Not used as a diuretic, or for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting.

T
[162]

Ootsuno: Infusion of scrapings of toasted root (or according to another informant, heart of root, boiled) taken internally for hemorrhage of the lungs and as a contraceptive.

Rosa sp., Wild Rose

Bella Coola: Roots and branches boiled, and the decoction taken internally, even ten cupfuls a day if desired, as a purgative for pain in the stomach. B 137 759

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Northern Carrier: See scrub pine, page 49.

Sekani: Roots crushed, steeped in water, and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

Gitksan: Not used.

Physocarpus opulifolius (L.), Maxim., Nine-Bark B

Bella Coola: Inner bark boiled for two hours, and two to four cupfuls of the decoction at blood heat taken internally as an emetic for persons dizzy with pain. Four or five cupfuls of lukewarm water then taken as a cleansing emetic and repeated about five times. 137 759

Inner bark boiled a long time (when it ceased to have emetic properties), one cupful of the hot decoction taken internally, and thereafter applied externally as a wash twice a day for gonorrhoea and scrofulous glands in the neck. Said to be a laxative that caused the glands to break, discharge fully, and heal. A cupful taken internally daily in advanced cases. B [164]

Southern Carrier: Bark (gathered near the coast) boiled for two hours, and two cupfuls of the decoction taken as an emetic, or one cupful as a purgative. Said to act in half an hour, and to be an excellent remedy, but fatal in too large a dose.

Aruncus sylvester Kost., Goat's Beard

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and one or two cupfuls of the decoction (or as much as desired) taken internally for pain in the stomach and gonorrhoea. A diuretic, but neither a laxative nor an emetic.

Roots boiled in grease of mountain goat (Oreamnos montanus Ord.) for a day and the decoction taken internally for smallpox. T [159]

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Geum macrophyllum Willd., Large-Leaved Yellow Avens

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea, or vomiting. Leaves, usually chewed but sometimes bruised, applied to boils.

Southern Carrier: Leaves boiled and the decoction taken internally for any sickness.

Leaves boiled and applied to bruises. B

Pyrus sitchensis (Roem.) Piper., Mountain Ash

Bella Coola: Bark of the roots, and sometimes the inner bark of the stem, collected at any time of the year, boiled for an hour, and the hot decoction, weak or strong, preferably the latter, taken internally for the stomach or rheumatism. Said to effect a cure in from one to seven days. Not taken for diarrhoea, or vomiting; and for rheumatism sometimes poured into a large box and used as a bath. Used also as an eye-wash. 137 759

Southern Carrier: Bark chewed for colds.

Gitksan: Fresh fruit crushed and eaten raw as a strong purgative.

S: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

Ledum groenlandicum Oeder, LABRADOR TEA
Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a simple beverage, or for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Neither an emetic nor a purgative.
Southern Carrier: Not used formerly, now as a beverage only.
Gitksan: Leaves boiled, and the decoction used as a diuretic, or merely as a beverage.

Gaultheria shallon Pursh, SALAL
Bella Coola: Leaves toasted, pulverised by rubbing, and applied to cuts.
Southern Carrier: Not used.

LABIATAE, MINT FAMILY

Prunella vulgaris L., HEAL-ALL
Bella Coola: Roots, leaves, and blossoms washed, boiled, and a cupful of the weak decoction taken internally for the heart. Not used for diarrhoea or vomiting.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

Mentha canadensis L., MINT
Bella Coola: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally, as often as desired, for pain in the stomach. Not used for vomiting, constipation, or diarrhoea.
Southern Carrier: Entire plant boiled, and a cupful of the decoction taken internally for the stomach, colds, lung affections, and various ailments.
Gitksan: Not used.

SCROPHULARIACEAE, FIGWORT FAMILY

Castilleja miniata Dougl., PAINT-BRUSH
Bella Coola: Not used.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Entire plant boiled, and the decoction taken internally for bleeding, stiff lungs, sore eyes, and lame back, possibly caused by kidney trouble. A purgative and diuretic.
Seeds boiled and the decoction taken internally for coughs.

CAPRIFOLIACEAE, HONEYSUCKLE FAMILY

Lonicera involucrata Banks., BLACK TWIN-BERRY
Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and cud applied for itch.
Leaves chewed and applied to boils, after they were cut open, to draw out the poison.
Leaves crushed and applied to burns and sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark toasted, pulverised, and applied to sores of gonorrhoea.
Bark boiled and decoction taken internally for cough.
Southern Carrier: Bark boiled for five hours, and the decoction used daily as an eye-wash. Roots, leaves, and berries not used.
Northern Carrier: See scrub pine (page 49).
Gitksan: Fresh juice of berries used in sore eyes. Inner bark (when berries not available) soaked in water, and the milky solution used in the eyes.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

B C T 137 757 B [164]

Symphoricarpus racemosa Michx., GARDEN SNOWBERRY

Bella Coola: Branches, large and small, with the bark left on, boiled, and the decoction taken internally daily as the best cure for gonorrhoea. A diuretic. Roots, blossoms, and berries not used for medicine, unless, as one informant stated, the berries were used with the branches.

See also tideland spruce (page 51).

Southern Carrier: Juice of ripe berries used in sore eyes.

Gitksan: Not used.

B C T 137 757

Sambucus racemosa L., RED-FRUITED ELDER

Bella Coola: Bark of the roots placed in water, a few hot stones added until water reached blood heat, and decoction used as a powerful emetic and purgative for pain in the stomach.

Bark of the roots peeled with the teeth, chewed, preferably with a little cool water, and juice swallowed as an emetic and purgative. Said to act within half an hour.

Southern Carrier: Roots boiled, and two cupfuls of the warm decoction taken internally twice a day as a purgative.

Northern Carrier: Roots brewed, the first water discarded and the second taken internally as a purgative.

Sikani: Bark boiled, and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gitksan: Bark of roots scraped off, water added to the bark, and the infusion taken internally as an emetic and purgative.

B C T 137 757

Viburnum pauciflorum Raf., SQUASHBERRY

Bella Coola: Bark chewed, and the juice swallowed for whooping cough and cold on the lungs.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Northern Carrier: Inside bark crushed, steeped in cold water until the water turned green, and one cupful of the infusion taken internally as a purgative and for dysentery.

Gitksan: Bark and twigs boiled, and one cupful of the decoction taken internally in the morning for coughs and "consumption". Said to be always taken in conjunction with devil's club (page 62). See also Angelica genuflexa Nutt., page 61.

VALERIANACEAE, VALERIAN FAMILY

B C T 137 278 T C [302] [237]

Valeriana septentrionalis Rydb., VALERIAN

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Roots, mixed with grease, used for perfume.

Northern Carrier: Valerian? blossoms crushed, and the oil, often mixed with fat from a black bear hide, applied as a hair tonic. Believed to make the hair smooth and shiny, to help its growth, and to give it a fragrance.

Gitksan: Entire plant steeped in bear grease and the grease applied to hair and face as a perfume.

C [302]

Valeriana sitchensis Bong., VALERIAN

Southern Carrier: Leaves mixed with grease used as a perfume for the hair.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

594 be made more powerful by magical means or the ritual acts of 869 relatives. Although these often entail great labour and expense, parents seldom neglect their duty; in fact, care for their children is one of the strongest Bella Coola characteristics, though the methods used are so foreign to the white man that he has difficulty in realizing their meaning. The hope of both [847] parents is to have children to carry on their names; infanticide is unknown and the death of an infant is mourned almost as [586] much as that of an adult. Sterility and impotency are frequent causes for divorce.

163 At the present time there is a high birth-rate in Bella Coola, although the heavy infant mortality prevents any ap-[165] preciable increase in the population. In the old days, it is said, there were always large families, though much confidence cannot be placed in this statement. In families where there are 593 several children, the first-born, whether boy or girl, assumes an important position. His or her influence, as eldest, is naturally considerable, and the parents foster this through the vague feeling that it is proper for the eldest to be the most important in the family. In adult years, and after marriage, the influence of the eldest of a family continues to have considerable weight with younger brothers and sisters.

592 If a man is poor he cannot hope to have more than one wife, and his family circle will be limited to their children, and per-556 haps to elderly parents. On the other hand, a wealthy and [595] powerful man usually has a larger family. Not only may he have several wives, but his aged relatives, and those of his wife,
[602] look to him for support and assistance. Such are usually welcome to live in his house; they lend what aid they can in collecting food, and it gratifies a man's pride and sense of power to be closely surrounded by a large family. The Bella
[888] Coola are, on the whole, considerate to their aged relatives.[10]

[10]This is not true of the present. During the winter of 1923-4 a feeble old man, [178] living alone, was often in actual want of food. Disliked and degraded, of a mean disposition himself, none of his surviving relatives, of whom the nearest were nephews, would take him into their houses. Commenting on this man's fate, several informants pointed out how, in the old days, such a one could have found

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER VII

BIRTH, ADOLESCENCE, MARRIAGE

Birth—Childhood Instruction—Puberty Rites—Marriage

Birth

IT was impossible to obtain definite data on the fertility of Bella Coola women, or on the period elapsing between marriage and the birth of the first child. Sterility is rare, though by no means unknown; on the other hand, there are several families with as many as eight or nine children. The changed conditions which have followed the advent of the white man seem to have had little influence on the high birth-rate, although infant mortality has increased enormously. Within the last few years this has diminished, so that the Bella Coola are now holding their own. Children are always desired, and although methods of abortion and infanticide have been known for many years, neither practice seems to have been sufficiently common to have produced an appreciable effect on the population.

Pregnancy usually occurs during the year following marriage. Though its actual dependence upon coition is fully realized, yet the Bella Coola, religiously minded in this as in all other aspects of life, ascribe the condition to the four Mesmesälänx acting on the behest of Älquntäm. It is believed that the Carpenters carve out the child who is to be born in the same way that a human craftsman manufactures some complicated object. Most individuals do not theorize to any extent upon the course of biological development, but are content to assume that Älquntäm has made the coming birth possible.

During pregnancy the expectant mother must observe certain restrictions. If she chews gum, she will have a difficult delivery; if she eats salmon tails, the feet of the infant will appear before the head, and although skilled assistants can usually rotate a child, this is a painful process which should be avoided.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as easy as possible. Women seldom experience difficulty and 844 suffer, on the whole, less than do white mothers. It is believed that Sxaiaxwax, though invisible, is present on every occasion; [776] the rendering of assistance at childbirth is his one kindly act.

The umbilical cord was formerly cut with a mussel shell, [177] but for many years the use of a metal knife has been customary.
The after-birth usually comes away easily, but if there is delay, [845] hot ashes are placed around the feet and at the back of the woman to accelerate its expulsion. It is immediately buried or placed beneath a large tree in the forest; if burnt, the infant will always be weakly. While one of the assistants disposes of it, another washes the new-born child. The cloths and dishes used for this purpose are burnt; failure to do so is believed to [826] cause the child to become blind through a white film forming over the eyeballs. Then the mother and midwives return to the house with the infant, who is a source of tremendous interest to the community. It is proper for the father to recompense the attendants at once, in accordance with their skill and his generosity. A woman who has had several children often assists the daughter of a friend, then, as she gains more experience, her reputation grows and her help is more commonly sought. At the time of this study, 1922, the sum of [465] $2.50 was considered suitable recompense for a fairly proficient midwife.

A new-born child takes the breast readily and a mother 853 would be considered harsh indeed if she failed to suckle her infant whenever it cried, since scientific hours for feeding are not known. A child is wrapped in a shawl or a blanket and 854 carried by the mother wherever she goes; when in the house it sprawls contentedly on the floor, unhampered by clothing.
When the umbilical cord falls, it is preserved by the mother. [846] Soon after birth, the parents make provision for their child's welfare by magical means (I, p. 700). The heavy infantile death-rate of the Bella Coola cannot be attributed to lack of [165] love or care on the part of parents, but the attention lavished is commonly not of the kind that assists a weakly child to survive the perils of infancy.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 on the northern side of the Bella Coola valley, east of the Necleetsconnay. Before merging their waters with North Bentinck Arm the three flow more slowly and there are extensive tide-flats (see Plate 8). Several villages formerly clustered around their mouths.

361

(1) Q̣āmeux: on the west bank of the Necleetsconnay about three-quarters of a mile from the sea. Nothing is known of this long-abandoned village of which even the name is uncertain. The mountain that rises behind its site is called Q̣āmeux, and it is supposed that the village had the same designation. Some of the older people state that there was no town, only a temporary hunting station, at this spot.

(2) Ṭəsällumx, "Short Feet": on the very shore of North Bentinck Arm, west and north of the mouth of the Necleetsconnay. The fiord terminates in a tolerably square end, running north and south, and this town was at the northern edge. It was built on piles and the inhabitants could step to the ground only at low tide. This is the explanation given of the peculiar name, a reference to the curtailed walking space. Long ago it was a large town, but was probably occupied only during the winter. In summer the people are believed to have moved to Numām·uc, "The Place of Flies," on the north side of North Bentinck Arm, about one mile from its head.

[166]

*(3) Äłqäläxł, "The Fenced Town," so called because it was stockaded: near the south bank of the Pe·əslə, about a quarter of a mile from the sea, near the site of the present mission church. It was inhabited until about 1870. According to one informant this village was founded by a certain Ṭäxlexwam, a descendant of Ṭaiakwala, who decided to move close to the river.

[712]

(4) Ṭłoq̣o·tł, "Small Mound," so called from the knoll on which it was situated: above Äłqäläxł, and about one-half mile to the north of the present Bella Coola River. Its site is crossed by the road connecting the Indian village of Bella Coola with the white settlement of the same name.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 able for axes, which occurs in the valley of a small stream on [316] the slope of the mountain.

*(23) Nulleax, "The Place Where There Are No Falls": an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this creek about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still [175] standing about 1870. Mackenzie reached the Bella Coola River at this place. At the time of his arrival the population was [166] larger than usual, because the salmon-weir had withstood
[226] some heavy freshets which had destroyed several weirs on the Bella Coola, and driven the inhabitants of other villages to Nulleax.

[133] It is said that the affluent at Nulleax, the stream Xaiqts, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a ravine leading to the main river. Its source is a spring at the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down these. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Nusnäxwnxkt, and it is said that some families living on the Skeena sing of it as the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

*(24) Stuux: on the point between the La'xlx (Atnarko) and Sla·kł (Whitewater) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name is unknown.

(25) Qwliutł, "The Place of Herbage": on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the forks. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was [137] given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

(26) Snułk·tł, "The Place of Falls," so called from the [133] strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point: on the north side of the river about ten miles from the forks. This large town [173] was long ago deserted when a large rock in the midst of the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

stream, on which the salmon-weir rested, was carried away.[10] 361

The following village may be included with the above: [173]

(27) Nusxeq: on the shore of North Bentinck Arm, to the east of the creek that flows into it at Green Bay. This long-deserted village was built so close to the ocean that high tides reached almost to the houses. According to one informant, the name was derived from that of the first chief sent down from above to that spot; while another connected it, etymologically, with Nusx, the name of the barren district some four and a half miles up the valley of the creek. In recent years this village site has been used only as a summer camp. [173]

The name given to the Bella Coola valley is Nuxälk; that given to the inhabitants of the valley, excluding those of village no. 27, is Nuxälkmx.[11] 101 103

Two points must be considered with regard to the above list of towns: In the first place, can it be regarded as an accurate list, or do the towns belong to the realm of mythology? In the second place, are the customs and beliefs of the inhabitants of the different towns sufficiently similar to be described without reference to local differences? 128 173 361

The first question is difficult to answer. The Bella Coola undoubtedly consider the existence of these towns to be an historical fact, but so do they regard the peopling of the earth by men created in the land above. Nevertheless, the above list appears to be substantially correct. The Bella Coola, although now collected into a single village, still remember their ancient homes. One man, for example, stated as a matter of course that he was a man of Snuləli. Further inquiry elicited the information that he had been born at Sunxl, where his father had moved at the time of the smallpox epidemic. It later appeared that my informant's father was born at Tcumötl, had married there, and that it was his father who had moved [164] [166]

[10] This explanation may be only legendary.

[11] Boas, p. 49, states that Nuxälk is only applied to the lower villages of the valley. All the writer's information was contrary to this view. [114]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

128 from Snuɔli. My informant's grandchildren regard them-
173 selves as Snuɔli boys, and their names are embodied in myths
361 of that village, although their forbears have not lived there
166 for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this case exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no cause to doubt the general accuracy of these. Names [554] embodied in the origin myths of different towns are used as prerogatives and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inaccuracies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

128 Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descen-
184 dants of people of different villages were found in most cases to be identical. There were a few differences in custom between [796] the people of Stuux and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on [101] the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

114 Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included
361 Pe·ɔsɔ (no. 4), Nukɣuɣtskwan·e (no. 7), and Nusälsum (no. 16).[11] All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 6, 8, 9, 19, and 24, were not known by several old men questioned on the subject.

101 The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political 619 unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recog-[631] nized that their origins and customs were similar. This was [197] also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living on South Bentinck Arm, and at the head of Dean Channel.

[11]Using in each case the spelling of this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

835 and influence may have won for him. One or two instances
556 are known of contact between parent and child, a matter in which it is the duty of no one to interfere; if a person thus flouts public opinion, it is his own affair.

648 In view of the firmness of the marriage bond and the absence of professional prostitutes, it is difficult to explain the 167 wholesale exodus of Bella Coola women to Victoria in the last century. In some peculiar manner this came to be regarded as socially proper. The daughters both of chiefs and commoners trooped off for a varying period of months or years
[164] and those who returned brought back venereal diseases which appear to have been unknown before that date. Few of them bore children afterwards, a factor of prime importance in estimating the reasons for the decline of the Bella Coola. The motives which led the women to the city seem to have been: (1) the desire for wealth; (2) the influence of strong liquor; (3) the lure of a strange environment; (4) the attraction of the white men, on account of their higher culture.

It is fortunate for the Bella Coola that this fatal custom has ceased to be considered estimable, although the harm already done may be irremediable.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

One." An informant, wishing to emphasize the care lavished on this being, pointed to a photograph from an illustrated paper of Princess Mary, Viscountess Lascelles, bending over her infant. He remarked that this was the kind of attention shown by Xemxemālstla to his charge. 776 *

Of slightly greater importance is the hermaphrodite, Spuntz. He resides in the land above, and spends most of his time outside the walls of Nusmāt-a, acting as guardian to a number of young girls, the children of various supernatural beings. On many occasions he has descended to this world and has been seen by mortals, who recognize him by his peculiar nasal voice, intermediate between that of a man and a woman. It is supposed that human hermaphrodites have been affected in some mysterious way by their supernatural prototype. 776 * 838 838

Several informants stated that they had heard of hermaphrodites among other tribes, and thought that such existed among their own people in early times, but the term is usually applied, without physiological significance, to two types of individual supposedly affected by Spuntz. Several cases are alleged of a male infant changing to a female on being washed and brought into the house. One of these, a girl about twelve years of age, was living in Bella Coola in 1923. The basis for these accounts is certainly error concerning the sex of a new-born child. The second class consists of those who desire to perform the work of the opposite sex. For example, if a boy shows an aptitude for woman's work, the parents, realizing that he wants to be a girl, dress and treat him accordingly. One informant knew of a Kimsquit boy, two Bella Bella, and several Kitimat to whom this had occurred. Henceforth they dressed as women, but in due course they took wives whom they helped in all feminine tasks. Another informant knew of two cases of the kind in which the men did not marry and were believed to have an aversion to women. One instance is known of a Kitimat woman who, having assumed man's costume and occupations, refused either to marry or to have anything to do with her own sex. Another case is of a Carrier 171 838

/1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

838 woman who dressed as a man and used to hunt successfully,
[171] though she was married. Such practices are said to have been not uncommon among the Haida. The women were considered bold and independent, but the Bella Coola of today know little *[776] about them, and are not even certain that Spuntz is responsible for a female assuming the actions of a male. It will be readily understood that he is not regarded with much awe, nor does he influence their daily lives.

*776 Another supernatural being, uninfluential though resident [822] upon earth, is Echo, Satsalāni, "The Voice Repeater." The Bella Coola regard him as a male being, in human form, and recognize his presence whenever sounds reverberate. He figures in mythology, occasionally appears as a masked figure at [575] kwiat or nusek dances, but has neither helped nor harmed human beings for so many generations that he is accordingly neglected.

*776 A supernatural being from whom many Bella Coola have 787 had unpleasant visitations is Sīlmsila, the cause of nightmares.
828 He is a man-like creature with black face and an enormous head which he constantly scratches. His home is in Nusmāt-a, but he frequently descends to this world and frightens sleepers. If a person scratches his head while asleep it is because he has just seen Sīlmsila doing so, and if he walks in his sleep it is to escape this supernatural visitor. A sleep-walker is usually aroused by having a bucket of water thrown over him. A [751] person frequently troubled by Sīlmsila can avoid him by painting a black circle around each eye before going to sleep.

*776 With the exception of Alqantēm, the supernatural beings thus far described play little part in the lives of the Bella Coola. They believe in their existence, but do not expect to meet them, and do not believe that they exercise much influence on the course of their daily life. Supernatural beings of this ineffective 781 type are exceptional. A man goes into remote parts of the mountains, or even into little frequented areas around his *776 village, with mingled fear lest he encounter an actively malicious being, and hope that he may meet a benevolent one. More-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

424 nearest answer to the question replied that his crest was the 979 Raven. The Kitkatla was a Raven man, too, and to the 825 narrator's surprise, treated him as a brother for the rest of his stay in Victoria. He shook with laughter as he recalled the experience, and added that though he was quite willing to accept favours of this kind he would never dream of returning them. It can be stated unhesitatingly that the Bella Coola have no totemic beliefs concerning their crests. There is not [582] the slightest trace of respect towards the animal, nor yet of exogamy.

211 Although crests are not objects of religious veneration, yet 424 they have some importance in the realm of social life. The 993 portrayal of one serves to indicate ownership of an ancestral myth describing that particular bird or animal. A wealthy 825 chief is proud to display his crest on a totem-pole, or as a painting on the front wall of his house. Anyone seeing such a [532] design is impressed with the glories of the family history of [556] the owner, to the latter's gratification. A living specimen of [304] the bird or animal is treated with no respect, but its delineation is a memento of family history. For that reason a man is often tattooed* with his crest, that derived from his father's first ancestor on the right breast, that from his mother, on the left; and the owner of a canoe often carves his crest on its bow. After the death of a chief a memorial-post is erected near his grave, decorated with a painting or carving of one or more crests to remind observers not only of the deceased, but of his family history, his most treasured possession. It is said, half

[171] [184] *It is said that tattooing was formerly customary not only among all the coastal tribes but also the Carriers. Both Bella Coola men and women decorated themselves in this way, but the custom was not universal, and is said never to have been common. It is believed that Haida chiefs tattooed themselves in connection with potlatches; in Bella Coola this was not the case although the operation was performed within the back-room of the patient's house. Two methods were employed. The first was by puncturing the skin with a needle smeared with colouring material; the second and less common, by passing a string coated with the substance beneath the skin. The dye was obtained from river stones which were baked for a long time and then ground into a powder. This keeps indefinitely and can be made ready for use by mixing with water. As far as could be learnt, any skilled craftsman might perform the operation.

[384]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

226 lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man 626 who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a 614 tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members [627] of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family [582] is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of [601] [178] the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members 614 of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby 622 one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following 431 interesting comment was received. The previous winter the 171 informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

621 623 [535] [996] 361 [184] [342] [171] [487] [164] [433] 342 [354] [572] [223] [261] [353] [535]

ture, and the village constitutes a unit for all dances; in fact this ceremonial unity is its most important function.

With the exception of a few villages built on the seashore, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many cases have piles beneath their front ends, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies; before the smallpox epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others, only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses; anyone may build where there is a vacant space. Much the same arrangement occurs in the sea-coast villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an ocean fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, often sunk a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the side-walls are raised the partitions, forming bedrooms for the different families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The number of families occupying a house depends on its size; an important chief, with many relatives, often builds an enormous house which is occupied by ten or more families; smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open; people are constantly passing in and out, and anyone present when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with carved upright posts and paintings on the beams and back-wall. A door through the latter leads to the back-room, so important in dances.

622 556 431 broader principles of chieftainship. The first essential is to consider the principles of present-giving.

PRESENTS

556 431 424 Consider, for example, a man who wishes to take for himself one of his ancestral names, and at the same time to display certain features of his ancestral myth—a particular type of house, totem-pole, or dance used by one of his forefathers. He invites guests to his house, displays the feature of his myth, and must give a present to each to show the value of his prerogative and to demonstrate that he has not merely casually usurped the function in question. In giving a present of, for instance, $20, it is as if he said to the recipient:

"See! These are the glories of my ancestors of whom I am the descendant. I have a part in their fame. To make this valid I give you from my wealth a mere trifle, a matter of no consequence to me, who am so firmly established in the path of my ancestors."

556 431 The guest receives the money with mixed feelings. On the one hand he has received $20 as a "present." But if he wishes to elevate his own position and his own prestige, together with that of his ancestors, it is incumbent on him to repay this sum with interest. Contrary to the practice among some other coastal tribes, there is no fixed rate of interest among the Bella Coola. An ambitious man who seeks to become a chief will strive to the utmost to pay back with heavy interest when he himself gives a ceremony so that his fame will be carried far and near. If he should repay only the principal, he would be regarded as having done all that was obligatory, but should he fail to do even so much, he would soon sink to a position of little consequence, no matter how lofty and distinguished his ancestral name might be.

[171] [558]

171 556 558 In this respect there is a parallel between the Bella Coola and ourselves. A man invited to a dinner party is not compelled to return the compliment, but if, in the course of time, he fails in any way to reciprocate the hospitality, he loses his place among his special associates. So, likewise, the Bella Coola who receives present after present, but fails to give any in return gradually receives smaller and smaller gifts and in time loses his social position and influence entirely. As with ourselves, too, there is a disguised feeling of contempt for the parvenu, the man who, lacking the traditional dignity attached to one of the names which came from above at the beginning of time, has elevated the fame of a more recent name by ostentatious giving. But in Bella Coola, as with ourselves, success is the great criterion, and the donor finds his influence little impaired by the lack of one of the ancient origin myths. It is dangerous to cite similarities between the social practices of divergent peoples, and this one must not be stretched too far. The pride of a man in being able to incorporate himself in the traditions of his ancestors is lacking with the host at a dinner party, nor does the latter, to any extent, attain the status of chief through his hospitality. Further, a Bella Coola will sometimes endeavour to shame the poverty of a guest by giving him a large present. Unless the recipient is willing to admit his inferiority he must repay this with a still larger gift. The original donor will then vindicate himself by increasing the value of his next gift until a fierce competition ensues. This feature of rivalry in generosity is rare in Bella Coola, and never reached the same proportions that it did among the Kwakiutl.

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

171 556 558

The following is a good instance of the manner in which a haughty man regards the acceptance of gifts. A Rivers Inlet man married a Calvert Island woman who went to live with her husband. The man's mother, to show her amiable feelings towards the marriage, frequently gave thick slices of boned spring salmon, a great delicacy, to the family of her daughter-in-law. The Calvert Island chief considered these presents an insult to him, as if the Rivers Inlet people thought that he and his people were so poverty-stricken they lived on skin and bones. To avenge this slight he made war on the Rivers Inlet Indians and slew many of them. This attitude of the Calvert

556 578

554 or sat in two rows, facing one another, on opposite sides of the 556 central fire, parallel to the side walls of the house. When these [773] first ancestors died, the name of each was passed on to some [551] descendant. The Bella Coola feel that he who bears the name
[171] of the first settler in a village should have his ancestor's seat. Comparison with the practices of other coastal tribes suggests that formerly the Bella Coola must have had a definite series of seats in their houses, either according to the rank of the occupant, or according to the rank of the ancestor whose name he bore. The most careful investigation, however, failed to show such a system of ranked seating. The only indications that such may once have been customary, are found in the feeling today that the bearer of the first chief's name ought to occupy the central seat behind the fire, and in the expression, "He seats himself where his ancestor sat," when a youth is given his place in the house.

[551] A seat can be claimed and an ancestral name assumed at any age. Goods must be given away which are said to be "covering" for the young man, to have "flowed away," or to have "become nothing" for the name. These validate the official assumption of the designation. With it is given a place in the house. A seat is chosen at the side of the fire, and the goods mark that spot as his in conjunction with the name.
[424] The seat itself is not material, though the general location on which a person shall sit is indicated. His "seat" is the goods that have been expended. Several men may have positions at practically the same spot, but when all are seated they merely move slightly so that all have room. There is no thought of one person infringing on the location of another. A parent who gives ample wealth at successive potlatches may seek for his son a seat behind the fire. Such is entirely his own affair and if sufficient goods are distributed the son may seat himself in that place, but if the gifts are of little value the occupant is secretly held in derision, as having a seat that is unsound, or unfirm. In later years the man may expend large sums in strengthening his seat; by so doing he wins recognition from names to their dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate 11) and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have returned the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the woman and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death. 231 552 622 766

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Potlus, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Potlus had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Potlus gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic foray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage. 556* 622 [156] [628] [726]

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tcubsa, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their booty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be- 171 556* 622 829

[See out. 116, P 116 (c) - ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

171 lieved that all the Kitkatla chiefs were powerful, but Tcibsia
556 was the greatest of all. It is said that one of his prerogatives[1]
622 was to exercise jus primae noctis whenever a Kitkatla was 829 married. Without question, tales of this chief's prowess have become exaggerated in transmission, none the less they show that the Bella Coola realize the great importance of the northern chiefs. Concerning their nearer neighbours, the Bella Bella, the Bella Coola understand the way in which the members of a family combine to help their chief in the giving of presents. They say that the Bella Bella consider the Bella Coola practice of each one endeavouring to make himself a chief to be foolish in the extreme. Such is also said to be the opinion among the Kwakiutl, who support their contention that in Bella Coola all are chiefs, from the fact that flooring exists under the seats of all, whereas in Fort Rupert, their home, such occurs only beneath the seats of chiefs.

262 Corresponding to the extreme paucity of functions pos-
574 sessed by Bella Coola chiefs, their prerogatives are likewise
622 scanty. Indeed, they take their validated seats only during certain rites of the secret society connected with chiefs, at potlatches, and at ceremonial meals. These last occur whenever a deer or seal is killed; the latter is considered a great delicacy.[2] Anyone can kill a seal, but it would be unthinkable for a Bella [225] Coola to share its flesh with his immediate family only. The [252] animal is cleaned, the hole made by bullet or spear carefully plugged, and the carcass boiled whole in a large box. Mean-
[203] while a herald (I, p. 244) summons the chiefs to the house where the successful hunter lives. If the meal is to consist merely of one small seal, only a few chiefs are invited, those of greatest influence through their possession of "strong" seats. When several seals have been killed, the number invited is corres-
[562] pondingly larger, but no woman may partake unless she ranks

[1]This is said to have been a personal prerogative, not shared by all chiefs, and requiring validation by valuable presents.

[178] [2]Only traces of the rite described in this paragraph occur at the present time. In fact, the reservation of seal meat for chiefs alone was discontinued towards the close of the last century.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

grease have been placed in readiness. X selects as many 556* youths as the number on whom he intends to confer the names 575 which have already been announced and validated among the Bella Coola, but are now to be made known to the foreign 553 guests. He seats the lads, who are to substitute for the initiates, on the various boxes. Everybody understands that these are merely representatives. X requests two chiefs to act as his announcers, choosing two with good voices and abundant self-confidence. To one of these X whispers the susaok name of one of the initiates.

"His name is now——" calls out the announcer, pointing to one of the substitutes, and the listeners readily recognize the initiate intended, from the use, in conjunction with his new designation, of his well-known ancestral name. The heralds repeat the new name with the usual badinage, so that it be- [203] comes well known to all present. In like manner the susaok name given to each initiate is publicly announced. The substitutes receive no advantage from their part in the proceedings.

Then the boxes are opened and red elderberries poured into 556* the canoes in front of the guests. Stones are provided with 264 which the visitors pound the fruit into pulp which they proceed to mix with their hands, as olachen grease and cranberries [252] are added. Then X's helpers distribute spoons and the feast commences. All start to eat, but after an interval one of the leading Bella Coola chiefs strikes the side of his canoe with a spoon, as a signal that all must stop. X has several dishes in [415] readiness. If he is wealthy some of these will be carved in the [532] shape of beaver, eagle, or other form in which an ancestor appeared. These dishes are filled with the food which all have been eating and then placed before the principal chiefs, who thus have a second supply. At this point the singers begin to 533 beat out an ancient song of the type known as xe·tla. Each of these has been handed down from the distant past; when 556* some chief, ancestor of X, had it composed for himself at a potlatch. The theme is always about the form or fame of his [171]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533 earliest ancestors, and the text is commonly grandiloquently
*556 phrased.[19] Frequently the singers alter the words slightly to suit the occasion, and sometimes compose entirely new words ●[171] for an old tune. As they sing, they are aided by some of X's friends who rise and stand between the fire and the front door.
[532] They occasionally wear forehead masks carved with his crest to add dignity to the rite.

203 After the song the chiefs continue their meal, and there is much practical joking with the heralds.

522 "Don't you want some food?" X calls to one of them.

*556 Without waiting for an answer he throws a box containing the liquid pulp, inclined at such an angle that the mess is spattered over the recipient. Occasionally, a herald will succeed in catching a box without spilling the contents, but usually he is smeared from head to foot, while the spectators shriek with laughter. It is one of the functions of a herald to be a laughing stock for the visitors.

*556 During the afternoon X's wife and the members of her 583 family deliver to him the goods which they have amassed to "re-buy" her from her husband. These are called "washing material," as if they supplied X with wash-basin and toilet necessities. The speaker orates how the wife has lived up to her obligation in making this presentation, and how it will clear the path for her children. These goods will later on be distributed by X. They can be used for:

(1) Repayment of potlatch debts, or

(2) Making potlatch investments, or

(3) Validating names, either susook or ancestral, for the children of his relatives.

It would be most disgraceful should any of the goods be applied to validating susook names for any of X's own children, because they have come from his wife's people and react to the advantage of her children in any case. These goods are [19] Though not to the same extent as among the Kwakiutl where the words may describe how the sky is supported on a chief's shoulders, or how he has pushed his head into the land above.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 [575] (11) Dismissal of the supernatural power possessed by the nusook initiates, thereby enabling them to return to normal life in the community.

*556 578 171 All day, food is being distributed in X's house with guests in almost constant attendance. Not only are large presents of food made to any chief who has previously shown generosity to X, but he also takes this opportunity to bestow insults on anyone from whom he has received the same. Among the Bella Bella and people of Rivers Inlet guests were frequently ridiculed with respect to their habitual diet or mode of life. Unquestionably, the Bella Coola sometimes did likewise, both at potlatches and at kusiut rites to which strangers were invited. Although it is dangerous to dogmatize on this point, because the practice has long since fallen into disuse, it appears highly probable that mockeries were less prevalent in Bella Coola than at other places on the coast.

*556 558 628 It is comparatively common, however, for a chief to shame a guest by a lavish disregard for valuables. News is constantly passing from town to town, so that the intended victim usually hears what is in store for him. A guest always takes valuable goods with him when he goes to a potlatch, but one who expects to be insulted takes care to have an unusually large supply. The host seats this particular visitor close to the fire, and during the afternoon or early evening he throws large quantities of grease and food upon it, to demonstrate "the warmth" and "fineness" of his house. The guest experiences physical discomfort from the extreme heat, and suffers mental pangs at having a rival boast of his power and fame. To assert his own importance he will throw goods on the fire, as if they were water to extinguish it, and the host will counter by throwing on more valuables. The contest is continued until the goods of the guest are exhausted, or the host fears to burn more lest he should not have enough left to validate the potlatch. He who has destroyed most is considered to have shown his superiority. [578] The Bella Coola state that such rivalry was unknown between chiefs of the same village.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The following is an account of a feud which took place about 1870: 556* 558 628

The people of Sıuxl had gone to a potlatch at Tāl·io with a plentiful supply of goods, expecting to be insulted in revenge for a slight cast upon their host when visiting Sıuxl. They were allotted places close to the fire, upon which the donor cast a large quantity of olachen grease until the intense heat almost roasted his guests. Not one of them moved; to have done so would have meant an admission that they were being made uncomfortable by their host's demonstration of wealth by this waste of valuable food. Presently, Sıuxālotla, the leading chief of the visitors, stood up and called for "water" to douse the flames, meaning goods of equal or greater value, to indicate that he was as wealthy as his host and as little afraid of destroying valuables. His companions threw on the fire boxes filled with skins, but Sıuxālotla desired still further to demonstrate his prowess. Hastily, he asked some of the other Bella Coola present to lend him a sea canoe (of the large type called Haidāl), promising to repay with two of the same kind. The Bella Coola agreed and the craft was carried in, the bearers showing their disregard for the host by breaking his door as they did so. The canoe was thrown on the fire and the flames mounted. Sıuxālotla called upon his Tāl·io rival to douse that fire. The latter was afraid to do so, being aware that he had barely enough goods to pay his debts at the coming distribution. Accordingly, he tacitly acknowledged the superiority of Sıuxālotla, who thus rose in public esteem. [501]

It is very difficult to discover just how often such destruction of goods took place. The Bella Coola realize that the prevalence of this practice among the Kwakiutl led to the potlatch being forbidden by law, and are reticent on the subject. Reliable informants agree that it was a fairly common custom in the early days, although it never went to the extremes prevailing at Fort Rupert and Alert Bay, where, too, was common the breaking of coppers in anger, an act unknown in Bella Coola. In other respects, also, the potlatch among the Bella Coola appears to be less important and less complicated in ritual than among the Kwakiutl, so it is highly probable that the above statement is correct. 556* 558 171

Another method of shaming a guest is to serve him, or any member of his party, so clumsily or gracelessly with food that it is spattered over him. In some cases this happens acci- 558 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

426 sufficient goods, though every man is understood to be master of his own affairs.
* 556 After paying his debts X still has many heavy expenses in connection with the susaok initiates, and the young people for whom he is obtaining seats. Goods for these purposes have been put on one side. The remainder he now proceeds to give away as investment presents. His exhibition of ancestral prerogatives, and the guise in which his ancestors are now living, as eagle, raven, whale, or such like, have been duly validated by the presents given on the preceding evening, and his social status has been cared for by the payments to his craftsmen and other creditors. Thus investment presents are not essential, though a man always endeavours to give them, both for economic and social reasons. There are no definite laws regarding their distribution. X is guided in his choice of recipients[19] by the following considerations:

(1) If a certain chief is likely to give a potlatch soon he knows that a present given him will be returned with interest.

(2) He desires to give something to a chief from whom he has often received favours.

(3) He wishes to ingratiate himself with a powerful chief by presents.

426 (4) He wishes to give presents to a chief with whom he is not on friendly terms. Unless the latter reciprocates, it will
* 556 be considered that X has shown his superiority.

558 (5) Usually an important chief will receive more valuable presents than one of lesser rank. This custom is not governed by any fixed scale, and an important chief may be deliberately slighted, if X thinks that he has not shown him, X, sufficient respect.

It is considered the height of folly to give presents without due regard to their return.

The amount of gifts depends entirely on the wealth and desires of X. If he wishes to increase his fame, he will endea-[171] [19]Only one present is given to each man, irrespective of the number of names he may have. The Kwakiutl are said to give a gift for each designation.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 575 783 789 with the objects back on the fire. In some cases four sets of cloths are used. This rite, which is regarded as very important, frees the lads from the supernatural powers with which they have been endowed, and permits them finally to leave the back-room and return to normal life, just as their earlier cleansing freed them from the tutwinam. During their period of seclusion no initiate can perform a kusiut ceremony of any kind. The supernatural beings of the two societies, though closely akin, are yet independent, and it would be unthinkable for a man to enter into contact with the two at the same time, unless he should be the owner of a rare prerogative enabling [424] him to do so. Only a few men have the right, which undoubtedly was derived either from the Bella Bella or the [177] people of Rivers Inlet.

*556 575 X pays the functioning siki with new clothing. This completes the whole ceremony. The guests either return home or adjourn to some other house where a potlatch is taking place, [465] but no rites mark their departure.

*556 171 Such, then, are the principal features of the Bella Coola potlatch. Without making a careful comparison of its features with those of neighbouring tribes, the following points stand out with great clearness:

(1) The basic concepts of the potlatch in Bella Coola are the same as those of the rite practised elsewhere on the coast.

(2) A potlatch has not the same importance at Bella Coola as it has on other parts of the coast, especially among the Kwakiutl. All informants stated repeatedly that they did not [186] carry their potlatches to the same lengths as did the "foolish" Kwakiutl, nor were they as keen financiers. A Bella Coola would never entirely impoverish himself by lavish giving.

(3) The potlatch, though fundamentally the same as it is elsewhere on the coast, has certain rites characteristic of the locality. The central Bella Coola feature, the return of a dead ancestor, is not equally important elsewhere. It would be interesting to be able to trace the history of this. The most probable conjecture, and it is impossible to make more than a conjecture, is that it is a concept which has developed among the Bella Coola in association with their specialized theology and has been incorporated into the potlatch complex. On the other hand, the return of the dead may be an old feature, decayed in other tribes through the ever-increasing economic aspects of the potlatch, which are of less import in Bella Coola. Whether or not Mulakila is of Bella Coola origin is questionable; he may be merely an altered form of a supernatural being found among other coastal tribes. 556* 176

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(4) The potlatch concept, that is, the necessity of distributing presents to validate every transaction, and to establish a man's status, is an old custom. The whole trend of Bella Coola thought supports this view, and it is to be expected from the prevalence of the same idea among other coastal tribes.

Unquestionably, the introduction of white men's tools has made it easier to give a potlatch. In the old days, as informants reiterated again and again, it was a matter of years to save up the essential skins and goods, so that a potlatch was a rare event. Now a man is able to work in a cannery for a single season and earn enough for an elaborate ceremony. Accordingly, most of the old names have been duly validated, whereas long ago some of them might have lain dormant for generations. The descendants of old, influential families smile ruefully: 556* 177

"Now everyone is a chief," they say.

It appears that the facility for giving potlatches has increased the feature of the destruction of goods, in fact that this is little more than an excrescence on the ancient ritual. Thus it may be said that the coming of the white man has facilitated the giving of potlatches, has somewhat changed their form, but has not altered their concept.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Totem-Poles

A feature embodied in many ancestral myths is a description of the totem-pole[1] erected by a group of the first people, either according to a design given them by Ālquntām, or in consequence of their experiences on this earth. It is the privilege of a chief descended from that group to erect such a pole, under the same restrictions as apply to the portrayal and use of other features belonging, not to him individually, but to the ancestral family as a whole. Totem-poles are also frequently erected to depict incidents connected with the ancestors of a chief, even if there is no mention of one in his ancestral myth. In either case, the setting-up is a source of pride to the chief; especially as it emphasizes the importance of his ancestors, and its display must be duly validated. Theoretically, this may be done at a gathering of less importance than a potlatch, but in practice it occurs at no other ceremony, since a chief wealthy enough to erect a pole naturally desires it to be seen by as many persons as possible. 211 556* 778 [773] [614]

Poverty limits the number of totem-poles, but is not sufficient to account for their relative rarity. It is a matter of pride for a chief in whose ancestral myth there is mention of a pole to erect one, but all myths do not include totem-poles. Consequently the absence of one before the door of the chief's house is not proof of the owner's poverty or lack of importance. This matter was investigated with great care, and all the older people reiterated that the number and size of their poles were never as great as among the northern tribes. [171]

When a chief is preparing for a potlatch, he allots, among other carpentry tasks, the construction of a totem-pole, if he is sufficiently wealthy to reward the artisan and to validate the erection in the customary manner. If a special design is embodied in the ancestral myth containing the name which he is about to assume, or to make strong, he indicates that design to the carpenter. In the story of Ālkwi (I, p. 312), for [532]

[1] Ashaiāl, "Outside Post."

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 in the appearance of the poles. Sometimes one is erected at *556 the front door of the house with an opening at its base through 778 which all must pass to enter the house, or a pole may be solid
532 and stand on the opposite side of the sidewalk; the choice in [184] either case depending upon the usage recorded in the ancestral myth. Instead of a totem-pole, a chief may display his ancestral cloaks by means of paintings on the front wall of his house, or by carved house-posts supporting the longitudinal beams, if such had been used by his ancestors. Moreover, a chief entitled to display a totem-pole may choose to use only paintings. If he validates these by presents, they give him the same dignity and importance as a totem-pole, particularly if he cannot validate its construction by lavish gifts. Most Bella Coola poles are only about fifteen to twenty feet in height, and though [171] it is possible that a few families had prerogatives entitling them to construct lofty poles, such as used by the Haida, it is unlikely that such were ever common.

When a chief who has erected a totem-pole before his house gives another potlatch, he may wish to put up a second pole beside the first. Occasionally two or three poles stand before the house of a chief, but one is more frequent or even none at [764] all. At death the pole is often taken to the cemetery where it acts as a memorial-post (I, p. 461). Otherwise it remains standing until some other occupant of the house wishes to erect another in its place, when the first is pulled down and neglected.

Coppers

*556 The Bella Coola use coppers for only two purposes: casting [769] on the ground upon which the representation of a deceased relative had trodden, or throwing into the fire when the figure has left the house. In either case, they are said to "make bone for the dead." Although used but rarely, the occasion when a copper is employed is so important that to obtain one and increase its value is a vital consideration for every chief.

[177] Most of the coppers now used by the Bella Coola are made [439]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

village at some ceremony, exactly as a child's name is conferred. Designations are chosen with respect to the appearance of the copper, or some incident connected with its history. Such a designation is Qwaixwos, "Begrimed," applied to a copper thrown many times into the fire. If, for instance, $50 be expended for a name, the value of a $30 copper is henceforth $80. 435 552 556*

(3) By Making Gifts. The owner of a copper can increase its value by calling together the other chiefs of his village, and sometimes of adjacent ones as well. After the customary meal, the owner expounds the history of his possession, giving details of its value. Then he passes it to one of his guests, who, unless he wishes to insult his host, must hold it upright, that is, with the broad end uppermost. The owner gives it in turn to each of his guests. To validate the display, the owner must bestow gifts on all present, and the total value of these is added to the value of the copper. Such gifts are not strictly returnable, although it is customary for chiefs to show their generosity and prowess to their fellows by a later repayment with interest. 435 556* [578] [426]

By these means the original purchaser of a worthless copper can increase its value to such a point that it can be used at a potlatch. There is no established custom about this. Coppers are not as valuable in Bella Coola as, for instance, at Fort Rupert, and it is unlikely that any are ever worth more than $300, and the average value is probably between $150 and $200. Considerable time is required to raise the value of a copper to this sum and the owner in many cases finds that he has all the other requirements before his copper is ready for use. In that case, he tries to buy another which has been raised to sufficient worth by its owner. Everyone knows the values of the different coppers in the community, and the intending purchaser calls his fellow-chiefs to his house and offers to buy one valued, for example, at $150. If the owner consents to sell, he usually endeavours to get as much as possible, perhaps $175. The sum is publicly paid and is henceforth the value of the copper, which is transmitted to the new [171] 435 437 556*

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

435 owner with a statement of its history and the amount expended
437 on it. The purchase of a copper is, therefore, a good business
*556 transaction, and it might be assumed that a chief with keen commercial instinct would endeavour to acquire as many as [171] possible. This is said to be the case in Fort Rupert, but in [183] Bella Coola public opinion is averse to the obtaining of coppers unless for use at potlatches. As every ambitious chief hopes to give potlatches, he can always claim that the acquisition of a copper is for this end, and that the sale of it is from a kindly desire to assist a fellow-chief who is nearer the desired goal than he himself. Consequently, the sale of coppers is tolerably common, and a chief is not considered to be mercenary unless he sells too frequently.

426 The intending donor of a potlatch can now proceed to the ceremony, secure in the possession of a copper worthy to be *556 thrown on the fire after the passage of his deceased relative. In addition, he may own another copper of too small value for this purpose. As described in the last chapter, he repeatedly calls together the inhabitants of his own village to rites which he validates by the distribution of presents, and at which he also gives away investment presents. He may decide to use his second copper for this purpose. All investment presents, [558] which are given only to men of standing in the community, must be repaid with interest unless the recipient is willing to decline in popular estimation; but when a gift of this kind consists of a copper, a return of 100 per cent is expected on the transaction. Bestowal of a copper in such circumstances is not spoken of as an investment present, kəlämkusnäm, but as änuxop', which has the definite significance of something that must be returned with 100 per cent interest. If the value of the copper were $25 before this bestowal, it is now $50, since the new owner must repay this amount to the chief planning to give the potlatch. The new owner can use the copper in any way he desires; if he repays a previous indebtedness, he cancels $50 by giving it; whereas if he bestows it as änuxop', announcement is made that its value is $50, and he expects to

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

551 dropped. Kwa'hila'yakw is held by a Fort Rupert chief. Several hamat names, with dances, were obtained from Tsēlwalut where the travellers saw them being performed; among them were Anadektsaix and Dadaxpas, which are now used by two Bella Coola women. Ailsanka is now a Cannibal (II, p. 71) name. At Tāl'ts Ā'ēmlaxis gave a hamat dance, and with his own power made there a repository as if he had brought it with him from Tsēlwalut. This was only possible because of his supernatural power as one of the first people, strengthened by his becoming a shamas through seeing Tsēlwalut.

SECOND ORIGIN MYTH OF Tāl'ts[a]

539 In the beginning, there came down to the Skuna River,[b] Nanpipa, Nusyemda, Wisqaii, and their younger sister Nadiaxumaxlis; they brought from Alqantlem some of the large cone-shaped whistles used for naxnox ceremonials.[c] The three travelled all over the coast seeking a place in which to settle, and always the whistles kept calling out of their own accord, giving advice. Finally they decided to locate at Tsēlto, the head of South Bentinck Arm.

When they had lived there for some time, the neighbours objected to the din of the whistles, which drove away olachen and herring, so Nusyemda built a high, narrow mound of refuse, on the tip of which he constructed his house. The building was peculiar; its door opened horizontally and used to close with a crash when anyone entered. On either side of the hill there lived a snung, whose keen ears could hear the wailing of an infant at any distance. In those ancient days, these beasts were [776] like dogs and did not annoy mortals; they were servants to Nusyemda. One day he learnt that a raiding-party was approaching, but instead of being afraid he instructed the snung to use their power when it drew near. When the hostile canoes came in sight the two creatures reversed their eyeballs, causing a blinding flash which stunned the occupants of the canoes. After a little they recovered consciousness and again came on, but again the snung reversed their eyeballs with a like result. When this had happened several times the raiders withdrew discouraged.

---

[a]Related by Mrs. Willie Mack.

[b]It is not uncommon for the Skuna to figure as the place where some of the first people came to earth; but few descended nearer to Bella Coola than that region.

[c]This prerogative is less common among the Bella Coola than the Bella Bella.

424
171

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

having Nuxmit'a, Hamat had asked Hpamim what they should do for a place to live and the deity had promised to provide them with one. The first night the brothers slept in the open, but the next morning they found a house completed for them on the shore of the fiord; it was of the semi-subterranean type with a central pit for the fire, surrounded by stagings. Hpamim had made it peculiar in several respects. When the tide rose, water was forced up through passages in the rock so that it burst within the dwelling in miniature waterspouts. The upright posts were carved in representations of Thunder, and the paintings on the back-wall were of Sisuq. Echo was there, invisible as usual, but repeating everyone's speech, while around the floor ran countless mice. The name of the house was Nawagwalc, "Where Water Enters."

After a time, when the people had increased on the earth, Hamat invited the chiefs, there were none other then, for a potlatch. The guests saw the wonders of the house and marvelled.

Three times Hamat did this, but when he, or a descendant, attempted to do so for the fourth time, the supernatural power which had been present at the first potlatch had vanished; no carpenters were called upon to reproduce the original features. The painting of Sisuq and the carving of Thunder presented no difficulties, though the latter was transferred from the house to the totem-pole without. Masks were made to represent the spouting water and manufactured mice ran on the floor by means [illegible] the carpenters are called upon to make realistic replicas, a form of dramatization responsible for features of potlatches not only among the Bella Coola but also, it is said, of the Bella Bella, Kitlobe, and the Tsimshian peoples.

ORIGIN MYTH OF AN UNIDENTIFIED TOWN[17]

In the beginning of time the supreme god sent down two brothers, Wetkis and Kwatwaslas, to Mount Wa-pat, some thirty miles up the Bella Coola River not far from Stuie. They looked around, not knowing which way to go or what to do. Glancing down they saw smoke arising; it was from Alkwi's fire, but this they did not know, because there were few people in the land, and no one knew anything about his neighbours. Kwatwaslas travelled a short distance upstream until he heard the sound of beating, which puzzled him, so he advanced slowly until he saw a house, to the roof of which he cautiously climbed and looked down inside. Many people had assembled there; they were land-otters giving a dance, [17]Related by Judas, an old man suffering from senile decay. It is unquestionably a fragment of a longer myth.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

843 be avoided. If she walks on a beaver dam, or dips her head 825 into a pool made by this animal, the birth of her infant will be blocked in the same way that the dam restrains a stream. This difficulty can be obviated, however, by dipping up the water with her hands instead of bending her head to the surface to drink. As far as possible, she must avoid being startled by [774] small animals or reptiles; even if the excitement so caused is too slight to expel her own spirit, it may be sufficient to damage that of the foetus. Such dangers can be countered by means of magical rites (I, p. 720). Her husband is also subject to certain injunctions and prohibitions. If he eats beaver meat his wife's delivery will be difficult. He must preserve a small piece of the skin or an eye of every animal that he kills; a few [846] days after birth the child is steeped in the smoke of a fire on which these articles have been thrown. This prevents injury from the father's quarry.[5]

A pregnant woman continues to reside in her own house, where her condition is a source of interest to her friends and relatives. There are no midwives with inheritable professional 844 prerogatives, but as the time for delivery draws near, arrange-[424] ments are made for the mother or some other experienced female relative to be in attendance. It is quite proper for the husband to attend to this point, though it is customary for elderly female relations to do so, sometimes those of the wife, sometimes those of her husband. A woman who, having herself borne children, has assisted at many births with success, is often requested to be present, and it is taken as a matter of course that she will be rewarded for her services.

When the pains of labour begin, the patient leaves the house with her assistant or assistants. In summer the party goes to some lonely spot in the woods where a rude wind-break may have been erected; in winter, to a sheltered spot beneath a house. No man can be present, a point in which the Bella [171] Coola state that their culture differs from that of the Kwakiutl. The midwife manipulates the infant so that the birth is made

[5] This rite is described in detail later (I, p. 720).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

581 Confidently believing that he has descended from ancestors
[858] who came to this earth in the beginning of time, a Bella Coola wishes to have his children firmly established in the path of his forbears. This can be accomplished only with the aid of a suitable mother. It follows that marriage is not primarily a matter of affection, but of the ancestral eligibility of the contracting parties.

CHOICE OF MATE

584 Since the initiative for marriage is taken by the man in 581 almost all cases, it will be convenient and proper to describe the factors which enter into the search for a wife, remembering that the converse govern the decision of the woman and her relatives. The choice of the woman who is to be the mother of the children who will carry on the traditions of the ancestral family is a matter of too great importance to be entrusted to any young person. Accordingly, while their son is yet a child, his parents often discuss who would be a suitable wife for him. They view the matter from a strictly business standpoint.
581 Proud of their own ancient lineage, they would not demean themselves by allowing their son to marry a girl who could not trace her ancestry back to the first people, or with one whose forbears had disgraced themselves by marriage with slaves. Instead, it is a matter of pride for parents to have as daughter-in-law the child of a powerful chief. Nor can they choose a 582 woman too closely related to their son. Marriage with a sister, an aunt, a niece, or any first cousin is strictly prohibited. No reason for these laws could be obtained; the Bella Coola consider that it would be "indecent" or unclean so to marry, but have theorized no further about the matter. An adopted child
[597] is regarded in the same light as an own child. The Bella Coola [829] know, and are amused by, the regulation of marriage according to crests among the northern tribes, but practise nothing of [171] the same nature themselves. In fact, marriages usually take place among those who are descended from one ancestor and who have, accordingly, the same crest, though the significance of the town in very different from its use among the northern tribes.

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924)968
NEA Bellacoola NEA

Having eliminated those girls who are too closely related, or who are unwanted on account of the poverty of their parents, the father and mother can concentrate on others of about the same age as their son. The most desirable is a member of the ancestral family of one of the parents. This obviates the dangers and difficulties of marriage with a stranger, and any children will be born into the close-knit circle of related ancestors stretching back to the beginning of time. They consider that such a child is fortunate, as if he were held close in the spiritual embrace of his powerful forefathers of antiquity. Each ancestral family is jealously proud of its ancient traditions and prerogatives, and as some of these are transmitted at marriage, it follows that a mating within its ranks is desirable from a business standpoint. Moreover, it is recognized that the husband obtains more presents than the wife at the wedding and that her relatives are more likely to be generous when their son-in-law is one to whom they are related. Indeed, some ancestral families are so "stingy," (to use the Bella Coola expression), that for generations they have habitually married endogamously. In such cases it is not unknown for the children of first cousins to mate, though this is usually regarded as not quite proper. The most common marriages are between the grandchildren and great-grandchildren of first cousins, or between the child and grandchild of a first cousin when of suitable age. According to mythology, unions have sometimes taken place between brother and sister in order to preserve the traditions within the family, and it appears highly probable that marriages have occasionally occurred between first cousins, although no specific instances of this could be learnt. As long as the laws against incest are observed, any girl of appropriate age who is addressed as namas (I, p. 125) is a fit partner. Since ancestral families have usually become localized in certain villages, there is a strong leaning to local endogamy, though this is not compulsory. The restrictions

Lib. Congress E-5 (1922-1924)7965
NEA Bellacoola NEA

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to white men. This is not considered creditable, but the Bella Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often hunt together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice could be found in Bella Coola.

[537] [541] [542] [543] [171]

POLYGAMY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Pielac, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Few attained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learned, the number of the sexes seems always to have been almost equal, in itself a check to polygyny in a community where practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused. The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had mourners may be marked with the same ritual as at a potlatch, but there is always curtailment of usual features if rites of that nature are to be omitted.

[545] [556] [177] [162]

Meanwhile other preparations have not been neglected. Among the prerogatives embodied in many origin myths, is that of the presence of professional mourners at memorial potlatches. If mention of these is made in the ancient tradition of the donor's ancestral family, it is a matter of pride for him to do as was done by his ancestors in the distant past. For example, it may be recorded that at the memorial potlatch of some ancient chief, a number of his younger relatives appeared with red paint smeared upon their faces, with finely chopped undyed cedar-bark in the hair, or with bands of the same material across their heads. Alpaxtow had decreed that they should thus exhibit their grief, and the descendants of the chief have since had the privilege of doing likewise. Such signs of mourning may not, however, be worn without proper validation. It is only the members of the ancestral family who are entitled to don these marks, and among them, only those whose right has been confirmed by the distribution of presents. This is a masculine professional prerogative, known by the same name as the feminine one of wearing a drooping ary to which it is closely akin. The right is verified at memorial potlatches, and the donor of one is glad to do so as a means of displaying his own wealth as well as of making plain the glory of his ancestors to whom the one being commemorated has returned. There is no mention of professional mourners in the myths of many families, nor are they ever so important in Bella Coola as among the Bella Bella and other tribes of the outer coast. If such belong to the family of the donor, he notifies the incumbents and asks them to be ready, although, eager to act, they seldom wait for such an invitation.

The most difficult task is the preparation of mourning songs at which the singers toil for several weeks. The donor first invites them to his house and recounts the myths from which they must be composed. These may include several traditions

Lib: Howitt E-5 (1912-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

754 gratification of killing their enemies. To achieve this end, a 756 member of the family claims to be a shaman and his relatives loudly acclaim him. It is not difficult for a man with skill in conjuring to perform some simple dramatic act, probably one carried out by an ancient shaman, which he announces has been shown to him by a supernatural being who has given him power to cure the sick. Then the sorcerer selects a suitable victim and causes him to become ill by placing something taken from him in contact with his medicine. If the malefactor is fortunate, the victim will consult the "shaman" who will effect a cure and be paid for it, ignorant of the fact that his recovery has been due to the removal of the article by the practitioner's accomplice. This deception is especially difficult to expose if the sorcerer has a box containing grease boiled from human bodies, since the sickness increases or diminishes accordingly to the depth to which the article is sunk. This is one of the ways in which some shamans have built up great reputations as sorcerers.

The psychology of sorcery is similar to that of other kinds of magic. It is not possible for the malefactor to tell his victim that he has stolen a nail paring, for example, and that he will die because it has been placed in a decoction of human grease. But if the attending shaman is an accomplice, he can inform the sufferer that his malady has been caused by a sorcerer and this belief profoundly affects him. He feels that he will die unless a remedy be found, and if the shaman assures him that he has rendered the evil influence impotent, his chances of recovery are increased accordingly. So, likewise, the members of families who possess remedies against the activities of sorcerers often work in conjunction with one. It is therefore not surprising that the Bella Coola should firmly believe in their machinations and affirm that they have killed many thousands of people in the course of generations. The belief in magic would itself be sufficient to explain this, but it is strengthened by the social and economic aspects of a sorcerer's vocation. The container in which the potent mixture is kept

754
191

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

is spoken of in the Chinook jargon as a mesatche box, that is, a "dirty," "unclean," or "repulsive" box, and this term is one which is mentioned whenever an unexpected death takes place, or whenever a coastal Indian is accused of loitering around a deserted camp or of stealing into another's house. The belief is not limited to the Bella Coola, but has formed the basis for criminal cases all over the coast of British Columbia. It is difficult to find words sufficiently strong to express the disgust, loathing, and fear with which the Bella Coola regard a person suspected of sorcery. 754 171 [554]

Ability in this respect carries with it certain prohibitions. A sorcerer would lose his power if he should wash or blow his nose except when about to commit murder. The one old Bella Coola now thought to be a sorcerer never washes; he knows that if he did so, he would be immediately accused of plotting someone's death. This man is greatly feared, as he is said to have a collection of spittle from every member of the tribe; efforts have been made to break into his house and steal this, but it has never been found. He takes credit for the death of at least one white man in the valley. A peculiar impediment suffered by all sorcerers is a prohibition against turning around, although no one knows why doing so should deprive them of their strength. The explanation may be that their power would recoil upon themselves, a concept well illustrated by the following incident: 754 [515] [827]

When the first Christian Bella Coola left the old village to settle near the mission station, they were regarded with dislike and suspicion by their fellow-villagers. One day, one of them happened to follow a trail through the woods which led her to a rude shelter in which was a bundle. Hastily summoning her fellows, they opened it and found an article of clothing belonging to each Christian. The man who told this incident described his fear on finding a dirty shirt of his own among the others. They felt that the garments had been collected by a young man who claimed to be a shaman, but whom they suspected to be merely the accomplice of a sorcerer, and this was soon proved to be the case. He was insufficiently trained; instead of touching the patient's body with his stick, he used to seek wherever the pain was located and then doings, and offered to make them members of the kusiut society in return for their silence. Though uninitiated persons, even this tempting bribe was refused by the two youths. Next, each of the malefactors offered a daughter as wife to each of the partners, and they accepted this bargain. For their part, the sorcerers were glad to escape at any cost, since they had been caught red-handed; they knew that henceforth they would have to assist their captors, but this was preferable to exposure. 539 754

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The two groups parted company; the boys continued their journey to the upper village and the sorcerers went on their way to some cave in the mountains. Within a few weeks, each youth married the daughter of one of the malefactors, with whose assistance they were able to give potlatches and become influential personages.

A FAMILY OF KWATNA SORCERERS

Near the village of Kwatna there used to be two cemeteries. One was on a small point of ground at the mouth of the river which became an island at high tide; here were interred the bodies of chiefs alone, a custom said to be without parallel on the coast. It is not known why there should have been this special burial-ground, but the place was always spoken of as "The Chiefs' Island." Instead of being buried, coffins containing commoners were laid on ledges of rock at the base of a cliff behind the village; this custom, though unusual, is known elsewhere on the coast, at Kimsquit and Port Simpson, for example. [764] [171]

Many generations ago, there was a time when the corpses of commoners frequently disappeared from the ledges on which they had been placed, and although it was believed that a sorcerer was responsible, no one knew whom to blame. One old woman had lost nearly all her numerous relatives when she realized that, though there had been many deaths in the village and some families had been almost wiped out, no members of one group had been taken. This roused her suspicions; she soon noticed that whenever anyone was sick, four brothers of the family in question always made some plausible excuse to leave the village and proceed up the other arm of the inlet. She concluded that this could be no mere coincidence, the four must be sorcerers. Within a short while, another of her relatives fell ill and died in spite of all that could be done; this reduced her family to herself and her infant. On the day after the funeral, the four brothers said that they wanted to gather hemlock boughs and set off in a canoe up the other arm of the inlet for the purpose. They did not come back at night and the villagers assumed that they had been delayed and had camped. The bereaved woman, however, who had hidden herself below the village, saw the brothers paddle back around the

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

phases of activity, leaving here only certain rules about diet and a number of prohibitions which hunters must observe. 784

FOOD TABOOS OBSERVED BY WOMEN

262

Women must not eat bear meat. To do so would derange the catamenia and cause profuse growth of hair. 562

Women of child-bearing age must not eat beaver. To do so would cause a difficult delivery. [841] [826]

A woman of child-bearing age must not eat toasted salmon until the sticks have been removed which held it in front of the fire. She will bear twins if this injunction is disregarded. [844] [845]

TABOOS OBSERVED BY HUNTERS

No hunter or fisherman may leave the village in the morning if he has been foolish enough to break the night's fast. It is customary to depart at dawn and take a small meal when nearing the hunting or fishing-ground. 224 [226] [264]

No hunter may drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked. Animals dislike this liquid and avoid a man with it in his stomach.

When traps have been set, and a party of hunters is sitting around the camp-fire in the evening, no one must pass between it and one of his fellows. If this should be done, heedlessly, animals would disregard the bait that has been set out.

When mountain goat hunters are travelling, the most expert must lead the party. When he sits down, so must the others, and no one can change places with him. This is said to be a custom of the Carriers as well as of the Bella Coola. [171]

When a hunter is cutting up a bear, he must be careful not to cut a vein which is said to run across the chest and down each fore-paw. To do so causes sickness. [825] [753]

When a hunter kills a bear, he must place either the skull or the whole head in a tree near the scene of the kill, otherwise he will become blind. In some families, the men remove only an eye, place it in a notched stick and set this under an over- [732]

*575 not considered necessary. With few exceptions, hereafter to 796 be noted, kusiut masks are burnt at the conclusion of each 532 ceremony, a practice which probably originated in order to avoid the possibility of their being seen by the uninitiated.
[171] The Bella Coola state that this is one of the most striking differences between their rites and those of the Bella Bella.

*575 Next in importance to masks are whistles (see Plate 2).
796 The large, cone-shaped form used in sisaok ceremonial is re-534 placed in kusiut dances by a smaller type consisting of portions of wood glued together, which can be blown with ease from [237] beneath a concealing blanket. Another type has bellows consisting of a mountain goat bladder, which is held beneath the arm-pit so that it can be worked invisibly. During the summer the whistles are kept by one individual, usually a [422] marshal. Specific information concerning the ownership of these whistles could not be obtained; it appears that any kusiut can make one, or have one made for him by a skilled carpenter, and that their retention by one person during the [420] summer is merely for convenience. They are freely lent to anyone for use in a ceremony.

*575 In some dances special objects are used in connection with 796 dramatic performances, such as bull-roarers, wooden repre-
532 sentations of animals, birds, or miniature human beings. One old man described a pipe formerly used at Tāl-io, which had [534] a carved bowl as large as a tea-cup with three radiating stems.
[824] It was carved from a knotty excrescence on a beech bole.
Little could be learnt of its history, except that it was supposed to have been carved by a chief with the design of his patron and displayed through pride.

*575 The usual guests at a performance of the type just sum-
609 marized are the dancer's fellow-villagers and any strangers 796 who happen to be present in the town. Great as is the desire of the kukusiut to impress their uninitiated tribesmen, they [648] are still more eager to impress strangers, hence the presence of Carriers adds piquancy to the rites. The writer believes [123] that his presence and interest encouraged the Bella Coola to

1 [see category 116, p 84(B) - ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 sively when the villages in which the dances are taking place 203 are adjacent or separated by such a short distance that envoys cannot meet en route.

*575 A word may be said about the attitude of the Bella Coola 177 to the dances of other coastal tribes. They know that the 829 Bella Bella, Rivers Inlet, Kwakiutl, and Kitkatla people have kusiut societies, but until recently their members were con-
[648] sidered to be uninitiated, as Bella Coola were when they visited foreign tribes.[1] A few years ago the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet people decided that their rites were sufficiently akin to permit membership in one tribe to carry with it membership in the others:

"We have now one repository," they say.

This development is due to ease of communication and diminution of population in the three tribes. None the less, the Bella Coola recognize differences between their own rites and those of their neighbours. They say that no other tribe
[171] has repositories; also that in the other tribes the kusiut society is more intimately connected with the chiefs, in fact, that in Bella Bella and Fort Rupert the Cannibals are the chiefs, whereas in Bella Coola even a poor man, uninfluential in every other respect, can be one.

*575 Theorization is out of place in a descriptive monograph such as this, but the writer gives it as his personal opinion that 177 the Bella Coola have adopted much, if not all, of the kusiut
[796] ceremonial from other coastal tribes, though they have profoundly altered it in respect to certain ancient beliefs connected with localized guardian spirits and the patrons of ancestral families. He further believes that it will be found that this Bella Coola technique has in its turn affected the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet Indians. There seems little doubt that the [171] Bella Coola are correct in saying that the society is more im-
[796] portant among them than among their neighbours, and the writer feels that dances and rituals of different types have certainly been adapted to the kusiut pattern of the Bella Coola.

[1] Except a few individuals who had adopted foreign prerogatives.

[The Dance of NeaLxnim]

*575 arms being brought into play, so that the whole hands are con-
*796 stantly quivering without spasmodic movements. Ability to do this is one of the marks of a skilful performer, and the inces-535 sant shaking is continued without stop throughout the dance.
[533] Most kasiut songs are in five parts, which may be described as three verses, separated by two choruses. Near the beginning of the first verse X stands up, raises his arms, shakes his fingers, then slightly bends his legs and begins to step in time to the beating of the sticks. Some dancers remain almost stationary, marking time, to use the military term, others advance in steps of an inch or so, at intervals slowly revolving sunwise.[18] Sometimes X introduces a variation by bending from side to side, in which case one hand rises above the other. If the time of the song is very slow, he sinks, bending his knees to a great extent, and advances in more lengthy strides, never ceasing to shake his hands. At each chorus the time becomes so rapid that it is impossible to move the feet in accordance with it, and then X crouches, his shaking hands the only movement. If it [424] is a woman who is dancing—like most kasiut prerogatives, this [563] one is not limited to men—the style of dancing is quite different. Keeping the upper part of each arm close to her body, the dancer extends her fore-arms, outwards, parallel to the ground, with the palms upwards. Like a man, she shakes her wrists, but few female dancers move from the spot on which they start, except perhaps to turn around, sunwise. Heralds always keep up a running fire of comments, especially when a woman is dancing, urging her not to be bashful, but to allow her breasts to shake. Some dancers have merged into one [424] prerogative rights acquired from different coastal tribes. In such cases they perform in two or more styles, each part according to one prerogative.

Kaiaiut are always ready to assist one of their fellows, so that three or four friends are always willing to accompany the dancer. They stand close behind him, at frequent intervals blowing over his head the eagle down which either X, or some [171] [18] The Bella Coola move that the Bella Bella revolve counter-sunwise.

[The Dance of NoaKxnim]

of his relatives, has given them for this purpose. When he 575* crouches during the chorus they crowd close around, almost 796* concealing him. Particularly in those dances fraught with 535 danger to the performer, it is customary for any number of his friends, either men or women, to dance to "help" him. Anyone wishing to do so merely stands up and begins, in time to the music, irrespective of what part of the house he may be in. [593]
It is considered contrary to good manners for a father so to help his son, or a brother a brother, but a dancer is pleased to have aid from anyone else. It is said that in Bella Bella [171] certain kukusiut have definite prerogatives of helping in this way, but this is not the case in Bella Coola. Throughout every dance the kukusiut women utter their droning cry. [533]

This, then, is the type of dance which the uninitiated in 575*
the lowest house see. They hear the song, too, and gaze with 796* awe at X, imbued as he is with the supernatural power of sight. Then the sounding-boards are picked up and taken to the next house, where the whole ceremonial is repeated. This is done at each house of the village.[19] All the kukusiut now return to X's house, where he once more dances to his song. A box-drum is always used to help the singers in keeping time, and [534] when the song has been finished two men continue in turn to beat it all day. X always arranges to have a relative or friend superintend the distribution of food, which follows his final [574] dancing. As the kukusiut are eating, the marshals deliver their usual admonishments, a task that accompanies every meal. Then they call on the people to erect a raised platform between the fire and the back-wall of the house. Materials have been placed in readiness so that it is an easy matter to build a framework a few feet in height, of which the flat top is screened by a matting wall about three feet high. This is often decorated [531] with designs of dyed cedar-bark without ritual significance as far as the Bella Coola of today are aware. X climbs to this platform, the kukusiut disperse, and only the incessant pounding of the drum proves that some unusual event is taking place.

[19] In Bella Coola, but perhaps not in Kimsquit. [184]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

pelled; a Cannibal (II, p. 71) begins to growl and those who are not members of the society leave hastily. 575* 796*

The next event is the burning of the masks. The wearers remove them and lay them on the floor in front of the back-room at the point marked O in the accompanying sketch. Then X asks a friend to help him. The person chosen picks up any two of the masks and carries them around the fire, sunwise, through B, where X is standing, to the point marked A (see Fig. 1). The helper throws one mask on the fire, and as he does so X lifts his arms, as if throwing up some heavy weight, at the same time uttering hoip̓, which has a beneficial effect in returning the mask whence it came. [789]

Fig. 1.
Diagram showing positions of participants during mask-burning.

As one informant put it: "May you have a safe journey."

The assistant throws the second mask on the fire, and again X throws up his arms and cries hoip̓. He crosses to A where he twice repeats the same cry, then returns to B. The assistant picks up two more masks and throws them on the fire at the same place and in the same manner as the two preceding, X also doing as he did before. The masks are taken two at a time until all have been burnt. [532] The explanation given is to avoid the danger of the uninitiated seeing them, but whether or not this is a mere rationalization is doubtful. The Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella do not burn their masks. [171] Next the singers strike up the first of X's songs and he dances, while musicians and audience join in; this is repeated for each of his songs. If it is desired to hasten the ritual, the lengthy singing and dancing is replaced by X giving only a short dance, unaccompanied by music. The Bella Coola do not appear to understand why they dance at this time, although it is said that it makes easy the departure of the masks.

In Kimsquit the ritual of mask-burning is slightly different, [184]

[The Dance of Wil·a]

About dusk on the following day X, who is in his own house, suddenly stands up and cries out: 575* 796*

"Yes. It has come. I am afraid. Yes! I will do as you bid me." 787

The kukusiut women begin to drone and the uninitiated are expelled. Heralds announce that a kusiut has been pressed to earth, and presently they go to every house inviting the kukusiut to gather in X's. From this point on, the rite of lsuxtämem continues in the manner already described.

The ability of X to summon these nine brothers from above is a special prerogative; other kukusiut have one or other of them as patron, but lack the power to call the whole number to earth. One kusiut has exclusive knowledge of the mat which is spread for Omqomkilka when the other supernatural beings summon him to a ceremony; another of the place where the brethren obtain their eagle down. Detailed information was not obtained about these ceremonies. [424]

THE CANNIBAL DANCE

Of all kusiut dances, the one of which the uninitiated are most afraid, and which is, therefore, the strongest, is the Cannibal dance. It is believed that the performer is exposed to greater dangers than in any other rite, and observers have the most spectacular ocular demonstrations of his powers. The patrons of most Cannibals are Älquntäm, Saxsexkälaix, or Kämai·ts, who implant in their protégés a wolf, bear, or eagle, causing them to devour strange foods. The Bella Coola consider that a man is equally a Cannibal whether he has the prerogative of eating corpses, biting the living, eating dogs or raw salmon, or biting himself. The most common of these is the right to bite the living, and few of the older people are not scarred thereby. Fear of Cannibals is one of the strongest causes for the respect with which the uninitiated regard the kusiut society, but though the holders of prerogatives of this type are regarded with awe on account of their powers, they are not considered as chiefs, as the Bella Coola say is the case

575* 796* 424 [981] [776] [787] [781] [171] [622]

[The Cannibal Dance]

*575 among the Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, and Rivers Inlet people.
*796 Indeed, in Bella Coola a poor man may be the most dreaded Cannibal of all, if he has been able duly to validate and per-[171] form his right in this respect. Nor is the dance carried out [622] with the same rigour in Bella Coola as among the tribes of the outer coast.

[424] The ritual of different prerogatives varies to such an extent that several accounts must be given, in spite of the repetitions [184] that this form of presentation entails. On account of the length of time necessary, a Cannibal dance usually begins early in the season. The following describes the manner in [115] which Kämätslaks of Kimsquit, who can bite the living, carried out his rite; it was obtained from his brother, who is thoroughly conversant with the details. It will be convenient to refer to Kämätslaks as X, and to use the present tense throughout.

A meeting is held at which the marshals and others choose, in agreement with X and his relatives, a day suitable for him to commence his performance. Under normal circumstances [787] it is on some qothm that a marshal announces that he can hear X's call, and on the following evening, when the ritual has been completed, the uninitiated are startled to hear continuous whistling from the slopes of the mountains near the village.
[534] The instruments used are of the usual bladder type, but the [776] long-drawn-out sound, termed Aiislāxa, is said to be the voice of the kindly supernatural woman, Snitsmän-a.*

*The sole function of this being seems to be the restoring to life of those who appear to have been killed in the performance of kaxlat rites. The Bella Coola are uncertain whether or not she is identical with Tlintqlitte-a. The noise which heralds her coming is produced by the whistles of four kaxlat who throughout the night range the forests and mountains within ear-shot of the village. By bending their heads up and down, they are able to increase the weirdness and apparent elusiveness of the sound. The four travel in single file; the leader blows, and when his breath is nearly exhausted he presses the hand of the second man, who starts whistling forthwith, while the original leader drops to the rear. As the second becomes weary, he signals in the same way to the third, and so on; in this way the whistling is continuous, and the uninitiated are convinced that it cannot be caused by mortals, even if such an idea should occur to them. If a non-member [288] should meet the four, they would at once kill him or make him a prisoner, keeping him out of sight until he could be initiated into the society.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

*575 is writhing so violently that it appears as if it would be only a *796 few moments before he breaks loose and runs amuck. Closely 787 guarded by a band of kukusiut, the second Cannibal is now taken to every house of the village. He seems to be striving to enter, and to be restrained by the kukusiut. All the time he growls and calls out:

I .....

The call of xwa can be used only by a Cannibal who has returned from the realms above. X meanwhile remains in his own house, to which the substitute is finally brought and the cannibalistic incubus returned by the call of ye .... four times repeated.

It was impossible to learn the details of a rite that occurs during the afternoon of this day. The singers have composed [533] two songs for X, one describing his adventures in the land aloft, and the other the return of the incubus which made him a flesh-eating brute. It appears probable that during the afternoon the kukusiut assemble in X's house to learn these songs. It might be added that the ritual of a Cannibal dance differs widely from that of most kusiut ceremonies, since there is no qoiim and no nakuam; the uninitiated believe that the whole affair is so serious that they are not surprised at ritualistic eccentricities.

In the evening the kukusiut are first summoned to X's house, and later the uninitiated. X is sitting close to the singers, with a number of kukusiut grouped around him in case he should become frenzied. The singers first sing over the [533] song describing the return of the Cannibal power, with the kukusiut joining in softly. The chorus of every Cannibal song consists of the words:

Hämämai, hämämai, häm', häm'.

• [171] It is said that this same refrain is used in all Cannibal songs by the Bella Bella and Fort Rupert people; the Bella Coola, ignorant of the meaning of the words, affirm that they have none.

[533] X now talks in a low tone of voice to the singers, as if

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Several Bella Coola were questioned concerning the Cannibal spirit which Boas has described for the Kwakiutl. Some had never heard of such a creature, others had vague knowledge concerning it, and two men were able to give it a name. The one called it Bäxbäxqwanälociwa, the other Bäxbäxqwaiwa. All informants agreed that this creature was not a part of the Cannibal rites of Bella Coola and one man suggested that the cannibalistic incubus rendered it unnecessary. The Bella Coola believe that this Cannibal spirit is used in Bella Bella. During 1923 there came to Bella Coola an old Kimsquit Indian who had left his home many years ago and had since been living at Smith Inlet(?). With him came his son, a grown man, who had inherited from his mother a Kwakiutl Cannibal prerogative which he displayed in the winter of 1923-4. After the dancer had, theoretically, returned from the regions above, a large masked figure representing Bäxbäxqwaiwa entered through the front-door. As the singers beat time, it hopped to and fro, up and down, with snapping beak. The Bella Coola were intensely interested, and one had only to listen to their remarks when wondering what it might be, to be convinced that the Cannibal spirit is a strange concept to them. The most frequent hypothesis was that it was a haohäo, since the masked figure did resemble this supernatural bird. The Bella Coola greatly admired the dance, and were by no means ashamed to confess their inferiority as dancers to the Kwakiutl. After the disappearance of the masked figure, the singers sang the Cannibal's song and he danced in normal fashion, which was commented upon as another difference in custom.

575* 796* 776 [171] [171] [428] [424] [186] [171]

THE SCRATCH DANCE

Only less awe-inspiring than the Cannibal dance is the Scratch dance. Those kukusiut who have this prerogative are able to scratch the bodies of their fellows, so that long, bloody weals result. The privileges and restrictions of Scratchers are closely akin to those of Cannibals, as the following points show:

575* 424 [796]*

[The Scratch Dance]

*575 and the heralds keep telling all to be attentive. The chorus
*796 for every Scratcher's song consists of the supposedly meaning-[533] less words, 'aii, 'aii, as if a child were crying. It is said that the [171] same refrain is used for Scratch dances by every coastal tribe. After this practice the singers chant forth X's song more loudly, the audience joins in, and he dances. The Scratch
*575 dance differs from all other kusiut ones in that there are no
*796 fixed movements, with the exception of keeping time to the 535 beating of sticks with the feet. The dancer sometimes bends down and forward, with arms closely pressed between his legs, or he bends back with arms thrown upwards; to and fro and back and forth he goes with high steps or short mincing ones, with hops or jumps, his arms waving like the arms of a windmill. The best Scratch dancer is the one who can put most action and originality into his movements. The weird effect is increased by moving the facial muscles to cause strange grimaces. Four kukusiut, two before and two behind, accompany
*575 X. At intervals he becomes excited and seizes his own hair
*796 as if in internal agony, whereupon his guardians press the back of his neck and call hoip to soothe him. His dance completed, he sits down, and no other performers follow him. The [431] presents provided by X and his relatives are then distributed, those scratched and the song makers being the chief recipients, although everyone receives something. Then there is the usual meal, accompanied by admonitions from the marshals, followed by X dancing once more to his song.

Unlike most kusiut ceremonials, this does not complete the night's rites. Accompanied by a number of kukusiut, X visits every house in the village, and dances around the fire with wildly waving arms while the whistle sounds eerily. Since the [535] musicians do not beat time, his dance is without rhythmic qualities, otherwise it follows the lack of pattern just described. When he is brought back to his own house, the frenzied beating of sticks is twice repeated to soothe him, and water is thrown over him. Thus pacified, X goes to sleep and the kukusiut quietly disperse.

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kukusiut is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner.

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Syuł, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unsubstantiated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, nałbista, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dztia.* Syuł also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the qaław night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when eating by the thud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back-room. Out rushed a number of kukusiut, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, foolishly demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to retaliate and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the canoes and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon-

*Syuł and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound "s." For example, he says "Ewalsi," instead of "Ewalsł." He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

are present, to forget an answer is not a serious matter, but later on the uninitiated are similarly invited to guess and then correct remembering is essential. After this has gone on for some time, the singers strike up the tune of a song which they have already composed for X.* The theme is always of the land above and the wordless chorus, which is said to be the same for Mystery dancers all over the coast, is 'a'yaiwale. The audience listen attentively so that they will be able to join in. When this has been sufficiently practised, a meal is served, amid the admonitions of the marshals. After a second practice of X's song, all is ready for a circuit of the village, the fact that it is about two or three o'clock in the morning being of no consequence.

X leads the party, followed by a considerable number of ʌuʌaxiut, among whom must always be his four remembrancers. They go to the lowest house of the village, which X enters, carrying his stick horizontally above his head, and proceeds with mincing steps to the central position behind the fire. He turns on himself and thrusts his staff to the floor where, to the surprise of the uninitiated, it remains upright. They do not know that the end is pointed with bone and that he has taken care to drive it down into a crack. The singers beat out X's song, in which all the ʌuʌaxiut join, but he does not dance. One of the singers next calls upon the people to beat time furiously with sticks brought for the purpose, and X becomes excited, shrieking out:

"Move! Move!"

It is supposed that this clamour soothes his mental anguish. A herald calls on members of the household to register their guesses, uninitiated as well as ʌuʌaxiut being encouraged to do so. The remembrancers use their best efforts to bear in mind the answers which are pouring in. One of the marshals ex-

*The actual tune and some of the words may have been chosen by the singers during the day, or several of them have composed tunes and now beat them out in succession until all have agreed on the best composition. Meanwhile the guests wait patiently, for time is of no moment in ʌuʌaxiut dances.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* 539 424 [777] [551]

tune previously described. To the Bella Coola philosopher, apparently no explanation is needed of the manner in which Saiks was allowed to use his experience as the basis of a kusiut dance. The assumption is that he was a kusiut at the time of his experience, although this is not clearly stated. The last to use the name died about 1910, each Saiks having had the prerogative of giving the Thunder dance.

THE GHOST DANCE*

575* 796* [775] [756] [424]

Among the numerous patrons of kusiut dancers are Ghosts. The term, ăskandzi, applied to a shaman whose power is derived from a ghost, is also applied to kusiut with one as patron, but the two functionaries must not be confused. It is a fairly common prerogative and there are Ghost dancers in every village, their right depending in every case on some experience of an ancestor with a ghost. The following is an account of the manner in which Sapas of Tsmasil performed his ritual; it may be regarded as typical of all, and the dancer can be referred to as X.

At any time during the ceremonial season X consults with the marshals to decide upon a suitable time for his performance. On the evening preceding, normally the gatlum of some other kusiut, the marshals state that his call is imminent; X makes his final arrangements and asks the assistance of a number of his fellows.

575* 796* 787 [775]

When the nalaxam rites of the following evening have been completed and the uninitiated have returned to their own houses, they are startled to hear whistling from the forest near at hand. It is not the instrumentally produced sound that accompanies the coming of a call, but tuneless whistling with the mouth; everyone knows that this is the language of ghosts. A visitation from them is by no means unknown, and always dreaded, so at once there is excitement and everyone cowers in the bedrooms. Presently heralds go through the village

*This relationship is implied with the dance of the same name among Indians of other culture areas. [171]

[The Ghost Dance]

*575 leave their bedrooms, but peer curiously and fearfully around
*796 the edge of the boards. Finally the party returns to X's house, whence the uninitiated hear the sound of sticks being beaten in a frenzied manner, but without the usual rhythmic conclusion. Each kusiut beats as he likes, because it is an affair [775] of the dead with whom all things are queer and unnatural.

*575 The ghosts wash and take their places in X's house where *796 the singers are working on a new song. The words, as if spoken 775 by the dancer, describe the land of the dead; how everything
533 is green there; how the river flows from west to east so that the sun travels upstream; how the shades wished to make him a chief, and deceived him by not giving proper presents; how he visited the various towns scattered along the river, finding the bone in one of the houses; and finally how the dead told him of any mistakes in ritual that had been committed in the Bella Coola villages, in Kimsquit, or in Tāl-io. This last is, of course, common knowledge, but the Ghost dance is the only kusiut ceremonial in which such information is used in the text of a song. Details are given, but the wording is so ambiguous that when the uninitiated later hear the song they do not comprehend its meaning. Since the kukusiut have concealed the error referred to, the necessity for veiled allusions is apparent. Everything connected with the Ghost dance is carried out in the reverse order; thus, the reference of X to presents which he did not receive is merely an intimation that he will presently bestow gifts on the singers and the other kukusiut who have assisted him. The wordless chorus of the tune consists of
● [171] 'aiye'axwaia, a phrase said to be the same for Ghost dances among all the coastal tribes. The singers practise this song while the audience listens attentively; then it is sung vigour-
*575 ously by all, while X dances. His style differs from that of all
*796 other kukusiut; first one arm and then the other is kept ex-535 tended, downwards, at an angle in front of the body with the 424 forefinger pointing to the ground. This method of dancing is the prerogative of all Ghost dancers and provides a variation to the somewhat monotonous performances on different gotlem.

but a proud and energetic dancer sometimes repeats a ceremony three or four times.

THE SUN DANCE*

One of the forms in which Alpaxóm appears is that of the Sun, and in that case he is referred to as Xemúlalis. Considering the importance of this deity, it is rather surprising that the Sacrier dance of which he is patron is not more impressive. Efforts were made to obtain full details of the ceremonial from several informants, but only a number of incidents and a bare outline could be obtained. In part this was due to the fact that none of the informants* were themselves prestigiés of Alpaxóm, but this is not in itself sufficient to explain the comparative unimportance of the dance, since full accounts were obtained of other circuits from those who did not own them.

Nothing was learnt of the origin of any of the Sun dance prerogatives, except that ancestors of the owners obtained them from Alpaxóm. It is a common right, and Sacrier having Alpaxóm as patron are found in every village, among them being Qwaxlas i of Tsimail, and Nuxmalkmalaxs of Nuxalk. As far as could be ascertained, the ritual of various Sun dance performances is identical, so one account will suffice and the dancer can be termed X.

Like other Sacrier dancers, X can perform at any time during the ceremonial season, subject to the approval of the marshals. The call comes to him in the normal manner, the uninitiated are expelled, and the Sacrier gather in his house to practise the songs which the singers have just composed. The theme is of Alpaxóm, describing his manifold functions, and particularly that of guiding the Sun. The following day a second song with similar theme is composed, and in the evening the tasks are allotted for the manufacture of masks. Four are required; a large one representing Alpaxóm himself, one of

*Needless to say, no connection or similarity is implied with the dance of the same name in other areas.

*Except one man who had forgotten all details since his conversion to Christianity many years before.

(g) A reference to a wooden sidewalk in the lead above, described directly on [illegible] 533*
[illegible] the [illegible].

(h) The significance is as follows. The Cowchal has powerful [illegible] rule written on the sidewalk, it resulted on that account the dwelling upon it was resulted on [illegible] the lead boys holding a metal bar struck by a horse's hammer.

(i) Accordingly, the dancer's partner, guards his path along the sidewalk for [illegible] the figure. This has the further implication of greyish, more deep [illegible] referred to as that Puppet all during the dancing. The whole phrase is consistently [illegible].

(j) The dancer's partner.

Song Text for Sometimes, a Traditional Cowchal Dancer(h)

[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
They(j) prefer me	any one Ruth(k),	then stick

[illegible]
Quite illegible

[illegible]

[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
They(j) called me,	[illegible] Ruth, illegible,	when [illegible] to me

[illegible]
[illegible] illegible.

[illegible]

[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
They come to me	the illegible,	the illegible

[illegible]
of illegible(l).

(k) This song had long been resident in Rolly Fields and devoted to perform the Cowchal dance, in the great interest of the Rolly Fields. This took place during the latter months of 1924, the time time that such that was [illegible]. [177]

(l) Accordingly as song 1[illegible] in the, Traditional Museum of Fields, singers, Jim Roberts. The song was composed by Kimmyon Ohio, and is probably considered from the Cowchal.

(1) This is. The supernatural beings.

(2) This is. Human Rule.

(3) This is a Cowchal supernatural being, the dancer's partner, and equivalent to the Rolly Fields Ohiamb-ko. This dancer's call consequently was and [illegible] [171] in a meaning the.

(1) This is. The supernatural beings.

(2) This is. [illegible] and the other supernatural [illegible] called out.

(3) This is. When [illegible] has moved to see the dancer during [illegible] dials. [illegible] is a Cowchal supernatural being who is model to their Cowchal dances.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

CHAPTER IV

GAMES

THE subject of games, lying on the border-line of social customs, was one which was not fully investigated. The Bella Coola, like all other peoples, have a number of sports and pastimes and although the old diversions are being forgotten by the younger people, many of the old men and women are familiar with those played in their youth. As tribal customs these may be of small value, but games of all kinds often preserve ancient practices and, as providing useful clues to the spread of peoples or of culture, are worthy of investigation. Unfortunately, lack of time made it impossible to give the subject the attention it deserved, and the few games here described must not be considered as exhaustive treatment of the subject.

Though less fond of competitive sports than the Indians of the Plains, the Bella Coola enjoy canoe-racing and wrestling. The former appears to have been an ancient diversion, picked crews from different villages competed until the encouraging shouts of their fellows, and even now the younger men are anxious to display their skill in this respect. Wrestling, which used to be common during all non-sacred gatherings, has almost entirely disappeared since the prohibition of the potlatch.

The favourite indoor pastime, enjoyed equally by young and old, is the telling of stories. Those of a sacred nature, especially ancestral myths, are reserved of course for ceremonial occasions, but the older men and women remember many tales describing the exploits of birds and animals which are recounted again and again to the enjoyment of the listeners, although they may have heard the same recital fifty times. Children enjoy the companionship of some old story-teller and it is a common sight to see an old man or woman, surrounded by an eager group, explaining once more how Raven rescued his uncle or was himself led into difficulties. Many of these stories are somewhat indecent, others appear brutally frank,

2: Mc Dermith E-9 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he is wrong, he pays them. It is said that in former times each stick used to be painted with a special device, and that each had its own name; even nowthey are beautifully made and highly polished by much passing from hand to hand. The Carriers play the same game but use beaver teeth instead of sticks. Formerly it was not uncommon for a man to bet his goods, his wives and children, and even himself at this game. If he lost, the persons so wagered became slaves of the victor unless redeemed by their friends. Women, too, gambled freely; in fact, neophytes recently admitted into the hamat society were the only men to whom his pastime was forbidden.

Of actual games, the one most commonly played is skiu. As many as eight or ten contestants can take part, each providing himself with one, two, or three stones,[1] perked down to the proper shape. Each is about six inches in length, three inches wide, flat on one side, and oval on the other, well rounded at either end. Before the coming of the white man, when the Bella Coola historically used stone, it is said that one of these could be made in a few minutes. A mark is set up, and the first player throws his missile in the air, endeavouring to make it come to rest close as possible to the target. The game is usually played on an open space near the village, but even on comparatively smooth ground there is great chance of bouncing and the thrower must gauge this possibility as well as have correct direction and distance. The second player likewise throws his stone, trying to land it nearer the target, or to knock away his rival's. In so doing, the latter, lying on the ground, is often broken, which puts its owner out of the game for the time being. Then all have thrown, the one who has come nearest the mark is the winner. Sometimes each contestant throws two or more stones, and sometimes sides are chosen. Large number of broken gaming stones can be found near every old villagesite, confirming the statements of the older men and women concerning the universality of the sport

[1] Whether which this is was said either to be derived from that of a foreign, or that the latter is derived from it.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

$539

"Cut him in pieces," she said, "as you would with salmon preparatory to smoking."

Mink was in the canoe and heard her injunction. He willed that the captain should steer a course near the shore, and when the canoe was rounding a point he jumped overboard and succeeded in reaching the land, where he sought refuge. The raiders chased him on shore so hotly that Mink was finally forced to hide in a small hole under the rocks, but on entering it he took with him some shell-fish. One of the pursuers, seeing the hole, thrust his spear down into it, but Mink smeared on this the entrails of the shell-fish. When the raiders saw the gore on the spear they concluded they had killed him and went off.

As soon as his enemies had gone away, Mink crawled out and grabbed the old woman by the back of the neck, yelling in her ear:

"What did you call out to the raiders?"

"I told them to take good care of you," she replied, "that you were like a son to me."

"Did you indeed?" said Mink, who had heard perfectly what she said.

First he bit off her legs, then chewed to pieces the rest of her body, shredding it into scraps which he threw into the water, telling them to become crabs.

This is the origin of crabs.

THE FIRE

Almost three generations after the first people had come to this earth, Mink went up to Nuxwit-a and asked Kiyamtsin to lend him his robe, so that he might take his place as sun. The request was granted, but, once given control of the sun, Mink guided the canoe-like luminary so close to earth that the rivers and oceans boiled, and it was only in the glaciers that the people were able to exist. As Kimquit a moss and his dog were turned to stone; it is said that they can still be seen in this form.[*]

[221]

Animals as well as men suffered from Mink's wickedness. Grizzly Bear's coat was singed to its present rusty colour; Weasel tried to hide himself but failed to draw in the end of his tail which was burnt black, a mark still carried by all his descendants; Clam closed his shell for protection and so was blackened only at its orifice; all the other creatures suffered in various ways.

¶[171] [*] A similar belief is said to be shared by the Cowichan people of Vancouver Island. About 1900, a considerable amount of charred wood was found four feet beneath the surface of the ground, on the mountain west of the Duncan River. The Bella Coola consider this to be proof of the disaster.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

158 [415] [171] [415] [431] [264] 158 476

racks; metal coal-oil cans are found convenient for this purpose and have almost replaced watertight boxes. After repeated storings and skimmings, all that remains is a mass of putrid flesh, bearing no resemblance whatever to the fish from which it came. The Kitlahs are said to compress this into cakes for eating, but the Bella Coola throw it away. Some cooks bail out the drops by hand, but many of the box-kettles have a bung-hole at the bottom which, when opened, allows the semi-liquid remains to flow out into a rough trough leading to the river. As soon as one batch of oolachan has thus been disposed of, another is boiled and refined in the same way. The grease keeps indefinitely and is a useful article of barter with the Carriers as well as a staple of Bella Coola diet. Although the preparation removes much of its offensive odour, oolachan grease has an unpleasant taste to the white man.

During the boiling, all other activities are suspended and the people spend practically all their time on the river bank. If the fish are allowed to rot too long, much of the grease is lost, so men, women, and children are pressed into service to make the most of the short period. The men rise at dawn to start the fires on the bank, the women and children follow with food, and for several days the whole village camps, as if on a picnic, amid an indescribably foul smell that almost strikes anyone passing within hundreds of yards. There are tasks for everyone; the fish must be carried from the pits to the furnaces, wood must be brought, the fires attended, the kettles stirred, the grease carried away, the fireplaces repaired, food cooked, and a hundred other chores. It is a scene of great activity, carried on with good humour and merriment, for the Bella Coola realize that they are storing up luxuries for the following winter. Even the dogs seem to share the general contentment, and do not disdain to eat the dregs from the kettles, which, when emptied into the river, attract numerous crows and gulls, to the joy of small boys with burning desires.

BELLA COOLA CANOES

501 [505] 502

Although travel and transport by water is still as vital to the Bella Coola as it was in their fathers, the motor-boat is fast replacing the canoe, and the science of manufacturing their own craft is being lost. In former times several types were constructed, but only one of these is still employed—the spoon canoe, ts'ela, used on rivers (see Plate 21). These vary from twenty to thirty feet or more in length, and are about four feet wide; they are without keels, and there is no difference between the bow and stern. Although one man can handle such a craft in smooth water, at least two are required for a journey of any length, and four in the usual case. The captain, who is either the best waterman or the one most familiar with the route, stands in the stern, the second is crouched in

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

of the older people remember using in their youth another type, ikkas, with a high raised prow; this may have been identical with the nulka which others describe as having an elevated bow and a low stern. An entirely different craft was the nuskwa'i, named from one of the gens, probably the white-headed gens. A strip of maple fastened along each side caught the water in moving, with a sound like that of the paradise rustling flight of the bird. The bow was often carved in the form of a bird's head and the stern in that of a tail to further the resemblance. No living Bella Coola claims to have seen one of these canoes, though some had heard of them from their grandparents. The large, open type of canoe made by the Haida was known to the Bella Coola, but not owned by them. Sails were used on all ocean-going canoes; they were usually of matting, though skins sewn together were occasionally employed.

Canoes are occasionally lashed together. In several dances dances a wide platform for dancing is required, and the need is met by lashing planks crosswise over two canoes, near the bow and stern, thus fastening them together. Planking is laid on the two supports and a platform is constructed. Careful inquiries showed that this fastening was merely a temporary arrangement; the boxes were not bound in any particular manner, nor was there any fixed distance between the craft. Sometimes the same expedient was used for transport when the load was too heavy for two canoes separately, a device which is said to have been used more commonly by the tribes of the outer coast than the Bella Coola. Canoes lashed together are termed ts-ennetz.

Rafts, cuxlwa'a, consisting of rough logs fastened together with cross-pieces, were commonly used on the lakes of the interior, and occasionally for river work when canoes were unavailable and there was no time to make them. Another expedient in similar emergencies was to make bark canoes, such as are still remembered by the Carrier. The Bella Coola regard the construction of these as definite copying, and do not profess to have as much skill as their northern tribes. Canoes, it is said, can be folded for portaging. There is a tradition that, many generations ago, a few clever Bella Coola knew how to make skin canoes.

THE PREPARATION OF CEDAR-BARK

Early spring is the time to cuxlmali, that is, to gather the inner bark of the cedar. This occasionally starts in the lodge, though this is really women's work. The worker selects a small cedar, choosing one about six inches in diameter, with smooth trunk and relatively free from knots. With a knife she makes a horizontal incision in the bark, two or three feet from the ground, sometimes girdling the sapling. Then she inserts her

Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1929 NEB Bellacoola NEB
CARRIER NEB
TSIMSHIAN NEB
SENECA NEB
CHICOTIN NEB

Southern Carrier: New shoots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach. Resembled the decoction made from the bark of the aspen (page 34), or from the new shoots and bark of the ribbed spruce (page 81), but the last-mentioned considered most efficacious.

Northern Carrier: Needle tips mixed with large needle tips of the "British Columbia pine" (Pinus sp.?), the inside bark of the wild gooseberry (Ribes sp.?), bark of the red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.), the inside pulp of mayberry cones (Ribes sp.), moss of the "lousberry" (black twinberry, Lonicera involucrata Banks?), and the inner bark of the wild rose (Rosa sp.), placed in a vessel holding four gallons of water, boiled down to a thick decoction, strained, and bottled. About two tablespoonfuls taken, at sunrise and sunset, for constitutional weakness or paralysis, or if the body was covered with sores.

Cure obtained by boiling a green piece of pine (sp.?) painted on the eye to remove white scum and to cure snow-blindness.

Sikanni: Pitch stewed and the saliva swallowed for a cough.

Gitksan: Inner bark (scraped from the trunk with a bone scraper after the outer bark had been removed) eaten both for food and as a blood purifier. Purged the body in from half an hour to an hour.

Shavings of the yellow resinous cinder found after removal of the bark boiled, the decoction placed in oil, and taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for many serious ailments, including gonorrhea. Said to produce beneficial results in "consumption."

Young needles plucked in June and eaten as a purgative and diuretic.

For use with a bow, see page 68.

Abies grandis Lindl., White Fir, Balsam Fir

Bella Coola: Bark of root or of stem boiled, and the decoction taken internally every day for tuberculosis and stomach troubles. Said to have cured many cases of tuberculosis.

Gum from bark blisters found on young trees warmed, mixed with mountain goat tallow, and taken internally for sore throat, also drops on a hot stone sore eyes.

Young green leaves boiled, mixed with buds of skunk cabbage (Lysichiton camtschatcense Schott.) gathered in October, or the buds gathered in April, dried on top of the house, roasted, mixed with a small quantity of slightly roasted roots of dog rose, namely (Rosa nutkana Presl.), one or two ounces of the gummy buds of the black cottonwood (Populus trichocarpa T. and G.), and four or five ounces of bark extractive oil, allowed to stand one day, then boiled and kept in a box for a hot perfume. Gitksan Indians said to be more expert in the preparation.

Southern Carrier: Tree used for medicine, but details not obtained.

Chilcotin: Not used.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NEH Bellacoola 306
CARTIER NEN
TL MORIAN NEKS

Smoke from the burning roots inhaled for bad dreams, influenza, and rheumatism (a remedy avoided by medicine men, lest it destroy their magical power). Roots themselves considered poisonous.

Leaves used to sit or lie on when taking a steam bath for rheumatism; also spread over the affected parts. T 137 757 [838] [756]

Calla palustris L., Water Arum

Gitksan: Roots well boiled and the decoction taken internally for clearing the eyes of the blind, for hemorrhage, for short breath, and influenza. B 137 757

LILIACEAE, LILY FAMILY

Chlorogalum pomeridianum Kunth., Soaproot

Bella Coola: Boiled and used to wash the body. Can be used and applied as a poultice to sore or wounds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used. B 137 757

Smilacina racemosa L., False Solomon's Seal

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Roots boiled and decoction taken internally as a very strong medicine for rheumatism, sore back, and kidney trouble, a purgative. Bark and leaves unknown. Roots smelled and tasted as bulb. T [752]

Veratrum viride Ait., False Hellebore

Bella Coola: Small bulbs or scrapings of large bulbs, boiled, and one cupful or less of the decoction, according to the strength of the patient, taken internally for chronic cough, pneumonia, constipation, pain in the stomach, and many illnesses. Two or three cupfuls avoided as emetic. Said to be poisonous if eaten raw. B 137 757

Small pieces of the root root swallowed with a little cold water as emetic for pain in the stomach. Hot water taken if all the pieces not vomited. Overdose considered fatal.

See also aconite root (page 48).

Southern Carrier: Roots were dried in the sun, and periodically rubbing on a stone. About a teaspoonful of the powder taken in hot water as an emetic for sickness. Too strong a decoction considered fatal.

SALICACEAE, WILLOW FAMILY

Salix lasiandra Benth., Western

Bella Coola: Six sticks about a foot long charred, and powdered on a stone. A teaspoonful of the powder taken in a cupful of cold water for diarrhoea. Said to affect a man in rain or three hours. B 137 757

A piece of the inner bark boiled were and the bitter stuff boiled into a dark red, other edges then squeezed and flattened down, and the mould covered with eagle down. Thought to make the pus come out. Same process used to heal tumours in the abdomen made by dogs who tried to eat pain in the stomach. B [757] [752]

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used. B [771]

(This was Dr. C. H. Townsend's answer the same time this plant seems to be used by every tribe in British Columbia I guess.

B
C

137
757

Fomes Laricis (Jacq.), more generally known as Polyporus officinalis Fries, A Shelf Fungus

Bella Coola: This (?) fungus ground, steeped in water, and the decoction taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Southern Carrier: If found on the Douglas fir tree, dried, powdered, a handful steeped in boiling water and the hot decoction taken internally as an emetic and purgative. Said to act within an hour. Not used if found on any other tree.

B
C
[171]

(According to Dr. John Dearness, this is a medical polypore, perhaps the only fungus used by pharmacists. Park, Davis, and Company make a fluid extract and a triturate which is prescribed for the relief of night sweats in tuberculosis. The fungus is a cathartic in large doses. Its medicinal virtues have long been known in the old world.)

B
137
757

Boviista pila B. and C., Puff Ball.

Bella Coola: Spores dusted on wounds, sores of gonorrhoea, and suppurating sores other than boils.

LICHEN

Bella Coola: A certain long, white lichen, if found on the red alder tree, warmed, and applied to a broken boil or suppurating sore.

Sticta sp., Lichen

Bella Coola: Entire plant, if from red-osier dogwood (Cornus stolonifera Michx.) or crab apple (Pyrus diversifolia Bong.), but not from willow (Salix sp.), boiled, and five cupfuls of the hot decoction taken internally daily for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea, constipation, or vomiting. Neither a purgative nor an astringent.

C
[159]

Entire plant boiled and the decoction used as an eye-wash.

Entire plant pulverized and applied to skin.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

KELP

B
757

Bella Coola: A small kelp found on the rocks sometimes used for a sweat bath. See western dock, page 56.

WOOD SAP

Bella Coola: The sap that oozes from any kind of wood when burning considered a good remedy for sores.

MOUNTAIN GOAT

B 136
757

Oreamnos Montanus, Ord., Mountain Goat

Bella Coola: Mountain goat fat boiled with droppings of goose that had fed on roots, and the mixture given to babies once or twice a day for colds.

Goat meat with droppings of the bushy-tailed woodrat, commonly called packrat (Neotoma cinerea), taken internally with water as a remedy for nursing babies when they had colds.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 The gens Spatsa'tlh have hooksers painted on the house-front, and use in dances the mask of a large kind of whale (i-'ents), of the crow, and of 532 the black bear.

342 The gens Tsemqut'skyas use the mask of Ôsnatsît'ma (=the sleeper) and the eagle.

The gens Ti'ah'semi'ot of the Nook'a'latsmo use the moon (fig. 2).

The gens Iale'stimit of the Talio'mo use the raven, robin (mi'a'gem), eagle, whale, the bird t'ioelale (grouse?), and s'ellel'ots, the flood-tide. They have sun, moon, and stars painted on the house-front, and the ceng'ots suspended from the beams of the roof (see p. 420).

The highest gens of Nuî'a'l has the name Smi'ya (=the north wind). He has the mountain Sowi'kas surmounted by a mackerel sky, and with clouds on its sides, painted on his house-front (fig. 3). Another object belonging to his crest represents waves.

614 The children belong to the gens of either father or mother, the decision being left to the choice of the parents.
851

Secret Societies and the Potlatch.

171 The social organization, festivals, and secret societies of the Bilqula are still more closely interwoven than they are among the Kwakiutl, and must be considered in connection. We have to describe here the potlatch, the Sisna'ka, and the Ka'ulth. The Sisna'ka corresponds to the Tlokala of the northern Kwakiutl tribes, the Ka'ulth to the Ts'ônaka'a. The 575 Bilqula believe that the potlatch has been instituted by two deities, one brother and one sister, the foremost among whom is Qô'ômôm, to whom 556 773 776 the sunrise is intrusted. He resides with the others in a beautiful

Fig. 5.—Mask representing Qô'ômôm. Fig. 6.—Mask representing Qwaqwemô'ôla.

[532] [575]

house in the far east, and arises at 4 o'clock every morning when the sun rises. He has to take care that the sun rises properly. The first six of these deities

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

go with the mother and part with the father. The decision is left to the parents and children. 586

When a person has died the corpse is washed, the face painted red, the legs are doubled up, and the arms folded over the breast. The ornament of the deceased is put into his nose; his shirt is put on, the back part covering the breast and the front part turned backward. The body is placed in a box and the latter is either fastened on the lower branches of a tree or placed in a little house, which is set on posts, above the level of the ground. The face of the deceased is turned outward. Part of his property and gifts from his friends are deposited near the grave. The masks of the deceased are burnt. His crest is carved on a memorial column, which also shows how many canoes, coppers, headdresses, and slaves he had given away at potlatches. These objects are painted or carved on the column. Formerly slaves were killed at the burial of chiefs. The number of slaves killed was also indicated by as many human figures on the memorial column. After burial food for the use of the deceased is thrown into the fire. This is repeated frequently during a prolonged period after the death has occurred. Whenever the friends of the deceased partake of a meal a little food is thrown down at a place between the fire and the door, where the entrance to the lower world, the home of the dead, is believed to be.

764 [307] [321] [766] [567] [775]

The bed of a mourner must be protected against the ghost of the deceased. His male relatives stick a throw-hook into the ground at each corner of their beds. After four days these are thrown into the water. Mourners must rise early and go into the woods, where they stick four throw-hooks into the ground, at the corners of a square, in which they cleanse themselves by rubbing their bodies with cedar-branches. They also swim in ponds. After swimming they shoot four small arrows and swap through the shells, following the course of the sun. This they do on four subsequent mornings, showing new trees every day. Mourners cut their hair short. The hair that has been cut off is burnt. If they should not observe these regulations it is believed that they would dream of the deceased. Women when mourning scratch their cheeks with shells or stones.

765 783 [775] 765 [302]

The mourning regulations for a widower or a widow are especially strict. For four days he (or she) must fast, and must not speak a word, else the dead wife or husband would lay a hand on the mouth of the offender, who would then die. They must not go near water, and are forbidden to comb or cut nails for a whole year. For the same length of time they must not eat fresh herring or chicken. Widow and widower cleanse themselves in the same way as other mourners. These observances are considered unlucky, and must not fall on any person.

[302] [326] [322]

Some time after the death of a rich or influential person his nearest relatives invite the whole tribe to a potlatch. On this occasion to sings a mourning song for the deceased and gives away presents to his guests. It was explained to me that this ended the mourning, and that it was the custom to giving away the house of the deceased.

765 656

Religious and Superstitious.

The mythology of the Bilqula differs greatly from the mythologies of the other tribes of the North Pacific coast. It is impossible to say to 773 [775]

* * *

773 what cause this divergence is due. Mythology and religion are so closely
[71] connected that a few words on the former must be added here. The principal deity of the Bilqula is Sun, the sun-god (compare sing. sun). 773 The rays of the sun are his symbolism. When prayed to he is called Tsal'ex. In praying the Bilqula look heavenward. I obtained the following formulas: Allexe ulz'ding, Tsal'ex, 'Look on us where we are 774 going, Tsal'ex,' and Tsal'ex, ulz'ulzmmlz'ilg, 'Take care of us, Tsal'ex.' [70] Sun is pre-eminently the ruler of the world, and does not interfere with [59] the actions and thoughts of men. Three are given by Mamamelq'ing. According to the tradition of the Bilqula, before the liberation of the sun, and before the world was made as it is nowadays, four deities lived on the earth: Mamamelq'ing, Tsla'ioxet, Mathqa'ayuk, and Ial'ala'lak. The raven wished to obtain the sun, but he was unable to liberate it. Then he went to these deities and asked their help. They assembled in the sky, and tore the curtain, which up to that time had been suspended between heaven and earth, hiding the heavenly orbs. The sun appeared, but he shone dimly, as though darkened by clouds. The raven ascended to heaven through the rift made by Mamamelq'ing, and found there a beautiful prairie country in which all the birds lived. Mamamelq'ing and his brethren painted them beautifully and sent them down to earth, giving each his song and his wife. The raven was not content with the sun, and resolved to try and find a better one. He flew to the house of a great chief, who kept the sunq'ulz (no-daughter of, sq'uwelse dog in drawing). The sunq'ulz was a small round receptacle closed all around like an egg. The chief guarded it jealously, and kept it suspended from one of the rafters of his house. The raven knew that he could not obtain it by show force, and resolved to a ruse. He assumed the shape of the leaf of a spruce tree, and let himself drop into the pool from which the chief's daughter used to take water. The girl drank from the pool, swallowed the leaf, and thus became with child. She gave birth to a boy, who was the raven himself. The old chief loved the boy dearly, and allowed him to play with the sunq'ulz. This was what he desired. He ran out of the house, broke it, and flew away in the shape of a raven.

After the sun had thus been obtained Mamamelq'ing said: 'Let us make men.' He made the image of a man out of wood, but he was unable to endow it with breath. Mathqa'ayuk and Ial'ala'lak tried likewise to carve human figures and to give them life, but they failed. Finally, Tsla'ioxet carved the figure of a man and endowed it with life. He made a man and a woman in each country, and they became the ancestors of all the numerous tribes. Then Mamamelq'ing gave them their arts. He taught them to build canoes, to catch salmon, to build houses. He made rivers everywhere, that men should have water to drink, and that the fish might go up the rivers to be caught by men.

The Bilqula believe that Mamamelq'ing and his brethren still continue to give new ideas to men. They say that any new designs of painting or carving, or any other new inventions, made by a member of their tribe, has been given to him by Mamamelq'ing.

[78] The religious side of the potlatch and of the secret societies has been referred to above.

774 The soul is believed to dwell in the eyes. It is similar in shape to a bird inclosed in an egg. If the shell of the egg breaks and the soul flies away the owner dies. Shamans are able to see and to recover souls.
[74]
[75]

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NEA Bellacoola NEA

By laying their hands on the rope of a person they are able to tell whether his soul is present or whether it has left the body. If the soul should become weak they are able to restore it to its former vigour. If a person swoons it is believed that his soul has flown away without breaking its shell. The shaman hears its buzzing wings, which give a sound like those of a mosquito. He may catch and replace it in the rope of its owner. If the soul leaves the body without breaking its shell the owner becomes crazy.

The art of shamanism is borrowed by Ewq. It is impossible to obtain it by means of fasting and praying, as is the case among the neighbouring tribes, but it is a free gift from the deity. A person who is to become a shaman will fall sick, and, during his illness, Ewq will give him a song which must be kept a deep secret. After this he is able to cure diseases. If a person falsely pretends to have received the gift of shamanism, and tries to suck out diseases from a patient, he will fall sick himself.

When asked more closely about the curious difference between this method of obtaining the power and that of the neighbouring tribes we informant said: "When an Ewlky'i'ung wishes to become a shaman he goes to the mountains where the deity of their shamans resides (probably Ma'ioma) who will initiate him. In Hagula one obtains the art in such a way."

Sickness is caused by a disease entering the body or by witchcraft (see p. 417). The shaman is able to extract the disease by sucking. A similar method of witchcraft, somewhat similar to the "ely'a" of the Kwakiutl (see Sixth Report of the Committee, p. 113), was described to me as follows: The person who wants to bewitch his enemy endeavours to obtain some of his old clothing, portions worked by perspiration being considered especially effective. After it is obtained a wolf is killed, and the clothing is put into its mouth, which is then tied up. Then the wolf is placed in a box. This procedure is called yaut. Sometimes the clothing or some hair is included in the bone of a wolf or of a dead person. No shaman can counteract these charms.

If a person has been murdered, and a string is tied firmly around the neck of the corpse, the murderer's neck will become diseased and he will be unable to breathe and will die. If meat is strewn in the corpse's eyes and the lids closed over it the murderer will die. If a person has been killed with a knife or arrow, or another weapon, to which some of his blood adheres, the latter is brought into contact with a wolf's head, dog's hair, or anything else that is hot, and then thrown into the fire or put into a frog's or snake's mouth; then the murderer will die.

I will have a few current beliefs:—

Drumming indicates that people are talking about me.

Slight chapping of the neck indicates rain, but coarse good weather.

Twitching of the muscles of the left side of the body is unlucky, of the right side lucky. Twitching of the skin under the eyes indicates that one will cry.

If a dog frisks and howls in the sheep the owner will die.

The breaking of a box without an apparent cause is unlucky.

Wars.

When a war party was expected the warriors did not paint their faces, but they put on headbands of white cedar bark and covered their

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca.1890)900 NEA Bellacoola NEA

They had hit a stone, and their points were broken. He staid there some time, and when it was nearly dark he returned home. Before he reached his house, he cut his own belly and took out some of the fat from his intestines. He cut it in five pieces, and replaced his intestines. He put the fat into his quiver. When he reached his house, he hung the quiver up outside, and entered. He imitated everything the Lynx had done. When it grew dark, he told his wife to fetch his quiver. She brought it, and he told her to open it and to feed his children. She took the fat out, placed it on a stick, and put it near the fire; and as soon as it grew warm, the Raven cried, "Tsi! Don't put it so near the fire. I feel sick when you do so." He jumped up took hold of the fat, and put it back in his belly. The Lynx said, "Formerly I fed your children, but you were the first one to treat me properly. You did not give any food to my children." Then the Lynx took some fat, and flung one piece to each of the Raven's children. He cut some meat and gave it to them also. Then the Raven said, "I will give you one of my children, that it may grow up in company with yours."

It is said that the former spirit Tsi'lus'a was killed at one time by an Indian who took his place. This tale is recorded in Chap. IV. It belongs to the tribe of the village Nuxu'q'. A similar tradition is told of Anu,[1] to which some the Carrier call the Raven, their principal culture hero. Many traditions referring to Anu are common to the Carrier, the Bella Coola, and the Awik'enox of Rivers Inlet.

The Bella Coola believe that a being called K'ium is the father of all mountaineers. When a hunter meets him, he thinks he sees a fish. Then he should close his eyes and open them again. If the animal is K'ium, it will appear in its real shape as a buck of enormous size. The hunter should then succeed the mountain. If he should descend, he would fall and die.

The thunder-storm is produced by the Thunder-bird, who lives on the mountains, in the company of a number of spirits, who are considered his particular friends. The Thunder-bird himself is represented by a black mask with red mouth. The nose is strongly curved, the forehead bulges forward, and the chin protrudes almost as far forward as the nose (Plate XI, Fig. 1). His beaded is called Ac-cuk'ic'nnum (Plate XI, Fig. 2). He face is painted with orange and blue stripes, and he carries a speaker's staff, which is painted with spirals of the same color. He watches the door of the Thunder-bird's house. In his house live the Rabbit (Plate XI, Fig. 3); the Owl, who is considered the rival of the Thunder-bird (Plate XI, Fig. 4); the Mountain, c'ilqas (Plate XI, Fig. 5); the Rainbow (Plate XI, Fig. 6); mythologies to those of the interior. It is unnecessary to revert to this subject here. The similarity of the Bella Coola legends to those of the other Coast tribes on the one hand, and to the traditions of the Athapascan tribes on the other, is evident.

[1] Contradictory to Boas's statement in his monograph on Tsimshian myths (Pag. 4, 5).

7/Dec E-1 (1st-ca. 1952)100 HEB Bellacoola NEX

It is, however, important to compare their social organization with that of the neighboring tribes, in order to gain a clearer understanding of the origin of their peculiar organization. As stated before, the Bella Coola are divided into village communities, which are organized on an endogamic basis. Each village community has its tradition, which is represented in certain ceremonies. The supernatural beings which play a part in these traditions are personified by certain dances. Other Coast tribes have a much more complex organization. The Tlingit and Haida are divided into two clans, each of which is subdivided into a great many families, which, as it would seem, were originally village communities. This opinion is based on the fact that the names of many of the families must be translated as "inhabitants of such and such a place." The two clans are present in all the villages of the tribe, each family belonging to either one clan or the other. The Tsimshian have the same system, except that the number of clans is four instead of two. Each tribe is divided into families, which embrace the inhabitants of a certain region; but all the families of the whole tribe are classified according to the four clans. Among the Haida, Tlingit, and Tsimshian, descent is purely maternal; among the northern Kwakiutl tribes, conditions are somewhat different, according to observations made by Dr. Livingston Farrand. There we have village communities which are subdivided according to four clans in the same way as those of the Tsimshian, but descent is not purely maternal. There is a strong preponderance of the latter form of descent, but persons are at liberty to place their children in either the paternal or maternal clan. The preponderance of maternal descent is, however, so strong, that from my previous received impress I drew the inference that descent was purely maternal.

Among the southern Kwakiutl tribes the families constituting a village community are subdivided into a number of clans, but each clan is confined to one village. We do not find a limited number of clans pervading the whole tribe, as we do among the northern tribes. An analysis of the social organization of this tribe has shown that the present organization has evidently developed from a previous simpler state, in which the tribe was divided into single village communities. The present more complex organization resulted from the amalgamation of various villages. Owing to the influence of the customs of the northern tribes, each village community adopted a crest, which in course of time became the totem of the clan.[1] The Kwakiutl have a peculiar organization, which may be considered a transitional stage between inhabited by Salish tribes refer to the early separation of the Bella Coola tribe from the related tribes of the Gulf of Georgia, and that in their traditions they have retained the memory of the emigration of part of the tribe from the northern territory. It seems also probable that the allusion to the origin of one family of the tribe on Skeena River refers to a mixture with the tribes inhabiting northern British Columbia.

[1] "Totem Poles of the Kwakiutl Indians" (Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895 p. 329)

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

The traditions of the tribes also describe the style of house used by the ancestors of certain village communities; and it is interesting to note that some of these houses correspond to the subterranean lodges that were in use among the Chilcotin, while others correspond to the tents that were in use among the Carrier. It is said that the ancestor of the Nuxa'lin used the subterranean lodge which is called tsîpa (see p. 63), while the ancestor of the Nuqa'lin used the skin lodge which is called skûsa (see p. 64).

Since the Bella Coola retain the fundamental traits of the social organization of their congeners to the south, and since their tradition has evidence of an emigration from that region, and since, furthermore, the linguistic evidence proves that the Bella Coola and the Coast Salish at one time inhabited contiguous areas on the coast, we are justified in assuming that the general culture of the Bella Coola at the time of their emigration must have resembled that of the Coast Salish. The question then arises, How did the peculiar contiguous totem and the remarkable mythology of the Bella Coola originate from the much simpler forms that we find among the Coast Salish?

One of the most remarkable features in the inner life of the tribes of the northern coast of British Columbia is the great importance of the clan legend, which is considered one of the most valuable properties of each clan or family. It is carefully guarded in the same way as material property, and an attempt on the part of a person not a member of the clan to tell the tradition or to own it considered one of the gravest offences against property rights. The possession of a clan tradition is felt by the Indian to be one of his most important prerogatives. When, therefore, the Bella Coola settled on Bella Coola River, and were drawn into contact with the northern Coast tribes, the lack of a well-developed clan tradition must have been felt as a serious drawback. The physical appearance of the Bella Coola proves that at one time they must have intermarried to a great extent with the Bella Bella. Though these marriages the peculiar customs of the Coast tribes were first introduced among them. This is shown by the fact that a great many of the mythological names can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin, of which stock the Bella Bella are a branch. Thus the name for their supreme deity, Snai'yakla, is a Kwakiutl word meaning "the one who must be worshipped." The name Qwaqwakîka is also of Kwakiutl origin, and may be translated as "the wealthiest one." The great frequency of follow either father or mother, but that it had not the right to use the property of both parents. It seems to my mind that the former method was more likely to develop under the existing social conditions, and that to this reason we must ascribe the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The occurrence of endogamic marriage among this tribe is quite isolated on the Pacific coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and by this means preserve their property rights. It is interesting to note that the northern Kwakiutl, who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, have adopted exogamic institutions; but there is a notable difference in the organization of the village community, between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find four ancestors to each village,—usually three men and one woman. It is true that these are generally called brothers and sister, but they were created independently by Sun, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relatives. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one single being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, who are forbidden to intermarry; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and may intermarry.

174 182 424 614 171 174 621 [173]

My interest is, therefore, that the curious social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the customs of the Coast tribes upon the loose social unit of the Salish village community. The possession of clan traditions was felt as a great advantage, and consequently the desire developed to possess clan traditions. These were acquired partly by intercourse with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The desire to guard the traditions which were once acquired led to the development of endogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the whole tribe.

174 177 424 614 [512]

The jealousy with which the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family try to prevent other families from knowing its own clan traditions. For this reason the clan traditions of the whole tribe are remarkably inconsistent. We find, for instance, that the well-known raven legend of the northern Coast tribes has been utilized by many families as a family tradition. But while one family uses one part of the tradition, other families use other parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola we find the most contradictory myths in regard to important events in the world's history. Some families maintain that the Raven liberated the sun, while, according to another one, the Mink was essential in bringing about the present state of affairs. Still others say that Tsmo'ets, during his travels, caused the sun to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions referring to the visit of the Mink and Wasp to their father, the Sun, are also very remarkable. Although a considerable amount of

174 424 614

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NEA Bellacoola NEA

174 contradiction is inherent in all the mythologies of the North Pacific coast, 424 they nowhere reach such a degree as among the Bella Coola; and I presume 614 the fact that the traditions are kept secret by the various families accounts for this curious condition.

171 The prayers of the Bella Coola directed to Sunx or Ta'ats bear a 782 remarkable resemblance to the prayers of the Tsimshian addressed to Lasha, the sky. In both tribes we find the idea that when the Sun wipes his face it will be clear weather, and man will be happy; consequently the prayer to [821] the deity "to wipe his face" occurs quite often.

One of the most important customs that the Bella Coola borrowed from 177 the Coast tribes is the k0'siut ceremonial, with which are connected the various secret societies, particularly the custom of ceremonial cannibalism.
575 The ceremonies and the paraphernalia used by the Bella Coola and by the 773 Kwakiutl are practically identical. I told above (p. 34) the legend explaining 796 the origin of cannibalism. Among the Bella Bella and Kwakiutl, another tradition is told to explain the origin of this custom. The tradition tells of a spirit called Baxbakualanuxsf'wae, who lives in the forest, and who initiates the members of the Cannibal Society. The series of traditions clustering around this being differ fundamentally from those referring to the Cannibal Society of the Bella Coola. The custom has also spread to the Tsimshian, who say that the secret societies were introduced by a hunter who was taken into the inside of a cliff by a white bear. Inside he saw a house, in which the various societies were performing their ceremonies. It appears, therefore, that the same ritual which is practiced by three distinct tribes is explained by three fundamentally distinct myths; and we must conclude that in this case the ritual is older than the myth,—that the latter has been invented in order to explain customs that were borrowed from foreign tribes, so that the ritual is the primary phenomenon, while the myth is secondary.[1]

These considerations explain some of the psychological motives for the 174 development of certain traditions and myths, as well as the curious incon-773 sistency of the clan traditions of the Bella Coola. They do not, however, explain the most fundamental characteristic of the traditions of the tribe. I pointed out in the third chapter of this paper, that, notwithstanding the numerous contradictions contained in family legends, the conception of the word and the functions of the various deities are so well defined that we must consider the mythology of this tribe vastly superior to that of the neighboring tribes. While the latter believe in a great many spirits which are not co-ordinated, we have here a system of deities. The existence of a systematic mythology among the Bella Coola proves that under favorable conditions the advance from the lower forms of beliefs to higher forms may be a very rapid one.

[113]

[1] See Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, pp. 336-8.

R:Boas E-5 (1894-ca. 1900)897
NEA Bellacoola NEA

(550) One of them must wash his body, one must wash his head, and the two others hold him. In return they receive one or two blankets each. During this ceremony the qaqa'ioth, who are described as wild men, dance around the novice. They have ropes tied around their waists, and are held by other members of the society by these ropes. Then the cinnamon bird has the novice into the woods, where he remains for a long time, until he meets the spirit that initiates him. It seems that during this time he is secretly led to the house in which the cinnamon bird continues to celebrate festivals at the expense of the novice's father, and there he is taught the secrets of the society. During this time, until the return of the novice from the woods, the house is tabooed. A watchman is stationed at the entrance, who keeps out uninitiated persons. During the absence of the novice, his mother prepares cedar bark ornaments and weaves mountain goat blankets for his use. One afternoon he returns, and then his father gives a feast to let the people know that his child has returned. The latter performs his first dance, in which he uses masks and cedar bark ornaments. This dance is called nuxalk'auch. On this day the father must distribute a great number of blankets among the cinnamon bird. The initiated are permitted to take part in the feast, and sit on one side of the house. The new member spends all his nights in the woods, where he bathes. In the spring the new member, if a man, is thrown into the sea, and after that is free from all regulations attending the initiation. One of the principal regulations regarding novices of the cinnamon bird is that they must return from the woods in the direction in which the sun is moving, starting so that the sun is at their backs. Therefore they must sometimes go in roundabout ways. They must go backward through doors, which are sa'lagam (supernatural) against them. Frequently the sa'ua (a female shaman) is called to bespeak the door in their behalf before they pass through it. Before their dance the sa'ua must also address the earth, as it is supposed that she it might open and swallow up the dancer. It is also sa'lagam against the novice. The expression used is that the earth would "open its eyes" (k'a'nalamx); that means, swallow the novice. In order to avoid this danger, the sa'ua must "give a name to the earth," and show red paint and feathers over the place where the novice is to dance.

THE S'LOLA.

(551) The social organization, festivals, and secret societies of the S'lola are still more closely interwoven than they are among the Kwakiutl, and must be considered in connection. We have to describe here the polatch, the sisa'k, and the k'wak. The sisa'k corresponds to the tsa'ksa of the northern Kwakiutl tribes, the k'wak to the ts'a'ts'aqa. The S'lola believe that the polatch has been instituted by ten deities, nine brothers and one sister, the foremost among whom is Xa'xalana, to whom care the novices is intrusted. He resides with the others in a beautiful house in the far east, and cries "a, a,"

556
773
776

[575] [576] [577] [578]

wanted to dance in the same way as she was her dancing. The people should accompany her dance with songs, and, after she had finished, they should dance with smoke. She said, "Whenever a person sees me, your people shall dance the Grass. If you do not do so, I shall punish you with death and sickness. In summer, while I am in my house, you must not dance the Grass."

[579] [580] [581]

Over since that time the Dillonite dance the Grass. When a man has seen Kwakhatatl's sitting in front of her cave, he will invite the people to a Grass. A ring made of red and white cedar bark is hung up in his house, and the uninitiated are not allowed to enter it. Only in the evening, when dances are performed, they may look on, standing close to the door. As soon as the dances are over, they must retire from the labor house. Each Grass lasts three days.

[582] [583] [584]

The various dances performed by members of the Grass are also property of the clans, and the right to perform them is restricted to members of the clan. They must not be given to a daughter's husband, as is the case with the clan's dances, but belong to the members of the clan, who have a right to a particular dance, but who do not own it. Permission to use a mask or dance is obtained from the owner by payments. The owner may relinquish the dance to the borrower [illegible] way return it at any time. Membership of the Grass is obtained through an initiation. At this time the novice is given the Grass name, which is inherited by young persons from their parents or from other relatives. Thus a young man who had the name of Tsipa will be was about seventeen years old, obtained at his initiation the name of Ahkwa. I have not reached a very clear understanding of the details of the initiation; it seems that the dance is simply given to the novice in the same way as the clan's, the initiation being connected with a potlatch. But still it seems possible that he must "know" of the dances which he is to perform. Only the highest degrees of the Grass have to pass through a religious ceremony of some importance. The highest degrees are the Ahwitla (the initiate of the Kwakhatl), the Ahwa (the adjunct of the Kwakhatl), and the Ahwa (the attendant of the Kwakhatl). These grades are also hereditary. A female novice may acquire these at once at her first initiation.

[585] [586] [587] [588]

When the Ahwitla is initiated, he goes into the forest, where he encounters his guardian spirit. It is believed that he goes up to the sun, and formerly he had to take human flesh along for food. The whole held a council the night preceding the beginning of the ceremonies, and anyone who wanted to show his liberality offered one of his slaves to be killed in order to serve as food for the Ahwitla. The offer was accepted, and a payment of from ten to twenty blankets was made for the slave. The latter was killed, and the medicine of the Ahwitla ate dressed one half of the body before the departure of the novice to the woods. There the latter was tied up and left to fast. He may stay there for twenty or thirty days until the spirit appears [illegible] to him and takes him up to the sun, where he is tortured. Early one morning he returns, and he heard outside the house. He has lost all his hair, which, it is believed, has been torn out by the strong breeze blowing in the higher regions. He is quite naked, and tells everyone where he was he has told all. If he was not rotten, anyone he will tell his wife. It is believed that he has lost his soul, which fled from the body when the spirit came to him. Therefore the shaman must try for four days to recapture his soul. The night after they have convened in the shaman's house, clothed in a bearskin and wearing a large head ring, heavy bracelets and anklets, all made of cast metal bells, [illegible] he appears wearing the mask of the [illegible] (fig. [illegible]), the spirit which tormented him. This mask corresponds exactly to that of [illegible] of the [illegible] from whom he [illegible] his people, but merely [illegible] two [illegible] to [illegible] and [illegible]. Therefore his people will also [illegible] [illegible] shaman has to observe a number of regulations. For four years after his initiation he must not [illegible] [illegible] gamble. He must stay away from his wife for one year, but this period is being reduced to one month. For two or three months he must not leave his house.

Fig. [illegible]
[illegible]

The [illegible] (the daughter) and the [illegible] (the daughter) do not go into the woods to be initiated, but both must fast three days before their first dance. The [illegible] "makes fun of everything" and sometimes gambles with his wife. The [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] and breaks household goods and utensils. If he has forbidden some object during the day, he pays for it at night when he leaves. The [illegible] and the [illegible], after they have danced, must stay in their houses for one month.

If a person transgresses the laws of the [illegible], for instance, when the shaman's [illegible], or when a man performs a dance to which he has no right, also when a person disobeys the commandments or makes a mistake in dancing, his punishment is death. The death sentence is passed and the execution is called before the court. After his offense has been proved, he is asked whether he is willing to suffer the penalty of death. If he is not willing and one of his relatives is found willing to take the penalty on himself, the guilty party is spared and the substitute killed in his stead. The members of the judgment is intended to the shaman, who furthermore the condemned person by throwing the [illegible] [illegible] or by pulling him to some other [illegible]. The object thrown by the shaman is a shell, bone, or finger nail, covered

(c) Bonaqua and, "Laboured" the eastern continuation of the last mentioned.[1] The name explained as follows:

One of the people who came to be earth in the beginning of time, Tundlanda by name, resided on the Skeena River, and there saw women wearing labrets. On his return to Bella Coola he settled at Bonaqua and set carved on his totem pole* the figure of a woman with an abalone shell labret as a memorial of his voyage. Unbecoming to his particular consort the totem from his figure.

This was one of the largest towns in the valley.

*(d) Kimsquit: a small town some north of the last, not far from the Dean. It is noteworthy that it was founded by a descendant of Tundlanda named Imsiq. The consensus of opinion is that it has not been occupied for many years, but one informant recently dug up a clay pipe on the alleged site.

*(e) Sukuk, "Where the Sun Divided": on the south shore of the Bella Coola River about a quarter of a mile from the sea. This village was founded by a certain Sell.

*(f) Xenqui, meaning doubtful, perhaps "Salty": this, the most populous village of the valley in the recent past, is still inhabited by one or two families. The inhabitants of other towns explain its large population by marriages with slaves. This is the upper, or eastern, continuation of the preceding, and the two in combination formed one of houses stretching for three-quarters of a mile (see Fig. 9).

(g) Gwalkuna, "The Trading-place": on the north side of the Bella Coola, apparently about half a mile above Kimsquit. This village was long ago deserted.

(h) Tsetlumsilla, "Where There Is Much Anchovy-oil," a kind of hollow-crowned nest: some distance from

---

* Recent totem, with remaining of a small set of houses, are reported as being the last (Figure). In each case this is on the boundary south.

* The first, from Salmon Bay, Bella Coola, contains small crown-pieces, supposed [illegible] to have left the town, one though a work of Barbeau and others on the same coast of some years ago in the Pacific Coast indicate that the Bella Coola totemic art are historically recent.

he is wrong, he pays them. It is said that in former times each stick used to be painted with a special device, and that each had its own name; even now they are beautifully made and highly polished by much passing from hand to hand. The Carrier play the same game but use heavy sticks instead of sticks. Formerly it was not uncommon for a man to lose his goods, his wives and children, and even himself at this game. If he lost, the persons so wagered became slaves of the victor unless redeemed by their friends. Women, too, gambled freely; in fact, neophytes recently admitted into the kwaxa society were the only ones to whom this pastime was forbidden.

Of actual games, the one most commonly played is ółóo. As many as eight or ten contestants can take part, each providing himself with one, two, or three stones,[1] packed down to the proper shape. Each is about six inches in length, three inches wide, flat on one side, and oval on the other, well rounded at either end. Before the coming of the white men, when the Bella Coola habitually used stone, it is said that one of these could be made in a few minutes. A mark is set up, and the first player throws his missile in the air, endeavouring to make it come to rest as close as possible to the target. The game is usually played on an open space near the village, but even on comparatively smooth ground there is great chance of bouncing and the thrower must gauge this possibility as well as have correct direction and distance. The second player likewise throws his stone, trying to land it nearer the target, or to knock away his rival's. In so doing, the latter, lying on the ground, is often broken, which puts its owner out of the game for the time being. When all have thrown, the one who has come nearest the mark is the winner. Sometimes each contestant throws two or more stones, and sometimes sides are chosen. Large numbers of broken gaming stones can be found near every old village site, confirming the statements of the older men and women concerning the universality of the sport in former times. Mitu might almost be called the Bulla Cuela national game, although it is now (1922) seldom played.

[1] It seems called ółóo, a name and other is the derived from that of a fungus, so that the latter is derived from it.

A game with somewhat similar rules is yunkirik, played with small wooden spoons tipped with bone. When a number of men or boys decide to play, they choose two captains who in turn select their teams; any number can take part, provided that the sides are equal, but five each is usual. There is a special name for each player according to his position, and he lays against the corresponding member of the other team. A mark is set up, and one of the captains throws his spoon, so that it will stick upright in the ground as near the target as possible. The rival leader endeavours to beat this, and if he fails, his second man throws, and each in succession until one comes closer to the goal than the rival captain. Then the leader's number two rises to beat the last thrower, followed by those on his own side until one succeeds in all all have thrown. The game thus ends when all of one side have thrown unsuccessfully. The winning side is, of course, the one to which belongs the player whose throw is nearest the target. Each member of the losing team pays his wager to his adversary and a second round is begun.

The game is now rarely indulged in, but in former times games used to continue all day, and valuables were lost in the gambling which was considered to be a necessary part of it. Men used to observe ceremonial chastity to increase their chances of success and the game was regarded with admiration by younger lads. The rival team of a village often used to visit other towns to compete against their representatives, and the games were contested amid heated excitement on the part of the supporters. This occasionally led to serious fighting.

Another sport of a similar type is ochiary; a mark is set up and each competitor tries to lodge his spoon as close to it as possible. This game has now entirely lost favour, the young men preferring a type of football played without strict attention to rules, but with great energy.

Bulla Cuela children, too, have their games and recreations, many of them of an imitative nature. Little boys enjoy rolling their houses. Dishes, benches, cooking-boxes, cradles, stanchions, canoes, all were carved from this wood. The bark was woven into baskets, and when dyed formed the most common ceremonial decoration.

Even within the forty miles of the river valley formerly occupied by the Bella Coola there are considerable variations in climate. At the mouth of the river the typical Pacific coast type is found, without great extremes of temperature and with much rain, especially in winter time. During winter, the moisture is precipitated as snow a few hundred feet above the valley, and the limit of the snow can be watched on the mountain slopes, rising or falling a few feet from day to day. Farther up the valley, the winters are colder and in many cases snow lies for weeks on the ground, and in the upper part of the Bella Coola area the winters are severe, although much more moderate than on the upper regions immediately to the east.

When we leave the history of the inhabitants of this land? They believe that long, long ago, Alquntam, the supreme god, caused their first ancestors to be created in his house, Nuxwatl, in the land above, and sent them down to populate the Bella Coola valley. These first people came in groups of two or three, brothers and sisters, or occasionally men and wife, each group descending, in many cases in animal form, to a certain mountain and then making their home on its foot. They brought with them animals and fish, tools and houses, also the knowledge of ceremonial dances. In fact, they differed from the Bella Coola of the recent past only in having greater supernatural power. These first people increased with extraordinary rapidity, until each group grew into a village, bound together by a knowledge of their first ancestor. In course of time the emigrants of certain villages continued, or some increased more rapidly than others, but on the whole each settlement maintained its character of being the descendants of one group of the first settlers of this world.

This mythological belief is a fair picture of Bella Coola life as it was when the first white men visited the valley. Wher-

Lewis, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages on every few miles of his course. Ross describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors.

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1901 there were surviving within more than three hundred individuals, who lived in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal diseases, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase.

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained by an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk.

There seem empty now the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 1). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nuxalk-Bella-a winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the Arm. This stream, "The Dearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Nuskumamuxw. Between the mouths of these two is the Ts-ioli, a small stream rising

1:98 Dorsey E-1 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

(c) Ăwatqmo xoĕ, "Labrend": the eastern continuation of the last mentioned.* The name is explained as follows:

One of the people who came to the earth in the beginning of time, Tsiskwate by name, travelled to the Skeena River, and there saw women wearing labrets. On his return to Bella Coola he settled at Ăwatqmo xoĕ and carved on his totem-pole* the figure of a woman with an abalone-shell labret as a memorial of his voyage. Visitors coming to his particular town named the town from this figure.

This was one of the largest towns in the valley.

*(d) Ăimd ts, a small town to the north of the last, not far from the Pe xoĕ. It is assumed that it was founded by a descendant of Tsiskwate named Ăimd ts. The consensus of opinion is that it has not been occupied for many years, but one informant recently dug up a clay pipe on the alleged site.

*(e) Skhăĕ, "When The Rope Divided": on the south shore of the Bella Coola River about a quarter of a mile from the sea. This village was founded by a certain Ĕell.

*(f) Xmqo ts, meaning doubtful, perhaps "baby": this, the most populous village of the valley in the recent past, is still inhabited by one or two families. The inhabitants of other towns explain its large population by marriages with slaves. This is the upper, or eastern, continuation of the preceding, and the two in combination formed a row of houses stretching for three-quarters of a mile (see Plate 9).

(g) Qwăqkqmq, "The Tomtom Place": on the north side of the Bella Coola, apparently about half a mile above Ăimd ts. This village was long ago deserted.

(a) Tsăĕ-wăqlqs ts, "Where There Is Much Inshore-ally," a kind of hollow-gunwaled place: some distance from *Several towns, each consisting of a single row of houses, are regarded as being one village. In such cases there is no visible boundary mark.

---

*The Bella Coola believe that their early ancestors used totem-poles, repeated reference to them will be made even though the work of Barbeau and others on the totem origin of totem-poles on the North-West Coast indicates that the Bella Coola example are not historically accurate.

the north bank of the Bella Coola,* near the lower slope of the mountain, and about three miles from the sea. It is probable that there was a town at this spot very long ago, according to the statement of one old man, and the numerous repetitions (II, p.8) in the vicinity support this view.

*(xx) Sunuk, "Sunny," or "Fallen Sun": on the south side of the Bella Coola opposite the preceding. It was deserted about 1877. This was a fairly large town, though never as big as Semqo'ts. The name is derived from Sun, sun, and there are two explanations given for it. One informant states that the name came from the many residences of the Sun to the first people there; another that the first chief, said to have been named Sallaus, erected a large totem-pole, decorated with the figure of a sun. This blew down, in consequence of which the people called their town Sunuk, "Fallen Sun."

*(xxi) Sqemuk: on the south side of the Bella Coola about three miles from the sea, and a short distance below the end of the present bridge. The meaning of the name is unknown.

*(xxii) Tsemsil, "Where the River Is Sufficiently Deep to Cover the Stones, but Shallow Enough for Rapids": the upper continuation of the last-named. It was deserted during the smallpox epidemic. The name of the chief who came there at the beginning of time was given as Tsemsilist.

(xxiii) Ooi'ucqmuk, "On the Point": on a curving promontory on the north bank of the river about four miles from the sea. It was long ago swept away when the river changed its course.

(xxiv) Ts'ucmuk, "The Place of Foul Water": on the north bank of the Bella Coola a little above the preceding, at a place where there were a number of stagnant pools between the river and the mountains. No one knows how long ago this town was abandoned, but as the names of people living there figure in stories which are said to be of no great antiquity, it was probably deserted not many years ago. Probably a large town since it was a good fishing place. [361]

* The river frequently changes its course, so that things that now are a considerable distance from it may once have been on its banks.

(xi) Tsalki, "Bald Eagle": also on the north shore of the river, a little above the last-named. Probably washed away by a flood long ago, although traces of the salmon-weir were still visible recently. [224]

(xii) Nagiwanda, "The Place of Much gitanda" (the low Rhododendron ferrugineum): on the north side of the river about one mile above the preceding. This large town is believed to have been deserted long ago, though, in apparent contradiction, traces of it are said to be still visible. [317]

"(xiii) Sendak, "The Place of Dog-Salmon": on the south bank, above the last-named, at a place where a small stream enters the Bulkley Cache River; this divided the town into two sections. It was long deserted and the river has carried away that part of the village below the creek. The name is derived from an uncommon dog salmon which is believed to have been seen at long intervals in a waterfall near this spot, always with a worse mind perched on its back. [325]

(xiv) Gipenkwan: on the lower end of the island near Hagwilget post office, eleven miles from the mouth. Although long deserted, traces of this village can still be seen. The meaning of the name is unknown.

"(xv) Nidzik, "The Place of the Whirlpool": on the south side of the river, eleven and a quarter miles from the sea. It was a village of moderate size, recently abandoned. The last occupant was said to have been Gitanmidz, which means, "The Place of Ali." [173]

"(xvi) Kuhs da i, "The Concave Town," so called because it spread around the shore of a bay occupied now by the Bulkley Cache: south side, slightly above the inlet of the Nanikut River, thirteen and a quarter miles from the sea. It was deserted about 1880.

"(xvii) Ferdzin, "The Place of Spawn": on the north side of the river, opposite the mouth of the same name. It also was deserted about 1880. Spawn is a kind of green-milk [316] [illegible] ville for one, which occurs in the valley of a small stream on the slope of the mountain.

"(c) Nalkun, "The Place Where There Are No Falls"; an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this creek about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still standing about 1870. Mackenzie reached the Bella Coola River at this place. At the time of his arrival the population was larger than usual, because the salmon-weir had withstood some heavy freshets which had destroyed several weirs on the Bella Coola, and driven the inhabitants of other villages to Nalkun.

It is said that the affluent at Nalkun, the stream Xwijk, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a ravine leading to the main river. It enters in a spring at the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down them. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Tsemkwaqlk, and it is said that some families living on the Skeena sing of it as the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

"(n) Snaw: at the point between the Ta'ach (Dowitchi) and Ala'ai (Whitewater) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name is unknown.

(o) Qulnak, "The Place of Shelter"; on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the falls. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

(p) Snaik-a, "The Place of Falls," so called from the strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point; on the north side of the river about ten miles from the falls. This large town was long ago deserted when a large rock in the middle of the [illegible], on which the salmon-nets rested, was carried away.*

The following village may be included with the above.

(iv) Wanuq: on the shore of North Bentinck Arm, to the east of the creek that flows into it at Green Bay. This long-deserted village was built so close to the water that high tides reached almost to the houses. According to one informant, the name was derived from that of the first chief who came down from above to that spot; while another connected it, etymologically, with Wam, the name of the barren district some four and a half miles up the valley of the creek. In recent years this village site has been used only as a summer camp.

The name given to the Bella Coola valley is Nuxalk; that given to the inhabitants of the valley, including those of villages no. iv, is Nuxalkmq.*

Two points must be considered with regard to the above list of towns. In the first place, can it be regarded as an accurate list, or do the towns belong to the realm of mythology? In the second place, are the customs and beliefs of the inhabitants of the different towns sufficiently similar to be described without reference to local differences?

The first question is difficult to answer. The Bella Coola undoubtedly consider the existence of these towns to be an historical fact, but as they regard the peopling of the earth by men created in the land above. Nevertheless, the above list appears to be intrinsically correct. The Bella Coola, although now collected into a single village, still remember their ancient homes. One man, for example, stated as a matter of course that he was a man of Snaitlili. Further inquiry elicited the information that he had been born at Xaxli, where his father had moved at the time of the smallpox epidemic. It later appeared that my informant's father was born at Pumalli, had married there, and that it was his father who had moved

* This information was by no means complete.

* Many of the towns here named is still applied to the town villages of the valley. All the other information was entirely to this date.

128 from Swalik. My informant's grandchildren regard themselves as Swalik boys, and their names are embodied in myths
173 of that village, although their fathers have not lived there
361 for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this case
166 exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no cause to doubt the general accuracy of these. Names
[55] embodied in the origin myths of different towns are used as pronunciations and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inaccuracies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

128 Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descendants of people of different villages were found in most cases to 184 be identical. There were a few differences in custom between [99] the people of Stuie and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on [101] the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

114 Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included
361 Pe-ede (no. 4), Nalqaxdzaxa (no. 7), and Nuxlkow (no. 16).* All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 6, 8, 9, 13, and 14, were not known by several old men questioned on the subject.

101 The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken 619 throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recognized that their origins and customs were similar. This was [631] also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living [191] on South Bentinck Arm, and at the head of Dean Channel.

*Owing to such case the spelling of this ensemble.

b McDermith E-5 (922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

Villages near the Dean River 361

"(38) Awaklo: the present site of the Kimsquit Indian village near the mouth of Dean River. The meaning of the name could not be learned.

"(39) Nakil, "Canyon": on the shore of Dean River at the bottom of the canyon. This large town was only recently deserted.

(40) Ayat-i, "Occupied Mound": on the south side of Dean River about one mile from the sea. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name is derived from the small mound on which it was built.

"(41) Nacqmak, "Many Spawning Sockeye Salmon": on south side of Dean River, about one and a quarter miles from the sea. A large town recently deserted.

"(42) Nacqlin, "Place of Many Spring Salmon": on south bank about twenty-five miles from the sea. This spot was not settled when people first occupied this world, but later Alpertsin (I, p. 390) took possession of it. [173]

(43) Sqmuk: east side of river twenty-eight miles from the sea. There is doubt about this town. It is said to have been a colony of the Kimsquit River settlement, a statement difficult to understand.

(44) Sinal-ac, "Where Canoes Are Left": on the north side of the river about thirty-five miles from the sea. Immediately opposite was Sulhaka, "Winter Trail." These two are considered as forming one town, but were probably never more than camping grounds at the spot where the winter trail to the interior left the river. It is possible, however, that they formed a town, since the names of the alleged first settlers in the beginning of time are preserved. [187] [173]

"(45) Ilikka: at Salmon House on the upper Dean River.

The history of the villages on the upper Dean is puzzling. Mythological accounts of their founding were obtained, and some of the older people stated that they had been occupied until recent years. On the other hand, there are apparently 174

536 [551]

The names enrolled in this myth are still in use. That of Nuhlkis was enlisted at a potlatch during the winter of 1921, after being dormant since the death of the eighth Nuhlkis, an old man, which had taken place some thirty years previously.* To illustrate this myth a representation is made of the mergansar canoe, a specimen of which, obtained by Mr. Harlan I. Smith, is now in the National Museum, Ottawa.

According to another version of this myth, Nuhlkis and his party came to earth at Anahim Lake, in the country of the Carrier, bringing with them the coal-head salmon. They first went to Nuxalk, but Nuhlkis did not like the place, so released only a few of the fish. They returned to Anahim Lake, and from there went to Salmon House. They found the spot so desirable that they settled and set for their store of coal-head salmon. That is the reason why this fish is so plentiful in the Dean River, and so scarcely rare in the Bella Coola.

[125]

ANCIENT MYTH OF SEMAS[1]

In the beginning of time Hamatsa concerned an abalone-shell covered post which reached from Nuxalk to Hemalgamon, a mountain near the Kimsquit River, six far from its mouth. To this place came from above two men, Semas, "The First One," and his younger brother, Omgemhlida. The former flew down as an eagle, but the latter, in human form, crawled down the post, which vanished after he had reached the earth. Semas spread his wings, like a mother bird, to shelter his younger brother. Hamatsa had given Omgemhlida a box containing eulachon salmon, with instructions to throw them into the ocean, where they would increase rapidly so as to feed he him and his elder brother. He also taught the two how to build a salmon-weir to catch the fish. The brothers climbed down the mountain-side to the mouth of the Kimsquit River, where Omgemhlida became a man and now built his canoe close above. He then released the salmon so he had been instructed, and also another present from Hamatsa, a mitsqui (I, p. 122), which was to serve as bait not only for fish but also for wealth and goods.

Semas declined to assume human form immediately, so began to repent, and his younger brother, and so being thus left alone, started to [173]

*This was the only instance given of an approximation of the interval since the first peopling of the earth. The Bella Coola usually reply, "long, long ago," and have not questioned further. This myth was received from a reliable informant, but it is doubtful whether the statement concerning the "eighth" Nuhlkis would find credence among most Bella Coola. Even if it should be the eighth, that would be of little value in estimating the period in which the Bella Coola believe the earth to have been populated, since names may remain dormant for generations.

[1] Related by Jim Pelkum.

1:56:Dorsett E-3 (1922-1924)949
NEA Bellacoola NEA

In the beginning of time it is believed that a son of Iwanax married the daughter of a Kitlobe chief (I, p. 330). As dower she brought her husband several Kitlobe women, which were transmitted in time to her children and which remained in Iwanax's house, Kimsquit, for many generations. The Bella Coola believe that it was remembered for hundreds of years that these designations did not belong there. Whenever one was conferred, the myth was recounted to tell how it first came to Kimsquit; whereas in Kitlobe when the myth from which the names were taken was related, it was always added that these in question could not be used since they were now in Kimsquit. About one hundred and fifty years ago, Anqual, a Kimsquit woman, was married to a Kitlobe man to repay this debt, and ensure friendship between the two tribes. She took as dower the names long ago brought from Kitlobe. Similarly, if any name or other prerogative of an ancestral myth has been alienated from the ancestral family to which it belongs, a father searches for a woman who will be able to restore it to his son as a marriage gift. The word used for searching is "hunt," the term applied to seeking for hunting animals.

The accompanying pedigree illustrates a return marriage. Qualsilo's daughter was married to a Fort Rupert man and took with her as dower several Bella Coola names and other prerogatives. The loss of these was remembered and they were brought back by the marriage of Tilakulo, a member of Qualsilo's ancestral family, with a daughter of the woman who had gone to Fort Rupert. Usually several generations elapse before a return marriage is made. This incident was perfectly well known to the son of Tilakulo.

If parents who are seeking a wife for their son have also a daughter approaching marriageable age, they may try to avoid a later return marriage by arranging that their daughter shall be married to a brother, or other near relative, of their son's wife. Exchange marriage was formerly more common than [178]

777 A visitation is not regarded as an inheritable right, but as a
* 787 tendency; for generations no member of a family may see one of these beasts, but the tradition is preserved, and when one [824] is seen it is recalled that such have been observed by ancestors of the fortunate one. Instances have occurred in which a person has obtained good luck without the tradition of this being in his family, but they are rare. On the other hand, a man may lose the advantage of his possession, even if he own [785] a portion of a mätqas or a xaiatl, through failure to observe ceremonial chastity.

776 Some of the Bella Coola believe that the mätqas and the xaiatl are the same animal, which can assume these two forms; others that the two are distinct supernatural creatures. In any case the powers and characteristics ascribed to them are the same. Most families have a tradition regarding the appear-[173] ance of the one or the other to their ancestors, and the infor-[184] mation to be derived from them is always about that particular creature. Hence the details here described are probably not all known to any one individual.

* 787 The different types of appearances, and the different types 811 of taboos called forth, should be noted. These are due to 182 failure on the part of the Bella Coola to rationalize the sum total of their concepts. Each man recounts what he believes to have happened to one of his ancestors or friends, irrespective of whether or not the methods used may be in direct contradiction to those employed by someone else on another occasion. A man who has heard of the mätqas, for example, from his father and mother, may describe contradictory means of dealing with the creature, and in each case may affirm that disaster would have followed if the method described had not been carried out. Such lack of co-ordination is typical of the Bella Coola.

777 According to an elderly Kimsquit man, the mätqas was brought down in the beginning of time by one of his own
* 787 ancestors, Ompemtikla. It is to this fact that he attributes [773] his own near approach to one on two occasions. As it is fre-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 539
* 787

The woman's husband was not dismayed at her death, knowing she deserved it on account of having spoken harshly to her son-in-law. This was the only occasion on which Tsislit killed anyone. After the funeral he said to his father-in-law:

"I am sorry for what has happened. If I had intended to slay your wife I should have done so by means of my supernatural power, whereas her death was caused accidentally by the too-great force latent in my own body."

"Do not let this event trouble you," the other man replied. "We all realize that my wife was in the wrong and thus caused her own death. I will take a new wife from among your relatives, and there the matter will drop."

A year later the marriage took place and the death of Tsislit's mother-in-law was thus amicably settled.[1]

THE GOOD FORTUNE OF Yelhal·a

Yelhal·a was very poor. He hunted diligently but was never successful, and the people of the village used to laugh at him. When feasts were given, Yelhal·a received a share, but he was never able to reciprocate, and this preyed on his mind. One day he set out at dawn for the mountains with his stick and his dog, but though he hunted industriously he returned at night with nothing better than herbs to cook for his supper. Undaunted, he set off again the following day, but had no better success, and again brought back only vegetables for his evening meal. He placed these on a stick before the fire to dry, and lay down, weary and depressed. Presently he saw a man enter the house and stand on the other side of the fire; around his head he wore a snake, which stamped him as a shaman. It was Twalálit, but Yelhal·a did not know this.

"Yelhal·a, what are you cooking?" asked the visitor.

"Mountain goat liver," he lied in answer.

Twalálit next inquired, "Is your dog a good mountain goat dog?"

"Yes," replied Yelhal·a, untruthfully. "Every day he goes hunting he kills twenty mountain goats."

"Is your stick a good one?" inquired Twalálit.

"Yes," answered Yelhal·a, "I always kill a great many mountain goats with it."

Twalálit then suggested that they exchange dogs and sticks. Yelhal·a, though at first unwilling, at length consented, and his visitor went away, leaving his own staff and dog behind.

[173]
[424]

[1] The above is regarded as an historical account, and the descendants of those who figure in the story consider that they have prior rights to relate it. But as it has no ceremonial significance, this claim is not pressed.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

575 in a flesh-coloured bathing-suit, imitating the nakedness of 796 earlier years. The writer was talking to one of the marshals, 178 a very old man, and remarked how different the present rites must appear to him.

"Yes," replied the old man. "But after all, the change is not so great. In former years we imitated what the supernatural beings did, now we imitate what our fathers did."

Many ethnologists, acquainted with the elaborate rituals carried out on the coast early in this century, have expressed surprise at the rapidity with which these have dwindled to mere shadows. The writer believes that one factor for the Bella Coola decline in ritual, is the realization that the rites are imitative, and that accordingly their significance need not be lost when further imitation is added.

575 Further research would undoubtedly have added particu-
796 lars of the manner in which other Cannibals carried out their rites, but to obtain the full details of all would have been detrimental to other types of investigation; it is believed that the above descriptions are typical. Before passing to other dances, a few general remarks on the Cannibal ritual may prove useful.

575 In view of the arduous character of the dance, and the 796 necessity for impressing the uninitiated with the great power
424 of the Cannibals, the marshals usually prohibit a man from [562] acting unless he is physically strong. Rarely, however, a woman is allowed to be a Cannibal if she has the necessary prerogative, but usually only if she is the last survivor of her family. In such cases the shorter rite is the more common.

[538] As before stated, kusiut origin myths are supposed to be [173] remembered, but in practice few kukusiut know the history of their prerogatives. The process of forgetting has undoubtedly increased in the last few years, but the writer feels confident that they were never maintained with the same care as origin myths connected with the first people.

*575 long ago the kwoi society was composed of individuals re-
*796 garded as having supernatural endowments, and who perhaps 178 believed this themselves. In course of time their influence
184 increased to such an extent that they were able to convince [532] non-members of the supernatural origin of objects used in their ceremonial.

[115] Unfortunately, information from Kimsquit was obtained almost exclusively from one old man, who, though a member well informed in kwoi matters and in many ways an almost ideal informant, had long since realized that the dancers could be nothing more than representations, and it is possible that his remarks were coloured by this knowledge. Though he tended to minimize the attitude of belief with which the uninitiated regarded masked figures, yet he fully agreed with [781] every testament made by the Bella Coola themselves with regard to the firm belief of non-members concerning the supernatural powers of the dancers. He also confirmed statements [688] respecting punishment if an error should occur, and mentioned the shooting of a Bella Bella dancer who had allowed his mask to fall during a nusk dance. As far as actual ritual is concerned, the differences in procedure between Bella Coola and Kimsquit are unimportant, and differences in belief are less than they appear at first sight. The Bella Coola kwoi seem to have perfected their organization and to have been [781] able to impress the uninitiated to a greater extent than their Kimsquit fellows, but the fundamentals of the society are identical.

*575 Traditions concerning the early history of the society are *796 probably of little value historically, but they are important as ● 173 indicating the mental attitude of the Bella Coola. Considering the importance of the society there are relatively few accounts of what took place long ago; the Bella Coola know that it exists, believe that the rites are identical with those carried out by their ancestors for generations, and theorize no further. It was only in the beginning of time that things were radically different; it is believed that then all the people were endowed with such power that they killed one another in their performances. Consequently, they decided to dance only in the winter months, and merely to remove the actions which had been previously carried out.

There are other traditions, probably with an historical basis, describing conflicts with the o'ult. The Bella Coola say that long, long ago there were not enough Sisiutl names to go around for the old people to be admitted to the society, and that though members were reported to having supernatural powers, yet the o'ult, confident in their numbers and strength, used frequently to assail the supremacy of the Sisiutl. On one occasion, when the latter had prepared an elaborate feast of smoked goat flesh for distribution, the o'ult collected their weapons and demanded a share of the feast. The Sisiutl, furiously angry, felt compelled to yield, though later they took revenge through the destruction wrought by many Cannibals and Screechers when frenzied. It is said that even recently if the Sisiutl did not invite the o'ult to one of their dances, they were always careful to placate them by sending half of the food as a present.

Sometimes the o'ult, collectively, were bold enough to kill a Sisiutl, particularly if something had gone amiss in a dance house. Or other motives might be strong enough to outweigh respect for a member of the society. On one occasion a chief, who was not a member of the society, was told that his wife, who was, had been in the habit of prowling off at night with a Cannibal. The jealous husband prepared his bear-spear and slew the Cannibal when next he entered his house during a frenzied rampage of the village. Sisiutl, both from that village and others in the vicinity, combined to cause the murderer's death with the aid of a member of the society who was a professional killer.

Success did not always come to the Sisiutl in quarrels between members of the two societies. Long ago, the o'ult were invited to a potlatch in a village in the upper Bella Coola valley. One of their own dances was taking place, but they

[illegible]

[illegible] 578

[illegible]

[illegible] 578

[illegible] 578

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] to [illegible] [illegible], [illegible] that the adze were too great for him. The Cannibal [illegible] that this powerful man could be initiated into [illegible] society he would be [illegible] of strength, so he said:

"You are now an initiate of mine."

Kwamdalis [illegible] but this meant he was to be initiated into the [illegible] society. He agreed, but asked to be permitted to complete the [illegible] which he was performing that evening, and to get bearing [illegible] which he had gone to the forest. The Bakaxtai were only too willing to grant this dispensation in their joy at having a valuable recruit.

On his return to the village, Kwamdalis told his fellow o'wih that he was going to be a member of the society. They were greatly grieved at loss of their leader. That night they gave the dance which had been started and completed a song of which he (Kwamdalis) was the very in which their circle had fallen until their heads were upside down. The Bakaxtai, marked to this end, found that this was a prelude to further trouble with the o'wih, but Kwamdalis did carried out his promise and was enrolled as a member. Much of this [illegible], many of his [illegible] associates were admitted as Bakaxtai, and ever since that time there has been relatively little friction between the two societies. In due course the Cannibal gave his dance with a song describing how he had met a strange creature [illegible] whom he had prevailed; this was, of course, the uninitiated Kwamdalis.

[205] To these two is attributed the origin of the practice of [illegible] to decide priority of invitation giving. It is said that both Kwamdalis and the Cannibal once wished to invite the people to a ceremony on the same evening and agreed to shove against each other to decide which should have preference. Kwamdalis prevailed, and the Cannibal duly postponed his dance and went with his associates to the winner's house.

[196] As before stated, stories of this kind dealing with the alleged history of the society are of slight value. As far as they go, they agree with other evidence pointing to the gradual growth of the Bakaxtai society from a band of elders endowed with supernatural power to a society with enormous prestige, dominating the life of the community and entirely overshadowing the o'wih who seem once to have been their rivals.

538

Another account of the flood states that while many persons fled to Mount Nuxalk, others took refuge on the summit of the mountain opposite to it, on the north side of the Bella Coola River. The waters continued to rise until the latter group was on the point of being submerged, when it occurred Nuxalk to give it some of itself. Nuxalk complied, and gave to the other the small bark that projects from its summit. The man was saved.

Kimsquit was also flooded at the same time. The Kimsquit River rose until the people were driven to the slopes of the mountain now known as Sellelid, to the west of the river. There they were forced to camp for several months, and it is from this event that the river received its name, which means "Many Houses." The Dean River people were driven to Mount Saxit, where, in later years, indications of their sojourn were to be found, such as mooring loops for canoes, holes for lifting fish-traps, and various utensils. One man tried to remove some of these relics, but they crumbled in his hands as if they had been burnt paper.

According to Bella Coola belief, the flood was not limited to any one locality. As evidence of its occurrence in Fort Rupert the following myth was related by a man who had heard it from his father's father, a Fort Rupert Indian.

One of the latter's ancestors, having dreamt that a flood would cover the earth, prepared a great quantity of gum with which he pitched his house both inside and out. Presently it began to rain, and the deluge continued until the whole land was covered, but this man dwelt secure in his rain-proof house. When at last he heard the sound of dogs on the roof, he knew that the flood must have diminished as it dared upon his door. When he and his family went outside they found on the shore two eulachi, the supernatural double-headed salmon that cause land-slides. From this event the man took the designation, Nakao-ca. When the present owner of the name performs his ceremonial, the hearing-boards are in the shape of a eulachi, and there appears a masked figure of a man who always shields his face with his arm. This appears to be an allusion to the man protecting himself from the waters.[16]

It is said that the time of the great heat[17] occurred soon after the flood.

Historical Stories

538
173

Although the Bella Coola regard all the stories included in this chapter as chronicles of events, yet they realize that all the preceding possess elements of the supernatural which are [16] It was impossible to have the type of ceremonial of which this story serves as origin myth; it has accordingly been included in the miscellaneous section.

[17] Various accounts of this have already been given; see vol. II, p. 434 and p. 500.

not likely to occur at the present time; in fact, they belong to the golden age of the distant past. In addition, a few tales are popularly told, not for their wealth of interesting detail, but as historical incidents. Some of these contain exaggerations that verge on mythology, whereas others, especially those dealing with certain individuals not long deceased, have clearly a foundation of truth. The themes include tales of travel, hunting exploits, the experiences of criminals, and varied subjects.

THE WOMAN WHO WAS LOST IN A GLADE

This story describes the adventures of a Bella Coola woman, daughter of a chief named Tsakwasin, who was married to a Bella Bella chief. The latter's father sold her as a slave to Tsilaxa, a Kitlope chief and cousin of the chief with the same name who was so feared by the Bella Coola. This was, of course, contrary to all established custom. Tsilaxa carried the woman away to Kitlope, where there seemed little hope for her return.

Tsilaxa owned a number of crabapple trees at Kitlope which he visited every autumn to collect and preserve the fruit. The woman had been with him for some time when he went as usual to the ripe apples. Members of different tribes can be distinguished by their different physiques and a Kitlope, recognizing that the woman was a Bella Coola, asked her how she came to be with Tsilaxa. She told him how she had been sold, disgraceffully, and he promised to help her return home. Telling her to conceal her plans, he bade her to be ready to flee early the following morning. At the appointed time he appeared, bringing dried clothes, grease, moccasins, and other equipment, wrapped in a seal's stomach. He sketched on the ground the overland route to Kemano, telling her how many affluents of the Kitlope River she must pass before following one to the south, thence across the divide, and down the Kemano River.

The woman started out, but after several days of travel realized that she had passed the place where she should turn south, and was lost. In point of fact, she was at this time near Ocean Lake. She headed back in the hope of recovering her trail, but snow fell and she could go no further; to make matters worse she had consumed all her clothes, and most of the grease. The unfortunate woman sought shelter under a big tree, where in time she was completely covered with snow. Every day she ate a small

[illegible] [82]
[illegible]: Water-name of a Kitsumpt town. [831]
[illegible]: Material garment, the term does not include unwoven textile or other personal property. [173]
[illegible]: 1.—Dress interfered by the dress of a Water-house, the term is also applied to generic gives instead of food. [831]
2.—Food eaten as for this purpose, or even for a meal. [321]
[illegible]: Constellation, [illegible]. [285]
[illegible]: Presents given as "Food" by a bridegroom and his relatives to the bride's kinsmen when the latter come to the house on the wedding day. [831]
[illegible]: Profession of horse-[illegible]. [831]
[illegible]: Object dressed by a shaman from a supernatural being and displayed by him. [831]
[illegible]: Indian salmon. [825]
[illegible]: One of the sons of the supreme god.
[illegible]: Supernatural being who has the prerogative of [illegible] to the land above.
[illegible]: One of the sons of Winter Produce as chief.
[illegible], "The Light Bringer": 1.—One of Raven's names as chief.
2.—Personal name of a Raven man.
3.—Exclusive Bella Coola name and chief [illegible], [illegible], [illegible] chief, known to Canada, especially one engaged in an enterprise with the speaker.
[illegible]: Spear-shaped river [illegible].
[illegible]: Village on [illegible] between North and South Bentinck Arm.
[illegible]: River flowing into the middle Bella Coola from the north.
[illegible]: Death, [illegible]. [761]
[illegible]: Whatever, [illegible]. [812]
[illegible]: 1.—Kitsumpt River. [101]
2.—Village near the mouth of the river.
[illegible]: Inhabitants of the Kitsumpt River valley.
[illegible]: Bull.
[illegible]: Shaman's name acquired from Death.
[illegible]: Pillow. [804]
[illegible], "Pillowed": Burial ceremonial at which an [illegible] is present.
[illegible], [illegible], [illegible]: Brother or sister younger than speaker, especially the youngest of a family. [601]
[illegible]: Proper name of a younger brother mentioned in an ancient story.
[illegible]: Brother. [824]
[illegible]: Tide flat. [825]
[illegible]: Shore.
[illegible]: That part of [illegible] which did not fall to the crash at the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Village on Rivers Inlet.
[illegible]: Part of a peculiar [illegible].
[illegible], "Bite Salmon": The so-called "Winter Salmon," probably [illegible] head salmon, elevated by Raven in the beginning of time.
[illegible], "Running Place": Limit of the sun's course. The word for December is connected with this. [805]
[illegible]: Leader of [illegible]. [821]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

U.BC-Geneva Ms. 9 (1922-1924)[illegible]
NEB Bella Coola NEB

Villages near the Dean River 361

*(36) Awatlin: the present site of the Kimsquit Indian village near the mouth of Dean River. The meaning of the name could not be learned.

*(37) Nakel, "Canyon": on the shore of Dean River at the bottom of the canyon. This large town was only recently deserted.

(38) Ape'i, "Occupied Mound": on the south side of Dean River about one mile from the sea. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name is derived from the small mound on which it was built.

*(39) Natsqmalt, "Many Spawning Sockeye Salmon": on south side of Dean River, about one and a quarter miles from the sea. A large town recently deserted.

*(40) Nacqlqin, "Place of Many Spring Salmon": on south bank about twenty-five miles from the sea. This spot was not settled when people first occupied this world, but later Alpenlim (I, p. 330) took possession of it. [173]

(41) Iymuck: east side of river twenty-eight miles from the sea. There is doubt about this town. It is said to have been a colony of the Kimsquit River settlement, a statement difficult to understand.

(42) Simal ax, "Where Canoes Are Left": on the north side of the river about thirty-five miles from the sea. Immediately opposite was Sulkaha, "Winter Trail." These two are considered as forming one town, but were probably never more than camping grounds at the spot where the winter trail to the [487] interior left the river. It is possible, however, that they [173] formed a town, since the names of the alleged first settlers in the beginning of time are preserved.

*(43) Aitha: at Salmon House on the upper Dean River.

The history of the villages on the upper Dean is puzzling. 174 Mythological accounts of their founding were obtained, and some of the older people stated that they had been occupied until recent years. On the other hand, there are apparently reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

The Dean River is called Nadel, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sacclang. Almost eighty years ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kimsquit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sa-ta'

*(44) Sa-ta': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nawulet: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manicou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors [illegible] 534 [illegible] by other myths which [illegible] time of their own record. From this night [illegible] became a shaman and said when he had sun when he was giving a dance of his own. His brother [illegible] were downstream and he came to a large house at [illegible] outside of which stood a large hollowed. He saw was in this house and [illegible] took possession of it.

A PROMINENT CHIEF MOVES[27]

Long ago at the time the world was first populated there were no rivers anywhere, for such were confined underground in a cavern-like place called [illegible], the approach to which was barred by a huge boulder. Not only were the rivers shut up, but with them were their occupants, including the salmon. Four Eagle tried to break this barrier, but without avail; then Raven succeeded. Since then the Bella Coola River has flowed to its present course. But the Tosno River was still in bondage, to the disgust of the chiefs who wished to travel up it to the home of the chief, [illegible]. The Carpenter, [illegible], took pity on them and by breaking the barrier permitted them to reach their destination.

Origin Myths of Other Tribes

179 538 [424] As has been repeatedly stated, the Bella Coola have obtained many prerogatives by marriages with the members of neighbouring tribes. Among these are, according to their belief, myths dealing with the peopling of distant localities. Ceremonially and sociologically, such traditions have the same importance as myths that describe Bella Coola as the final place of settlement of the first inhabitants. Accordingly, they can be given at this point.

179 538 174 114 In the previous section the original landing-places of some of the individuals described is said to have been outside the Bella Coola valley. Boas, discussing this fact (p. 111), suggests that such myths may reflect the movements of the ancestors of the Bella Coola from the parent Salish stock. Though this is a plausible hypothesis, it is also possible that [27]This place could not be identified.

[28]Related by Louie Charlie.

a foreign myth, obtained by marriage, might have been altered in the course of generations to the Bella Coola version, preserving as the only foreign element that of settlement at a distance at the beginning of time.

CHICOD MYTH OF OWIKI*

In the beginning of time Ayamim learned that four brothers dwelt in a cave down to the north. The elder, whose name was Hiaiaiis, came down from a hole in Nuxmit and told his younger brothers to stay while he went ahead to reconnoitre. He took the form of a wolf and, as soon as he had reached the north, went far to the east, where he obtained some abalone shells. Then he returned to Ayamim's house, left his spoil with his brothers, and again went off alone to the east. This time he brought back some copper. After this he was ready to settle, so the four assumed the form of wolves and went down to Calvert Island, Owiki, as the Bella Bella call it. There they assumed human form and their wolf skins turned back skin.

Ayamim did not give them food to carry with them, but he told them they would find sea-lions waiting to be killed on Sea-lion Island. Accordingly they hunted on that island, as their descendants, the people of Owiki, have done to this day.

Ayamim had given Hiaiaiis a box containing some of the cone-shaped whistles used in coast dances. The three elder brothers decided that they alone should perform the coast ceremonial and that, accordingly, the youngest should be kept in ignorance of the contents of the box, as uninitiated people are at the present time. He was a mere boy and his elder brothers used to leave him at home when they went hunting, but they had given him the most explicit instructions not to open the carefully roped box, containing their treasures.

All went well for some time, but finally the boy yielded to temptation and opened the box. His brothers returned unexpectedly, and found him examining the whistles, with his head almost out of sight within. They decided to kill him at once. They crowded up, closed the cover on his head, and sat on the box until life was extinct. Then they laid the body on the ground before them as they sat behind the fire, and sent one of their number out to gather three small pliant sticks. When this was done they covered the corpse with angle dawn and sat on the ground around it, raising and lowering the sticks as if they were throwing objects into the only for a chief, can be employed for a dead child. In this case, the theme describes the efforts of the parents to incorporate the deceased in the traditions of their ancestors, and the number of times he had been commemorated. The text of one such a few years ago is:

*Obtained by Judson Moody.

"We said, Hail! Assuredly [the child's crest was the bird when she was born. What more could we have done? Why did she leave us?"

The text may refer to the prerogative of employing mourners, as in the following:

"Come ye professional mourners, help me to give voice to my lamentations."

The tunes of mourning songs are usually remembered from year to year, and the singers may merely alter words to make an old song applicable. In some cases, such compositions are changed so slightly that they become virtually possessions of an ancestral family, and may then be preserved for generations until even the history of the names embodied is forgotten. Occasionally, ancient relationship between two such groups can be deduced from the occurrence of the same names in their mourning songs, although all traditions of intermarriage have been forgotten. There is considerable difference between the tunes of cheamit and swahunlet; in fact, this distinction may be more important than the themes, since the latter do not invariably conform to the types just described. A few items of ancestral history may be incorporated into a song dealing primarily with the actions of the deceased and his seven. Sometimes four of one type are used, sometimes two of each. Much thought is devoted to the compositions, the singers meeting every day to try over and improve one another's efforts. The texts, long and complicated, require much practice, since any error would be an admission of gross inefficiency. These daily rehearsals take place in the donor's house and he is required to provide food for the singers. It is not uncommon to use a song of Bella Bella origin, since the Bella Coola admit that members of that tribe excel in compositions of this type.

The details of this incident are sufficiently circumstantial to presuppose a distorted historical event. Moreover, many of the old people had heard of the incident, another indication of the accuracy of the tradition. As far as could be judged, news of the vision must have reached Bella Coola about the year 1800.* It is said that the xnāpow sang the following song in a language unknown to any of his hearers: *Ayaimaw ayaimaw ainīk aymamar gaiciya. None of the older men appear to have any idea of the meaning of these words, or even of the language to which they belong.

No event has had such profound effect on the lives of the Indians of British Columbia as the coming of the white man. It would be surprising if, looking backwards, they did not feel that it had been foretold by prophets. The preceding story is the only Bella Coola example of such a belief, although tales of a similar kind are found widely throughout the province. In addition, there are a few traditions of prophecies fulfilled by the white man. One of these is that long, long ago, a shaman stated that in the future the dead would return with the ability to make fire by rubbing the end of a small twig along a rough surface, and that, soon after, all the Indians would die. The Bella Coola consider that matches are referred to in the first part of the statement, and read their own doom

*The approximate date was determined in the following manner: The most complete account of the event was obtained from a man fifty-six years old in 1924 who had heard the details from his mother. He was the youngest of a large family, so it is probable that his mother was about forty-five years of age when he was born. When a child of about ten, she had been told of the vision by a woman just passed the age of child-bearing, who had recently reached adolescence when news of the event reached Bella Coola. The figures can be arranged in tabular form.

Duration of the informant's life	56 years.
Interval between his birth and the time his mother heard the news	35 years.
Interval between transmission of the news to the informant's mother and its receipt in Bella Coola	35 years.
Total	126 years.

Allowing for exaggerations, this would make the correct date about 1800.

A phonograph record was made of this song for the National Museum of Canada. Recorded as song VII D 21b; singer, Jim Pollard.

[illegible] maternal and paternal institutions. Descent is in the paternal line; but a man, at the time of his marriage, receives his father-in-law's crest as a dowry, which he holds in trust for his son, so that actually each individual inherits the crest of his maternal grandfather. The clans are exogamic.

The organization of the Salish tribes of the southern coast, who are linguistically closely related to the Bella Coola, is somewhat similar to that of the Kwakiutl. They are divided into village communities, a few of which have amalgamated, as, for instance, among the Salish tribes of Vancouver Island, among whom the tribe consists of a number of septs, each of which forms a separate village. Here the influence of southern tribes is very much earlier. While most of the village communities have certain crests, these do not play as important a part in the social life of the tribe or in its mythology as they do among the Kwakiutl, and the village communities are not exogamic. The Salish tribes of the interior are organized in very loose village communities without any trace of totem.

The fundamental difference between the northern tribes and the southern tribes consists, therefore, in the fact that the northern tribes have a limited number of clans which are present in all the villages, while among the southern tribes the village community is the only unit of organization.

The organization of the Bella Coola resembles most closely that of the Coast Salish tribes of southern British Columbia. In both cases the tribe is divided into village communities, which possess crests and traditions. This latter feature is, however, very much more strongly developed among the Bella Coola than among the southern tribes. They differ in their laws of intermarriage. While among the southern Coast Salish tribes there is a tendency to exogamy, the Bella Coola have developed a system of endogamy.

The tribes of the Coast Salish of the Gulf of Georgia claim descent from mythical ancestors, who are believed to have originated at the place which the tribe now inhabit. A number of traditions of this kind bear evidence of having been derived from historical events. Some of the tribes in the delta of Fraser River have traditions which refer to the amalgamation of tribes who descended from the mountains, and who are described as the descendants of animals living in the mountains, and of the natives of the delta.[1] I believe that the tribal traditions of the Bella Coola which were told in a previous chapter also bear evidence of the historical fates of the tribe. It is very remarkable that the important tradition of Tsmai'ax gives Fraser River as the place to which he descended from heaven. In another tradition, Bute Inlet is given as the place at which one of the Bella Coola tribes originated. In still another one, Skeena River is mentioned as the home of one of the tribes (see p. 6p). I do not doubt that these allusions to territory

[1] Sixth Report of the Committee of the British Association for the Advancement of Science on the Northwestern Tribes of Canada, 1906, p. 3.

7:Boas E-5 (1884-ca. 1890)500 NEB Bellacoola NEB

inhabited by Salish tribes refer to the early separation of the Bella Coola tribe from the related tribes of the Gulf of Georgia, and that in their traditions they have retained the memory of the emigration of part of the tribe from the southern territory. It seems also probable that the allusion to the origin of one family of the tribe on Skeena River refers to a mixture with the tribes inhabiting northern British Columbia.

The traditions of the tribes also describe the style of house used by the ancestors of certain village communities; and it is interesting to note that some of these houses correspond to the sahsvaanan lodges that were in use among the Chilcotin, while others correspond to the tents that were in use among the Carriers. It is said that the ancestor of the Nuxa'ix used the sahsvaanan lodge which is called ts'pa (see p. 93), while the ancestor of the Nuq'a'ist used the skin lodge which is called skwa (see p. 94).

Since the Bella Coola retain the fundamental traits of the social organization of their congeners in the south, and since their traditions bear evidence of an emigration from that region, and since, furthermore, the linguistic evidence proves that the Bella Coola and the Coast Salish at one time inhabited contiguous areas on the coast, we are justified in assuming that the general culture of the Bella Coola at the time of their emigration must have resembled that of the Coast Salish. The question then arises, How did the peculiar endogamic system and the remarkable mythology of the Bella Coola originate from the much simpler forms that we find among the Coast Salish?

One of the most remarkable features in the inner life of the tribes of the northern coast of British Columbia is the great importance of the clan legend, which is considered one of the most valuable properties of each clan or family. It is carefully guarded in the same way as material property, and an attempt on the part of a person not a member of the clan to tell the tradition as his own is considered one of the gravest offences against property rights. The possession of a clan tradition is felt by the Indian to be one of his most important prerogatives. When, therefore, the Bella Coola settled on Bella Coola River, and were thrown into contact with the northern Coast tribes, the lack of a well-developed clan tradition must have been felt as a serious drawback. The physical appearance of the Bella Coola proves that at one time they must have intermarried to a great extent with the tribe Bella. Through these marriages the peculiar customs of the Coast tribes were first introduced among them. This is shown by the fact that a great many of the mythological names can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin, of which stock the Bella Bella are a branch. Thus the name for their supreme deity, Sna'yakila, is a Kwakiutl word meaning "the one who must be worshipped." The name G'aq'ankilla'a is also of Kwakiutl origin, and may be translated as "the wealthiest one." The great frequency of s'ulkanu = shaman.

174 177 776 words of Kwakiutl derivation will become clear by a glance at the following list, which contains words that can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin:—

[105]

nik' = spoken.
K'ûsuk'in (p. 40) (Kwakiut. Ki'ûsuk'ala = the present chief.
Hus'ûsu (p. xxii) = a fabulous bird.
s'Ûpîng'in = the copper maker.
s'Ûyanûlu = name of Wunsuk'ûs (the ending, the designation "xanuk" in Kwakiutl).
xûqanuk' = mythological name of dove.
Ma'lok'ûs.
Mûsuu's (p. 38).
Sîs'ûsu = the country of the salmon (p. 38) (Kwakiut. sa') = salmon.
Sa'ûkûs (p. xx, 60).
s'Ûsuuk'in (p. xx) = the red s'Ûsuuk.
s'Ûsuuxnuk (p. xx).
s'usu'ûsuk'ûs (p. xx) (Kwakiut. Q'ûs'ûsu'ûsûk s) = the cuttings one.
Yû'ûm.
Qûskûnk'in (p. xx).
Q'ûmal'qûn (p. xx) = the wealthy one.
Q'ûs'ûqûlûs (p. xx) = rich at opposite side of river.
Q'ûs'ûsûnûs (p. xx) = wealthy at mouth of river.
Sûsu'yûkûs (p. xx) = the one who must be worshipped.
s'ûsu = a fabulous fish or snake (pp. xx, xx, 38).
Sûsûqûl'ûs (p. xx).
Ts'ûqûnûs (p. xx) = the bird.
Sûsu'ûs (p. 38) = sun.
Ts'ûsûsûs (p. xx) = the gaunt man.

174 177 424 614 [201] With these names and customs the clan traditions must have found their way to the Bella Coola, but their social organization differed fundamentally from that of the Bella Bella branch of the Kwakiutl. While the latter, owing to intimate contact with the northern tribes, had adopted the four-clan system with prevalent maternal descent, the Bella Coola were still distinctly divided into village communities that were not exogamic. It seems very likely that the jealousy with which the ownership of a clan tradition was guarded by the Coast tribes was very early introduced among the Bella Coola. Two means were available for preventing outsiders from acquiring the tradition. Among the Coast tribes with prevailing maternal institutions, among whom a limited number of clans existed, the ordinary law of inheritance was sufficient to retain the tradition inside of the clan. Not so among the Bella Coola. If their organization at an early time was similar to that of the Coast Salish, it is likely that the child was counted as well a member of the father's as of the mother's family, although the young woman generally moved to the village occupied by her husband. If the child belonged to the families of both parents, it had the right to use the tradition of either family; and consequently in the course of a few generations, the traditions acquired by each family would have spread practically over the whole tribe. There were only two methods possible to avoid this result. The one was to prevent marriages outside the village community; and this method would seem to have been most natural for a tribe organized in village communities, members of which were allowed to intermarry. The other method would have been to regulate the laws of inheritance in such a way that the child had to follow either father or mother, but that it had not the right to use the property of both parents. It seems to my mind that the former method was more likely to develop under the existing social conditions, and that to this reason we must ascribe the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The occurrence of endogamic marriage among this tribe is quite isolated on the Pacific coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and by this means preserve their property rights. It is interesting to note that the northern Kwakiutl, who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, have adopted exogamic institutions; but there is a notable difference, in the organization of the village community, between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find four ancestors to each village,—usually three men and one woman. It is true that these are generally called brothers and sisters, but they were created independently by Sun, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relations. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one single being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, who are forbidden to intermarry; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and may intermarry.

We intimate is, therefore, that the exogamic social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the customs of the Coast tribes upon the home social unit of the Salish village community. The possession of clan traditions was felt as a great advantage, and consequently the desire developed to possess clan traditions. These were acquired partly by intermarriage with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The desire to guard the traditions which were once acquired led to the development of endogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the whole tribe.

The jealousy with which the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family try to prevent other families from knowing its own clan traditions. For this reason the clan traditions of the whole tribe are remarkably inconsistent. We find, for instance, that the well-known raven legend of the northern Coast tribes has been utilized by many families as a family tradition. But while one family uses one part of the tradition, other families use other parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola we find the most contradictory myths in regard to important events in the world's history. Some families maintain that the Raven liberated the sun, while, according to another one, the Hawk was essential in bringing about the present state of affairs. Still others say that Tsimal'ya, during his travels, caused the sun to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions referring to the visit of the Hawk and Wren to their tribes, the Sun, are also very remarkable. Although a considerable amount of contradiction is inherent in all the mythologies of the North Pacific coast, they evidence such such a degree as among the Bella Coola; and I perceive the fact that the traditions are kept secret by the various families accounts for this curious condition.

The prayers of the Bella Coola directed to Sun or Ti'ens bear a remarkable resemblance to the prayers of the Tsimshian addressed to Lodzin, the sky. In both tribes we find the idea that when the Sun wipes his face it will be clear weather, and men will be happy; consequently the prayer to the deity "to wipe his face" occurs quite often.

One of the most important customs that the Bella Coola borrowed from the Coast tribes is the ki'ut ceremonial, with which are connected the various secret societies, particularly the custom of ceremonial cannibalism. The ceremonies and the paraphernalia used by the Bella Coola and by the Kwakiutl are practically identical. I will show (p. 34) the legend explaining the origin of cannibalism.[1] Among the Bella Bella and Kwakiutl, another tradition is still to explain the origin of this custom. The tradition tells of a spirit called Sechekulanuxwat, who lives in the forest, and who initiates the members of the Cannibal Society. The series of traditions clustering around this being differ fundamentally from those referring to the Cannibal Society of the Bella Coola. The custom has also spread to the Tsimshian, who say that the secret societies were introduced by a hunter who was taken into the inside of a cliff by a white bear. Inside he saw a house, in which the various societies were performing their ceremonies. It appears, therefore, that the same ritual which is practised by these distinct tribes is explained by three fundamentally distinct myths; and we must conclude that in this case the ritual is older than the myth,—that the latter has been invented in order to explain customs that were borrowed from foreign tribes, so that the ritual is the primary phenomenon, while the myth is secondary.

These considerations explain some of the psychological motives for the development of certain traditions and myths, as well as the curious inconsistency of the clan traditions of the Bella Coola. They do not, however, explain the most fundamental characteristic of the traditions of the tribe. I pointed out in the third chapter of this paper, that, notwithstanding the numerous contradictions contained in family legends, the conception of the world and the functions of the various deities are so well defined that we must consider the mythology of this tribe vastly superior to that of the neighboring tribes. While the latter believe in a great many spirits which are not coordinated, we here have a system of deities. The existence of a systematic mythology among the Bella Coola proves that under favorable conditions the advance from the lower forms of beliefs to higher forms may be a very rapid one.

[1] See Report of the U. S. National Museum for 1895, pp. 56-8.

NEA Bellacoola NEA

One analysis shows that this myth tation, but that it probably developed
After they removed to their new home, into their possession through contact with new ideas were being assimilated and of the people, or of a few members of formation of an elaborate concept of the have developed spontaneously in all its main other zones and of other races. The agreeing with the class of knowledge culture, has reached conclusions similar man the world over, when operating On the other hand, the Bella Coola thoughts of his neighbors, and has adopted two results of our inquiry emphasize parative and the historic methods of ethnology antagonistic. Each is a check upon the by the application of one alone.
analogy of a single trait of culture substantial proof of early historical con-such connection, because sometimes the the human mind. Ethnology is mainly imperfect evidence as proof of historical ethnologists is hardly beginning to see historical method. Our inquiry shows only by a careful analysis of the whole of the Bella Coola can be understood the tribe as a whole. And so it is with culture can be fully understood only of a tribe. When we confine ourselves culture, we open the door to misinterpretation.

If, then, the demand is made for parative study of ethnology then it has imply a demonstration of the results of evolves an idea, or when it borrows the has been evolved or accepted because the human mind; else it would not the distribution of an idea, original or conformity with the laws governing Historical analysis will furnish the among different peoples; and comparative will give us knowledge of the laws which of ideas.

cannot be considered as an impor-among the Bella Coola themselves.
a mass of foreign ideas had come h their new neighbors. While these assimilated, they stimulated the mind the tribe, who were thus led to the e world. The concept which they tures with those created by men of mind of the Bella Coola philosopher.
common to the earlier strata of to those that have been formed by with the same class of knowledge.
has also adopted ready-made the ted them to his environment. These he close relation between the com-ology, which are so often held to be h conclusions that might be attained is just as unethical to see, in an hat occurs in two distinct regions, nection as to reject the possibility of same ideas develop independently in y outgrowing the tendency to accept al connection; but the comparative that he has no right to scoff at the that safe conclusions can be derived culture. The growth of the myths only when we consider the culture of ith other phenomena. All traits of a connection with the whole culture es to comparing isolated traits of tations without number.
a more critical method in the com-generally been accorded, it does not he method. When the human mind e same idea, we may assume that it it conforms with the organization of be evolved or accepted. The wider borrowed, the closer must be its the activities of the human mind.
a referring to the growth of ideas on of the processes of their growth h govern the evolution and selection

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

824 their houses. Dishes, benches, cooking-boxes, cradles, totem-
[322] poles, canoes, all were carved from this wood. The bark was 285 woven into baskets, and when dyed formed the most common [531] ceremonial decoration.

132 Even within the forty miles of the river valley formerly occupied by the Bella Coola there are considerable variations in climate. At the mouth of the river the typical Pacific coast type is found, without great extremes of temperature and with much rain, especially in winter time. During winter, the moisture is precipitated as snow a few hundred feet above the valley, and the limit of the snow can be watched on the mountain slopes, rising or falling a few feet from day to day. Farther up the valley, the winters are colder and in many cases snow lies for weeks on the ground, and in the upper part of the Bella Coola area the winters are severe, although much more moderate than on the upper regions immediately to the east.

173 What has been the history of the inhabitants of this land?
[776] They believe that long, long ago, Alqantăm, the supreme god, caused their first ancestors to be created in his house, Nuxmăt·a, in the land above, and sent them down to populate the Bella Coola valley. These first people came in groups of two or three, brothers and sisters, or occasionally man and wife, each group descending, in many cases in animal form, to a certain mountain and then making their home at its foot. They brought with them animals and fish, tools and houses, also the knowledge of ceremonial dances. In fact, they differed from the Bella Coola of the recent past only in having greater supernatural power. These first people increased with extraordinary rapidity, until each group grew into a village, bound together by a knowledge of their first ancestor. In
173 course of time the occupants of certain villages combined, as 361 some increased more rapidly than others, but on the whole each settlement maintained its character of being the descendants of one group of the first settlers of this world.

[175] This mythological belief is a fair picture of Bella Coola life as it was when the first white man visited the valley. Mackenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 [164 177 182]

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 [124 175]

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nulpqtskwan-e winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Neclectsconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe-ulo, a small stream rising 133 [103]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

361 able for axes, which occurs in the valley of a small stream on [316] the slope of the mountain.

*(23) Nalleax, "The Place Where There Are No Falls": an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this creek about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still [175] standing about 1870. Mackenzie reached the Bella Coola River
[166] at this place. At the time of his arrival the population was larger than usual, because the salmon-weir had withstood
[226] some heavy freshets which had destroyed several weirs on the Bella Coola, and driven the inhabitants of other villages to Nalleax.

[133] It is said that the affluent at Nalleax, the stream Xaigu, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a ravine leading to the main river. Its source is a spring at the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down these. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Nazuāuxgit, and it is said that some families living on the Skeena sing of it as the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

*(24) Stuax: on the point between the La'xulx (Atnarko) and Sla-kl (Whitewater) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name is unknown.

(25) Qulaal, "The Place of Herbage": on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the forks. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was [137] given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

(26) Swalk-al, "The Place of Falls," so called from the [133] strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point: on the north side [173] of the river about ten miles from the forks. This large town was long ago deserted when a large rock in the midst of the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indians from both of these areas were interviewed and it was found that, except for minor details in certain beliefs, their customs were identical with those of the Bella Coola proper. Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bella Coola" will be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of that valley, but of South Bentinck Arm and the head of Dean Channel. Those living on South Bentinck Arm will be referred to as Tâl'ło people, the Bella Coola term for them; those of Dean Channel as Kimsquit, the name by which they are generally known. It is an anglicized form of the word Kimpkuu, meaning "Canyon," by which the Bella Bella designate the people of Dean River. 101 619

VILLAGES ON SOUTH BENTINCK ARM

(28) Sâtlia: on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junction with North Bentinck Arm. Food was obtained from an ocean fish-trap.* Long deserted except as a summer camp. 361 [226]

(29) Xenkilt, "Island": east side of South Bentinck Arm, slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Springs on the west side of the fiord. The town took its name from this island. In summer the numerous inhabitants lived immediately opposite it, at a place where they had an ocean salmon-trap; in winter they moved to a fortified spot at the base of a mountain slightly farther to the north. This village was blotted out by a landslide one spring long ago, and the few survivors were unable to re-establish it. [133] [226] [221] [731]

"(30)" Tsaxhlow: on the east side of the fiord about four miles above the last-named. A small town, whose inhabitants lived on the catch from their ocean fish-trap; it was recently deserted. [226]

*Ocean fish-traps work as follows:—A pen is made by a series of stakes, into which the salmon enter at high tide. It is then closed and, as the falling tide lays bare the sand, the imprisoned fish can be scooped out by hand or by hand-nets.

*McIlwraith did not visit either South Bentinck Arm, or Kimsquit, but it will be convenient to continue the use of asterisks to mark those towns which are said to have been inhabited at that time. [175]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 reliable traditions of Carrier settlements there. The probable explanation is that the Bella Coola formerly extended over the area, either in actual fact or according to mythology, but were supplanted by the Carriers.

175 The Dean River is called Nulɔl, and the generic name for the people of the Dean valley is Sutslɔmx. About eighty years [101] ago a smallpox epidemic so reduced the villages on the Kims- [164] quit that the survivors abandoned them and moved to the [731] Dean. At that time a certain Kimsquit man is believed to have said: "We will take their places and kill even their dogs."

Since that time, the joint settlement has suffered one [164] epidemic after another, until a mere handful of the people [731] survive, and they are almost entirely descended from the Kimsquit River immigrants. Within the last few years, these have requested permission from the Bella Coola to abandon Kimsquit entirely and live among them. The two groups have [628] always been on the best of terms, but the Bella Coola have not forgotten the fate of the Dean River people and have been unwilling to admit the Kimsquit survivors.

Villages on the Kimsquit River, Sä·tsk'

361 *(44) Sä·tsk': this large and important town, at the mouth of the river, was deserted at the time of the smallpox epidemic.

*(45) Nuxwlst: this settlement can be grouped with the last-mentioned, although situated on the shore of Dean Channel, at the site of the present Manitou Cannery, six miles away. No meaning of the name is known.

Tribal Organization

619 The subject of this monograph is the people of the above forty-five villages. They will be referred to as a tribe, and as this term is customarily limited to a political unit, a brief justification for its use is necessary.

342 Each Bella Coola village consisted of a single row of houses, 361 built along the shore of a river or the ocean. The front doors

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 781 626 their faces. In spite of what he may have seen, the lad cannot rid himself of the supernatural fears with which he has been inculcated from childhood, and the experience is terrifying to a degree. It may be that he has seen some of the whistles, and thereby learnt that the strange sounds are made by men, not by supernatural beings. In this case he is shown their mechanism in detail, and warned of the dire fate which will befall him if he tells others of his knowledge. Fear impels him to silence, and at the same time he realizes that what he has discovered has placed him in a superior position to that of his former associates. He feels, too, that he has been admitted into the ranks of the society in which his father, grandfather, and ancestors have distinguished themselves, and that it would be desecration to make light of what they have held sacred. Finally, an initiate does not at first grasp the fact that all the rites are deceptions, and by the time that this is apparent to him he has become so thoroughly a part of the organization that he has no thought of betraying his associates, upsetting a vital part in the complicated fabric of Bella Coola life, and exposing himself to ruin and death. A logical white man might think these considerations insufficient, but the existence of the society proves that the varied motives operate so strongly that a young man does keep silence. Some informants state that hypnotism was formerly used to ensure obedience. [828]

*575 ● 176 781 424 The kukusiut are always ready to deal with an emergency such as sometimes occurs in spite of every precaution. It is remembered that about one hundred and fifty years ago during a dance at the village of Nuqāymāts, a figure, representing one of the supernatural beings, had the misfortune to drop his mask, the strings by which it was tied having worn through. The house was crowded with uninitiated to whom the deception at once became apparent. For a moment there was wild confusion, but the senior kukusiut rose to the occasion and closed the door, allowing no uninitiated person to leave. Then a kusiut was sent out with a whistle which he sounded as if the supernatural being of which it was the voice was growing nearer and nearer, till finally a thump was heard on the roof. 575*

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

O . . . , cried out the kukusiut, "it is my patron." 176 ●

The uninitiated were told that in consequence of the disaster, the supernatural beings had sent calls to this earth for all within the house. Even small children were admitted on this occasion. Those kukusiut in whose families were dormant prerogatives at once explained to their relatives that the call was from the patron of one of these, and that henceforth the person addressed was a protégé of that being. But even with the assistance of all the kukusiut, there were not sufficient privileges for all who had seen the accident. The explanation hastily agreed upon for those who could not otherwise be provided with prerogatives, was that a supernatural being mentioned in the myth from which the uninitiated had derived his ancestral name had come as patron. Repositories were stated to exist in various places near the village for the designations thus created, and order had been restored before morning. This event was described by so many informants that its historical accuracy can hardly be challenged. Those so initiated were said to have become "kukusiut under easy circumstances"; as prerogatives they had merely the right of singing about their respective patrons, not of performing any particular dramatic dance; but they were, none the less, fully qualified members of the society. The prestige and influence of this organization can be estimated by the fact that it was thus able to carry through a wholesale initiation without its secrets becoming known in adjacent villages. Those admitted, though realizing that deception was being practised, were so overawed by the other members of the society that they accepted what was told them without question, entirely failing to use their common sense. Thus, this incident, which had at first threatened disaster, ultimately reacted to the advantage of the kukusiut. It is true that their prestige was somewhat diminished by the admission of young people, but in compensation they claimed many new patrons, including several regarded with veneration owing to their occurrence in ancestral myths. Since the latter 575*
176

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

575
[176]

part of the last century it has become customary to explain the dropping of a mask as due to a sudden call to the bearer.

Another means by which the kukuxiut protect themselves from doubting non-members is by the use of spies. The marshals (II, p. 16) of the society select some intelligent youth and ask the consent of his father, or other guardian, to make him a spy. If this is granted, the youth is lured into the woods and carried forcibly to the sacred meeting-place, where he finds the senior kukuxiut of his village seated, an awe-inspiring band. They explain to him the deceits used, show him the whistles and other equipment, and instruct him that it is his duty to inform them if he hears any uninitiated person casting doubts on the rites of the society. Proud of his trust, and fearful of what [626] would happen should he fail to carry out his duties, the spy begins his work. Ignorant of his knowledge, the uninitiated have no hesitation in talking with him and if he hears one of them expressing doubts as to the powers of the society, or telling that he has seen the sacred meeting-place or some of the regalia, he at once notifies one of the marshals. The over-confident person is then initiated. Thus the kukuxiut are constantly recruiting their strength from the most intelligent uninitiated, thereby adding to the influence of their society and lessening the dangers from non-members.

Sometimes a man is forced to undertake the task on account of too great knowledge of kuxiut matters. The following incident, related by a spy, is worth recording as a concrete example of this point:

Between 1870 and 1880, a Rivers Inlet Cannibal performed the Cannibal dance in Bella Coola, presumably being entitled to do so by a Bella Coola name and prerogative. During his period of seclusion he died [961] from a sudden hemorrhage, and the uninitiated were told that he had been carried away to the mysterious regions of the sky, the customary explanation in such circumstances. Soon afterwards some Bella Coola returned from Victoria, and an old woman told them the news, ignorant of the fact that an uninitiated lad of fifteen had entered the house and was listening eagerly. A careless movement betrayed his presence to the horrified kukuxiut and the boy fled, terrified at the turn of events.

[The Dance of Noakxnim]

*575 while X dances to and fro behind the fire. In succession the *796 six songs previously composed are resung and X dances to 533 each. The singers would be disgraced should they forget either a tune or a text, so they take advantage of lsuxtämem to practise them all. Later in the season, when numerous kukusiut have received calls, the singers beat out the time and words for each and the owner dances. The general effect is remarkably impressive in the dim light of one of the large wooden houses, nor is the music displeasing to the ear. After the singing of X's seventh song, there is a pause while food is distributed amid the admonitions of the marshals. Once more the singers take up their sticks and beat out the song most recently composed for X; the audience joins in softly and he dances. The kukusiut now disperse with the exception of the novices who sleep in X's house. He himself does not withdraw to his platform. The ritual of X's lsuxtämem differs from that of most kukusiut since his comrades have already learnt six songs for him. On most occasions they hear and practise one only, to which he dances in the manner described.

*575 The next day is nusiutälsap. About eleven o'clock in the *796 morning the heralds go to every house calling out:

532 Tlpänap, llpänap, kukusiaot, "Cut, cut, ye kukusiut."
*[203] The uninitiated do not realize that this is an invitation to gather to cut wood for masks. X, or his relatives, always provides a meal which is eaten before the main work is attended to. Then the singers group themselves and compose still [533] another song[11] for X, with the same theme, but different words, as the one composed the previous evening. When ready, they chant it loudly so that all can hear and learn, and then sing it with the audience joining in, while X dances. After a short pause, X asks as many of his comrades as he desires to go with [784] him to the forest to cut wood. Some member of the party carries a whistle which he sounds at intervals, thus warning

●[176]

[11] This would normally be a dancer's second song, the large number practised for X before the coming of his call being unusual. Not many years ago a powerful chief created the innovation of having one song only instead of two. Some kukusiut follow his example whereas others still use two.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 what cause this divergence is due. Mythology and religion are so closely [171] connected that a few words on the former must be added here. The principal deity of the Bilqula is Snq, the sun-god (compare sinq, sun).
773 The rays of the sun are his eyelashes. When prayed to he is called 776 Tsàt'an. In praying the Bilqula look heavenward. I obtained the following formulas: Atlkuw itlò'tlenq, Tsàt'an, 'Look on us where we are [782] going, Tsàt'an;' and Tsàt'an, atlkmalinowdò'tlq, 'Take care of us, Tsàt'an.'
[539] Snq is pre-eminently the ruler of the world, and does not interfere with the actions and thoughts of men. These are given by Masmasalà'niq. According to the tradition of the Bilqula, before the liberation of the sun, and before the world was made as it is nowadays, four deities lived on the earth: Masmasalà'niq, Yula'timot, Matlapò'eqoek, and Itl'itlu'lak. The raven wished to obtain the sun, but he was unable to liberate it. Then he went to these deities and asked their help. They ascended to the sky, and tore the curtain, which up to that time had been expanded between heaven and earth, hiding the heavenly orbs. The sun appeared, but he shone dimly, as though darkened by clouds. The raven ascended to heaven through the rift made by Masmasalà'niq, and found there a beautiful prairie country in which all the birds lived. Masmasalà'niq and his brothers painted them beautifully and sent them down to earth, giving each his song and his arts. The raven was not content with the sun, and resolved to try and find a better one. He flew to the house of a great chief, who kept the nsep'mts (ns-fem.place of, sp'm=the day is dawning). The nsep'mts was a small round receptacle closed all around like an egg. The chief guarded it jealously, and kept it suspended from one of the rafters of his house. The raven knew that he could not obtain it by sheer force, and resorted to a ruse. He assumed the shape of the leaf of a spruce tree, and let himself drop into the pond from which the chief's daughter used to take water. The girl drank from the pond, swallowed the leaf, and thus became with child. She gave birth to a boy, who was the raven himself. The old chief loved the boy dearly, and allowed him to play with the nsep'mts. This was what he desired. He ran out of the house, broke it, and flew away in the shape of a raven.

After the sun had thus been obtained Masmasalà'niq said: 'Let us make man.' He made the image of a man out of wood, but he was unable to endow it with breath. Matlapò'eqoek and Itl'itlu'lak tried likewise to carve human figures and to give them life, but they failed. Finally, Yula'timot carved the figure of a man and endowed it with life. He made a man and a woman in each country, and they became the ancestors of all the numerous tribes. Then Masmasalà'niq gave them their arts. He taught them to build canoes, to catch salmon, to build houses. He made rivers everywhere, that man should have water to drink, and that the fish might go up the rivers to be caught by man.

The Bilqula believe that Masmasalà'niq and his brothers still continue [176] to give new ideas to man. They say that any new design of painting or carving, or any other new invention made by a member of their tribe, has been given to him by Masmasalà'niq.

The religious side of the potlatch and of the secret societies has been referred to above.

774 The soul is believed to dwell in the nape. It is similar in shape to a [826] bird inclosed in an egg. If the shell of the egg breaks and the soul flies 764 away its owner must die. Shamans are able to see and to recover souls.
756

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PREFACE

THE term Bella Coola can be applied to the Indians who formerly occupied more than twenty villages on the lower Bella Coola River in central British Columbia, to their near kinsfolk on the Kimsquit River, and to those living at the head of South Bentinck Arm. Disease and changed conditions consequent upon the coming of the white man have so reduced their numbers that the last two groups of settlements have been virtually abandoned, while only one village remains in the Bella Coola valley. This is located on a reserve near the mouth of the river, and its four hundred inhabitants comprise practically all the survivors of what was once a tribe of several thousand people, with a distinctive language and culture of their own.

The material contained in this monograph was collected in this one village many years ago for the National Museum of Canada.[1] I was in the field during two periods that extended from March to August, 1922, and from September, 1923, to February, 1924. My field notes were worked up and the completed manuscript submitted to the Museum in 1926. Since that time it has suffered various vicissitudes. Recommended for publication by the Chief of the Anthropological Division, it passed through the hands of various editors; questions were raised about its size and the suitability of detailed studies of social anthropology in a government publication, and by the time these matters were adjusted, funds for extensive publications were unavailable and the manuscript was put aside. Since the aim of the investigation was to record, as far as possible, the sum-total of the complex and interwoven social life of the Bella Coola, I did not think it desirable to prepare short articles[2] summarizing different aspects, preferring to await an

[1] Then the Victoria Memorial Museum.

[2] The only exception was a short article on Bella Coola supernatural animals published in the Ontario Annual Archaeological Report for 1924-25, pp. 17-27.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 164 177 182

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 24 175

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nulpatchwanc winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Neclectsconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe-sub, a small stream rising 133 103

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NF6

133 the neighbouring Carriers, but Chilkotin as well sometimes 484 descended to the valley. On the coast, though the dense under-[648] brush prevented travel along the shore, the long fiords, shel-
[501] tered from the open Pacific, were ideal for the use of canoes.[16]
648 Comparatively lengthy journeys were neither difficult nor uncommon. The Tal-io people were usually on amicable terms with the inhabitants of Rivers Inlet, and the Kimsquit with the Kitlobe. The Bella Coola were accustomed to attend [574] potlatches at Alert Bay and Fort Rupert,[17] Knight's Inlet, and Bute Inlet, receiving their hosts, in turn, at Bella Coola. On the other hand, there was little friendly intercourse with the northern tribes, of which the Kitkatla especially were dreaded by the residents of the central coast. Until recent years the Bella Coola had no direct knowledge of other Salish-speaking peoples, although some of the Chilkotin told them of a tribe living far to the south, in the interior, whom they encountered in some of their wanderings and used to term Nuxálkmx, recognizing the similarity between their language and that of the [197] Bella Coola. A few years ago several Bella Coola attended a [871] boarding-school and were amazed to find that many of their words were understood by fellow-students from Chilliwack.

648 To sum up: The Bella Coola were in close contact with ● 177 the neighbouring coastal tribes, with the members of which they felt themselves to have cultural affinities. They recognize that they have received many ceremonial rites from their neighbours, and must have adopted other elements of culture which they now consider indigenous. It is probable that certain Bella Coola customs must likewise have been transmitted to other tribes, but such lie without the scope of this monograph. The outlying villages were in close contact with foreign neighbours, and tended to assimilate elements of their culture, [101] but, on the whole, the Bella Coola present a tribal unity with distinctive local customs, falling within the general pattern of coastal culture.

[16] For types of canoes, see Appendix A.
[17] The principal Kwakiutl villages.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

CHAPTER II

RELIGION

The Universe—Supernatural Beings—Supernatural Elements in Human Beings—Means of Propitiation

The Universe

ONE of the subjects about which Bella Coola philosophers pondered in former times, and about which definite information has come down to the present generation, is the universe. The young people, who have absorbed a certain amount of education from the white man, are scornful of the beliefs of their fathers, but it was possible to obtain the following information from a few of the older men and women. 772 [177]

They say that the earth is circular and flat, like an island. What it rests upon is problematical, though the assumption is that it is water. The world is kept from capsizing by the supernatural being, Sninia, who lives amid the ice in the far north; he grasps a rope to which the earth is fastened, and he keeps it steady by maintaining a tension on the rope to hold the world against his feet. Long, long ago Sninia was seen by human beings, but in later years no one has penetrated to his distant home and the Bella Coola have little regard for him. It was in the distant past, also, that human beings discovered the earth to be round, after certain semi-supernatural men had made a circuit of it. The four corners of space have not the same importance to the Bella Coola as they have, for example, to the Indians of the Plains. It is only through questioning that the investigator learns that the East is regarded as the top of the world, the South is the sun at its zenith, the West is the bottom, and the North is nothing, merely the opposite to the south. These beliefs play little part in the lives of the people. [776] [823]

Above our earth stretches an inverted dome, its edges resting on those of the world. This dome, the sky, is called cannot be considered as distinct subjects; not only does this present difficulties to the investigator in the field, but it also makes it no easy task to describe the facts so obtained. With many tribes it is possible to deal first with the social life, and later with religion, shamanism, and other associated topics. Such a form of presentation has many advantages and would, if possible, have been followed. Unfortunately, the social organization and rank of the Bella Coola largely depend upon their religious beliefs as expressed in their mythology, and an understanding of at least the main features of these is essential. In this chapter a summary of these has been made, leaving for later description personal relations with the supernatural world and other points which do not profoundly influence the beliefs and practices of the whole community. 128 771

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)0948
NEG Bellacoola NEG

Like other peoples, the Bella Coola differ considerably in the fervour of their religious beliefs. But even allowing for individual variation, religious experiences and beliefs are matters of frequent occurrence and profound importance to the great majority of the tribe. The supernatural world is close around them; a sudden thought is caused by the intervention of a supernatural being; the peculiar action of an animal is an occurrence fraught with grave meaning; an unexplained sound always receives a supernatural explanation. The old beliefs survive even among members of the community who are nominal Christians, and those who hold to their ancient religion live in an atmosphere of the supernatural. The white man, whose scientific training and logic lead him to find a natural explanation for an incident, is puzzled and somewhat amused at what he often calls the childish beliefs of the Indian. The Bella Coola, on the other hand, seeing the hand of the supernatural in every untoward event, considers the attitude of the white man in seeking a natural explanation to be almost irreverent. The mental attitude of the Bella Coola to the supernatural does not differ vitally from that of the white man under like conditions; but whereas to white men religious experiences are most unusual, they are common occurrences to 771 177 771

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

the Indian. A native convert, for example, finds no difficulty in understanding the Old Testament, for the frequent manifestations of the supernatural are like those to which he has been accustomed. One intelligent Indian went so far as to say that he was a better Christian than any white man because he believed every word in the Old Testament, while he had heard that white men doubted the historical accuracy of some of the stories there recorded.

The following incident illustrates rather clearly the attitude of the Bella Coola towards the supernatural. A few years ago a party, consisting of a number of Indians and one white man, was proceeding by canoe up Dean Channel. On the shore, some distance ahead of them, they saw what seemed to be a grizzly bear with its pelt showing the white sheen so much desired by hunters. Hoping for a shot at the animal, they paddled in behind a long point which offered a hidden means of approach. But as the canoe cautiously rounded the tip, within easy rifle range, all that could be seen was a white water-washed stump, somewhat resembling a bear in shape. To the white man it was obvious that they had all been deceived by this resemblance in the distance, but to the Bella Coola it was equally obvious that the bear had changed into a stump. A bear had been there, they had seen it, now there was a stump: "The bear must have changed itself," they said.

If the reader grasps the mental attitude which explains an optical illusion as a manifestation of the supernatural, he will be able to comprehend the important part played by supernatural beings in the lives of the Bella Coola. Creatures of this type, some anthropomorphic and others zoomorphic, range not only the mountains and forests of British Columbia, but also the waters beneath and the sky above. Their true home is on the flat country above the sky; most of them are merely visitors to this world. Supernatural beings of all kinds are termed sisut. The attitude of Indians towards them, and their concepts concerning them, can best be understood by the stories in vol. I, chap. x, and vol. II, chap. v. Bella Coola beliefs are

Lillooet Wealth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

775 hanging a number of bird and animal cloaks, representing ravens, eagles, whales, grizzly bears, black bears, and a few others. Alquntăm asked each individual which of these cloaks he preferred to wear. One selected a raven, another an eagle, and so on. Each donned his choice from the wall and immediately became the bird or animal chosen. Alquntăm gave each man or woman one or more names, and some food in compressed form; then sent him down in avian or mammal form. Even the animals could travel through the air like birds, and each landed on the peak of a mountain in the Bella Coola country, took off his cloak, and reassumed human form. The discarded coverings floated back up to Nazmăt·a. A few individuals, instead of coming to earth in animal form, swarmed down posts which stretched between the worlds.

•177 This myth is fervently believed by the Bella Coola. Even 773 Christian Indians, though they readily admit the biblical creation as applied to the white race, remain convinced of the manner in which their own ancestors came into being. At the present time, though most ancient beliefs are rapidly passing away, few, if any, Bella Coola doubt this account of the creation of their forefathers. Their conviction rests not only on the religious aspect of their life, but on the sociological. A man's [551 most treasured possessions are the name brought down from 424] above by his ancestor in the beginning of time, the knowledge of the form taken by that ancestor, and information about the place where he landed. A collection of myths of this kind is given in vol. I, chap. VI. Lacking knowledge of his first an-[622] cestor's form, a Bella Coola has slight chance of becoming a 554 chief; such lore is the birthright of every descendant of one of 561] these first people, and those without it are almost certain to be the offspring of slaves. The social aspects of creation myths will be described later; at this point a broad outline must suffice. Nazmăt·a, "The House of Myths," is the place in which these myths were made, and are now stored, two reasons for its importance in the eyes of the Bella Coola.

[775] Nazmăt·a is not only connected with the history of an individual's ancestors; it enters into his own future as well. When a Bella Coola dies, his spirit (I, p. 94) travels back on the path of his ancestors from generation to generation until it reaches the spot where the first one came to earth; there it assumes the bird or animal cloak used on that occasion and floats aloft to Nusmāt·a to live forever. Small wonder, therefore, that this house figures prominently in the thoughts of the Bella Coola, and that they cling tenaciously to a belief in it. 177 773 775

Hawaiian E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Knowledge of Nusmāt·a has been inherited almost entirely from the first ancestors of the Bella Coola, and only a few items of information could be gleaned concerning it. Most men think of it as an enormous replica of their own houses, but one individual, of philosophic temperament, expressed the opinion that it was without any inner partitions. His belief was based on the following incident: 772

Some years ago a young man died without apparent reason. His sorrowing father kept wondering: 772 787

"Why has my son died? Can he have committed some crime or made some mistake?"

Despondent and grief-stricken, for a whole year the man did not wash, ate little, and slept on the floor. At last he wandered away, alone, into the mountains. Night overtook him and he lay down to sleep without food. His son came to him in a dream, telling him not to lament, that he was in a better place than this world, for Ālquntām had recalled him to Nusmāt·a to use his voice, which was unusually powerful, as a means of conveying his wishes to the other occupants of the house. Thus comforted, the father returned home in the morning, washed, and again behaved normally. My informant suggested that cross walls would be a bar to the strongest voice, and that Nusmāt·a must consequently be partitionless.

Nusmāt·a contains not only the spirits of all deceased Bella Coola, it is also the home of most of the supernatural beings. These frequently descend to visit the earth, but always return to the house above. So far as could be learnt, the only being irremovably located there is an old woman, Snuiqulxāls. The most prominent article of furniture in Nusmāt·a is Ālquntām's seat, in the central position behind the fire. Over it is laid 772 776 * [775]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 is in the upper Bella Coola valley near Firvale, cause cold 773 breezes by blowing them through their anuses. uxlaxwan·i es-[821] pecially is a prominent figure in mythology (I, p. 670), but she has not appeared for many generations and her actions belong to legend rather than to either religion or social practices. It is said that she has four sons who once wanted to break a large number of grass stalks. Finding it difficult to do so on account of their toughness, they asked their mother to freeze them; she did this and destroyed every other plant at the same time.

* 776 Another anthropomorphic being is Sxk'lätl, the super-821 natural South Wind of winter who brings storm and snow.
● 177 The Carriers affirm that every icicle which grows down until [731] its end is in the snow is his walking-stick, and that to break one causes famine. Some Bella Coola have adopted this belief and carefully refrain from destroying such icicles.

* 776 Supernatural beings experience the same difficulty as mortals in reckoning the passage of time. A number of calendrical experts live in the land above, whose duty it is to record both months and years. They are called Älmınskällwaiyaix or [575] Älmınskitlnum. They have been seen occasionally, and are shown, as masked figures, at sısaok (I, p. 180), but not at kusiut dances. Two of these beings always appear, and they argue about their observations after the fashion of humans.

Another denizen of Nusmät·a of slight importance in the social life of the Bella Coola is Xemxemälotla, a friend and [575] associate of Älquntäm. He acts as patron of kusiut dancers, and in this manner is brought to the notice of mortals. In the land above his function is to cherish Ťläqmä·ks, a being resembling a diminutive man, created by Älquntäm as a child to all supernatural beings. Xemxemälotla is its guardian or nurse; and for safety he usually keeps his charge in the far distant upper land above Nusmät·a, where Älquntäm frequently visits the two. In some mysterious manner, Ťläqmä·ks has been [777] known to reach this earth, giving good fortune to the lucky finder. He is in many cases spoken of as "The Cherished of his disguises. For example, he once appeared at New Westminster in the form of a handsome white man; a Bella Coola girl yielded to his pleadings, but as soon as he had left her, she began to bleed and died.[11] He is so evil that shamans can rarely cure anyone visited by him. Sxaiaxwax usually carries a stick which he need only to point at a woman to cause her death.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Nor are men exempt from Sxaiaxwax's visitations. Sometimes he sneaks up behind a man and seizes his arms, so that he cannot see who has gripped him. He is soon released but no matter how quickly he turns around can never see his captor. Presently he begins to bleed from mouth and nose and death follows. Sxaiaxwax may become visible under such conditions. One old man stated that his son had once been playing outside the village at Kimsquit when he rushed into the house weeping and saying that he had been seized by a black-faced man. In a few minutes his nose began to bleed so that his father knew it was Sxaiaxwax who had visited him. Nothing was of any avail and the lad died. His approach is usually heralded by a series of grunting, explosive puffs, like those of a big bear rising sulkily. If, warned by the sound, the hearer turn sharply, he can escape danger. An informant described how, when camped on Labouchere Channel, he had once gone to the river for water with two companions, a man and a woman. They all heard these gasping puffs and turned, but he alone had jumped from the path quickly enough. The other two began to pant like Sxaiaxwax himself; blood gushed from their mouths and genital organs and they soon died.

Like other supernatural beings, Sxaiaxwax has his limitations. Though he comes to this earth he can travel only on fixed paths, invisible to mortals. If either a man or a woman is unfortunate enough to fall asleep on one of these tracks, it is [11] A curious blending of aboriginal and white man's beliefs was recorded in connection with this incident. It is said that as the girl's seducer left her, carrying his hat in his hand, she saw two horns rising from his forehead and realized that her lover had been Sxaiaxwax.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

including the dreaded point, Mesatche Nose, in human form. As each came in, water swirled in and the canoe was tossed as if in a whirlpool; if it had capsized the occupants would have been devoured, but on each occasion one of the hunters threw a morsel of false hellebore on the surface, which stilled the waves. At last Ḷomoqwa and his friends admitted defeat, granted the four fishermen the powers of shamans, and gave them certain prerogatives. 539 776 *

Though Ḷomoqwa is usually unkind to mortals, and is correspondingly feared, instances are known in which he has bestowed shamanistic powers for no apparent reason. The Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella know more about Ḷomoqwa than they do, since he is essentially an ocean being and the Bella Bella are ocean people. It is possible that the Bella Coola concepts of this supernatural personage are entirely of Bella Bella origin. This supposition is strengthened by the fact that Ḷomoqwa seldom appears in connection with the kusiut society, but frequently with the sisaok society, many of the rites of which came from Bella Bella. [756] 177 ● 776 * [575]

Since human beings can travel on the sea only by means of canoes, it is not surprising that the Bella Coola think of supernatural beings as doing likewise. Their beliefs include at least three huge canoes, manned by supernatural beings. The most important is that of Noākxnum,[16] the name of its captain, whose crew consists of a number of supernatural birds and the hermaphrodite. Every year they come from the lands of the salmon and the berries, in the far west beyond the sea, and bear these to the coast of British Columbia. This belief, which runs counter to the conviction that Ālquntām caused the animals and plants to grow, is merely one of the many inconsistencies of Bella Coola theology. Noākxnum comes every autumn on his way to attend the gathering of the supernatural beings in the land above, and his arrival in the Bella Coola River marks the commencement of the kusiut dances. He is one of the most important of kusiut patrons and his powers and functions are described in the chapter devoted to that 773 776 * [575]

[16]Cf. Boas, p. 40.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

775 walk backwards, or on their heads. Mortals sometimes see ghosts, but the apparition seals their lips so that they cannot [761] recount their experiences. Death invariably follows. Shamans [756] and other mortals endowed with great powers have been able to penetrate to the realm below, and the knowledge of conditions there has been derived from their accounts. Food is scarce in that land and ghosts are often driven up to earth to 264 search for it. Even a small morsel is enough to satisfy their 775 hunger, so that mortals throw fragments on the fire for the benefit of their dead relatives. If a person drop a crumb it is because a ghost has hooked it away from his hand; no wise Bella Coola ever picks up such a morsel, knowing that to do so would offend the hungry spectre. Deceased beings are 775 generally feared, although instances are known in which they have shown kindness, particularly to their relatives. Like so [575] many supernatural beings, they figure most prominently as patrons of kusiut dancers (see vol. II, chap. 1). Further information concerning them is contained in the description of life after death.

* 776 Not even a complete list of beings would exhaust the ●177 beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the supernatural, since any unexpected visitation is attributed by them to this source. For example, when Mackenzie appeared, the first white man with whom the Bella Coola had come in contact, they thought that he must be from another world. Some thought him a dead man returned to life, and others considered him a supernatural visitor from above who had fallen down to earth, as did their first ancestors. The latter view prevailed, and it was ultimately decided that he must be Qomcua, a supernatural being resident aloft of whom little was known. This name was applied to him, and it has since been given to all white men.[19]

[19]Although it was in 1793 that Mackenzie passed down the Bella Coola valley, a number of stories of that event were still remembered in 1922. What most impressed the Bella Coola was his ability to make fire quickly. One man, now living, stated that he had heard from his mother that her father had spoken with him. Traditions of this type are valuable as reflecting the interests of a people, but their historical accuracy may well be doubted. One Kimsquit man, for example,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The religious concepts of the Bella Coola are not limited to explanations of strange apparitions, nor to knowledge of a wide range of supernatural beings, anthropomorphic or zoomorphic. Many in whom they believe are invisible and intangible, though none the less potent. Almost every incident of life is attributed to the help or hindrance of a supernatural agency. If a fisherman constructs a salmon-weir, with a considerable amount of work, the Bella Coola ascribe his success to the assistance of some supernatural being or supernormal power; mere labour would never have sufficed. If a man has phenomenal success in hunting, it is because the supernatural has helped him in some way. It is not necessary that an anthropomorphic being should appear; they seldom do, but none deny that in some form or another supernatural ones have aided the enterprise. 771 776* [226] [224]

This attitude is clearly evident in Bella Coola beliefs concerning the construction of canoes. Many professions depend upon prerogatives without which a person cannot hope to succeed. This is not true of canoe-makers, although it is a great advantage to one of them if Yulätimut, the Master Carpenter, appeared to his ancestors in the beginning of time. Even without this in many cases a man can succeed in making a canoe if he is aided by a supernatural teacher, or Model Maker. No one knows much about this being, nor even whether there is more than one of them, but it is through his kindly intervention that a man is able to complete his complicated task. If carpenters who have left a half-finished canoe in the woods, hear adze beats, as they are returning to it, they remain away from the spot, knowing that their work is being done with superhuman efficiency by a supernatural artisan. Under such circumstances even a solitary man can construct one of the large, ocean-going canoes. About 1880 an expert carpenter, named Yelxhn, was making 396 776* [463] stated definitely that his mother had told him Mackenzie came down the Dean River when her uncle was a young man. As if to confirm this statement he added the inconsequential detail that Mackenzie, in dire straits for food, killed and ate a dog, and that he was given a marmot-skin blanket. 776* 177

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 watch without being seen. The creature acted as if frightened;
* 776 it kept looking backwards, then hurriedly scraped up some clams with its forepaws, dashed off with these into the forest, and came back for more. The chief decided to attack the animal. A frontal approach was impossible owing to lack of cover, so he landed and crept stealthily through the forest, armed with his Hudson's Bay Company's musket. Presently he stumbled upon a heap of clams which the animal had collected. He waited until it returned with another load, then raised his musket and fired. Instead of killing the boqs, its supernatural power was so great that the hunter's musket burst in his hands, though he himself was not injured. The boqs shrieked and whistled as if in anger, and at once hordes of its mates came dashing out through the forest. The frightened chief rushed out on the beach and called to his comrades to save him. They brought the canoe close to the shore so that he could clamber aboard, and then paddled away unharmed.

● 177 The Bella Coola believe that boqs, unlike most supernatural
* 776 animals, have not abandoned the country since the coming of 539 the white man. One man was most insistent that they still lived on King Island, and promised to point one out if a visit were made to that spot. This man refuses to camp at the place where, he affirmed, boqs are common. Another informant stated that though he had never seen one of the monsters, a horde of them surrounded his camp near Canoe Crossing for a week. Every night he heard them roaring and beating on trees and branches. A curious blending of old and new beliefs was recorded in connection with this statement. This man remarked that he was once gathering firewood when he heard the creatures closing in upon him. His head swam with terror, until he remembered that he was a Christian; he called on Jesus to help him, grasped his axe, and dashed towards the place from which the loudest sounds were coming. He heard the animals moving off all round him, but failed to see any of them.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 that tally posts have mentality, and suggested that it might 777 be these which attend the gathering of the supernatural beings at the winter solstice instead of an element from the human body itself.

One elderly Bella Coola, of philosophical temperament, described ḳwatlnusta in terms far removed from the accounts of tally posts. According to him, every individual receives this supernatural possession at birth, and it remains with him, in close association with his body, throughout life. It stays in front of his face, invisible, yet having substance, and con-
[431] stantly shaking from side to side. If a man fails to receive a present at a potlatch, it is because his ḳwatlnusta has ceased [828] to move. When stationary it is not transparent, and not only hides its owner from the donor's sight, but acts as a barrier to [756] his thoughts. The same man stated that this element can leave the body, can be seen by shamans, and that it is the one [775] which ascends at the winter solstice to Nusmāt·a. At death it is believed to accompany the spirit and the life to the land above.

177 There seems no reason to doubt that the concept of tally
773 posts is an ancient belief. Nor does the application of the term ḳwatlnusta to another immaterial possession of quite 777 another type destroy this probability. It must be remembered that within the last eighty years the Bella Coola have suffered not only from the tremendous upheaval caused by the coming of the white man, but have been reduced to a mere fraction of their former numerical strength by various epidemics. These factors have led to the partial forgetting of ancient beliefs, with consequent confusion. It is probable that the use of the same term for the tally post, intimately connected with an individual's life although situated in the land above, and for an invisible and intangible possession which goes in front of him, is due to this recent decay of ancient convictions. If this be true, it merely means that in former times the Bella Coola had yet another supernatural element to govern and influence their lives.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

782 next day the weather was fine. This particular method of 424 praying had been learnt by one of his ancestors in the begin-821 ning of time, and was afterwards transmitted in his family.
[785] With the coming of the white man and consequent decay of [177] customs, it has not been exercised since the death of the grand-father of the man from whom the information was obtained.

SACRIFICE

782 It might be expected that a clear division should be made between the subjects of prayer and sacrifice, but in practice they merge into one another. A mountain goat hunter, when camped near a glacier which he knows to be the haunt of some dreaded supernatural being, asks help from him. He wears [824] dyed and undyed cedar-bark decorations to make his request more ceremonious, and after the prayer throws them into the fire, saying:

"Please accept these, supernatural one," thus making an offering to supplement his verbal petition.

If he is even more cautious, or eager not to offend any [824] supernatural being in the vicinity, he throws on the fire tufts [825] of cedar-bark, eagle down, and scraps of food as well. Whether [261] or not the objects thus destroyed by the flames reach the being to whom the request has been made, is a matter upon which the Bella Coola do not theorize; but the generosity and self-denial of the donor is appreciated, and a favour is often granted in return. A man who frequently hears in his dreams the voice of some supernatural being, knows that it is taking an interest in his doings and endeavours to propitiate it, by placing on a fire titbits of any food he has obtained, saying at the same time:

"Wai, wai, wai," "More, more, more," that is, "May I receive more of the same."

A foolish person fails to show his appreciation of favours received, but a wise man never forgets to do so.

[502] Likewise a person is careful to propitiate supernatural [133] powers when in peril. Both at Kwatna and at Mesatche Nose, [756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

This endogamic principle will be described in greater detail in vol. I, chap. VII, but mention of it here has been necessary to explain the composition of the ancestral family. 582 [614]

In recent years there has been a tendency for some men to marry foreign women in order that they, or their children, might obtain new prerogatives. Thus a trend towards exogamy has arisen from the same reason which is supposed to have caused endogamy. The offspring of such marriages cannot enjoy the feeling of strength and comfort that comes from the membership of both parents in the same ancestral family, but some individuals have felt that this was offset by the gain of highly desirable foreign prerogatives. It is said that this practice was initiated by a certain Potles, father of a man about sixty years old in 1923. White influence probably had nothing to do with this radical innovation, although its wide adoption has been made more easy by the establishment of peaceful conditions on the coast. [554] [177]

Strong as is the belief in a common ancestry, it is unlikely that this would have sufficed to hold together the members of the ancestral family, without some definite prerogatives. These are of two kinds: names and land. 614 554

NAMES

The fundamental principle governing Bella Coola nomenclature is that each name must have originated in connection with some event of comparative importance. It is unthinkable to apply a casual designation to a child. At a person's death his name, or names, may be transmitted to a relative, and it is proper that the owner of a name should know when, by whom, and for what reason, it was first created. Tradition affirms that, before coming to this earth, the first people were all given designations by Alquntām; these have been carefully handed down and are still in use. One name cannot be given to two individuals; instances occur of two people having the same one, but in such cases they have different origins. One person may have several names of different kinds, each carrying 551 [168] [553] [773] [428]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

614 extinct, are unusual; normally, the group is largely centred in
621. one village, but with members scattered in other localities. There is no central organization. It is generally recognized that such a unit belongs in the village where its first ancestors settled, and the leading chief of that village is, therefore, an important person in the family, though without status of [622] "head" of it. His advice may be appealed to in cases of dis-[553] putes concerning names, but he lacks judicial authority. Theoretically, the descendants of the elder of two first people are considered as "elder brothers and elder sisters" of those descended from a younger brother or sister; but this is nothing more than an accepted fact; it plays no part in the social life of the community.

552 In addition to human names, the origin myths include those 614 applied to dogs. The first ancestral group had dogs, and these 773 animals had names, or were given them by their powerful masters. Ever since that time their descendants can apply these designations to their own dogs. It is unnecessary to validate such names, but no two canines can be given the same one at the same time, according to the rule which governs the bestowal of human names. This matter was not investigated in detail, and the only dog's name collected was one for which [539] the origin myth is as follows:

When Tal-is was first settled in the beginning of time, the houses were built in parallel rows, one above the other, up the side of a steep knoll. At the very top was a toilet-house, built over such a steep incline [514] that excrement rolled down the hillside. In consequence, one of the early chiefs living there gave to his dog the name, Nuk̓ʷnmatl di mutl', "Rolling excrement," which has since been preserved in the ancestral family of his descendants.

LAND

124 Great difficulty was experienced in obtaining information 423 about land tenure. The Bella Coola resent keenly the way in which their land has been occupied by white settlers without,
●177 according to their standpoint, proper compensation. Questions on this subject always excited them, but every effort was made to verify the following statements.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

As with names, the easiest way to understand the rights of the ancestral family in land is by first considering the mythological explanation, which mirrors conditions as they existed at the coming of white men. On reaching this earth the first people are believed to have prospected for suitable settlement sites, places where sālmon and olachen could be caught, and if possible, near side valleys where berries were abundant. Here they released the animals and plants which they had brought with them, on which they thenceforth subsisted, in accordance with the supreme deity's instructions. The members of the group pre-empted these areas for themselves. Waste land, far from any village was, and still is, free to anyone. A few years after the first settlements had been made, according to the myths, the supreme god sent down to Kimsquit a certain Ālquntām who allotted and marked the territory which was the property of each community; at that time a village consisted merely of a group of the first settlers. No similar myth was recounted for either Bella Coola or Tāl·io, although their concepts with regard to land are identical with those of the Kimsquit. This really gave a sacred sanction to the possession of land, an important matter to a people so religiously inclined as the Bella Coola.

The system of land tenure follows the same somewhat abstruse principles that govern the possession of names in an ancestral family. Hunting and collecting grounds appropriated by the first people, or by their immediate descendants, are the property of their offspring, the ancestral family. The Bella Coola term for such an area is sol'loam, also called, sixsnumsta, which means "Food Supply."

It will thus be seen that a hunting-area is not the property of any single individual, but belongs to a group of persons, most of whom live in a single town. The relatives of a man who intends to give a potlatch usually give him, temporarily, exclusive rights to the hunting-ground. As with names, there

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the Germans it would have been moral and proper according to Bella Coola ethics, but to take land was unheard of. 423 [727]

Since land is only valued for hunting or collecting purposes, it is not divided into small areas. Any man can build his house at will near the village. It is said that at Kitlobe the crab-apple trees are the property of different ancestral families, themselves members of different tribes, but this is unknown in Bella Coola. It may be mentioned that the Bella Coola somewhat naïvely assume that all other coastal tribes have [829] ancestral families similar to their own, although they recognize that some of them also have a clan system which has no counterpart in their social organization. Since the concentration of the tribe on a small reserve and the beginning of [177] agriculture, a system of individual ownership of cultivated land has sprung up. It is realized that if a man clears and [428] cultivates a field, the produce is his own, and he can will this land to whomsoever he pleases. Likewise a man who rings a tree to kill it for firewood is the sole owner. The Bella Coola regard uncultivated land in the reserve as being at the disposal of anyone, a concept which appears not to have been taught them by any white administrator. Its origin seems rather to lie in the old belief that any unpreëmpted land, far removed from a village, can be used by anyone. It is recognized that the reserve cannot be considered as a sel'elam belonging to any ancestral group, hence it is free to all. One corner of it, however, includes the lower part of a side-valley formerly used by the people of Tsmoil. An old man, whose ancestral family lived in that village for generations, has set his bear-traps in [614] this corner of the reserve for a number of years without interference from other hunters, who go far afield with their traps. Even within the limits of the reserve it is felt that this man has the prime right to that area for the use of himself and his family.

Theoretically an ancestral family may die out. Several 614 accounts were received of old men who, believing themselves 428 to be the sole survivors of their family, bequeathed their names 721

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

(3) The bearing of exceptionally well-behaved children; 614
(4) The bearing of exceptionally naughty children; 827
(5) Disposition to steal;
(6) Uncontrollable sexual desires;
(7) Sudden death, that is, members of certain ancestral families are less apt than others to die of disease or old age;
(8) Death by drowning. One informant, in whose family this is a tendency, has twice been thrown into the water and barely escaped. He fully expects to meet his fate in this manner;
(9) Insanity (not a common malady); [158]
(10) Dribbling at the mouth with increasing age;
(11) Liability to contract the skin disease known as tofaly. With regard to the transmission of this disease the surprising information was received that if a relative of a sufferer should drink from the same bucket or use the same spoon as the patient, he is likely to contract the disease, whereas another person can use them with impunity. This statement may be based on a knowledge of germs learnt from the white man, and warped by a belief in inheritable tendencies, although it is amazing that the theory of germs could have reached the elderly Bella Coola. Possibly this statement is a relic of an old belief in the transmissability of disease through contact, but it is more reasonable to ascribe it to white influence. 614 827 753 177

In a later chapter an account is given of certain occupational abilities, including that of carpentry, which must be confirmed and validated by presents. The above are quite different; they are either present or absent without any action on the part of the individual. 614 827

The Village Community

The village community referred to in the preceding section consists, fundamentally, of the descendants, traced in the patrilineal line, of the reputed first settlers to occupy a site. Since a Bella Coola always describes himself as a native of such-and-such a town, it follows that the village community 614 621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

342
211
778 in dances. In front of most houses rises a short totem-pole,* either pierced for the doorway, or standing on the opposite side of the sidewalk.

The Family

It is probably no exaggeration to say that in every part of the world the most important social unit is the family. It certainly is among the Bella Coola, yet its lack of definite social obligations makes it difficult to define. Reduced to minimum size, the family consists of a man, his wife, or wives, and his children. Such a unit occupies one of the bedrooms of a large house, and it is to such a family that an infant automatically belongs at birth. Disregarding for the moment ceremonial obligations, which are shared by others, it is the father and mother who are responsible largely for the upbringing of the child. Such education as he receives comes from them, with the assistance of members of the ancestral family. This is chiefly imitative; a boy, as he increases in strength, follows his father on hunting expeditions or fishing. The mother teaches her daughters how to make baskets, and they follow her when she gathers berries, or when she cooks and performs household duties. The Bella Coola are fond of children, in many cases to the extent of over-indulging them, and they grow up amid the open life of the large houses, absorbing information of all kinds without being aware of so doing.

594
[851]
594
868
855
861

Only two kinds of functional training need be mentioned. A wise father carefully trains his sons to remember their debts (I, p. 369), and the method of teaching ancient myths has already been described; otherwise there is little direct instruction. On the other hand, parents devote great care to furnishing their children with every possible means of strengthening their supernatural elements on which success depends. These can 594

869

*Since the Bella Coola believe that totem-poles were used by their ancestors in early times, they are included in this description of a village, without reference to their development in post-European times. This account is compiled from descriptions given by elderly informants; it is inevitable, therefore, that changes due to European contact may be included.

[177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of the father or the mother. In June, 1922, a Bella Coola girl had reached the age of about six months without having received a name. There was much adverse criticism about the parsimony of her father's father and her mother's father, who were held equally to blame, but who had really been deterred by fear of the law prohibiting the potlatch. 612 614 553

As a child grows older he is helped in the performance of ceremonial rites by his parents and by their brothers and sisters. In this, too, it is considered a mark of poverty if only the parents take part. If a man's own children do not appear likely to carry on the traditions of his ancestral family, he has no hesitation in favouring the children of either a brother or sister, since, like his own, they are all members of the same ancestral family. Especially in Kimsquit[11] it is customary for a man to help his sisters' children; not that there is any lack of knowledge of the real father, but rather as a mark of respect and family feeling displayed by a man to his sister. Moreover, in both Bella Coola proper and in Kimsquit, it is most improper for a name which a man has raised to a position of dignity by the expenditure of much goods to be passed to his own son; it should go to a distant relative. When a father validates a name for his child it should be one long dormant. 593 604 852 [558] [614] [553]

One aspect of the manner in which the family merges imperceptibly into the ancestral family can be seen in the inheritance of names. When a man calls his relatives together to make his will he is guided in the choice of recipients by the characteristics of his children. An able son receives much from his father, but lazy children are slighted without hesitation. This is particularly true of names with which are bound up valuable dance prerogatives, whereas, as previously mentioned, ancestral names of which the importance depends 593 614 428 553

[11]According to an intelligent Bella Coola informant, a Bella Bella pays greater attention to the children of his brothers and sisters than to his own offspring, and the same man expressed the opinion that the Kimsquit practice was due to Bella Bella influence. Kimsquit informants denied this, though emphasizing the important part taken by an uncle in obtaining prerogatives for his sisters' children, in some cases to the detriment of his own, which is rare in Bella Coola. [184] [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

differentiate between cross- and ortho-cousins, and the unsystematic groupings of nephews and nieces show "family," as opposed to classificatory, principles. Finally, rhetorical terms for the ancestral family, for many ancestors, and many descendants, correspond to the importance of a large number of relatives in Bella Coola thought. 601 [602]

In many parts of the world the classificatory system of relationship occurs where the community is divided into clans. The occurrence of some of these features among the Bella Coola raises the question of whether or not they should be regarded as survivals from an earlier clan form of social organization. The Bella Coola may once have had clans, but their relationship system does not furnish any real evidence to this effect. The reciprocal terms really have the significance, "Relation by marriage of the same generation," or "of a generation once removed," a form of address which does not require explanation in any ancient form of social organization. Moreover, the importance of the eldest child, as potential transmitter of the glories of the ancestral family, is sufficient reason for differentiating brothers and sisters in terms of their relative ages. This feature suggests that in former times this was more important than it has been in the recent past. It is not implied that the Bella Coola never had a clan system, as such may have been the case many generations ago, but their kinship terminology can be explained without that hypothesis. The somewhat wide application to cousins of terms which are properly limited to brothers and sisters may easily have been derived from a process of copying. The Bella Coola are well acquainted with the clan system of the northern coastal tribes, so that it is by no means impossible, or unlikely, that they should have adopted the principle of applying the same kinship term to many individuals, and hence to members of their own ancestral families. Finally, the somewhat vague and unsystematic application of terms to relatives according to whether or not they are members of the immediate family, is a feature not at all surprising in view of the essential fluidity of Bella 601 614 178 [561] [177] 601 ened by the age-long power of his ancestor. Finally, in old age, a powerful chief is careless where he seats himself; his fame is so great that he can afford to disregard all conventions.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554
556 622
[183]

POWER OF CHIEFS

It will be seen from the foregoing that chieftainship among the Bella Coola does not depend on hereditary rank, still less on an elective principle, but on the individual's prestige as displayed, especially in his ability to acquire for himself a firm seat by the giving of presents. As he continues to do so his influence becomes ever greater. Consequently, it is impossible to state clearly what are the powers of a chief; such depend upon his prestige and influence. For a Bella Coola chief has no executive or judicial authority; what deference is shown to him depends on his success as a man, a factor which is constantly rising or falling.

The coming of the white man has enabled the Bella Coola to earn comparatively large sums of money by trapping and fishing. This in turn has enabled nearly everyone to give at least one potlatch, a very different state of affairs from that which prevailed in the last century when it required years of toil for a man to amass the necessary food and skins. Consequently, in many towns there were no men who had given potlatches, so that a man's prestige was estimated by the presents he had given at smaller ceremonies. Sometimes, moreover, a man preferred to increase his fame by giving rites of a different nature, such as hoxiut dances, and the presents then distributed might elevate him in the eyes of the community, to a position above that of a man who had given a potlatch. This, however, was unusual.

[575]
[434]
[431]
[535]

After a fourth potlatch a man is accorded a position of eminence, and is termed a nemit chief. Nemit is an untranslatable word, with the significance of "passage," an allusion to the amount of goods which have passed through his hands. Jealous and vulgar-minded persons pun on the word, applying

[575]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

578
622
682
[54]

thus been slain about seventy years earlier. It appears that attempts were commonly made to kill chiefs by means of sympathetic magic, and it is quite possible that such attempts, becoming known, preyed upon the minds of the victims to such an extent that death resulted.

WEALTH

114
177
556

Since wealth is so important in chieftainship, it would be desirable at this point to consider the concepts of wealth. Unfortunately, it is impossible to give a satisfactory treatment of this subject. The coming of the white man altered the economic aspects of Bella Coola life so radically, and at such an early period, that concrete examples of economic interdependence, so useful in a thorough study, could not be obtained in the field. It is possible that greater attention to this subject might have produced more satisfactory results, but I am doubtful of this.

556

In the old days, "wealth" was of two categories: (a) Prerogatives, tangible or intangible, which could be shown, pictorially or dramatically, or could be expounded in words; and (b) Goods which could be distributed for validating such prerogatives. Individual possessions, unsuited for distribution, were hardly considered as wealth; a sewing-machine, a bottle of whiskey, a bed, or some other luxury might give satisfaction to the owner, but did not increase his importance in the eyes of his fellows. The value of objects was only for their use in ceremonial distribution; indeed, prior to such distribution, they were only of potential value. This attitude controlled Bella Coola economics in the early days of contact, and still influences their behaviour. A native store-keeper once ruefully commented on the fact that he would gain no advantage from the goods on his shelves, since he hoped merely to sell them, not to give them away.

[22]
[177]

184
496
556

A man's relatives were expected to help him in the acquisition of goods, but the extent of their contributions was never

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

present, and the fame of the initiate is thereby carried farther afield than would be possible if only Bella Coola were in attendance. Every individual duly secluded and given a nusuk name feels himself ceremonially allied to others who have had a similar experience, and they form a grouping which may be termed the nusuk secret society. 553 556* 575

The close connection between this society and chiefs is obvious from the presence of names of each type in the same ancestral myths. None the less, every chief, that is a person with duly validated ancestral name and seat, is not a nusuk, unless he has validated a nusuk name for himself and undergone the period of seclusion. Conversely, a man may be a duly authorized member of the nusuk although lacking a seat and the other marks of chieftainship. The relationship is, however, so close that the Bella Coola think of the nusuk society as a society of chiefs. Nusuk dances take place at potlatches and funerals, and occasionally at gatherings of less importance. Difficulties arise at the death of a chief who has failed to use some of his goods for the acquisition of a nusuk name. Such a case took place at the death of an important Bella Coola in the summer of 1913. Theoretically, he was ignorant of nusuk rites, but after much discussion these were used on account of his importance as a nuxnit chief, an instance of the manner in which a man's personal importance over-rules ceremonial dictates. 575 622 [553] [535] [766] [185]

The Bella Coola believe that only some of their nusuk name-prerogatives came to this earth at the beginning of time with their first ancestors, and that many more have been acquired later by supernatural experiences. These were especially common among their forbears as they ranged over this earth seeking places to settle in the beginning of time. No nusuk name can be assumed casually; each must have had a specific origin. There are few nusuk origin myths, though theoretically there should be one to account for every name. The explanation appears to lie in the undoubted fact that many nusuk prerogatives have been acquired comparatively recently 424 551 575 773 [77]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

177 from the Bella Bella, a fact emphasized by all. It is not diffi-424 cult to understand, therefore, why elaborate myths are lacking, 551 even if such were possessed by the Bella Bella. The Bella
575 Coola possessed certain similar rites to which the Bella Bella [773] prerogatives were in the process of being grafted at the time of the coming of the white man. There has since been general decay of ceremonial life, with the result that the whole situation is in a state of flux presenting great difficulties to the investigator.

428 Sisaok names are willed and inherited in the manner already 551 described for other prerogatives. The type of dance, and the 575 time of use, will be described in the following section of this chapter.

The Potlatch

556 It is unfortunate that an adequate treatment of Rank
128 among the Bella Coola requires a description of the potlatch since this ceremony, or rather group of ceremonies, includes a number of features which, logically, should have been postponed until a later stage of this monograph. An effort has been made to lessen references to non-ritualistic features by the description, just given, of the basic concepts of chieftainship and the sisaok society. Other ideas will require rather lengthy digressions, a method of presentation which seems preferable to the use of many foot-notes, its only alternative.

General Observations

104 In scientific and popular writings alike, the term "pot-556 latch" has been applied both to the public giving of presents, [431] and to the rites at which this occurs. But among the Bella Coola, such distribution of gifts is necessary at every ceremonial; accordingly, each is essentially a potlatch. There is one, however, which the inhabitants regard as the most important of all, the goal which every ambitious man aims to reach, the rite in which his ancestral myth can be displayed. In this

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of his village, hence they will not feel it incumbent upon them to intervene. But news travels, and in course of time the nuuk members of some other tribe will decide to send a raiding party against X's village. All informants agreed most emphatically that this custom prevailed among the coast people from the Tsimshian country to Alert Bay, but specific examples could not be obtained. The Bella Coola regard such a raid as the proper course to pursue, and belligerent tribes may have used an irregularity in the potlatch rites as an excuse for an assault. It is clear, however, that this custom never attained such prominence that it could be called a law. 556* 688 628

The following is an instance of the Bella Coola outlook on the question: 556* 688

The father of an informant had had such success in giving potlatches that his neighbours were jealous. On one occasion he prepared a representation of a whale, an elaborate wooden frame, fifteen feet long, operated by men concealed within and carrying passengers; this was a figure which entered into his ancestral myth. One of the carpenters who made it, bribed by a jealous rival of the donor of the potlatch, arranged that the lower jaw of the whale should fall to the floor during the proceedings. This revealed the mechanism of the structure. White influence on the coast prevented an incursion of foreign raiders, but according to this informant, the chiefs determined that his father should die, and they employed a sorcerer for this purpose. His father and eleven other relatives died soon afterwards. This man, the sole survivor, ascribes his escape to his adoption of Christianity. [578] [532] [578] [177] [754]

Another instance of the penalty which follows errors in potlatch ritual occurred a few years ago, when a number of young men used the cone-shaped whistles openly, as if they had been toys. The presence of the white man prevented any open steps towards punishment, but before long all the youths died. No one knows what caused their deaths, though probably they were due to an expert in black magic acting on the instructions of a senior nuuk. [534] [177] [754]

After the prayer, X and his family give more food to their guests, whose boxes containing what they are to carry away are increasing in number. By his lavishness, X increases his prestige in the eyes of his fellow-villagers. 556* are built. The central fire is laid in the bottom of the pit, a few feet above that is the platform where the guests are seated, and the ground-level is a few feet above that again. A few instances are remembered of houses having been built with two, and even three, of these tiers, or platforms. In those cases it appears certain that this type of construction was embodied in a myth derived from Bella Bella or Rivers Inlet people, where, according to the Bella Coola, large houses, of five or six tiers, were not unknown. 342 424 556* [177]

If he can afford to build a new house embodying the form [335]

X uses his own discretion in choosing his workmen,[1] avoiding only his own relatives and those of his wife. The question of pay is never broached, but it is understood that X will recompense those who have worked for him. The scale on which he does so will depend entirely on his generosity. This is one of the ways in which a chief helps the poor people of his village. More food is distributed to "sharpen the wedges." 335 556* 465

While a man is engaged on his allotted task any food or other articles which he or his family may obtain belongs to X. If a man who hews the planks takes his wife with him and she chances to pick berries while he is at work, these must be given to X who will distribute them with his other food at the potlatch, and it will be announced from whom he has received them. If a man's friends should help him to complete his task and then all go hunting, any skins acquired will belong to X; but when he repays his indebtedness he is expected to reward the worker, not only for his carpentry, but also for the berries or pelts. As X must give lavishly to prove his chief-like generosity, the collection of foods or skins by his workmen is profitable for them.

The guests have been passing in and out of X's house all day and towards dusk all again assemble within. Suddenly the door is burst open by a number of young men carrying a large log, like a battering-ram. The majority of the bearers are ssaok, though they may obtain assistance from those who are not members of the society. The people within the house spring up to eject the ram, and a sham battle ensues. Back- 556* [575]

1 [ie. to build a new house for a potlatch. -ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

with a number of the large cone-shaped whistles used for sisaok ceremonial. Towards dawn, sounds come from these, and sometimes a dull thump is heard on the roof, as if a heavy being had landed there. At once there is great excitement within the house. The voices of supernatural people prove them to be at hand. No one is allowed to leave except a sisaok siki[9] who is skilled in dealing with Mulakila,[10] also called Sixsixqwtnam, the supernatural being closely connected with the sisaok ritual. Those within can hear the voice of the siki raised as if he were speaking to someone at a distance.

533 575 556* [781] [776]

"Chief, you have come too early," he says. "The house is not yet ready. Please return later."

He is answered by loud whistling, which grows fainter, as if the being who made it were moving away. In reality the young men are merely blowing less forcibly into the whistles.

---

[9]The accounts of all informants agree that much of the sisaok ritual was newly imported into Bella Coola from Bella Bella. According to some statements, Pottes, a Bella Coola chief who died between 1870 and 1880, married a Bella Bella wife, also one from Rivers Inlet, and it was these two women who brought with them as dower certain sisaok prerogatives. It is said that previous to that time the Bella Coola did not understand the use of the large cone-shaped whistles, nor were they able to summon the supernatural beings to the youths secluded in the back-room, nor to dispel the beings at the conclusion of the rites. On the other hand, some Bella Coola claim that their first ancestors brought the whistles with them from the land above. It is probable that the calling in of the supernatural beings is a recent addition to the potlatch, which accounts for the contradictory accounts, but whether or not the whistles are a new feature is more doubtful. It appears certain that the prerogative of siki has recently been obtained from the Bella Bella. Siki means "the one who cures," and the name is given to the man whose prerogative it is to tend the kusiut initiates in whom supernatural powers are located. In Bella Bella there is a similar functionary for sisaok matters, known as a hai-alakila. Through intermarriage several Bella Coola have recently obtained this prerogative; in each case it is frankly stated that it has been derived from the Bella Bella. The Bella Coola apply to these, so favoured, the term siki, as they do for the kusiut "curer," though the Bella Bella name, hai-alakila, is used with equal frequency. The present siki have endeavoured to claim for themselves certain ceremonial functions formerly carried out by any sisaok. In this account of a potlatch it is assumed that a siki is functioning on all occasions, but in many cases any senior sisaok is considered sufficiently close to the supernatural beings to act satisfactorily. Until about 1870 it is clear that any sisaok was regarded as capable of doing so.

177 424 533 575 556* [425] [583] [563] [791]

[10]Knowledge of this being is said to have been acquired by the marriage of a certain Smasan of Kimsquit to a Bella Bella woman in the beginning of time. [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

capped by the mask. If the tutwinam represents Wasp[14] or Grizzly Bear, he does not make a circuit and a fluent sisaok explains that to do so would be unsafe owing to the ferocity of these animals. When the song is ended, the figure passes into the back-room. After a short interval it reappears, recrosses the house, and leaves by the front door, to the accompaniment of increased whistling. 533 556* 575 [535]

A few myths embody two tutwinam. In this case, a second figure presently enters and the same ritual is repeated for a second song. This usually differs, musically, from the first, being in three parts and with even more rapid time. More often, the second song is merely beaten out by the singers without the appearance of a tutwinam to supply an obvious source.

This is the normal, but not the only practice with regard to a tutwinam. In some cases the figure does not appear until after the singing of the first song, and the uninitiated are told that it has been attracted by the music. In this case it passes into the back-room, later to reappear and leave by the front door. An announcement is made that it has brought a strange power, that Y has become peculiar, and that his name is now, for example, Qwaqwasila. A herald bears this news through the village. A second song is then sung in due course. 556* 575

The tutwinam is difficult to classify among Bella Coola supernatural beings. It appears in the form of an ancestral crest, but the sisaok do not seem to have taught the uninitiated to regard it as Y's actual forefather. It remains as a supernatural embodiment of his crest, a materialization of an element of family history, and a motive for the use by Y of a mask representing the apparition. The uninitiated do not seek further; they have seen a wonderful sight and are content. [776]

Several of the older sisaok stated that the tutwinam concept was not indigenous to Bella Coola; it had been recently [177] [776] [773] [825]

[14]None of the first people came to earth as Wasps, but several received so much help from these insects that they are regarded as crests by the descendants of those whom they assisted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 556 adopted, probably as a prerogative obtained through mar-575 riage, from the Bella Bella or Rivers Inlet people. The diver-
● 177 sity in ritual supports this view. There was not sufficient [776] time for the procedure to become stabilized between the introduction of the concept and the dislocation of Bella Coola social life through the influence of the white man. It is also possible that the tutwinam was added to sisaok rites from the older a'alk society (I, p. 273).

532 Whatever may have been the history of the tutwinam, it provides Y with a mask, or with two, if two figures have ap-* 556 peared. He guards them jealously, though secretly, through-575 out his life and uses them only on rare ceremonial occasions.
It is one of these masks which will be brought out if one of his [769] family gives a dramatic representation of his return after death.
[428] A mask of this type is sometimes willed, but the legatee alters the design before using it.

* 556 A short pause follows the singing of the second, or third, song, during which some chief or chiefs may make a laudatory 575 speech concerning Y's family history. Then the singers again [537] sing the first song, and sisaok members of the audience join in.
[533] Similarly, the second song is practised. These two are sung, time after time, until the sisaok have thoroughly mastered them. When the singers consider that this has been accomplished, they tell X, who communicates with the sisaok man outside who has the whistle, and again its eerie notes are heard.
[781] Some of the uninitiated, believing that the supernatural being who gives potency to the ritual is at hand, hurriedly leave in fear. At the same time some of the sisaok conduct to the backroom the second initiate whose songs are to be sung that night.
The procedure in his case is identical with that described for Y.
Usually it is considered sufficient to seclude two on one night, though three may be attempted. When the songs of the last have been sung, food is distributed and the people disperse.

A few nights later the same ritual is repeated for two more initiates, who join their predecessors in the back-room. Here they spend their time in idleness, the only essential being the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Poor people, white guests, or others from whom no return can possibly be received, share equally in the distribution; the money goes to all to validate the transaction. On the other hand, X expects that the presents, if any, made to a few individuals after the general distribution, will be returned with interest. In selecting the recipients of these he has been animated, first, by the necessity of repaying old debts, and secondly by his desire to make good investments in the shape of presents to those likely to show their chiefly nature by returning with heavy interest. No request is ever made for such repayment, but as the transaction has been publicly announced, a man fears to fail to repay, since that would lower his prestige. No one may refuse a present, no matter how embarrassing it may be. 553 556* 575 [558]

After the gifts have been distributed the songs of the initiates are practised. Members of the susaok society join in with the singers; the other spectators listen attentively, full of interest, but take no part. X with his helpers then gives food to all, and they depart. [533]

Before the coming of the white man a potlatch was a rare event, and susaok members were initiated at local gatherings. The period of confinement was the same as that just described, but instead of merely practising the songs during the interval, the initiates appeared and danced to them. It will be convenient here to describe that ritual, emphasizing the fact that at a potlatch, when the initiates can be confirmed in the presence of foreign guests, this preliminary rite does not take place. 535 556* 575 177

After the distribution of goods the singers beat out[16] the tune of any one of the initiates, and all emerge in close succession from the back-room, each wearing a blanket, without distinctive design, a collar of dyed and pounded cedar-bark decorated with pendant weasel skins, and the distinctive susaok head-dress (see Plate 15).[1/2] This consists of a circlet of grizzly bear claws, surmounted in front by a small forehead mask; from the inner side of the circlet there rise a number of sea-lion 292 535 556* 575 237

[16]The present tense is used for uniformity.

1/2 [see cat. 116, facing p 218 - ANALYST]

242 whiskers over which is scattered eagle down. From the back 535 of the head-dress hang weasel skins. In Bella Bella it is said to
* 556 be customary for a skin to be added on every occasion when a 575 susaok is confined to the back-room. This may happen as many as fifteen times to the child of wealthy parents, and a few Bella Coola have adopted the practice of marking each with a skin.
[237] Usually, some six or nine are hung in two tiers, without consideration of the number of times the wearer has been in seclusion. The central figure of the forehead mask is a head with [532] a hooked nose, the recurved hook being joined to the face itself. This figure does not vary with the wearer's ancestral myth, and no one knows what it represents. This design is [177] said to have been introduced to Bella Coola from the north a few generations ago; before that time the head-dress consisted [237] of a circular band of dyed cedar-bark, decorated with the tail
[824] feathers of one of the large woodpeckers. The Bella Coola call it simply, "forehead mask." Each initiate carries a hollow
[532] rattle, carved in the shape of a bird, which he holds in his right [534] hand, belly uppermost. Long, long ago, when a dancer failed to do so, the rattle became alive and the bird flew away; hence, this rule has been obeyed ever since.

535 Each initiate takes up his station in some part of the house
* 556 behind the fire and dances to the beating of the sticks. The left hand of each is clasped behind his back and in his right he 575 holds the rattle and keeps it in constant motion by shaking his wrist. Ability to do this is one of the marks of a good dancer. Keeping the body stiff and the legs close together, he rises with slight jumps, barely altering his position on the floor. Sometimes he slowly turns around sunwise[17] in his series of jumps, at other times he does not alter his position. The head is bent from side to side and downwards at each jump, causing the eagle down to fly in all directions. Susaok assistants blow more of the material on to the head-dress at intervals (see Plate 16).[1/1]

[821] [17]The Bella Coola believe that the sun moves from east to south to west to [796] north. Many ceremonial movements follow this direction, which will henceforth be described as sunwise.

1/1 [See cat 116, facing p 219 - ANALYST]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

turns, clad in his ceremonial costume, including a long cape with pockets. With him come the four or five young men who have just finished dancing. The singers beat time furiously with their sticks, and the siki whirls round and round, working himself into a frenzy with twists and gyrations. Gradually, he approaches one of the initiates, and pretends to pluck something from his body. As he opens his hands the spectators see that there is something in them, what exactly, they cannot distinguish. Only those who are sisaok understand that, whatever it is, it has been palmed from one of his cape pockets. He pretends to throw this object upwards, at the same time slipping it back into his cape. As the article is, theoretically, thrown aloft the sound of whistling is heard, which grows weaker and weaker till it finally ceases. Meanwhile the heralds discourse loudly with one another about how the "eagle" or whatever it is, has been extracted, and is now returning above. The same procedure is repeated for the other initiates. This concludes the night's ceremony. Food is distributed and the people disperse. 556* 575 789

The employment of a foreign siki to expel the power from the initiates is necessary since this particular prerogative is not native to Bella Coola. Formerly the expulsion was done in the back-room without any elaborate ceremony. This rite marks the admission of initiates into the sisaok society although they cannot yet leave the back-room. It must be understood, however, that a youth may be initiated several times, on each occasion receiving new songs and perhaps a different mask. In this way his prestige as a sisaok is increased, and the son of a powerful chief will often be initiated ten or more times. A mask so acquired is preserved in concealment as the personal property of the owner who may use it at potlatches on future occasions. It will be the guise in which a dead person returns to visit the living. After being used for this purpose, a mask may be burnt, or willed to a near relative of the deceased, who slightly alters the painting before using it himself. [424] [177] 556* 575 [422] [532] [428]

It is somewhat difficult to understand the attitude of those [781]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

There now remains only the necessity of removing from the house itself the supernatural power with which it is firmly believed to have been impregnated throughout the many weeks of the ceremony. Should this not be done, it would be so strong that only sisaok could thenceforth live in it, and no kusiut rite could be performed therein. One of the senior chiefs, acting on X's behalf, requests as many siki as are present to go to the back-room. At the same time a drum is beaten slowly. The siki call out loudly, in unison, hoip four times. The whistles sound from the back-room with ever-lessening intensity, as if the supernatural being, whose voice they are, were going away. It is said that this practice has been comparatively recently adopted from Rivers Inlet: there used to be nothing of the kind. The siki re-emerge, and one of them stands behind the fire with his stick which he beats on the floor and calls on the audience to shout with him, "hi . . . ." This is done four times. It serves to purify the house from the supernatural power with which it has been saturated. The people then disperse, without food.

556 * 575 783 789 [177]

Goods from the general store are reserved to pay these men for their services, and also for cleansing the initiates from the powers with which they have been imbued, a rite that takes place the following morning in the presence of several siki alone. The initiates are brought from the back-room and seated in a close circle between the door and the fire.[11] A foreign siki is chosen by X to perform the actual cleansing rite. He has been asked beforehand and has come provided with a long pole and some soiled clothing. It is immaterial whose this is, provided that it has been in contact with a human body; the most potent articles are catamenial cedar-bark pads.

[465] [778] [841]

The siki covers the young men with a large cedar-bark mat. Then he fastens the clothing or pads to his pole and holds the end in the fire until they are smouldering. Then he swings it four times over the heads of the initiates and throws the stick [11]Behind the fire according to some informants.

*556 with the objects back on the fire. In some cases four sets of 575 cloths are used. This rite, which is regarded as very impor-
783 tant, frees the lads from the supernatural powers with which 789 they have been endowed, and permits them finally to leave the back-room and return to normal life, just as their earlier cleansing freed them from the tutwinam. During their period of seclusion no initiate can perform a kusiut ceremony of any kind. The supernatural beings of the two societies, though closely akin, are yet independent, and it would be unthinkable for a man to enter into contact with the two at the same time, unless he should be the owner of a rare prerogative enabling [424] him to do so. Only a few men have the right, which un-
[177] doubtedly was derived either from the Bella Bella or the people of Rivers Inlet.

*556 X pays the functioning siki with new clothing. This com-575 pletes the whole ceremony. The guests either return home or adjourn to some other house where a potlatch is taking place, [465] but no rites mark their departure.

*556 Such, then, are the principal features of the Bella Coola
171 potlatch. Without making a careful comparison of its features with those of neighbouring tribes, the following points stand out with great clearness:

(1) The basic concepts of the potlatch in Bella Coola are the same as those of the rite practised elsewhere on the coast.

(2) A potlatch has not the same importance at Bella Coola as it has on other parts of the coast, especially among the Kwakiutl. All informants stated repeatedly that they did not [186] carry their potlatches to the same lengths as did the "foolish" Kwakiutl, nor were they as keen financiers. A Bella Coola would never entirely impoverish himself by lavish giving.

(3) The potlatch, though fundamentally the same as it is elsewhere on the coast, has certain rites characteristic of the locality. The central Bella Coola feature, the return of a dead ancestor, is not equally important elsewhere. It would be interesting to be able to trace the history of this. The most probable conjecture, and it is impossible to make more than a conjecture, is that it is a concept which has developed among the Bella Coola in association with their specialized theology and has been incorporated into the potlatch complex. On the other hand, the return of the dead may be an old feature, decayed in other tribes through the ever-increasing economic aspects of the potlatch, which are of less import in Bella Coola. Whether or not Mutlakila is of Bella Coola origin is questionable; he may be merely an altered form of a supernatural being found among other coastal tribes. 556* 171

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(4) The potlatch concept, that is, the necessity of distributing presents to validate every transaction, and to establish a man's status, is an old custom. The whole trend of Bella Coola thought supports this view, and it is to be expected from the prevalence of the same idea among other coastal tribes.

Unquestionably, the introduction of white men's tools has made it easier to give a potlatch. In the old days, as informants reiterated again and again, it was a matter of years to save up the essential skins and goods, so that a potlatch was a rare event. Now a man is able to work in a cannery for a single season and earn enough for an elaborate ceremony. Accordingly, most of the old names have been duly validated, whereas long ago some of them might have lain dormant for generations. The descendants of old, influential families smile ruefully: 552* 177

"Now everyone is a chief," they say.

It appears that the facility for giving potlatches has increased the feature of the destruction of goods, in fact that this is little more than an excrescence on the ancient ritual. Thus it may be said that the coming of the white man has facilitated the giving of potlatches, has somewhat changed their form, but has not altered their concept.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 in the appearance of the poles. Sometimes one is erected at *556 the front door of the house with an opening at its base through 778 which all must pass to enter the house, or a pole may be solid
532 and stand on the opposite side of the sidewalk; the choice in [184] either case depending upon the usage recorded in the ancestral myth. Instead of a totem-pole, a chief may display his ancestral cloaks by means of paintings on the front wall of his house, or by carved house-posts supporting the longitudinal beams, if such had been used by his ancestors. Moreover, a chief entitled to display a totem-pole may choose to use only paintings. If he validates these by presents, they give him the same dignity and importance as a totem-pole, particularly if he cannot validate its construction by lavish gifts. Most Bella Coola poles are only about fifteen to twenty feet in height, and though
[171] it is possible that a few families had prerogatives entitling them to construct lofty poles, such as used by the Haida, it is unlikely that such were ever common.

When a chief who has erected a totem-pole before his house gives another potlatch, he may wish to put up a second pole beside the first. Occasionally two or three poles stand before the house of a chief, but one is more frequent or even none at [764] all. At death the pole is often taken to the cemetery where it acts as a memorial-post (I, p. 461). Otherwise it remains standing until some other occupant of the house wishes to erect another in its place, when the first is pulled down and neglected.

Coppers

*556 The Bella Coola use coppers for only two purposes: casting [769] on the ground upon which the representation of a deceased relative had trodden, or throwing into the fire when the figure has left the house. In either case, they are said to "make bone for the dead." Although used but rarely, the occasion when a copper is employed is so important that to obtain one and increase its value is a vital consideration for every chief.

[177] Most of the coppers now used by the Bella Coola are made [439]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of metal obtained from the white man, if not actually machine-made for trading purposes. They resemble the familiar shape found in all parts of the British Columbia coast and vary in length from about six inches to as much as three feet. There is considerable difference in thickness; some of the newer ones are thin plates, others are heavy and appear to be old. The early white traders realized the value placed by the Indians on their coppers and these were soon imitated and became important articles of barter. The Bella Coola state that many of the early Hudson's Bay Company's coppers were made of drawn wire, but this type seems to have passed out of existence, since all the specimens seen in Bella Coola consisted of flat metal plaques. 556* 177 439

The Bella Coola maintain that their ancestors have, since the beginning of time, used two kinds of coppers. One variety, known as lâlia, resembled the plaques produced by white men. This is the term in common usage for all kinds of coppers at the present time. The other variety, taitaimg, is said to have been thicker and heavier and was made by heating the metal in a fire, beating it into the required shape. Long, long ago, coppers of this kind were sometimes found in the forest by hunters who were thus rewarded for observance of ceremonial chastity, but most were obtained in trade from the northern tribes. One of these is said to be preserved at Kimsquit, but none is said to have been owned by a Bella Coola within the last few years. 556* [325] [439]

The Bella Coola believe that taitaimg can only be manufactured in one district, far to the north, at the mouth of an unknown river. There, it is said, the chiefs range themselves along the river bank, each armed with a spear, and each with a number of slaves behind him. When the tide is highest, salmon of some peculiar kind appear at the surface of the water. If one comes within reach of a spearman, he lunges at it, but invariably misses; then the chief drops his spear, seizes one of his slaves and kills him by cutting his throat. A small piece of 556* 773

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 556 773 flesh cut from the body is fastened to the point of the spear, making it so potent that when next the chief lunges at a salmon he transfixes it and brings it ashore. He warms the fish at a fire and then pounds it on a stone until it becomes a copper.

No Bella Coola has visited this distant river for many generations and the belief concerning the manufacture of taitaimy appears to have been handed down from dim antiquity. Coppers of this kind are said to have been considered much more valuable than the usual łáłia, but were always uncommon. In addition to their ordinary uses, they had a certain curative value. If the owner of one was ill, he used to clean it [755] with a rough stone and water; then he would drink four cupfuls of the liquid which contained minute fragments of metal. In almost every case a speedy recovery followed. In all other respects łáłia or taitaimy could be used indiscriminately.

Łáłia are likewise said to have a supernatural origin. When found in the forest, they are due to the supernatural salmon- [996] like being, ʌsiatl, having changed itself into one. None has been found in recent years because the ʌsiatl have moved away owing to their dislike of the smell of human footsteps and the taint of smoke.

These stories serve to emphasize the complete ignorance of [325] the Bella Coola concerning the methods of manufacturing coppers. It is possible that long ago they were able to make their own by pounding the native metal, but if so it is surprising that some traditions to this effect were not preserved. On the other hand, there is little reason to doubt their use of • [177] coppers, obtained from the northern tribes, antedating the coming of the whites. All informants agreed on this point, and the frequent references to coppers in mythology likewise point to considerable age. In many of the ancestral myths there are accounts of the obtaining of coppers by some of the [551] first people, and many ancestral names, both of men and women, are derived from them.

[237] The Bella Coola attribute the value of coppers to the fact

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

435 immediately before, or during the early stages of a potlatch, in *556 order to receive goods immediately, but with the proviso that [492] it shall be returned to him for throwing into the fire. This [426] method has the advantage of providing the chief with goods when required, and doubles the worth of the copper.

Coppers are not always rescued from the ashes and given to poor men. If one is still lying in the fire after several days, [764] the donor of the potlatch removes it and fastens it to the memorial-post over the grave of his deceased relative. It may be left there, or another chief wanting a copper may buy it from the donor and increase its value in the usual manner. Only a small price is paid in such circumstances, since the copper, having served its purpose, is practically valueless.

● 1177 The Bella Coola state that in ancient times coppers were 435 worth less than at present, and that the change in sentiment
*556 regarding them is due to Kwakiutl influence. All agree that the value placed upon them at Fort Rupert and Alert Bay is greater than elsewhere on the coast. The Bella Coola believe that the Kwakiutl distribute presents in respect to their coppers and that their values mount to enormous sums when the gifts are returned. It is clear that the importance of coppers, like the potlatch and other elements of culture, has increased in recent years through the influence of the coastal tribes.

*556 It is almost impossible to define coppers in the nomenclature of economic theory. They are not mere articles of barter, since they have no practical use outside the ceremonies of chiefs. Nor are they standardized units of trade or cur-[436] rency, since each differs not only from all other coppers, but [211] also at different periods. In a sense they serve as tokens of [532] what has been expended; representations of them may be carved and painted on totem-poles where they serve as marks of the goods which the chief has given away, but this is only [426] a minor consideration. A copper can perhaps best be described as an investment which can be applied only to one purpose, [435] "the making of bone for a deceased" person. It grows more valuable at every transmission in accordance with the goods ex-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

688 his relatives. This punishment is customary in cases of the 693 upsetting of a canoe. Death is the penalty for throwing refuse into the river, particularly during the summer, and until the [177] coming of the white man the River Guardian exacted it without hesitation.

THE PROFESSION OF UTTERING A DRONING CRY

424 At the appearance of masked figures representing super-551 natural beings, whether in tsaok or kusiut dances, many of the [575] women repeatedly utter a peculiar, high-pitched, droning cry
[463] which adds considerably to the weirdness and impressiveness
[431] of the occasion. Ability to do this depends on an ancestral [773] prerogative duly confirmed by the distribution of presents.
Many ancestral myths describe how some of the first women were given by Alquntám, or acquired in other ways, the right to drone, and mention is made of the name used by each with respect to this prerogative. Unlike the one previously described, many of the first women possessed this privilege, which is accordingly common at the present time. A name [553] of this type is usually confirmed in girlhood, sometimes even in infancy, and being of relatively slight importance may be validated at a ceremony of less dignity than a potlatch. One of these names is Nuuqwelelslaipen-a, which has reference to [773] the blue-green sheen of some abalone-shell brought from the east by Raven in the beginning of time, as described in the ancestral myth in which this name is included. For many [178] years there has been considerable laxity with regard to this prerogative, and women lacking it have even been urged to drone in order to add to the solemnity of the occasion and to increase the wonder of the uninitiated.

424 There is another similar prerogative, enabling the incum-
767 bent to drone at mourning ceremonies. In the beginning of 463 time, Smaoan of Kimsquit married Tlitkwaitl, the daughter of 773 a Bella Bella chief, who had this right. It has since been transmitted from one of her descendants to another at Kimsquit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE4 Bellacoola NE5

THE PROFESSION OF CARPENTER

As with singers, there are many carpenters who ply their trade without the advantage of an ancestral prerogative. They, also, may be expert and receive credit for their skill, but they can never achieve quite the distinction that comes to a man who has been made a carpenter by the distribution of presents. The latter may be so clumsy with tools that no one would ever trust him to make a canoe, or even a mask; but he is, socially, a carpenter, whereas a skilled artisan lacking a prerogative is admired for his ability but has no foundation of social esteem. In transmitting a professional carpenter's name, however, an effort is always made to give it to a youth with a bent in that direction.

The most esteemed carpenters are those who can make canoes, a trade which requires no special prerogative. In the beginning of time, Yulātimut was the canoe-maker par excellence; he assisted many of the first people, and no one can have a professional prerogative as carpenter unless this supernatural being appears in his ancestral myth. The Bella Coola ascribe the skill of the Bella Bella in carpentry to the fact that Yulātimut married a Bella Bella woman in the early period of the world and that many of that tribe are his descendants. In the old days, before the coming of the white men, carpenters were always respected as esteemed members of the community. Chiefs always cared for them, and they received abundant food at every ceremonial. None the less, they were not wealthy, and only in recent years, since the Bella Coola have realized the value put upon good craftsmanship by the white men, has it become customary to give valuable presents to carpenters. Ceremonially, they have considerable influence, since the carpenter who makes a mask usually decides who shall wear it and takes charge of the fitting and adjustment. He is also held responsible for any accident such as its falling when in use or for mechanical defects.

224 THE PROFESSION OF HUNTER

424 Another profession which is entered by means of an ancestral prerogative is that of hunting. Many Bella Coola have validated their right to this vocation, some by confirming names created by their early ancestors, others by legalizing dues brought down from above in the beginning of time. One of the latter is Lalaiwkila, "The Brother Off," so called because the owner is such a successful hunter that he can sweep mountain goats from the mountains as easily as an ordinary person can brush insects from a wall. Unlike the professions of carpenter and singer, it is believed that legalization of a hunter's name always brings success to the holder, perhaps because everyone is more or less successful, it follows that whatever good fortune is achieved by a professional hunter can be attributed to the validation of his prerogative. Others, lacking this assistance, may be proficient, but their success never carries with it the social prestige gained by a man who has distributed goods to substantiate the prerogative.

224 There is a difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as 424 to whether or not certain hunting methods are inherentlie prerogatives. With the introduction of rifles, these have long been discontinued, and no definite information was obtained regarding the social position of their users. Several of the older men believed that the contrivances depended upon ancestral prerogatives, whereas others stated that they were merely individual discoveries which could have been, and in many cases were, imitated by anyone. It seems probable that most of the following practices are prerogatives, although it may be that they are no more than special hunting devices suitable only in certain areas and, therefore, limited to the members of the ancestral family owning that particular locality.

224 The method about which the most definite information was 424 obtained, was one formerly employed by a certain Ts'aqalqiy to catch goats at Tal'ic. According to one elderly Bella Coola,

5:Mc:Dougall E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bella-coola NES

expenditure though he must forgo the prestige enjoyed by a 424 man who has been able to elevate his professional names in a 556 lavish manner. Selection is a constant factor in the social life 182 of a Bella Coola; the man who uses all his wealth to acquire a first seat cannot be "strong" in sunsi matters; the man who desires to specialize in kwiat affairs cannot afford to display an elaborate totem-pole. Amid these conflicting desires, it often happens that a man somewhat neglects his professional prerogatives, especially those of which the dignity has been slightly lessened through superior skill shown by individuals [535] endowed with no more than native ability. Upstarts of this [177] kind have always infringed upon professional dignity, and the coming of the white man has added a new factor which has almost destroyed ceremonial prerogatives.

A'alt Dances

The most important, as well as the most spectacular, dances 177 that occur at potlatches are those given by members of the 535 sunsi society. In addition to these, a feature of many pot- 575 latches is the performance of a'alt dances.[1] As already mentioned, from 1870 onwards there have been many changes in sunsi ritual; new elements have been acquired by the mar- [184] riages of Bella Coola to members of the coastal tribes, with the [196] result that details of procedure vary at every ceremony according to the prerogatives of the donor. Since 1900, the influence of white civilization has increased to such an extent that sunsi ceremonials have virtually been abandoned.
This took place at a time when the ritual was in transition, a state of affairs which rendered difficult the collection of coherent information. A'alt dances are associated with sunsi, but the addition of new features to the latter was accompanied by a decay of the former. Both societies have now almost ceased to exist, but whereas the sunsi organization was abandoned during a period of change and accretion, that [128]

[1] Called cuipa in Kwakiutl.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NES

177 of the a'alt came to an end when it was already waning in 535 importance. It was impossible to obtain as much detailed 575 information about the latter as was desired, and it is even 128 possible that some of the facts recorded in connection with nuxut ceremonial really belong to a'alt rites.

The right to perform an a'alt dance depends upon a duly 424 validated ancestral prerogative of which the obvious mark is 535 an a'alt name. Some of the first people brought down such 575 designations and dances with them from above in the beginning
[173] of time, a few were acquired on this earth as gifts from supernatural beings. Those who have rights of this kind form a loose organization which may be termed the a'alt society. This is closely associated both with the nuxut society and with chiefs, owing to the occurrence of these three types of names in the same ancestral myths. One member of an ancestral [554] family may use his goods to validate his ancestral name, another to make himself a nuxut, a third to become an a'alt, and an important chief, endowed with ability and wealth, may be able to do all three.

A'alt dances are less spectacular than those of either the nuxut or kwaxa' societies, nor are rattles or whistles used. The prerogatives of a member are limited to his name, the right to perform a certain dance, and the use of a song which commonly describes some feature of his ancestral myth. Four types of dances are considered to be a'alt; the methods of acquiring and using any one of these are similar, so it is unnecessary to describe the differences before the actual account of the performance of each.

554 If there is a dormant a'alt prerogative in the ancestral 575 family of the donor of a potlatch, he usually chooses to validate this as one of the features of his ceremony. He first consults his wife and other relatives to ensure that sufficient goods will be forthcoming, and if this matter can be arranged satisfactorily, he chooses some young relative as the recipient of the dormant right. It would be most unusual for the youth selected to decline the honour. Or some man, other than the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

575 574 535 [533] [525] [526] [178] presents to the singers and heralds who have rendered assistance. Instead of dispersing immediately, the guests may remain to gamble or wrestle. Since there is no solemnity attached to the affair, it is a time for indulgence in amusements of all kinds. These conclude the chief features of the a'alk dances. Probably they once played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola, but with the increase in importance of the nuaxé, they have decayed into little more than a form of entertainment.

A'alk origin myths

551 575 773 Theoretically, every Bella Coola a'alk should be able to record the myth in which his name is embodied, but few can do so. Of course if a man has been able to validate both ancestral and a'alk names from the same myth, that is his authorization for both. In many cases a myth is split, and the portion containing an a'alk appellation is given to some member of the ancestral family, other than the chief able to validate the most important ancestral name. In such a case, the a'alk can record little more than that his designation came down with a specified group of the first people. This, for example, is the explanation given by a Kimsquit nuxpual for his name Sneáiletc which came to earth with Smaxan (I, p. 332) in the beginning of time. Another Kimsquit a'alk, Tlaiyáłam, whose prerogative is to perform the dance of that name, states that it was brought down by Sinupal (I, p. 326), who assumed the designation of Tlaiyáłam after its performance. This early settler had the additional name of Wi'ináiac.

539 The two following origin myths were obtained in some detail:

Once,[1] long, long ago, Ilpantlm came to the conclusion that it was not good for the inhabitants of the world to be afraid of supernatural beings. He decided that the best way to dispel this dread would be to arrange a marriage between his daughter, Sanaw-a, and a mortal; so he [115] [177] [1] Related by Mrs. Willie Mack. European elements have obviously been incorporated into the first part of this legend, though the narrator considered the whole tale to be ancient.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 performance of rites of this kind. But sociological and ethical [182] concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year, or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly [577] displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a
576 major sin. Anyone who happens to pass a house in which a 574 meal is taking place must be invited to share it; to do otherwise would be considered rude. The person summoned must take at least a trifle to show that he is not churlish and too proud to eat with his host, while if he is hungry, he shares [177] whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of the family should be the first to taste any wine[1] as proof that [273] it is not poisoned, but otherwise he fares little, if any, better
[342] than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse [414] through the construction of individual family houses with doors and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suit-
476 able place for netting olachen or salmon must give some of his [226] catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, the first solicitor is given one, later comers, none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing is allowed to raise it and take some of the contents; if there are two fish, he may remove one, if many, three or four. To take all would be a [685] despicable theft, sufficient to brand the transgressor as greedy;
[626] hence public opinion prevents the system from being carried [224] to excess. A hunter who brings back several mountain goats or other large game is expected to invite his neighbours to a feast, which virtually means that he must share his takings.

556 Presents of this kind increase the prestigé of the donor who 431 has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are advantageous investments since others must reciprocate. The system is carried to such lengths that, until recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavours to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift returns as much as

[1] This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of home-brew.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 aided by alder sticks which beat time of their own accord. From this sight Kwatlnuslsa became a shaman and used what he had seen when he was giving a dance of his own. His brother Wāāksi went downstream until he came to a large house at Kākothn[58] outside of which stood a huge bull-head. No one was in this house and Wāāksi took possession of it.

A FRAGMENTARY ORIGIN MYTH[59]

Long ago at the time the world was first populated there were no rivers apparent, for such were confined underground in a cavern-like prison called Nusmātllixwaix, the approach to which was barred by a huge boulder. Not only were the rivers shut up, but with them were their occupants, including the salmon. First Eagle tried to break this barrier, but without avail; then Raven succeeded. Since then the Bella Coola River has flowed in its present course. But the Tcawat River was still in bondage, to the disgust of the olachen who wished to travel up it to the home of the chief, Qwamaxa'lis. The Carpenter, ulstlulāk, took pity on them and by breaking the barrier permitted them to reach their destination.

Origin Myths of Other Tribes

177 538 [424] As has been repeatedly stated, the Bella Coola have obtained many prerogatives by marriages with the members of neighbouring tribes. Among these are, according to their belief, myths dealing with the peopling of distant localities. Ceremonially and sociologically, such traditions have the same importance as myths that describe Bella Coola as the final place of settlement of the first inhabitants. Accordingly, they can be given at this point.

177 538 174 114 In the previous section the original landing-places of some of the individuals described is said to have been outside the Bella Coola valley. Boas, discussing this fact (p. 122), suggests that such myths may reflect the movements of the ancestors of the Bella Coola from the parent Salish stock. Though this is a plausible hypothesis, it is also possible that

[58] This place could not be identified.
[59] Related by Lame Charlie.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

177
538
174
114

a foreign myth, obtained by marriage, might have been altered in the course of generations to the Bella Coola pattern, preserving as the only foreign element that of settlement at a distance at the beginning of time.

ORIGIN MYTH OF Owiki[88]

539*

In the beginning of time Ālquntām decreed that four brothers should be sent down to this earth. The eldest, whose name was Ālkālālis, gazed down from a hole in Nusmāt·a and told his younger brothers to wait while he went ahead to reconnoitre. He took the form of a wolf and, as soon as he had reached the earth, went far to the east, where he obtained some abalone-shells. Then he returned to Ālquntām's house, left his spoil with his brothers, and again went off alone to the west. This time he brought back some copper. After this he was ready to settle, so the four assumed the form of wolves and went down to Calvert Island, Owiki, as the Bella Bella call it. Here they assumed human form and their wolf cloaks floated back aloft.

Ālquntām did not give them food to carry with them, but he told them they would find sea-lions waiting to be killed on Sea-lion Island. Accordingly they hunted on that island, as their descendants, the people of Owiki, have done to this day.

Ālquntām had given Ālkālālis a box containing some of the cone-shaped whistles used in sisaok dances. The three elder brothers decided that they alone should perform the sisaok ceremonial and that, accordingly, the youngest should be kept in ignorance of the contents of the box, as uninitiated people are at the present time. He was a mere boy and his older brothers used to leave him at home when they went hunting, but they had given him the most explicit instructions not to open the carefully roped box, containing their treasures.

All went well for some time, but finally the boy yielded to temptation and opened the box. His brothers returned unexpectedly, and found him examining the whistles, with his head almost out of sight within. They decided to kill him at once. They crawled up, closed the cover on his head, and sat on the box until life was extinct. Then they laid the body on the ground before them as they sat behind the fire, and sent one of their number out to gather three small pliant sticks. When this was done they covered the corpse with eagle down and sat on the ground around it, raising and lowering the sticks as if they were throwing objects into the [88]Related by Joshua Moody.

I: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

BC
* 539

air. As they did so the feathers began to move, gradually rising in the air until some passed through the roof. It was as if a miniature whirlwind of gentle power were agitating them. As the three continued to use the sticks, the corpse itself began to move, finally disintegrating into the down and passing through the roof. As it did so the three said:

"Go back whence we came. Ye · · · · · ·."

Since that time the people of Owiki have disposed of their dead in this manner.

The first Ālkalālis brought with him from above not only the right to a ssaok dance, but also a Cannibal kusiut dance (II, p. 71) with the Bella Bella name Łeknus. He had, moreover, the rare privilege of performing kusiut and ssaok rites on alternate nights.

BC
[766]
[177]
[424]
BC
[177]
[583]

This myth is important since it embodies an account of the disappearance of a corpse through a roof, a method of removal of the dead now practised by the Bella Coola in the case of chiefs. This means is recognized by the Bella Coola to have been a recent introduction from either Bella Bella or Rivers Inlet to Tāl·io, and thence to Bella Coola. Judging from this account, it would appear that such a method of removal of a corpse must be considered as originally a prerogative embodied in a myth, although it has ceased to be regarded as such in Bella Coola. The man from whom this tradition was obtained said it was only one of the type current in Bella Coola, though such are common in Bella Bella. It was obtained by the marriage of one of his ancestors to a woman of Owiki, and was used as theme for a mourning-ceremony at the death of his sister.

BB
539

AN EARLY BELLA BELLA MYTH TRANSMITTED BY MARRIAGE TO BELLA COOLA[51]

BC
* 539

In the beginning of time, when the population of the earth consisted only of the few people who had come down from above, Yulātimut went to the Bella Bella town, Qoqoyel, where, as was common at that period, people had no houses but were sheltered under huge trees which Ālquntām had placed there for that purpose. Yulātimut was in the form of a man at the time and fell in love with a girl of the village. Her father, Nā·tci, agreed to the match and the two were married. The husband never slept with his wife; when he wished children, he willed that they [51]Related by Joshua Moody.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

BC 539*

to death. 'Oywolikdmut was the most prosperous of the brothers; so much had his wealth increased that he was able to call the people from all parts of the coast to a potlatch.

BB 539

Ālqunūm had given Ilākwakila the honourable prerogative or duty of singing the mourning song whenever anyone died. When it was time for her to function she painted her face with a design representing a rough sea, and beat time on the floor with a stick, łqomkskta, on which were jingling copper bangles. The theme was how Raven had brought her help on all occasions.

BC [424] [533]

The right to sing this song has since been preserved as a prerogative in the ancestral family descended from these four brothers. No name accompanies it, but the right must be validated by the giving of presents.

Early Traditions Having the Ceremonial Significance of Origin Myths

BC 539*

The following are examples of myths which are used as authorization for potlatches even though they do not deal with the actual peopling of this earth. It will be noted that they describe the adventures of early settlers, and only with non-Bella Coola. All are claimed to have been obtained by intermarriage with the descendants of individuals mentioned in them.

BC [177]

AN EARLY ułāmx MYTH[71]

BB 539

Not long after the first people had come to this earth, Raven taught an ułāmx chief, Qā·pxook by name, how to catch black cod with hook and line. It was summer at the time, and Qā·pxook began to make preparations for fishing early the following year. He instructed his wife to take three female assistants with her to the woods to collect a large quantity of cedar-bark for making the line, which had to be at least three hundred yards in length, owing to the depth at which black cod are found in Labouchere Channel. The four women returned four days later with a large amount of the material, on which they worked all summer and the following winter. Meanwhile Qā·pxook, with three other men to help him, was busy manufacturing hooks of the usual British Columbia type. They were made from the knots of dead and fallen hemlocks; the interior was first cut out, bent into the desired shape, smeared with mountain

BC 539*

[71]Related by Jim Pollard.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

BB 539 BC 539 BC BB [226] [825]

a person has been in contact with supernatural beings to enable him to enter.

Ailsamka told them everything, that her mother had failed to teach her how to cut up black cod, "so Ḷomoqwa sent blackfish to catch me so that I could be taught," she said. "You must be very careful to cut them up properly or trouble will come upon you."

The correct method, as taught by Raven, is to split the fish cleanly without severing the bones. Ḷā·pxaok's daughter had erred by cutting the one which is equivalent in a fish to the human collar-bone. She told them of the fish that abounded in Ḷomoqwa's house; of the red-fish, which disobeyed their mother by playing outside the house so that their stomachs were often forced out from their mouths[n] and they floated up to the surface; of Ḷomoqwa himself and his large hat; and of the other denizens of the underworld. The people listened attentively and ever after cut up black cod in the prescribed fashion, though if Ailsamka had not been carried off to Ḷomoqwa's house Raven's teaching would undoubtedly have been forgotten.

Not long after his daughter's safe return Ḷā·pxaok gave a potlatch. He took for himself the name Ḷomoqwa, and at the same time reproduced in his own house as much as possible of what his daughter had described. Thus there were imitation fishes, especially the halibut, around the house, while the red-fish were shown as wooden models that could be drawn up to the roof by hidden strings representing the manner in which the fish float up to the surface of the ocean. Ḷomoqwa, himself, was shown wearing his large ball topped hat, of the type known as biḳotl.[n]

While Ailsamka was under the water Ḷomoqwa had shown her sisaok whistles, and at this potlatch they were used while the girl was concealed within the back-room as a sisaok initiate.

BC [77] [556]

This was the[n] origin of the sisaok ceremonial, which spread in time from the sisdmy people to the Bella Coola. The name Ḷomoqwa passed to one of Ḷā·pxaok's descendants who, when he gave a potlatch, arranged

BC BB [424] [492] [532]

[n]The red-fish is an unidentified deep-sea fish which dies in shallow water through lack of pressure.

[n]This style was always worn by Ḷomoqwa and Alqunitm and, as many of the first people obtained their power from one or other of these beings, the prerogative of using such hats at potlatches is quite common. They are made of cedar roots, are waterproof, and are usually painted with one of the wearer's ancestral crests. When either Ḷomoqwa or Alqunitm is shown on a totem-pole he is displayed with one of these hats.

[n]It will be noted that the narrator tacitly assumes any origin recorded in his myth to be the sole, or authentic one.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

BC 539*
BB [539]
BC [556] [177]

his house in imitation of Ḷomoqwa's; since then any possessor of this ancient name has done likewise. From that time Ḷomoqwa has been a common Bella Bella tutwinam, and is always shown with his huge hat.

The narrator obtained this myth through the marriage of his mother's mother with an ułāmx̣ man.

A MYTH OF SEA-LION ISLAND[78]

In the beginning of time the sea-lions came down to earth at an island outside Rivers Inlet where they bred and multiplied. The place is still known as Sea-Lion Island and hunters from all parts of the coast used to go there, as the animals were not only good food but easy to kill.

On one occasion a man had wandered apart from his companions and met a stranger who invited him home. He accepted and followed his host into a nearby house, though he had never known before that there was one in the vicinity. Once within, the door closed with a metallic crash and the rash explorer vanished from the sight of his companions, who thought that he must have been drowned. But he had really entered a sea-lion house. The animals were sitting around their fires exactly as human beings are accustomed to do; in fact, the only strange thing was that they were using human knee-caps as dishes. He listened to their conversation:

"Lend your dish to Nɛqaqa," he heard one of the animals say to a friend.

Nɛqaqa was an old woman who was sitting in one corner of the house.

"The dish will be too small to hold a meal," thought the mortal.

The sea-lions could understand his thoughts.

"Don't say that," said one of them. "Nɛqaqa has the power of making the food inexhaustible."

Presently one of the beasts gave the man a knee-cap dish containing a minute morsel of halibut soaked in oil.

"That won't be enough for me," he thought.

But again a sea-lion comprehended what was in his mind. It was true. The man ate and ate until he could eat no more, but the amount of food on his plate did not diminish.

He stayed with them for several months, but at last grew homesick and lonely. The sea-lions read his unvoiced desires.

"Your home is not far away," said one of them. "We will send you there whenever you like. You can travel on a wave; would you prefer one that will carry you at one sweep, at two, at three, or at four?"

The man thought of the jolt with which he would strike the beach if [78]Related by Steamboat Annie.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

Other people had come down to earth at the same time as Kāsān·a, and among them a man and his wife who had landed at the mouth of Gas Bay. They had two daughters who, walking one day at the head of the bay, were surprised to find a house. They looked in and saw a woman, so entered, and laughed heartily to find her made of rotten wood. They kicked over the figure and the head fell into the fire and was burnt. Then they seated themselves in her place, worked diligently at the blanket and ate a large amount of the food. Towards dusk they put the figure back in place and hid themselves.

BB 539 BC 539 *

Soon Kāsān·a entered. He embraced the figure, called her a good wife, and thanked her for weaving so diligently and for having eaten so much of the food. Then he saw that she had burnt her head, and chided her, saying that she must take better care of herself. At this the two girls who were hiding burst out laughing and showed themselves. They suggested to Kāsān·a that he choose one of them for his wife; he agreed, selected the elder and married her. He built a house on a hilltop where they lived and to which he called people from far and near when he gave a potlatch.

Sisaok Origin Myths

As already stated, many sisaok names are believed to have come down from above with the first Bella Coola, or to have been created by them on this earth. In such cases, the sisaok origin myth is the same as the ancestral myth. Theoretically, names of the same type can also be received through visions in which a beholder is given his new designation by some supernatural being, or takes it from the apparition. In either case, of course, it must be duly validated by the giving of presents. Only three myths were obtained which deal solely with the acquisition of a sisaok prerogative. No doubt this is chiefly to be explained by the fact that most sisaok rites have been derived from the Bella Bella.

BC 773 551 575 [787] [556] [177]

THE ORIGIN OF THE Sisaok NAME, Spuxpuxxā·mpdimut[80]

About 1840, a party of Xixais Indians[81] spent the winter in Bella Coola. Early in the spring one of them broke his leg so

BC 539 * 609 424

[80]Related by Joshua Moody.

[81]It was impossible to identify this tribe. According to the Bella Coola they are akin to the Carriers, but have adopted the use of totem-poles, kusiut dances

BC [829]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

as easy as possible. Women seldom experience difficulty and 844 suffer, on the whole, less than do white mothers. It is believed [776] that Sxaiaxwax, though invisible, is present on every occasion; the rendering of assistance at childbirth is his one kindly act.

The umbilical cord was formerly cut with a mussel shell, [177] but for many years the use of a metal knife has been customary. The after-birth usually comes away easily, but if there is delay, [845] hot ashes are placed around the feet and at the back of the woman to accelerate its expulsion. It is immediately buried or placed beneath a large tree in the forest; if burnt, the infant will always be weakly. While one of the assistants disposes of it, another washes the new-born child. The cloths and dishes used for this purpose are burnt; failure to do so is believed to [826] cause the child to become blind through a white film forming over the eyeballs. Then the mother and midwives return to the house with the infant, who is a source of tremendous interest to the community. It is proper for the father to recompense the attendants at once, in accordance with their skill and his generosity. A woman who has had several children often assists the daughter of a friend, then, as she gains more experience, her reputation grows and her help is more commonly sought. At the time of this study, 1922, the sum of [465] $2.50 was considered suitable recompense for a fairly proficient midwife.

A new-born child takes the breast readily and a mother 853 would be considered harsh indeed if she failed to suckle her infant whenever it cried, since scientific hours for feeding are not known. A child is wrapped in a shawl or a blanket and 854 carried by the mother wherever she goes; when in the house it sprawls contentedly on the floor, unhampered by clothing. When the umbilical cord falls, it is preserved by the mother. [846] Soon after birth, the parents make provision for their child's welfare by magical means (I, p. 700). The heavy infantile death-rate of the Bella Coola cannot be attributed to lack of [165] love or care on the part of parents, but the attention lavished is commonly not of the kind that assists a weakly child to survive the perils of infancy.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

585 covering" or "rope fastening" for her. Within a few days or weeks, they must invite their fellow-villagers to a ceremony of some kind. If it is winter this can be a susack dance, but in summer it must be a non-sacred affair. Y's father and other relatives attend, furnished with the usual gifts. When the ceremony is over and the time has come for the distribution of presents, a herald calls out that X has no seat. If he has already been established in one he calls out that it is not firm.[1] Y at once brings forward some of the goods provided by her relatives, and places these with the goods which X's family received at the wedding and are about to give away. The whole is then divided among the guests, together with presents provided by X for Y's relatives. The actual purpose of the rite may be to obtain names for some of X's young relatives or to establish seats for them: it is immaterial to Y's people to what end they are applied. Within recent years this [182] has sometimes taken place at a kusiut dance, but such overlapping between the two types of ceremonial is probably an innovation due to decay.

● 177 585 About 1910 an effort was made to introduce a marriage custom of the Kwakiutl. According to the Bella Coola, among them the wife gives to her husband's relatives one or more boards studded with teeth of the sea-otter. This makes teeth for the bride, so that if she ever quarrels with another woman she can draw back her lips and shame her rival by saying:

"What can you do? You have no teeth, while I have two sets," or as many boards as have been given at her marriage.

[563] The grandson of a Fort Rupert Kwakiutl, living in Bella Coola and considered a member of the tribe, owned one of these boards and used it at the marriage of his daughter in 1914. It was first given to the mother of the bridegroom, and repurchased with a copper; then given to the bridegroom, and redeemed; finally given, and again repurchased, from the father of the groom. The woman for whom this was done can

[1] The preferred time for this establishment is during a potlatch and the ritual connected with it has already been described (I, p. 167).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

thus boast that she has three sets of teeth, but as the practice has not found favour in Bella Coola, it is little to her advantage.[4] 585 [177]

These complicated marriage rites are necessary to satisfy the pride of the two families in their origin myths, and the need to establish the resultant children in the paths of their ancestors. Among slaves or others who lack ancestral prerogatives, marriage is an affair of slight worth. Such persons simply live together with little ceremony, though they always try to give at least a feast so that there may be witnesses of the transaction. It is immaterial whether or not they marry their own relatives, since no ancestral prerogatives are to be transmitted. [556] [567] [581]

MARRIED LIFE

Y usually lives in the house of X's father, though economic circumstances may compel her husband to live in her home. If the parents are very wealthy, a house may be built for the young people, but usually their home is one of the bedrooms in the house of X's father; this patrilocal residence exposes Y not only to good advice from her mother-in-law, but often to caustic criticism. The married life of X and Y does not differ materially from that of other young couples in any part of the world, and is accordingly difficult to describe. Although love rarely enters into the original choice of a mate, a serviceable substitute is found in the mutual respect for each other's ancestry, and the knowledge of the importance of the rites performed with the aid of each other's elderly relatives. The young people realize that marriage affects the families of both, and accordingly accept it as a matter of course. The Bella Coola are fond of children. Their birth is a matter of sincere rejoicing, partly because it binds the two families more closely together, but parental affection is one of the strongest Bella Coola characteristics. The parents usually spoil their children; infants, especially, are never chastised and rarely 591 [556] 593 855 [861]

[4] The board used on this occasion was purchased for the National Museum of Canada, Ottawa.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, 837
some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to [48]
white men. This is not considered creditable, but the Bella 548
Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, [183]
which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often hunt together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice [171] could be found in Bella Coola.

POLYGAMY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are 595
monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of 556
white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common [177] for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Potlas, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Few attained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learnt, [162]
the number of the sexes seems always to have been about equal, in itself a check to polygyny in a community where practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused. The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ciety. These are given several times, serving to recall the 533 ceremonies in which the chief took part during his life. At 575 intervals, the new song is repeated and nuuk members of the 766 audience join in as they become familiar with the words. Frequently one or more relatives of the deceased dance in his [535] stead during the singing. The details of this rite, especially of the songs used at it, differ considerably according to the actions of the person during life; if a mighty chief, the donor of many potlatches, this fact is described in the song, whereas only an incident from the ancestral myth can be used for a young nuuk. If some of his female relatives are professional [767] wailers, they function during the ceremony. In all circumstances, the rite aims to comfort the grieving kinsmen, an end which it usually achieves.

As already described, nuuk ceremonial was in a state of 575 transition at the time of the coming of the white man. Pre- 766 vious to that date, a spectacular funeral prerogative had been 177 adopted from Rivers Inlet,[4] which has since been claimed by a 424 number of nuuk. All the Bella Coola know of this ceremony, and most of them desire to perform it at the death of a dearly [178] loved relative; at the present time this is possible owing to the slight regard paid to prerogatives, but it is certain that a few years ago it would have been forbidden to most people, and that it was never a universal Bella Coola rite.

When this rite is performed, the corpse is allowed to remain 575 in its coffin for at least one night after the day on which 766 Mutlakila came and the nuuk songs were sung. Meanwhile the carpenters have prepared an imitation body, usually of 532 rags on a light framework, and a wooden representation of the deceased's crest. Since this figure is to come through the roof and carry aloft the corpse, stout hooks are attached to its feet.
In theory, the bird or animal disguise used by the first ancestor

[4] One old Bella Coola stated that this prerogative was obtained during his own lifetime from a Rivers Inlet chief who moved to Tal'ia. It is impossible to state accurately when this ritual was adopted by the Bella Coola, though it is unquestionably of recent origin.

1:36:Howatth E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEh Bellacoola NEh

thrown on it. One rather philosophic old man suggested that in this way the soul could easily return to Nuxmit-a. It is possible that this means of disposal was carried out in former times, but no informant had actually seen it practised. The Bella Coola state that cremation is carried out by the Kitlobe* and the Carriers. On the morning after a burning, young men of the former tribe rush to the spot and smear their faces with the semi-charred bones, amid much shouting. The Carriers are said to stand with their bodies inclined over the burning corpse and to smear on their faces any grease exuded from it. The accuracy of these statements is very doubtful, and can have no bearing on the reputed practice of cremation among the Bella Coola. 764 764 829

The bodies of rich or poor, chiefs, commoners, or slaves, all are buried in a similar manner though with differences in the complexity of ritual. Nor is any different method practised for criminals, murdered people, or those committing suicide. It is believed that in case of self-destruction the body cannot separate into its elements and reach Nuxmit-a; that part which becomes the ghost is able to go to the land below, but neither spirit nor life can ascend. According to one man, who may, however, have been affected by Christian influence, this is because Alqantim decrees the length of life and any willful shortening is insulting to him. Suicide is rare among the Bella Coola and four cases only were heard of. One woman killed herself in shame at having accidentally set fire to a village, another because her husband was unduly jealous, and two men through bladder stricture. 766 762 [775]

On the whole, Bella Coola methods for disposal of the dead have altered but little since the coming of the white man. The change from sub-aerial exposure to interment was probably not due to foreign influence although the introduction of metal shovels has facilitated the digging of graves and probably hastened the movement. A change in posture has, however, taken place. In former times, a corpse was always buried 777 764

*If not at present, at least within the memory of elderly people.

177 squatting, now it is customary to use the extended position.
964 It is impossible to state whether this is the direct result of white teaching, or whether the ease with which large boxes can now be made has led to interment at full length.

RITES FOLLOWING DISPOSAL OF THE BODY

968 Interment of the corpse does not end the ceremonial occasioned by a death in the community. As already described, some of the clothing and utensils of the dead person are burned during the funeral, but all are not destroyed at that time. The proportion kept for future treatment is immaterial, nor is there any established usage concerning the type of object reserved. During the days following the funeral, relatives of the deceased carefully gather his clothing, cooking utensils, rifles, and all other articles which have been his personal property or used exclusively by him. On the fourth day, these are taken to the cemetery by his immediate family, accompanied by as many of their friends as wish to show their sympathy. A fire is kindled near the grave and on it is deposited whatever can be burnt; other objects are either cast into the flames or piled near at hand (see Plate 17). It is most important that every article belonging to the deceased should be disposed of in this way. There are two reasons for this. First, it is considered indecent to use the possessions of a dead person; they would have the effect of poison on anyone doing so. Secondly, the ghost of the de-[995] [75] ceased receives goods that are burnt or deposited on the grave four days after the funeral. If deprived of what belongs to him, a ghost punishes the offenders by causing sickness.
178 Occasionally a new rifle, or some other treasured possession, 968 is kept by a relative or friend; this is contrary to the established custom, but is justified by considering the article to be a gift from the deceased or a mementoof him. No one would accept such a legacy unless he felt sure that the dead man entertained such kindly sentiments towards him that he would be glad to have his friend receive it. 768 [178] 768

In recent years the number of incombustible objects has increased enormously with the introduction of metal utensils, gramophones, and other things obtained from white traders. Although these are considered to be of use to the ghost, and must be carefully placed near the grave, they can be publicly exchanged for others by a relative. The sentiments expressed on such occasions are that the ghost, though aware of what is taking place, does not resent an open transfer; and that it is unnecessary to deposit the equivalent of what has been removed. There is undoubtedly a vague idea that the ghost uses, not the actual object, but its essence, which is received by the deposition. It must be emphasized that this feeling has not become crystallized to such a state that it is customary to replace goods buried in the grave with others. Such a change is a rare event and would cause animosity if carried out by anyone except a near relative. 177 775 [578]

Sometimes a dying person requests that a house be erected over his grave, a common Bella Bella custom. This is built immediately after the funeral and articles that cannot be burnt are placed within it instead of being piled on the ground. The sorrowing relatives may choose to erect a picket fence around the spot, but no other mark for the grave is put up until a memorial potlatch several years after death. House or fence soon falls into decay and rarely an effort is made to repair either. Nor is the grave itself disturbed. Cow-parsnips, which are much used for food, grow frequently in cemeteries, but no one would gather the shoots that rise above a grave; they are food belonging to the dead person. The white man has taught the Bella Coola how to plant apple-trees and these are often set out in graveyards, though the fruit is allowed to fall to the ground for the benefit of those interred beneath. The Bella Bella are said formerly to have replaced at intervals the coffin containing a dead person, but this seems never to have been a Bella Coola practice. Indeed, a grave is never 764 [763] [177] [262] [245] [177] 765

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

765 religious rites affecting the whole community. In spite of the prohibitions enforced, it is said that a widow or widower usually becomes fat after the death of a partner. This observation agrees with several instances known to the writer, but whether it is of universal application is doubtful, although the Bella Coola emphatically state that this is the case.

Memorial Rites

THE MEMORIAL POTLATCH

177 556 769 [622] The most important, as well as the most complicated, mourning rite is the memorial potlatch, sêwanit, for which so much wealth is required that it can be carried out by chiefs alone. This ceremony, being associated with nusuk rites, has altered enormously in form within recent years. Before the introduction of cone-shaped whistles and other foreign elements, it was almost indistinguishable from an ordinary potlatch and the two were occasionally combined, having as central feature the return of the deceased in the form of his crest. Among the tribes of the outer coast, especially the Bella Bella, the two types of ceremonial were apparently distinct, and as the Bella Coola adopted more and more of their neighbours' nusuk ritual, they followed their custom in this respect as well. It is said that a certain Nuhkila, uncle of a man about sixty years of age in 1922, was the last to combine both. The Bella Bella felt that he had thereby committed a ritual error for which he would be punished; within a few years he died, and the Bella Coola assumed that this was due to the unanimous expectation of his death on the part of the Bella Bella. From that time onwards, the Bella Coola were careful to separate features belonging to potlatches from those of memorial potlatches.

After a comparatively few years, the white man's domination had increased so enormously on the central coast that the potlatch, including both types, was prohibited by law. Owing to the consequent difficulty of performing complicated [648] rites, the Bella Coola were again led to carry out at a single gathering features which properly belonged to several. To combine the memorial potlatch with the potlatch, being a return to an earlier custom, presented no serious difficulties and was consequently widely adopted. The Kimsquit people, moreover, seem never to have adopted the clear Bella Bella differentiation, and as the rapid decrease in population drew them in ever closer contact with the Bella Coola, their influence tended to lessen differences between the two ceremonials.

At the present time, a memorial potlatch is almost identical with an ordinary potlatch in practice. The same rites are often carried out at both, each varies considerably, and when the distinctive elements are omitted the two become indistinguishable. None the less, they are never confused in the minds of the participants. The house where a potlatch, lim, is taking place is called a nutlamin, that where a memorial potlatch, ilwandi, is occurring, a nutlamindim. In giving invitations and making comments, heralds are careful not to refer to the ritual under the wrong name; in fact, it may be said that the chief difference between the two is in the minds of the donor and his guests. Sociologically, both are considered to be on a par. Equal wealth is required, and each can be performed only by a chief, both on account of the expenditure involved and owing to the difficulties in procedure which are thought to be too great for a lesser man to surmount.

Difference in the donor's motives is usually sufficient to separate a memorial potlatch from an ordinary one. The latter is given by a chief desirous of increasing his prestige by lavish expenditure, for which one of the excuses is the validation of the appearance of a dead relative. Although this is the central feature, so many other rites are performed that it is sometimes obscured or may, indeed, be omitted entirely. On the other hand, a memorial potlatch occurs as soon as possible after the death of a father, mother, or other dearly loved kinsman, and it is clear to all that the donor's reasons for the rite are to commemorate the deceased, and to console himself and his immo-

(see Plate 23). So, too, wooden representations of coppers are often affixed to an upright post. Not only men are commemorated in this way, a father often places over his daughter's grave pictures of the goods used to ransom her from her husband; wooden plaques representing coppers are commonly used for this purpose.[a] Such symbols are usually cut down after a year owing to a vague feeling that it is not proper for them to remain standing too long. The function of this type of memorial is to mark the social status of the dead person as judged by the ritlam given away by him, or on his behalf, during his life-time. With the introduction of writing, the Bella Coola have been quick to recognize it as an easy means for recording the wealth distributed by a chief. In consequence, signs are often painted and erected, giving in figures a statement of his financial transactions. Another recent introduction has been the cenotaph. One of these is often set up with the name of the deceased carved on it to perpetuate his memory, and a representation of his crest to record his ceremonial history. Such a memorial combines the functions of the first and third types.

As the carpenters labour on the memorials, other arrangements for the ceremony proceed apace. As at a potlatch, the fellow-villagers of the donor may be invited especially to his house for the performance of some dances, but this formal is often omitted, especially if there are no neighbors to be invited. The meat to be worn by the deceased relative must be prepared in secret, or if several are to be commemorated at the single ceremony, one must be made ready for each. As the time drawn near, envoys are dispatched to invite foreign guests if it has been decided to have strangers present. This has been customary for many years, but during the period when no features of the potlatch were allowed at a memorial potlatch, the latter was sometimes carried out in the presence of the donor's fellow-villagers alone. The actual departure of the only for a child, can be employed for a dead child. In this case, the dance describes the efforts of the parents to incorporate the deceased in the traditions of their ancestors, and the number of times he had been ceremonially married. The text of one used a few years ago is:

[a] The National Museum of Canada, at Ottawa, has specimens of these wooden coppers.

"We said, Hail! Amalalis (the child's own) was the hail when she was born. What more could we have done? Why did she leave us?"

The text may refer to the prerogative of employing mourners, as in the following:

"Come ye professional mourners, help me to give voice to my lamentations."

The tunes of mourning songs are usually remembered from year to year, and the singers may merely alter words to make an old song applicable. In some cases, such compositions are changed so slightly that they become virtually possessions of an ancestral family, and may then be preserved for generations until even the history of the tunes embodied is forgotten. Occasionally, ancient relationship between two such groups can be deduced from the occurrence of the same tunes in their mourning songs, although all traditions of intermarriage have been forgotten. There is considerable difference between the tunes of chiefs and doctors; in fact, this distinction may be more important than the dances, since the latter do not invariably conform to the types just described. A few tunes of ancestral history may be incorporated into a song dealing primarily with the actions of the deceased and his wives. Sometimes four of one type are used, sometimes two of each. Much thought is devoted to the compositions, the singers meeting every day to try over and improve one another's efforts. The tunes, long and complicated, require much practice, since any error would be an admission of gross inefficiency. These daily rehearsals take place in the dancer's house and he is required to provide food for the singers. It is not uncommon to use a song of Bella Bella origin, since the Bella Coola admit that members of their tribe excel in compositions of this type.

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

Such an adoption occurs only when the deceased was the owner of a Bella Bella myth and the song in question had been used to mourn a real or fictitious relative. It is contrary to custom to use the tune or words of a song not composed for a member of the deceased's ancestral family.

The actual delivering of invitations by the envoys to the desired guests does not differ from the manner already described, except that they are asked "to come to visit the sick [donor]." The significance is, of course, that the mourner's condition is that of a patient. To indicate the reason of their visit, guests at a memorial potlatch always wear a little dyed cedar-bark around their heads.

On arrival, the first party of foreign guests is conducted to the donor's house, where they make themselves comfortable in the section allotted to them by the heralds. An elderly Bella Coola chief who is a famous orator has been asked by the donor to speak, and he rises to do so as soon as his fellow-villagers have entered and taken their places. No set phrases are used, but the speaker usually begins by reminding all present of the way in which their ancestors were created in Heaven, and how all must return thither. It is an occasion on which eloquence is essential, and the speaker delights in using as many archaic words and rhetorical expressions as possible, with constant reference to religious beliefs and ancient history as recorded in mythology. Then he speaks of the death which is the occasion of the ceremony. If the deceased were an old man, he is referred to by a special term not in common usage, nadad-ás, which implies wisdom and respect as well as extreme age. The orator states that he has fallen, using the term ḡayás, normally applied to the thunderous crash of some mighty tree. He speaks of a young chief as xwĕlimdzi, short-lived, a person who has been burned down by the supernatural Carpenters. He continues by describing the works of the deceased, the number of potlatches he gave and the manner in which his name was known to many tribes. Finally he tells of the donor's grief, and of how this "sickness" has been alle-

1:36:Dewalth E-9 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

departed. A few days later the same ritual was carried out again, with a similar lavish distribution of food. This was often done at intervals of two or three days for several weeks, depending on how much food the donor was prepared to use. The amount required was so great that the rite was considered, in some ways, more difficult than a potlatch.

As already mentioned, however, it became customary in the last century to incorporate features of the ordinary potlatch into one of a memorial nature. In such cases the first singing of the mourning songs with display of marks by the professional mourners is as just recorded, but there is no recalling of the guests merely to listen once more to the songs. Instead, the ritual differs but slightly from that of an ordinary potlatch as already described (I, p. 182). An occasion is found to conduct the guests to the memorial-posts erected, and to inform them of the significance of the designs depicted. This same practice has been continued since the introduction of newspapers, and the meaning of the writing upon them is interpreted. The story of the deceased in the form of his crest, and the subsequent use of a copper, is the same as already recorded. This is frequently followed by the singing of a nuxsk mourning song if one of the near relatives owns this prerogative of foreign origin. If so, he walks slowly around the fire in a wide circle, shaking his rattle, and singing, unaccompanied. Most, if not all of these songs, are in the Bella Bella language and the right to use one has in every case been obtained through intermarriage with a member of that tribe. At intervals, heralds call out:

"Listen to the chief's lament."[27]

When presents are distributed to validate the whole ceremony, mention is always made of the different features for which they are given. As at a potlatch, the most important is the nature of the dead, but at a memorial potlatch another material is the display of the memorial-posts. These have been carved, painted, and set up, but are worthless unless validated [27] There is no reason why this should not take place at a potlatch, but no instance of its performance was noted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

764
159 Meanwhile the rest of the population was sitting near the coffin. They wore no special dress or other mark of grief. Samuel King and some of his relatives had brought bundles containing Jessie's clothing, pots, pans, and other personal possessions, which they set down near the coffin. About two [533] o'clock the band gathered and began to play, the favourite [177] selection being "Annie Laurie." This went on for some time after the return of the chiefs from Captain Schooner's house. They had decided that Tál-io Jenny, one of Captain Schooner's distant relatives, should carry the fire in front of the body. When all was ready she lit a bundle of rags, placed it in a pot, and set off for the cemetery, followed by all in a straggling and orderless procession. Some strong young men bore the coffin, for Jessie must have weighed over two hundred pounds; some brought tools for digging the grave; others took the bundles of clothing. There was no fixed allotment of tasks; a man or woman carried anything or nothing according to his or her wish.

The cemetery is situated about fifty yards behind the old village of Xemqo-ts. The heavy timber has all been cut away and second growth has sprung up everywhere except around the newer graves. Captain Schooner had decided that his daughter should be buried near several of her relatives, and it was to this spot that Jenny led the procession. She set the pot down near the site of the grave, and the coffin likewise was placed on the ground nearby. Captain Schooner, Jim Pollard, and a few of the other old men chose the exact situation and a number of the young men began to dig. Jenny, and other women, added pieces of Jessie's clothing to the fire so that a constant small blaze was kept up. As the grave was being dug [533] the band performed at intervals, while the women sat wailing near the fire. Other men and women were seated on the ground or walking around idly near the grave, talking but seldom laughing, while the Carriers were a little farther away. [852] Children were playing around. The grave was dug about five feet deep, in shape corresponding to the coffin, but orientation

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

day after the funeral, the relatives of the dead person burn the 775 remainder of his property, which passes through the earth to the ghost for whom it is intended. Ghost-singers have taken [768] their places and begin to beat out music, and presently the recently deceased appears, stepping backwards from the backroom in time to the beating of sticks. He is at once surrounded by his fellows, each anxious to learn the latest news of relatives still alive. This dance is really to welcome the new arrival, and takes place irrespective of his rank. After it has been held, it is hopeless to attempt to rescue a dead person, although that has been done several times during the four days immediately succeeding death.

Only shamans are able to peer down into the land of the [756] dead, though stories are told of inadvertent visits to it in relatively recent times. Human beings are prevented from visiting their dead relatives, but the latter, being supernatural, can come to the earth at will. They are always dreaded, and anyone who hears their whistling or their tongueless chatter cowers in his house, and hopes they will pass by. Shamans [756] can understand their speech and to them the dead explain their mission. If the relations of a dead person have failed to burn [768] all his personal possessions, he returns to earth to inform them, through a shaman, of the omission. The house is scoured for anything left and it is burnt at once near the grave, though no one knows how a ghost would punish failure to give him his property. Thoughtful people, remembering the scarcity of [264] food in the land below, frequently give presents to their dead relatives by casting small morsels of food on the side of the [772] central fire nearest the front door, beneath which is a passage to the lower regions. The food becomes magnified as it falls down this, so that even small fragments are sufficient to feed many hungry ghosts. Since the introduction of metal stoves, it has become customary to throw food into a fire kindled for [177] the purpose in the cemetery; the most suitable time is at dusk, although people are always afraid that spectres may be prowling around at that hour. If sufficient presents are not given [756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 775 hurry back. After as short a visit as they thought polite, they asked to be ferried back across the river and retraced their steps to the cave where they had slept the previous night. It was dusk by this time and they lay down to sleep. During the night the cave rotated on itself once more, and in the morning they were delighted to find themselves in the mountains above the Dean River.

This was the first time that anyone had penetrated to the land of ghosts, and the friends of the four brothers were intensely interested in the account of their experiences. It was October at the time, but they explained that it was late winter in the land below. No one knows why or how the four brothers had received the power to pass into the land of ghosts, although it is assumed that Sqwastw must have granted them the boon.

A Kitlobe Story of a Descent to the Land of Ghosts

● 179 539 775 The following story was related by an elderly man who had heard it about ten years previously from three Christian Kitlobe who had been his fellow-passengers on a steamship between Vancouver and Bella Coola. It is not a Bella Coola story, although it has been circulated among members of the tribe as an interesting tale. The facts recorded in it do not agree entirely with their beliefs, but that is a matter of no [829] consequence to the Bella Coola who, having their own knowledge, consider it quite natural that the other tribes should have other concepts.

539 775 About one year before the story was told, a Kitlobe woman had died, leaving her husband and one grown-up daughter to mourn her. The husband refused to be comforted, and used to fall into a paroxysm of weeping whenever he saw any of his wife's clothing or goods. About a week after her funeral he took her clothing to the cemetery intending to burn it, but instead sat down on the ground to weep. Presently he noticed a passage beside him, down which he crawled until he came to a flat, rich land more prosperous than this world, where he wandered along aimlessly till he heard the sound of singing and hid himself behind a clump of bushes. There seemed to be five or six groups of people in different sections of the country, and the song was taken up in succession by each group. When he had remained in his hiding-place for some time, two people in new, white clothes passed so close to him that he could hear the rustling of their garments. He recognized one of the

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

534 975 human beings, knock crumbs to the ground with minute hooks, and punish by beating with the same barbs anyone who offends them by picking up such morsels. The girl heard her father say that in future he would be more careful to throw fragments of food on the fire, since he now knew that these were not only desired by the dead, but were necessary to them. Her mother must have asked whether they had eaten all the dried salmon, for her father answered:

"No. We have been so grief-stricken at your death that we have eaten hardly anything."

After a pause the girl heard her father say "All right," and judged that her mother had said she would go to get some. In a moment the door opened, though no one appeared, and the thoroughly awed girl heard the sound of light footsteps. She saw the ropes with which the box was bound unloosened without visible agent, and the salmon piled in a neat heap on the floor, then the bundle seemed to rise of its own accord and pass out through the front-door without human aid. After an interval the father appeared and asked his daughter where her mother had gone. The frightened girl told what she had seen, and both were amazed and puzzled. At last it dawned on the grieving husband that his wife must have stolen the food for the benefit of her friends below and had returned to her new home.

The husband, now twice bereaved, was filled with woe at this second loss, which was unexpected as his wife had said nothing of her intention of leaving. After deliberating for several days, he descended again to the land of ghosts, heedless of his daughter's appeals. He concealed himself in the same spot as before, and soon heard singing; but this time the words and tune were different and he listened intently. To his horror, the theme was of the ingenuity of a dead woman who had revisited her home, deceived her husband, and brought away a supply of dried salmon for the use of the ghosts. He recognized that the song must refer to his own wife and, grieved and humiliated, he returned home forthwith. He warned his daughter to say nothing of what had occurred and she obeyed his instructions, not wishing their shame to become known. A few days later, however, a number of friends gathered to console the husband; he became intoxicated, told the guests his adventure, and taught them the songs used by the dead.

A Carrier Story of an Ascent to the Land of the Dead

177 534 The following, like the last, is not a Bella Coola story. It is one known to a number of Kitsaquit and deserves inclusion

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

among Bella Coola tales if only for the reason that stories of foreign origin, when told sufficiently often, tend to be considered indigenous and the facts recorded in them accepted and incorporated into Bella Coola belief. This factor is undoubtedly responsible for many conflicting elements in their theology. The following story has every indication of Christian influence but is not less interesting on that account, as illustrating the process of assimilating new ideas into mythology.

B 177 539
B C 539 775

About 1870, Mimaiye,* a Tsimsi Indian from Ootsa Lake, and his brother were trapping beaver in one of the lakes of the interior. They were both good hunters and every morning killed at least one of the animals. Mimaiye was a strong, apparently healthy man, but one morning he fell dead. His grief-stricken brother was puzzled to know what to do with the body. It was winter, and the heavy snow and frozen earth made interment impossible, while lack of fire-wood made cremation out of the question, so he merely tied up the corpse to await better weather. Meanwhile Mimaiye had gone aloft, where he saw a huge house containing many rooms. He went to the door of one, where a man was sitting with a huge book before him.

"What do you want?" asked the man.

Mimaiye did not answer and his questioner continued:

"Your name is not here. Why did you come?"

This happened in one room after another, for Mimaiye tried them all. Finally, at the end of the house, he came to the seat of the chief, who said to him:

"You have made a mistake. The time for you has not yet come. If you want to stay, you can do so by drinking this."

He showed Mimaiye a glass containing a green liquid.

"If not," continued the chief, "you must drink this," and he showed him another glass filled with a white liquid.

Throughout this speech Mimaiye had heard a strange rumbling and wondered what could be its cause. Happening to glance out through a window at the rear of the house, he saw a huge, metal ball constantly revolving and giving forth the rumbling sound as it did so. From within

*This story was related by Jim Pollard, an elderly Kwakiutl, who stated that as a young man he had known Mimaiye, who was about fifty years older than he. This tale is interesting as showing the manner in which a misinformation can become accepted as fact within a short space of time. Mimaiye must have been a man of imaginative temperament who was overtaxed after his inexperienced companions told to him by some white men.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B
C 539
775

came wailing voices and at intervals an agonized face appeared at one of the many small openings in the surface of the sphere. The supreme being, for the chief was none other, told him that those within the ball were evil persons, those who had committed theft or murder during life. Mämaiyu, though innocent of these crimes, decided that he would be safer on earth and asked for the glass with the white liquid, which he hastily drained. The supreme deity inquired what present he would like as token of the visit, and he requested a beaver-axe, that is, one with a crooked handle such as beaver use.[a]

At the moment when Mämaiyu drank the white liquid, his brother saw his body move very slightly. He hastily warmed some mountain goat grease and with this rubbed his face and mouth. At first he was unable to speak, owing to his muscles having become rigid from the cold, but they loosened gradually so that he was able to recount his experiences. Mämaiyu's axe, being of supernatural origin, was invisible to all human beings, but this did not affect its potency, and from that time onwards the owner could catch beaver as easily as other men could catch salmon.

B
●177
539
775

The information contained in this story does not correspond at all with Bella Coola beliefs concerning the fate of the dead. They tell it, and assume that such experiences are normal for dead Xuxais, though unknown to their own people.

[825]

[a]The Bella Coola know that beaver must have axes of this kind to accomplish their work, although white people, deceived by the invisibility of these, believe the animals use their teeth. Mämaiyu received an axe of this type.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The explanation of these manifestations of the supernormal, 787*
for such they are considered to be, lies in the conviction that 811
every activity of the mind is due to supernatural causation, [828]
the functioning of the spirit. In the round of daily life there [774] are always good and bad incidents; the person who wakes expecting to meet one or other before nightfall recognizes the fulfilment of his premonition in some small occurrence, and narrates it to his fellows as proof of what he had told them in the morning. In case of some major event, such as death or disaster, the Bella Coola assume that some previous indication must have been given. Looking back after the event, a man easily persuades himself that he "felt" a warning, and is more than ever convinced that his spirit, the cause of his thoughts, [774] has supernatural ability.

Conviction in the near presence of the supernatural has had 177 ●
somewhat surprising results with regard to Christian Bella 787*
Coola. A man converted in middle life carries all the fervour and realism of the old religion with him to the new, and feels 781 thoroughly familiar with the atmosphere of the Old Testament. 797 Visitations, such as therein described, are similar to those experienced by his fathers and himself, and he scorns the white man who questions their literal accuracy. He continues to hear the voices of supernatural beings, and to interpret mental [828] pictures as visions, but he ascribes them to the beings of the white man's religion. The following is a rather striking illustration of this point:

A number of years ago a devout Christian, who may be 159 designated X, was a patient in the hospital at Bella Bella. In 177
the same ward was a young Bella Bella lad whose sickness refused to yield to treatment. X, becoming interested in his 787*
neighbour, began to ponder about his condition, until presently 781
he felt convinced that the sufferer would be better by seven 797 o'clock the following morning, and told him so. A marked improvement was noticeable by the time predicted, but the white doctor foolishly (according to X) gave his patient some 159

177 more medicine and he became worse. The same thing happened
* 787 on the following day. The sick boy grew steadily worse until, 781 nine days later, he felt that he was dying and asked X to help 797 him.

"No," replied X, "I am no doctor. But you will be all right. I see Holy Ghost, Holy Spirit, Baptism, and Believe-it [Faith?] by your bed. Repent and you will be saved."

X added that the Bella Bella saw and repented before his death so that he has undoubtedly been saved.

X is a friend of the writer's and a man with whom he worked for a number of months and whom he feels that he knows intimately. He is almost invariably truthful, and any falsehoods he uses are clumsy and easily detected. In this case there is no doubt but that he believes he saw these four figures as four white human beings. He was in an emotional condition at the time, hoping and expecting to see something of the kind. In earlier days he would have seen supernatural beings of the Bella Coola pantheon with equal conviction. On quite another occasion, when he was preaching, the same man felt what seemed to be a heavy drop of water fall on his head. He was in the open at the time and, looking up, was surprised to find nothing from which it could have fallen. He realized that it must have been power which had come to him, and forthwith he began to preach as he had never preached before. He expected supernatural assistance, and the belief that it had been granted to him undoubtedly strengthened his efforts.

* 787 All Bella Coola are not equally liable to visions and mental 781 visitations. Some, such as X, are constantly experiencing
159 them, whereas others of more stolid disposition do not feel the presence of the supernatural to the same extent. None the less, beings of the other world are constantly around them and, before the introduction of Christianity, it is unlikely that any individual passed through life without coming in contact with some manifestation of the supernatural. Consequently, stories
* 787 descriptive of this are intelligible to the Bella Coola, bizarre

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

though they may be to the white man. It is hoped that the preceding illustrations, drawn from recent times, will explain the mental attitude of the Bella Coola better than incidents from folk-lore of the distant past. 787

Disregarding thoughts which, since they are caused by the spiritual elements of the human body, are ever present, relations with the supernatural may be divided into the following categories: [825] [774]

(1) Appearance of supernatural beings from which neither good nor bad results follow. Strictly speaking, every fleeting sight of a supernatural being belongs to this category, but it will be convenient to describe only experiences of a peculiar kind, such as the Bella Coola call qun ahálewudjulaic. Usually manifestations of the supernatural have certain effects; consequently, there are relatively few incidents of this kind recorded.

(2) Supernatural aid vouchsafed to a man or a woman in distress. There are many tales illustrating this, which are told and retold to the children. In most cases the assistance is given to one who has undeservedly, according to Bella Coola concepts, fallen into misfortune.

(3) Supernatural good luck. This may be obtained by anyone, and consists of the acquisition of a supernatural object to attract, not only fish and animals, as if it were a potent bait, but money and goods as well. [777] [224] [222]

(4) Acquisition of shamanistic power, with or without the ability to cure the sick. This may be received from one of two sources: [756]

(a) Thindpilite a or some other supernatural being.

(b) Ghosts, which are likewise supernatural. [775]

(5) Obtaining prophetic powers direct from the supreme god. There are few instances of this, and none that is ascribed to a remote period. It is possible that all examples of this kind can be attributed to indirect Christian influence. [777]

(6) Obtaining power from a supernatural being localized in a particular spot. This usually takes the form of succour when [756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

receive such pretty objects, restores the sick, though she does not herself come to do so. 755 756

The shaman now sends a young man out to fill his curing basin. When this is done, he carries it around the fire, once, sunwise, and sets it down beside the patient. The practitioner drinks from it, and casts some eagle down on the surface. If it revolves sunwise, it signifies that the patient will soon recover, and the shaman proceeds to wash him with the water; if it remains stationary or revolves in the opposite direction, it is an unfavourable sign, and he throws the water out of the door. More is then brought, and the procedure repeated until it revolves sunwise. Although no Bella Coola can state definitely how this is performed, the consensus of opinion is that it is done by twisting the box slightly. [762] 755 756 789

Shamans are not the only ones who make offerings to Tsimsyáliks. It is generally known that she likes to receive things, so a sick person often throws on the fire a little grease, some of his own clothing, or other objects of small value. By so doing he hopes that she may appear, or that the sickness will vanish as the object is consumed in the flames. A person in good health sometimes makes like offerings, either on the central house fire or on one built behind the house, at the same time asking Tsimsyáliks to help guard him. 755 782 751 782

(v) In recent years some shamans have been in the habit of displaying the sickness in visible form; this is said to have been a practice adopted from the Bella Bella. After throwing himself on top of the patient the shaman sucks violently, and produces such an object as a toad, a snail, or a stick of wood, which he claims to have been the cause of the malady. This has, of course, been concealed throughout in his mouth. This belief is fostered by the undoubted skill of some shamans in conveying such foreign substances as a salmon bone, wedged in a patient's throat, or a sliver. In such cases he first works with his fingers to force the object near the surface. It is believed that some shamans are so powerful they can draw forth foreign substances by the mere application of their stick 755 756 [771]

755 to the part affected. In such a case the object, a toad for
* 756 example, becomes visible at the end of the staff. Conjuring is employed to do this, and often a tuft of dyed cedar-bark is used, which makes the deception still easier. Shamans are very expert in such matters. It is said that when two rival shamans once disputed about their prowess, one of them cast his stick on the ground and it became a snake, whereupon the other did likewise; and his became a toad which hopped after • [177] the snake. The Bella Coola find biblical parallels for such revelations of power in the transformation of Aaron's rod, and the appearance of fire on Mount Carmel.

Shamanistic Ceremonies

554 In addition to his professional abilities, a shaman has also
* 756 certain social prerogatives. As has been mentioned, many 787 shamans lack the power to cure, but they may have seen some feat during a dream, or during a visitation from Tlitsáplidè·a. It enhances a man's social prestige if he can graphically display whatever he has observed. It follows that the rites about to be described are often, perhaps usually, performed by a person unable to cure the sick, but it must be remembered that to the Bella Coola there is no social difference between a shaman who can cure with the aid of a basin, and one who lacks this power. Each has merely received a different gift from his supernatural benefactor. There seems little doubt that a man of imagina-
* 756 tive temperament frequently invents a feat of this type, or 787 rather that he ponders over one until he either dreams of it, or imagines himself to have done so. Certainly, after he has performed such a rite, he deludes himself into believing that he has had supernatural authorization for it. Conjuring feats performed long ago by shamans, feats practised by the members of other tribes, personal inventions, either actually or theoretically dreamed of, all these are among the sources from which shamanistic dances are derived. It follows that almost
* 756 anyone who has the necessary skill is able to perform, provided 556 that he has sufficient food to validate the ceremony. Thus this

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

177
756 789
559

Direct Revelations from the Supreme God

As has been noted, a shaman receives his power from one or other supernatural being, not from the supreme god, Ayantsin, himself. Yet instances are known to the Bella Coola of such benefactions, and to a visionary so endowed the term sxdzow is applied. In every case a revelation of this type is considered to have taken place comparatively recently. In view of the manner in which biblical tales, introduced by Europeans, have spread from tribe to tribe in distorted form, it is not improbable that all such examples of the direct appearance of the supreme being can be traced to this source. Having heard from the white men of cases where the deity has appeared to men, the Indians would be only too ready and willing to accept and transmit such a tale, since it belongs to their general culture pattern. In the example here given, the instructions about dissemination of the knowledge imparted in the vision, as well as the claimed foreknowledge of European houses, strongly suggests a post-white man origin. Further, once the concept of the possible appearance of the supreme god is accepted—and no Bella Coola would question the accuracy of accounts heard from others—it would be a simple matter to attribute the powers of very strong shamans to this source. Accordingly, several typical shaman stories have been included in this section because it is claimed that the principal characters in each was a sxdzow; it is highly probable, however, that if such a tale could have been collected when the whites first reached British Columbia, he would have appeared as nothing more than a shaman.

a Sxdzow

A man whose home was on the lower Fraser was once cooking fish with hot stones in a box. To do this properly he needed four sets of heaters; when the food was nearly ready and he was dropping one of the fourth collection of stones into the box, the tongs, weakened by much hard usage, broke. The stone fell into the boiling water with a splash, severely burning the man, who, as it was salmon time, was no clothing.

1:Mi Dorsey/h E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

179
756
987
539

Even in his pain he thought of the way in which human beings are less protected than beasts and this idea troubled him so much that he fainted. Ayantlem saw that the man was distressed and while he was still unconscious appeared to him, saying:

"I see you are worried about your lack of clothing. I have a message for you. Strange people, somewhat resembling yourselves, are approaching from the far east. They will help you out of your plight. You will find them cooking without the cumbersome boiling box; their houses will be warm and they will even have smooth coverings to their floors; there will be special places for sleeping and wonderful cooking-pots. Though all be warm in these houses, yet the fire will be invisible."

As a result of the vision the man became a recluse. In the autumn he moved toward the coast and built for himself a house of special type with a raised sleeping platform in it, reached by a ladder.

Ayantlem had told him to transmit his message to other tribes, and for this purpose he travelled to the sites of Swanlk, Comox, and Nanaimo, telling what he had heard in his vision. He further said that the newcomers would wear clothing, leaving only hands, feet, and face exposed. This, too, he had learnt from the vision, also that the strangers would arrive during the generation of his hearers.

He fellow villagers used to eat large quantities of clams, which could be gathered only at the time of full-moon or new-moon, when the receding tide exposed a great expanse of clam-bed. The people decided to test his power by asking him if he could not gather the shell-fish at a time when the tide was medium and the beds covered. The visionary was on his platform in the upper part of his house, but without raising his head, he said:

"Yes, get ready; I will join you immediately."

He descended, passed through the doubting crowd which made way for him, and went to the ocean, with eyes tightly closed. Arrived at the water, he lowered his hand to feel it, then carefully put his foot under the surface, as if it were a rock. He advanced with short steps, going through the motions of one who rolls something back with his feet, and as he did so the water piled up as if it had been a rock, exposing the clam-bed. When he felt sands under his feet he knew that the outer edge of the bed was reached and accordingly stopped, turned his back to the sea, which was now high as a wall, and held it back, without becoming wet. He called to his villagers who came and gathered the clams, though some looked doubtfully at the wall of water before them. When all who wished had done so, he ordered them to leave and returned towards the shore himself, the water following him, became normal and recovered its former area.

197 The details of this incident are sufficiently circumstantial to presuppose a distorted historical event. Moreover, many of the old people had heard of the incident, another indication of the accuracy of the tradition. As far as could be judged, news of the vision must have reached Bella Coola about the year 1800.* It is said that the sxlyem sang the following song in a language unknown to any of his hearers: *Ayaimaxa ayaimaxa sisilx sexamaxa gaxiyu. None of the older men appear to have any idea of the meaning of these words, or even of the language to which they belong.

No event has had such profound effect on the lives of the Indians of British Columbia as the coming of the white man. It would be surprising if, looking backwards, they did not feel that it had been foretold by prophets. The preceding story is the only Bella Coola example of such a belief, although tales of a similar kind are found widely throughout the province. In addition, there are a few traditions of prophecies fulfilled by the white man. One of these is that long, long ago, a shaman stated that in the future the dead would return with the ability to make fire by rubbing the end of a small twig along a rough surface, and that, soon after, all the Indians would die. The Bella Coola consider that matches are referred to in the first part of the statement, and read their own doom

[194] *The approximate date was determined in the following manner. The most complete account of the event was obtained from a man fifty-six years old in 1924 who had heard the details from his mother. He was the youngest of a large family, so it is probable that his mother was about forty-five years of age when he was born. When a child of about ten, she had been told of the vision by a woman just passed the age of child-bearing, who had recently reached adolescence when news of the event reached Bella Coola. The figures can be arranged in tabular form.

Duration of the informant's life	56 years.
Interval between his birth and the time his mother heard the news	35 years.
Interval between transmission of the news to the informant's mother and its receipt in Bella Coola	35 years.
Total	126 years.

Allowing for exaggerations, this would make the correct date about 1800.

[196] A phonograph record was made of this song for the National Museum of Canada. Recorded as song 910 D 10b, singer, Jim Pelkmit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

in the second, as indicated by their diminished population. It is also said that about 1850, when a party of Bella Coola had camped for the night near Ocean Falls, one of the sleepers wakened his comrades by calling on them to look at the brilliant lights. No one then understood what he meant, but the meaning has become clear since the installation of electric lights in the town. 177 756* 787*

In addition to the preceding, a number of stories of the regular shaman type were collected, in which, however, the principal figure is said to have been a snâsem. They are included in this section for the reasons already mentioned. 539 756* 787*

A POTENTIAL Snasem

The mother of an elderly Bella Coola used to receive direct communications from Alquntâm which gave her the necessary qualifications for a snâsem, though she did not wish to exercise her power. She was able to see over the whole earth, and to talk to sun, moon, and stars in a language which the other Bella Coola did not understand. She built a small house for herself in the woods where she usually slept alone; sometimes her husband joined her, but he was always afraid of the gigantic toads and other monsters that were her companions.

THE WOMAN WHO COULD CALL THUNDER

About one hundred years ago there was living in a village at the mouth of the Dean River, a man, ursinmûlis, and his wife, Snaqûsis. He was a famous hunter who frequently observed ceremonial chastity and his wife claimed to be a shaman, but the inhabitants of the villages on both the Dean and Kimsquit rivers doubted this, as did also those living in the lower Bella Coola valley. Snaqûsis was so boastful and disagreeable that at last the chiefs held a meeting and went one day to her house, where they told her that if she failed to give a satisfactory demonstration of her powers she would be killed.* Some were ashamed to doubt her word, but the consensus of opinion was that she should prove her claims, so they all sat down in her house and waited. She looked around and selected one man, Kûlkûl, without apparent reason, and told him that he was to

*Such power on the part of chiefs is most unusual and, though it was related without comment by the narrator, should not be regarded as historically correct. [622]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

THE ORPHAN HUNTER
(Second Version)

Djuskp[a] was a poor orphan boy who lived with and looked after his sister. Eager to be a hunter, he made a bow for himself and begged her to make A string for it. First she offered to braid it of cedar-bark, but he would have none of it, and, when he likewise refused to accept one of moss, she was in despair, saying that she had nothing more that she could use. Then Djuskp persuaded her to give him some of her hair, which he twined into a bow-string. His sister told him never to shoot upwards, and he promised to obey her injunction. He was a fairly successful hunter, and killed a large number of squirrels whose skins his sister sewed into clothing for her brother and herself.

One day when Djuskp was hunting he saw a black bear in a tree. It seemed an easy mark, so easy that he felt certain of success and quite forgot his sister's instructions not to shoot upwards. Already he seemed to see himself clad in a fine bear-skin cloak, and ripped his squirrel-skin covering to pieces in anticipation. He shot at the bear, but the arrow, missing its mark, lodged in the tree; again he tried with like result. As this exhausted his quiver, Djuskp decided to climb after his arrows. Up he went, the bear clambering up and up above him, but he did not realize that the tree was growing rapidly, until, when he looked down, he saw, to his amazement, that the earth had disappeared from sight. After a moment's hesitation, he resolutely continued his climb. Finally the tree penetrated the floor of the land above, to which the hunter crawled with the aid of his bow.

Djuskp found himself in a flat country where he wandered on until he reached four large runways, such as any large animal might have made. Presently he heard a far-off rumble, a light appeared in the distance, and the sun came roaring up one of the paths. The heat became intense, but as the sun disappeared, the temperature returned to normal. Djuskp decided to set the string of his bow as a noose in one of the runways and, when he had done so, lay down to sleep.

Next morning he was awakened by the same distant rumbling; again the sun came near and was caught in his noose. As the heat was unbearable, Djuskp tried to reach with his bow to pull away his loop, but was driven back by the warmth. Then a mouse came to his aid, which Djuskp sent in to gnaw at the string, but the animal was roasted to death. He pulled it forth with his bow and revived it by sprinkling it with paint. Again he despatched the little creature, but a second time it was overcome evening of Tlenqipitlen-a, and joined with a pretty girl engaged in the same task. When he returned home he with-had vanished. His jealousy was so great that she had gone back to the land of the supernatural.

[a]The name of the hero appears in different forms; it is probably a Carrier word incorrectly pronounced by the Bella Coola.

THE DEATH OF Nanuwenuldi.*

One May day, sometime about 1870, a certain Nanuwenuldi was hunting at Tsemsh, below Kimsquit. He had climbed far up a mountain when he saw a black bear in an open space. Coming within range, the man fired at the animal with his Hudson's Bay Company musket, and apparently struck it, for it rolled around wildly before slowly moving away. The hunter followed, hoping for a second shot. When the bear had almost reached the further end of a log which spanned a chasm it turned round, and Nanuwenuldi saw, to his utter astonishment, that its face was identical with his own. Forgetting to fire, the hunter stood, stricken motionless with wonder, his musket in his hand. The quarry moved slowly off, then paused to look back, and again Nanuwenuldi saw that its face was the image of his own. He dared not fire, nor did he dare follow the animal. One of his ancestors had received power from a bear, so he should not have been surprised at this situation, and, if he had been brave, he would have followed the animal to its home where he would have been made a chamen. In any appearance of the supernatural, whether or not the beholder take advantage of it, he should not mention what he has seen, and for one year should remain close to his house. Nanuwenuldi obeyed only the first of these requirements.

Next March Nanuwenuldi, with a companion whom some say Ayimdem, set out for the same hunting-ground. As they neared their destination Nanuwenuldi, who was anxiling to game while his friend paddled, saw a goat far up the slope of a mountain. It had long far hanging from its throat, such a goat as the people of old said had the power to kill men. He suggested that they land and hunt the animal the following day. The two camped on the very spot used by Nanuwenuldi the previous year, and that night he told his friend about his earlier experience, saying that he had just remembered it. Ayimdem, foolishly, did not dissuade him from his hunting venture.

Next morning Nanuwenuldi set off with his dog and his stick, leaving Ayimdem in camp. After some time the latter heard a shot, and idly wondered how his companion was faring. Towards dusk the dog returned alone, and Ayimdem at once heard that his friend had met with misfor-

*Although this story does not describe the obtaining of supernatural power, as the exploits of a person so endowed, it is inserted in this section to show a man lost in the presence of the supernatural, from which visitor might have been gained.

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

the hut received his dreamed power was Qi-tlas. The boy spent one night in the hut below, then returned to the village, carrying the stick with him. A which was hung of course, dropped since his departure, as the people supposed he had been trying to obtain power. When he did not display it as usual, they jeered at him, but he said nothing. Then night he killed one of his father's murderers in the manner which he had been taught, and did the same every night until all who had taken part in his parent's death had been dispatched. Then he regained his father's honors and became wealthy.

The orphan had not still become a shaman through the assistance of Qi-tlas. He had also acquired the name, he distinctly carrying with it a [illegible] prerogative, which has fallen recently been forgotten. The name was first used by the father of a man now living, but he disliked it on account of its similarity in the word for "death," it they said accordingly, changed it.[illegible] The repository (1) of Qi-tlas was the cave wherein the [illegible] still dwell, it is still called, nowadays, "The Place of Death."

Qi-tlas was not the only man to whom a figure is supposed to the beginning of time. The [illegible] (1) of [illegible] is one [illegible] of which the name [illegible] has also been preserved by the descendants of the first man. From the [illegible] recently some of the [illegible] have been seen. Such is the account, however, a certain man not too often undergoing [illegible] in the Hot Springs, and in 1900 a [illegible] and another or a [illegible], but [illegible] to the effects to such is. There is a tendency for such visitations to appear only to those whose ancestors have seen them, and there is no tradition of such an occurrence in the tribe's family, to my [illegible] knowledge. Perhaps he are only a [illegible] which demonstrated to supernatural power by appearing to a [illegible] family.

THE MAN'S SUPERIOR

Two brothers, the youngest of whom was named Pagwanilin, went to hunt mountain goats in the upper valley of the river which enters Dean Channel from the Great Bay. In some unknown fashion Pagwanilin noticed that supernatural power had been granted to him, and secretly [illegible] movements to any [illegible] when his brothers were hunting. Every day the three went out after goats, but without success. They did not realize that this was because the youngest brother was keeping the [illegible] to away by singing to them and giving them [illegible] of food. They went on for several days.

Then Pagwanilin said, "You stay in camp today, I will go my [illegible]."

[illegible]

[757] about one week. This causes the skin to turn white and draws out the worm.

[758] [759] (c) The usual remedy for boils and similar sores is cutting. There are no professional surgeons so that a patient merely requests a friend in whom he has confidence to perform the operation which is now carried out with a metal knife instead of an obsidian blade. A man frequently performs on himself and it is not uncommon to see a Bella Coola sitting nonchalantly with clothing streaming down his leg into a receptacle filled with water. Even when a boil is on the buttocks, it may be cut by sitting down on a knife, but in this case a friend is always present to state when the position is correct.

[760] [761] For Ulcers and Abscesses

A few individuals, at present two at Bella Coola and one at Kimsquit, have the necessary skill to locate and operate on ulcers of the stomach. They have no inherited prerogative, their ability is due solely to practice and good sense. If a person suffers from internal pains and believes them to be caused by an ulcer, he requests one of these men to help him. The practitioner kneads and handles the patient to locate the growth, and suggests operating if he thinks it necessary. He measures off on the blade of a knife the depth required for the incision and obtains consent to make such a cut. If the sufferer considers it too deep, he may indicate a shorter distance on the knife, or he may desire a still deeper cut. As soon as patient and surgeon have agreed upon the depth of the wound, the latter inserts the knife to the proper distance, twists it around, and draws it out. If he has diagnosed correctly, pus comes pouring out; the wound is drained by the insertion of an eagle quill, and in every case the patient recovers. Several instances are remembered of too deep cutting, resulting in penetration of the intestine and death. A surgeon is always suitably remunerated for his work.

It is believed that such operations were performed before the introduction of metal knives. Whether or not this be true,

1:M:Dorsith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

"Please remedy the invalid." 755

This is virtually a prayer, addressed to the deceased owner of the skull, and accordingly verges on appeal to the dead. None the less, there is no concept of active supplication to any individual ghost, but rather of acquiring aid by the use of a supernatural object.

For one year after this treatment, sexual intercourse is forbidden to both practitioner and patient. The latter, though not the former, dies if either fails to observe this taboo. The use of an old man to apply the medicine is to lessen danger from this source. The owner of this remedy is always liberally rewarded and some old men carefully preserve a skull under a rock-ledge in order to be ready if called upon.

For Smallpox

Pick up a toad, and tear off its head with the teeth, swallowing some of the blood. 757

This is an ancient remedy for some other ailment which was tried as a last resort during the smallpox epidemic. One man who succeeded in practising it on four successive days was cured of the dread disease.

For Consumption

Boil leaves and stems of a certain fleshy plant (not identified) in water and drink the decoction. The potency of the medicine increases accordingly to the number of plants used.

This medicine was a Heenlka Indian's hereditary cure for a cough which was found to be effective for consumption as well. The malady was so prevalent on the coast in the last century that it seemed as if the inhabitants were doomed; this remedy was allegedly discovered at that time and knowledge of it spread rapidly from tribe to tribe, saving the lives of hundreds. The Bella Coola recognize that this was a private medicine, but have ceased to regard it as such and have no hesitation in applying it whenever required.

Ichi Dwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

756 For Insanity

177 The Bella Coola have no medicine for this disease, although they are familiar with one used by the Kwakiutl, which was applied not long ago to a Rivers Inlet youth by two old women, one from Newitna and the other from Djoldinus. They exhumed a recently buried corpse, took a small piece of skin from the left side of the base of the neck, left this for twenty-four hours in a small stream, and then allowed it to stay for another twenty-four hours in a cup filled with water. This liquid was drunk by the patient who immediately recovered his sanity. He was next given water in which had been boiled needles from the yellow cedar; this strengthened him and prevented a relapse. The patient, now cured, observed continence for a year; failure to obey this injunction would have caused his death.

[185] [761] The Bella Coola assume that this remedy is the property of Kwakiutl ancestral families who alone are entitled to use it. The practitioners are always suitably recompensed and do not undertake the treatment except at the request of one of the patient's relatives. Kwakiutl experts have been brought to Bella Coola several times within recent years to cure cases of insanity, but great secrecy is maintained concerning the methods employed. They are considered to be effective, in proof of which the attention of the writer was directed to two men who were said to have been raving lunatics before undergoing a Kwakiutl treatment. It is probable that the individuals had been subject to periodic fits of insanity and that a temporary improvement was regarded as a definite cure.

757 For Venereal Disease (four means)

(a) Boil scrapings of false hellebore roots in water for a long time and drink the decoction. If it is too strong, add more water.

(b) Pound cha'tcalt, a kind of fungus, in water and drink for fever.

Z:McDougall E-9 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA DeGarmo NEA

575*
551 elaborate kwiat ritual which failed;

Nawalm, meaning unknown;

"The One who Guards the Ritual by Gripping with his Teeth";

"The Twister";

"The Dog-Touched One."

When a kwiat acts contrary to the interests of the society the marshals gather in the sacred meeting-place of the village, with other senior kwiatsin. There is no definite order respecting who shall, or shall not, be summoned. The matter is discussed until unanimity of opinion is reached, although a marshal, particularly if he is also a rich and influential chief, is the guiding spirit. In Wuquinuxwa the supernatural being Sisiutlaxa kills any supernatural kwiat who acts, as in this world it is always said that a verdict of death has been given by this being. Several of these at the meeting are sent out to turn the victim who, brought before the group, is told that he is to die. He is seized, thrown on his back, and a pole laid across his neck; two men sit on each end until the man is dead.* Sometimes less drastic punishments are meted out. About 1880, when the influence of the white man had become evident on the coast, a dancer who had been, theoretically, disembowelled and was supposed to remain for months within his house to recover from the operation, insisted on fleeing to Quatsino to a woman with whom he was in love. When he returned to Bella Coola a meeting was held to decide whether or not he should be killed. Four of the white men prevented summary punishment, but the marshals insisted that the offender submit himself to periodic scrutiny on the assumption that a rail so that it would appear to the uninitiated that he was suffering from a deep wound. The offender was doubtful to escape thus lightly.

575*
551

575*
551

575*
551

* Incidentally the relative of a condemned person gives him by saying that he must not be killed. This means that the speaker is willing to die as a substitute. He is assumed to die course, but the mechanism by which the affiliate of the victim is engaged is not clear.

perform several ancient rites through a desire to "show off" before someone who was ignorant. In recent years there has been a tendency to concentrate on hamat ceremonials, and to judge a man's worth by his boldness in them, but this is only a modern development due to the prohibition of the potlatch. Nevertheless, even in former times some individuals preferred to invite foreign guests to hamat dances and to give them valuable gifts rather than to save them for potlatches; such a ceremony is called a kekwanat. Whenever strangers are present at a hamat dance they receive small pieces of dyed cedar-bark as proof of the friendly intentions of the host. The general consensus of Bella Coola opinion is that it is foolish for a man to concentrate on hamat performances, particularly if he impoverish himself to the detriment of potlatches.

Although foreign guests are seldom invited to hamat rites, a dance frequently calls in his fellows from adjacent villages. But as the ceremonial season is simultaneous in the different settlements, with almost nightly performances, it is often impossible to avoid conflict in dates. Which invitation shall have preference is decided in the following manner:

During the days of potlatch and rehearsal the dancers sends a herald of powerful physique to invite guests from as many villages as he wishes. Simultaneously, a messenger may be approaching from the opposite direction with a similar invitation. Each envoy carries carefully around each hand in the path for his rival, and whichever can first call out his message is entitled to continue to give his invitation in the village of the unnerved herald. It is considered exceedingly bad taste to decline a summons, so the ceremony to which the defeated herald was bearing an invitation must be postponed. Sometimes the two messengers sight one another simultaneously, and the relative priority of their messages is then decided by a contest of strength. The rivals stand in the path, shoulder to shoulder, arms close to their sides, and shove with all their strength, the winner being the one who can force his opponent to move his feet. This last means of deciding is used exclu-

*575 [229] only when the villages in which the dances are taking place are adjacent or separated by such a slight distance that envoys cannot meet en route.

*576 [177] [224] [64] A word may be said about the attitude of the Bella Coola to the dances of other coastal tribes. They know that the Bella Bella, Rivers Inlet, Kwakiutl, and Kitkatla people have Tsaiat societies, but until recently the members were considered to be uninitiated, as Bella Coolas were when they visited foreign tribes.* A few years ago the Bla Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet people decided that the rites were sufficiently alike to permit membership in one tribes carry with it membership in the others.

"We have now one repository," the say.

This development is due to ease of communication and intermixture of population in the three tribes. None the less, the Bella Coola recognize differences between their own rites and those of their neighbours. They say that no other tribe has repository, also that in the other tribes the Tsaiat society is more intimately connected with the birds, in fact, that in Bella Bella and Fort Rupert the Cowhids are the chiefs, whereas in Bella Coola even a poor nonsinfluential in every other respect, can be one.

[171] *576 [177] [196] Transcription is out of place in a narrative monograph such as this, but the writer gives it as his personal opinion that the Bella Coola have adopted much, but all, of the Tsaiat ceremonial from other coastal tribes, though they have profoundly altered it in respect to certain minor beliefs connected with mythical guardian spirits and departures of ancestral heroes. He further believes that it will be found that the Bella Coola technique has in its turn tested the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet Indians. There seemingly doubt that the Bella Coola are correct in saying that Tsaiat society is more important among them than among their neighbours, and the writer feels that dances and crests of distant types have recently been adapted to the Tsaiat parts of the Bella Coola.

[171] [179]

* Except a few individuals who had obtained the prerogatives.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

and the patron shifts his protection to the substitute. Non-members are told that the death was due to one of the many dangers connected with the society. 575* 766

It is said that, in former times, the kakaxiut sometimes held a commemorative rite at which the song composed resembled that used at a memorial potlatch. Details were unobtainable on this subject and it is clear that it has long been discontinued. In 1922, however, memorial songs were sung for dead kakaxiut, but this seems to have been an innovation, due to prohibition of the potlatch. 575* 769 533 177

The Ritual of Specific Dances

General observations about the dances

A detailed description of various kaxiut dances can now be given. Unfortunately, there are so many points of difference between them that each will require a separate account, although considerable repetition can be avoided by mentioning in connection with the first dance those features common to all. The initial performer is always he who has the prerogative of using the supernatural canoe which comes from the Land of the Salmon to visit Nuxpelmucin. Several kakaxiut have the capacity of this craft as patron, and if each should wish to dance the marshals decide which of them is to do so. Thereafter there is no order for different dances; the marshals see to it that anyone who wishes to give a ceremony does so without conflicting with another. The first dance described is the one which occurs at the beginning of every kaxiut season. 575* 796* [824] [776]

The dance of Nuklymut[*]

The Bella Coola believe that on the fourth day after the September moon is full there starts from the Land of the Salmon, in the far west, the canoe Nuklymut, commanded by a supernatural being of the same name. This craft slowly 777 778 825

[*] Cf. Boas, p. 46.

[The Dance of Nuakunim]

*576 *996 [599] [177] watches from old songs. The Bella Bella are said to use the same compositions from year to year, and recently some of these, both tunes and foreign words, have been adopted by the Bella Coola. Long ago the marshals would have prohibited this custom even if the user had legitimately obtained the foreign prerogative by marriage.

[205] As the time draws near for Nuakunim to start his voyage, X anxiously consults any of the older kukwiut who may be calendrical experts as to the exact date. The system of reckoning time is not sufficiently exact to avoid errors, but the day ultimately arrives on which, after much discussion, it is agreed that Nuakunim is leaving. Word is passed around to the singers, who sleep that night in X's house, ready for their duties on the morrow.

Early in the morning X stands up, gazes fondly towards the west, and calls out:

[187] "Once more I see what I saw last year," or some other more or less specific clause to a vision.

It is believed that Nuakunim must round four points before reaching Bella Coola; in fact, his journey towards the sea is similar to that of a canoe pushing up one of the long fords.

[177] Some of the marshals are always in readiness and one of them with a herald to go to every house, repeating what X has said. This serves both to impress the uninitiated, and to notify the kukwiut of when to attend to take place. The messenger does so, and when all have gathered, the singers, seated behind the fire, begin to hear out one of the songs composed during the summer months. The theme is of X's phenomenal eye-sight, due to his person having sent to him the supernatural being, Nuakunimsum, at the moment of his departure. This being does not seem to possess corporal form, but is rather a sight-producing medium. In the song he is often likened to a swift-flying bird; when the uninitiated hear of this they are suitably impressed with the remarkable ability of X at having such a creature sent to him. X, who has donned a head-dress consisting of the white tails of two eagles, dances

*[203] *576 *996 [599] [177] [174] [184]

This ejaculation is supposed to make the work of manufacture less difficult. The same procedure is repeated with every mask ordered, except that if the being to be represented is a woman, X's ejaculation is i —. Any factor can make a mask, but the preference is always given to a man who has shown ability in previous tasks. The carpenters endeavour to follow well-recognized designs for many representations, but a great deal of latitude is allowed, and a workman receives greater praise and fame for carving out a fine and distinctive piece of new design, than for rigid adherence to a former type. This, combined with the burning of masks and consequent loss of permanent patterns, is responsible for the variability in Bella Coola forms, and the difficulty which they themselves experience in recognizing personal beings.

As soon as all the carpentry has been allotted, the singers strike up one of X's eight songs. Whether or not he dances to them is a matter about which there is a difference of opinion among informants. In any case the re-singing or variation is purely for rehearsal, made necessary by the large number of songs. Later on in the factor season, the songs of other dancers may be practised on this night, and if the owners wish to practice their songs, it is quite proper for them to do so. Finally, a meal is distributed, while the mantels dancers in the usual way. There are factors of all factor dances, and the food distributed is regarded as a free-will gift, without thought of repayment. After eating, the factor dancers, X must sleep within his own house, but no longer remain within the platform enclosure.

The next day, the twenty-sixth of the ceremony, is quiet. Early in the morning a herald summons to X's house, where the blocks have been left, all those to whom work has been assigned. All morning they carve diligently. The speed with which masks are completed is surprising, although this has undoubtedly increased since the introduction of metal tools. In the middle of the day a few factor men, or women, are invited to share "the carpenters' meal," as the food provided has been in contact. Their attitude of uncertainty as to whether they are gazing upon real supernatural beings or an representations of them has already been described, but the uninitiated do not dwelling on the point—they are seeing strange sights about which X and the Initiator know, that is enough for them.

Behind the fire they see a cone-shaped structure, a model of Washkyma's craft, with six or eight masked heads, his passengers, appearing over the sides. Near this are four more disguised figures, three standing and one sitting. Ba'ttimaiam ranges in the vicinity, while X himself stands behind, as usual, swinging one arm over the heads of the strange beings and wearing a drooping eye. Ba'ttimaiam explains to the uninitiated that the figures have come from afar, that they are powerful, but not to be afraid, since X's drum gives protection to them from the supernatural ones. He points to one of the figures whose mask is painted with the design of a salmon.[illegible]

"See!" she says, "There is Washkyma; unless he brings the salmon they cannot come to our river."

Another of the standing figures is described as Dzilkhlakwa, and the other as Hahamatsum. In each case the name briefly the functions of the being. The seated figure, who wears a large hat and rests on a rail, is the Receiver. Great is the mystification of the uninitiated at seeing these supernatural beings[illegible] normally visible only to X. How does they get here? Another frequent display is of a group of masked figures playing lahal (II, p. 262). If this has been done, Ba'ttimaiam explains that this game is of interest to the salmon and that it is therefore played in Washkyma's canoe.

[illegible]

[The Cannibal Dance]

The most feared of all Cannibals are those who have the unusual prerogative of eating corpses. At present (1901), there is only one man with this right, whereas at least seven can kill the living. His prerogative was recently obtained from the people of Rivers' Inlet, although the cannibalistic devouring of corpses was well known to the Bella Coola in former days. All informants agreed, however, that the actual eating of a body was practically unknown.* Even when one was provided and the Cannibal dragged it from house to house, accompanied by an escort of fishermen, though he took his teeth into the flesh and pulled forth morsels of the corpse, he invariably disposed of them as soon as he was out of sight of the uninitiated, as in the case of the dog. Of course, blood and small pieces of flesh must have been swallowed inadvertently, but the rite was always essentially symbolic, not real. More often, the "corpse" consisted of a wooden frame-work, shaped like a human body, and covered with the scraped skins of deer or dogs. The interior was filled with the flesh of an animal, and the whole buried in the graveyard until the meat had become foul. The uninitiated, from a distance, watched the unburying of this object and concluded that it really was a long-buried body. Fear prevented them from making a close inspection, so that the defects of the imitation were not apparent. The frames were kept hidden from year to year, as impositive non-members who chanced to stumble upon one would have to be initiated or die.

On account of the long time that has elapsed since a genuine corpse-eating Cannibal dance was carried out, it was found impossible to obtain a detailed account of the ritual. This deficiency is unimportant, since all informants agreed that it closely resembled other Cannibal dances.

Like other Cannibals, one who has the prerogative of eating dead human flesh can perform as often as he desires, subject only to the approval of the members, who have no hesitation

*Figures from the ceremonial eating of a man of qualification was found among the Bella Coola.

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kakoax is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner.

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Ijsak, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unauthenticated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, nakoax, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dotsa.* Ijsak also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the gelon night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when seeing by the cloud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back room. Out rushed a number of kakoax, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, forthwith demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to swallow and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the canoes and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon-

*Ijsak and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound 'x'. For example, he says 'Dexlex,' instead of 'Dedek.' He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it.

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

and must never gossip or mingle casually with the outsiders. 575* In addition to a band of dyed cedar-bark on his head he wears 796* one around his stomach.

A number of years ago, when the influence of the white man had become strong enough to undermine the old ritual, a Bella Coola Sacrium dancer, instead of remaining in seclusion after the dance, ran away to Kimsquit where lived a young woman with whom he was in love. In the old days this would have led to punishment by a dried urine. When the offender wished to return to Bella Coola he was afraid of the wrath of the marshals, but plucked up courage to come back after several months. The marshals seized him and scratched his stomach with a metal nail so that the uninitiated, seeing the wound, might be led to believe that the man had been severely cut. Periodically the scabs were pulled off to re-inflame the injury and make it appear that a deep gash was slowly healing. The offender, of course, could not protest, since he was a Sacrium who had broken the law and was fortunate in escaping so lightly.

575* 796* 688 177

The Beheading Dance

Another of the Sacrium dances which can be performed by 575* a Sacrium is that of having his head pulled off. Like the 796* Stomach-Cutting dance, it is the prerogative of a Kimsquit man named Ontwaltras. He carried out the rite a few years [524] after he had performed the one just described. The main points of ritual being identical for all Sacrium dances, minor points already recorded can be omitted. As before, it will be convenient to name Ontwaltras X, and to describe the dance in the present tense.

Early in the summer X informs one of the marshals of his desire to have his head pulled off the following winter. The one consulted discusses the matter with his fellows; in this case no objections were raised as Ontwaltras had already performed a Sacrium dance and it was felt that he was reliable. As soon as permission is granted, the would-be dancer asks the [532] best carpenters to meet him in a lonely place in the forest and way as with the salmon, except that the jumping is omitted. The order of display is according to the time of ripening for each, but there is so much difference of opinion about this that no rigid order is maintained. The first shown is always the sow-parsnip, but after that there is no definite sequence. The following "berries" were shown at a dance not many years ago: sow-parsnip; false huckleberry; wild gooseberry; red bilberry; thin-leaved bilberry; blueberry; black huckleberry; red elderberry; dwarf bilberry; false dogwood; salalberry; Canadian buffalo berry; wild red raspberry; blackberry; Rubus spectabilis Pursh.; salmonberry; black hawthorn; flowering juneberry; bunchberry; wild rose; red huckleberry.

[The Dance of Winning]

The informant was not certain that the above was the exact order in which the berries were shown on the occasion described. It is probable that it is approximately correct, however, since he added that the wild strawberry had also been shown, but as he could not remember its correct place he had omitted it. Other old men stated that the following food plants had been used as other Winning dances: Alt, one of the Fritillaria, species undetermined; perennial clover; black raspberry; crabapple; cranberry; fern root; bracken root. Foods introduced by the white man were shown at a recent dance, including: potato, carrot, turnip, and a miniature can of preserved peaches, such as are commonly used in the manufacture of native wine.

Sometimes no one is able to guess the object represented, and when all have grown discouraged the exhibitor puts his ear against K's mouth. The uninitiated assume, of course, that the dancer's supernatural power makes it easy for him to tell the answer and that he is communicating the information to the hearer who promptly gives it. If an uninitiated person should guess the correct response rapidly, it is taken for granted that she has found favour with the supernatural beings. When the last berry has been thrown on the fire, a bardic stands up and starts a song describing the Thermaphrodite and his actions in the land above. The singer provides his own time by beating the one that takes place at a thunder-storm, is said to "make good the peril" of the person. It would formerly have been a very serious offence for a Sun dancer not to perform at an eclipse; his failure would probably have been punished with death by the marshals. One informant vividly recalled his fears when he failed to perform at an eclipse soon after his conversion to Christianity, and reiterated that he had been in deadly peril from the marshals in spite of the white man's law. 575* 796* 821 688 177

THE MOON DANCE

The Sun is not the only heavenly body that acts as patron to hatsin dancers, the Moon also has many human protégés. Among them is Nalaiwale, "The Moon When It Is Uncle-around," of Tsimali, from whom the following account of the Moon dance was obtained. As usual, he can be spoken of as X. 776 355 424

The Moon dance can take place at any time during the ceremonial season, subject, of course, to X's wishes and the consent of the marshals. The coming of the call is heralded in the usual manner and the hatsin presently assemble to learn the song just composed. It describes the following supernatural beings:

Ailatsiwa:[a] A woman who lives in the moon and who can be seen in certain of its phases, always carrying a bucket of water. 575* 796*

The two Ilipaulatsi: These two beings are able periodically to blacken the Moon's face, thus causing an eclipse. 821 776

The two Intsimale-o:[b] These kindly women clean the Moon's face after it has been blackened. It is these beings who come to earth to assist sinkers hatsin.

The song also describes how no supernatural being dares to pass the Moon's house during an eclipse, a prohibition similar to that obeyed by uninitiated with regard to passing outside a house where a hatsin ceremony is taking place. 784

[a] Ailatsiwa is the usual term for ghost, no reason was given for the application of the same designation to the women living in the moon. 775 192

[b] There is difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as to whether or not there is more than one of these beings.

Z: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

instrument is the drum.[1] In former times the drum consisted wholly of a box, though recently skin drums have been adopted from the Carriers. There is usually one singer especially proficient in using this, though sometimes another takes his place; all such arrangements are completed during the final rehearsal. A final decision is also reached as to who shall fill the three principal parts, ranhwolsàm, àhaia, and lualkm. It is the duty of the ranhwolsàm or leader, to regulate the time; he squats facing the others, who are grouped in a close semicircle, and indicates the rhythm by pounding with his stick on the floor. When a song is to start, he first taps rapidly, then modifies and regulates it throughout. The leader should be the best musician among the singers, and the same individual usually functions on all occasions although a rearrangement is sometimes necessary. In the centre of the singers sits the àhaia, announcer, who must possess a powerful voice. As already mentioned, every song consists of three parts, each with several subdivisions. When the leader has beaten time rapidly to indicate that the singers are ready, the announcer bellows out the words of the first subdivision so that all the audience can hear them. Crash! goes the leader's stick and his voice gives the key for singing the words just called out, in which the audience is expected to join. As they are finishing, the announcer roars the next subdivision, and the same procedure is repeated. Instead of proceeding to the third, the announcer often next returns to the first, following it by the second. The subdivisions of a single part are never sung through in order once only, there are always repetitions and ramifications according to the discretion of the announcer. At the end of the first part, the leader again beats time rapidly in which his fellow-singers join. If a dancer is performing, he crouches down without making any effort to keep time with the rapid tapping, and the singing ceases. After a short pause, the second part is sung in the same manner, followed likewise by the third. The function of [1] Rattles, made of dried maple, are used by some nusàl dancers, but they can hardly be termed musical instruments.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

*533 prerogative, he was debarred from seclusion in the back-room and consequent [701] initiation as a nusek. The exact relationship between warriors and members of 575 the nusek society is obscure.

424 (b) Lasaiyae-k' is a Kitkatla name from the north. The first owner moved to Kitlobe where he married, and the designation was transmitted to his descendants.
One of the latter migrated to Kimsquit, where the name has since been handed 177 down from generation to generation though its original source has not been forgotten.

(c) Recorded as song VII D 36, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. This song is said to have been used about 1870.

(d) Vocative form.

(e) That is: I double my importance. This kind of expression is popular among chiefs.

[424] (f) Xwai is one of the ancestral names of Raven, the dancer's crest. In thus addressing the bird, he called attention to his ancestral history.

[262] (g) The home of the first Lasaiyae-k' was near a point where dead whales often drifted ashore. The dancer likens himself to a whale on which people will dine.

(h) Such repetition is not uncommon. The dancer implies that his wealth will be divided in a manner similar to the cutting up of a whale's carcass.

(i) A promontory owned by the first Lasaiyae-k'.

(j) That is: I summon people [to a feast.]

(k) An invitation not to be taken too literally.

Xe-tla Songs

The tunes of xe-tla songs are believed to have been handed down, unaltered, for many generations. The words, too, are frequently ancient although the singers sometimes make slight changes so that they will be more suitable for the chief in whose honour they are being sung. Owing to the decline of cere-[796] monials in which they were used, few xe-tla songs are now remembered.

Xe-tla Song Used by Simaqut of Kimsquit(a)

[727] A Alimayuwa | Ahlawal'alhdal | Di nahaitmplai | dinailimil
Come! | See! | The chief | a man stands in the bow(b) di yalaxal'aikdai of those who travelled everywhere.

[WOMAN'S SONG]

B Alaiyuhaqaqaxis | Di'anaxakilaha | aiyamyamitilaha
He did so, | my pature(c), | whence I came(d),

[illegible]	[illegible]	533*
be circled and returned	Song[illegible].

[illegible]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

(a) Recorded on song VII D 30a, National Museum of Canada, singer, Jim Pelland.
(b) A sign of victory, usually sounded for when a war party is returning. [129]
(c) A reference to [illegible], one of Gisaqtl's four occupants in the beginning of time. He made a journey to the Skeena, returning from there with some and paddles discovered with sun designs. The exploits of his descendant are compared with those of his partners, that is, his four fathers. Such references to family history are sources of pride to the chief being honoured. [773]
(d) That is: From whom I am descended.

Fragment of a Tsimshian Song Used by Gwayu-ulnas of Kitwanqalik

A [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Presently he will be ashamed	that chief	[illegible]

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

(a) Both tune and theme are said to be of Kwakiutl origin.
(b) Recorded on song VII D 34b, National Museum of Canada, singer, Jim Pelland. [177]

Fragment of a Tsimshian Song Used by Gwagwilgyum of Kitwanqalik

A [illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
They are smiling,	greetings to the not-accepted [illegible]	They drink

[illegible]
[illegible]

(illegible)

B and C have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded on song VII D 41b, National Museum of Canada, singer, Jim Pelland.
(b) Laundry: Slide!
(c) This song was used at a potlatch where the host provided soap suds. The tune is said to be very ancient although new words were composed for the occasion. [556] [279]

Full Songs

Full songs somewhat resemble canoe songs and, like them, are difficult to collect completely. Parts of many are remem- [575] [796]

(a) A reference to a member referred to the lost chore, described above, or leaving the [illegible]

(b) The significance is as follows. The Council has powerful [illegible] on the sidewalk, is needed so that across the standing upon it was needed so if the lost boys holding a meal has struck to a boy's hammer.

(c) Nevertheless, the Mayor's power, guards his pull along the sidewalk for dishing his fingers. This has the further implication of [illegible] that [illegible] referred to as the Puppet all during the dishing. The whole phase is necessarily obscure.

(d) The Mayor's power.

Step Five (or Sometimes, a Fourteenth Twenty Seven)

8 [illegible] They(1) prefer an	[illegible] my own food(2),	[illegible] then shall

[illegible]
Quantum(1)

[illegible]

9 [illegible] They(2) what are,	[illegible] full, Sometimes(3),	[illegible] other meant to act

[illegible]
illegible.

[illegible]

7 [illegible] They come to an	[illegible] the market(1),	[illegible] the bottom(1)

[illegible]
of illegible.

(a) The man had long been resident in Bells Ends and decided to perform the Knotted dance, in the great revival of the Bells Ends. This took place during the latter season of 1924, the last time that such had ever occurred. [illegible]

(b) Accorded as song 1/1 2 in the National Museum of Canada, stage, Ion Dakota. The song was composed by Kinnport Max, and is probably constituent from the Kwakiutl.

(c) Thus to. The supernatural beings.

(d) Thus to. Human Bell.

(e) Thus to a Knotted supernatural being, the dance's power, and equivalent to the Bells Ends chased dance. The dance's call consequently was not all as a meaning etc. [illegible]

(f) Thus to. The supernatural beings.

(g) Thus to. Sometimes and the other supernatural was which not.

(h) Thus to. When Bellsmenmelle has wanted to see the dance being breakfast staff. Bellsmenmelle has a Knotted supernatural being who is model in that Coastal dances.

[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

[illegible]

(a) [illegible]

(b) [illegible]

(c) [illegible]

(d) [illegible]

(e) [illegible]

(f) [illegible]

(g) [illegible]

(h) [illegible]

(i) [illegible]

(j) [illegible]

(k) [illegible]

(l) [illegible]

[illegible]

Several prominent [illegible] died during the spring and summer of [illegible]. Memorial [illegible] of the usual nature were held, but in addition several [illegible] were composed and used in their honour during the [illegible] season. When a relative was interred, his song contained numerous references and words of the type normally restricted to mourning songs. Such a combination may occasionally have taken place in former times, but the present comparatively common usage is due to the difficulty of holding regular gatherings. In such case the [illegible] were differentiated, and no description of the proper ceremonial was [illegible]. The following are examples of combined [illegible] and mourning songs.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

When a bar is sung fitting around in the draft, tale-alive gives it as follows: [illegible]

[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]

These two words are repeated an indefinite number of times.

(2) Recorded in [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

[illegible]

Gambling games have always been popular among the Bella Coola, especially the one known as kind which was in all European origin. Contestants sing as they play, but the songs, lacking words, consist merely of a series of meaningless ejaculations. The tunes, however, are remembered, and certain ones are considered to be the proper accompaniment to certain games. When a number of men are singing in unison, they follow the direction of a leader, but at other times the "words" vary according to individual taste. The tunes often are impromptu, and it is often remembered from what game they first came.[1]

A few songs have been adopted from the Carrier and are sung from them straight in the Bella Coola, since the words are unintelligible. The most popular is the following:

---

[1] A number of [illegible] are [illegible].

[2] Recorded [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

[3] [illegible] Bella Coola [illegible] Type Case of Western Bella Coola, [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

[4] Bella Coola [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

[5] Bella Coola [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

[6] Bella Coola [illegible], National Museum of Canada, [illegible] the Ashish.

(Sing-a-Song-a-Sandy) Bella Coola(s)

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
[illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] | [illegible]
[illegible] | [illegible]

(1) [illegible] Obtained this song was derived from the Carrier or the [illegible].

(2) Recorded a song [illegible] National Museum of Canada, singer, [illegible].

(3) [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] through the valley and the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] as a warrior. Such a chief had no command over his followers. If he were a man of great prestige, many would be willing to serve under him, but he could not compel the services of anyone except his own slaves. Free individuals often declined to follow their fellows to war, although the force of public opinion usually prevented a too individualistic course. Inhabitants of other towns used their own discretion whether or not to join the party. If some of their relations had been slain in the previous attack, revenge influenced them to share in the retaliation, otherwise only the prestige of a mighty chief could secure them. No case is known in which all the Bella Coola villages joined in a single expedition; there were often temporary alliances between neighbouring settlements, but complete lack of central organization. The course of events was similar when a chief wished to raid without the motive of avenging an attack. For example, if a Bella Coola had been enslaved by a foreign tribe and slain by his owner, a brother of the victim might decide on revenge. The usual course was to kill a slave belonging to the murderers, though sometimes he had a raiding party if he could gain the necessary support.

Each warrior provided his own weapons, frequently the same as those used for hunting. Bows with obsidian-tipped arrows were most relied upon for offence, though slings were also used from canoes. Every man carried a spear, pointed like an arrow, for hand-to-hand fighting, although there was relatively little of this, most of the combats being fought at a distance with much noise, boasting, and exploitation, but few casualties. Spears were, however, useful if the attackers succeeded in surprising a village at night. Hostilities are a thing of the past, consequently it was impossible to obtain detailed information regarding offensive weapons. Armour consisted of maple or birch slats reinforced with mountain sod were around the body and chest; this ensured quick movement, difficult but was effective against arrows. Muskets were introduced many years ago and armour consequently became useless. Large shields of mountain sod were carried in all canoes.

down of a river where "the white men get money easy." Then Mahmadi began to go south, and was finally sold to an impotent chief living north of Fort Simpson. He used to beat her; to fear, she carried the scars with her to her grave. Mahmadi's master had another slave, a male Bulu Bulu, with whom the woman was on friendly terms since she was related by blood to a Bulu Bulu family and could speak their language. Aroused by her harsh treatment, Mahmadi suggested to her companion to undertake that they kill their master and escape. The man was at first unwilling, but she assured him that she knew the main motivation. The conspirators wanted their opportunity which came when their master was hitting fishing, accompanied only by his two slaves. One evening Mahmadi cooked a large meal for him which made him drowsy so he sat by the fire. Then she sneak behind him, picked up an axe, and killed him by hitting him over the head. The two murderers carefully scraped up all the blood, had sexes to the corpse, and sank it in deep water so that their master's friends would believe that he had been drowned with his slaves. Then the two, having stolen a canoe, paddled off, living by day, and sailing at night until they could gather. After many perils they reached Bulu Bulu, whence Mahmadi returned home.

She had been carried off as a mere girl, but was [illegible] age of child-bearing when she returned and had almost forgotten her native language. The Bulu Cuala were hardly interested in the tale of her adventures, and especially in the way that slaves were buried in Alaska. It was assumed that some of their own captives must have been killed in that way, as slaves from the far north was confined to revenge. It is said that this custom was common among the northern tribes from whom the Bulu Cuala adopted several practices, although this particular one was carried out but once.

The most famous Ottawa chief, and the one most dreaded by the Bulu Cuala, was Pelaty, who is said to have had almost magnetic power over his northern warriors. The name itself was transmitted from one holder to another, but the name

CHAPTER [illegible]

GAMES

The subject of games, lying on the borderline of social customs, was one which was not fully investigated. The Bulu Cards, like all other peoples, have a number of games and pastimes and although the old diversions are being forgotten by the younger people, many of the old men and women are familiar with those played in their youth. As isolated customs these may be of small value, but games of all kinds often preserve ancient practices and, as providing useful clues to the spread of peoples or of culture, are worthy of investigation. Unfortunately, lack of time made it impossible to give the subject the attention it deserved, and the few games here described must not be considered as exhaustive comment of the subject.

Though less fond of competitive sports than the Indians of the Plains, the Bulu Cards enjoy some racing and wrestling. The former appears to have been an ancient diversion, picked men from different villages competed until the outstanding runner of each village, and even now the younger men are anxious to display their skill in this respect. Wrestling, which used to be common during of non-sacred gatherings, has almost entirely disappeared since the prohibition of the potlatch.

The favourite sedentary pastime, enjoyed equally by young and old, is the telling of stories. These of a sacred nature, especially ancient myths, are reserved of course for non-sacred occasions, but the older men and women remember many tales describing the exploits of birds and animals which are recounted again and again to the enjoyment of the listeners, although they may have heard the same recital fifty times. Children enjoy the companionship of some old story teller and it is a common sight to see an old man or woman, surrounded by an eager group, explaining one more but never exercised the child or one himself for any difficulties. Many of these stories are somewhat indecent, others appear broadly funny,

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

island. Ignorant of their whereabouts, they paddled blindly, succeeded in rediscovering their country, and soon after found themselves at Victoria of which they had heard. In the schooner were in the harbour and on the beach they saw a single white man. The latter noticed them and recognized that they were strangers from the shape and decoration of their canoe, and the type of bows they were carrying, each with a hole in the corner, so in regard of those made by the Bella Bella. The men mentioned the peculiarity to his wife, who was herself a Bella Bella, and she came rushing out of the house to welcome those whom she knew at once must be her fellow-villagers. The weary mariners landed and were provided with food and water by the white man's wife.

They stayed for several days at Victoria, rejoicing in their safety, then began to think of returning home. The white husband of the woman who had befriended them urged the travellers to stay and wait for him, promising that he would have guide them north himself, but when he realized that they were unwilling, he gave them other assistance he could. Some of them was familiar with the coast route, and they dared to return and go around the outside of the island along to the fourth reception that had led to the southern end. In the Bella Bella area there is a rough map on the wall, giving those informations about the tribes, fourth fishers, good hiding places, and other lore which he thought would be of value. Then they set forth and reached the north end of Vancouver Island without being seen. Thereafter they were among friendly tribes and could travel openly.

Meanwhile the Bella Bella had despaired of the safety of the long-absent hunters. The father of the chief had invited neighbouring tribes to a memorial potlatch in honour of his son-tribes, on the morning of the day which the rites were to commence, a large canoe was seen approaching the beach. It contained so much European clothing and utensils that those on shore could not recognize the occupants until they were close at hand, but when it was seen that they were the long-lost hunters, they were welcomed with great rejoicing. The only disappointment was to the man who had arranged to marry the wife of the absent chief, she had promised to waiting for a year before remarrying, although the wives of the men had all taken new partners believing their husbands dead.[1]

---

[1] It is difficult to explain a story such as the above. It seems impossible that a complete novelty should be about all the coast of California, and yet there is no place off the Oregon or Washington shore in which it could take place. Probably the time has changed and the direction taken by the men have become confused in the years that have passed since the voyage. Though it is highly probable that it was on a basis of truth is the appearance of a canoe driven from that coast to Victoria Island. Recently enough, the Bella Coola do not date it to the familiar

Bulletin NES

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] generations, the name Gilbertson has been remembered among the Chickasaw. It seems to embody an inherentable tendency to lawlessness and killing, for almost all who have been so designated have been murderers. Around 1840 or 1870, a certain Gilbertson married a Bella Coola woman, which brought his activities to the attention of the colonies. He used to be considerable trading on the Hudson's Bay Company's post, although his manner of obtaining furs was necessarily questionable. He had a wide knowledge of the interior and of the routes by which hunters were likely to bring pelts to Bella Coola. If he could learn that a stranger was likely to be travelling along a trail, it was Gilbertson's custom to set out, unknown, to meet him. He would explain to the hunter that he had come to buy furs and he later would always make him welcome. The price was agreed to in a friendly manner and the two would prepare to camp together for the night. Then Gilbertson would say:

"Perhaps you do not know what a dangerous place Bella Coola is? Even now I am running away. If the men think I will be persecuted, thought I will I had a mother in the hands me as I stay."

The unsuspicious hunter would usually offer to lend to Gilbertson a pony, promising his gratitude, would lend to undertake to stay with a hunter. Early in the morning he would rise, shoot the sleeping companion, and his furs and all them at the trading post. Sometimes he would murder two or more fur hunters on a single trip. This is some of who he had amassed great riches, but had also made enemies on a wide scale. Whenever it became too dangerous for him in the interior he would return to Bella Coola and live with his wife's relatives. People sometimes asked him why he continued his notorious work, but he always answered that it was inconsistency to prevent having amassed him with other from a man's wife when he asked.

On one occasion, Gilbertson set out for Salmon House, on the Stuart River, where there was always an encampment of Carriers. He travelled up the valley of the Nechako River and had just reached the open land where the village was when he met two Carriers, bound for Bella Coola with furs. He were he began attempting to kill them and said the girls. Gilbertson prevent the two by saying:

[illegible] with the people, though the old man from whom he [illegible] the [illegible] with the old man with permit of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

been displaced in their customs and beliefs, their habits, precious, and folk-lore, their outlook both towards the supernatural world and towards their fellows.

The following additional observations are the result of personal knowledge, and recorded after considerable thought.

When a white man begins to environment the Bulu Cults, he cannot fail to be impressed by their deep belief in the supernatural. To them religion is no mental abstraction, but a living reality. They feel the presence of strange creatures around them, and they recognize non-human powers in every manifestation of their own minds; in fact, every incident, good or bad, is attributed to supernatural intervention. This does not mean that they regard life with any indifference, contrary to [illegible] or otherwise has beliefs them. They realize that supernatural powers have endowed them with brains, with physical strength, and with the ability to win favour and gain help from active superhuman beings, and consequently they strive to a world teeming with potent forces. The individual sees in them a white man in the struggle of life, but he overturns his fortune, not to help or to be avoided enemies, but to the assistance of non-human agents. If he is fortunate, it is because his spirit has been active; if unfortunate, because it has been too lazy to protect him.

Contact with white men, particularly with missionaries, has raised considerable problems for the Bulu Cults. The older people have been but little affected; they may state that they are Christians, believing in the white man's god, but this often means only the knowledge of one more supernatural being whom they add to the already rich pantheon. It is quite effective with the younger people, particularly with those who have been away to school. Some adopt the new faith with fervour, continuing to use the same ritual and to experience the same mental conditions, but substituting them to Christianity. The tribes, however, lose of belief in their own faith has caused a general scepticism. Though they may accept the new religion, it does not become the vital force which the old was to their [illegible] Selected beliefs are so deep-rooted in one tribe [illegible] within a few generations. Even those who claim to have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actually conflict with the white man's creed. Such lack of consistency is a multi-side trait, particularly noticeable among the Bafia Coals whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon customs handed down to the single works of different families.

The Bafia Coals are convinced not only by the omnipresence of supernatural beings, they are constantly subjected to the influence of their fetishes. They are far less individualistic than white people. It did not bear that he can do as he pleases. Not he can disregard the restrictions of bare men, he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has earned a position of eminence by giving many [illegible]. The Bafia [illegible] exercise is force because he feels that everyone is aware of his values. The man who performs some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth recognizes himself with his fetishes, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. In present the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to be more unknown to the eye of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even not more proper than conscious in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man is deeply influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, and can be the more stressed in a study of these people.

The education and conversion of the younger men have [illegible] their fetishes upon their fathers. In [illegible] tions, older relations were severed, not only as some members of the ancestral family, but as those most familiar with myths and other cherished possessions. With the spread of new ideas, the young people no longer respect the love of their elders, and consequently do not heed their admonitions and advice. Theoretically, such self-reliance would seem desirable, but in practice it has led to unfortunate results. A young man, considering himself superior to the older people, glories in acting on his own initiative, but too often he lacks the requisite strength of character to guide his own life. If he wishes to drink, he does so; if he desires to marry, he chooses his mate without considering the transmission of ancestral rights which enhibited unions in former times. If he tires of his wife, he deserts her for another; if he cheats or steals, he is no longer restrained by relatives who fear disgrace. The elders, incapable of assuming the role, watch sadly and ask seriously whether the coming of the white man has brought compensation for the loss it has caused. It is deplorable that the emancipation of the younger men and women has taken place before the development of the sense of individual responsibility and conscience which public opinion formerly rendered less necessary. Christianity provides a moral code for those who are fully conversed, but for the many in the transition stage, the break-down of the old system of family influence has been tragic.

Profound religious beliefs and lack of individual initiative are shared by all Bella Coola with the exception, perhaps, of a few of the younger people who, having been educated in white man's schools, have adopted the new outlook unconditionally. In some characteristics they display as wide variability as any other people. In worthfulness, for example, they range from one extreme to the other. As the writer became familiar with the older men, he found it possible to recognize without difficulty the strength of some and the weakness of others. There are liars, but they can be easily detected owing to their lack of fluency. It is a pleasure to record the reliability of the author's friends and informants. Their capacity was checked repeat-

[577] [126] ally until complete confidence was established, simplifying work in the field to an enormous extent. Equal trust could be placed on these men in other respects; articles of value were repeatedly left in their houses with the absolute certainty that they would be guarded with care. Some few individuals there were, however, who were neither honest nor trustworthy. [771] Bella Coola religion is not concerned with ethics, but public opinion demands honour in dealing with relatives or friends. [126] In former times, for example, debts incurred by an individual were considered a liability by his relations. If a man died after [577] [126] buying goods on credit for a potlatch, his family were disgraced if they failed to pay his bills; now, unfortunately, nothing concerns the younger people, many of whom try to avoid meeting even their own debts, much less those of dead relatives. Individual conscience has not replaced the tribal and, more specifically, family influence. Dishonesty in small matters is not [126] [777] uncommon, particularly in dealing with white people who, according to the Bella Coola, were the first to transgress. The older people bitterly lament the lack of morality of the younger and men, probably with some justification, that they would have been prevented by the open life which prevailed when several families shared a single house. On the whole, however, the average Bella Coola is probably no less honest than the average white man.

[153] [126] Individuals vary enormously in mental ability. In making this investigation, it was necessary to interview all the older people of the tribe. Disregarding those unwilling to provide information, it was found that some absolutely lacked the ability to explain matters with which they were familiar; some did not have sufficient patience to be good teachers; some were so forgetful that they would omit necessary points in a story or account; some were downright stupid, whereas others displayed mental ability of no mean order. In reading ethnological literature, one is apt to think of the troubles experienced by the author, and to overlook the fact that natives have as great difficulties in explaining their customs, as the white man has in understanding them.

153
124

115
177
[153]

The writer was impressed by the brilliance shown by several of the natives. Joshua Moody, for example, is essentially the philosopher. More individualistic than most of his tribesmen, he was one of the first to adopt Christianity and has been a faithful follower of the new creed. Deeply interested in religious questions, he has sound up what has been told him of the Bible and pondered deeply on all problems of life. Not particularly practical, subject to fits of anger or moroseness, but with a meditative temperament which delights in seeking biblical parallels and synonyms for Bella Coola practices, he is the kind of mind which, in other walks of life, would have produced the professor of philosophy. Jim Pollard is quite another type. Essentially practical, he has devoted his energies to keeping abreast of changing conditions. He is the best singer and composer in Bella Coola, the best canoeman for miles; he has learnt to handle a motor-boat engine, to aid prospectors for minerals, and has succeeded in amassing and saving a considerable amount of money. Jim excelled all other informants in clearness and logical pronunciation of his explanations, though he showed a slight tendency, intelligible enough, to gloss over aspects which he knew would be considered unpleasant. If Jim had been a white man, he would undoubtedly have made his mark in the world of business. The late Captain Schooner differed from either of the preceding. Older than they, and uncontrolled, he, perhaps, came nearest to the original, uncontaminated Bella Coola type. Heavy in build, coarse in humour and expression, he had a heart of gold and was a fine example of a native gentleman. He was glad to assist most patiently in recording ancient lore, being intensely proud of the traditions of his ancestors. A friendship developed from this which is one of the writer's happiest memories. Often in the evenings life in general was discussed, the war, the rush of progress in big cities, the quest for wealth, the spread of white civilization, and the problems raised by the contact of peoples.

[121]

115 Schooner lacked the mental acumen of Joshua and Jim, but 177 he revealed himself as a tribal patriarch, proud of his family's [153] history and eager to assist his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, but feeling himself lost and helpless in the struggle before them. With sadness, but without bitterness, he used to speak of the approaching end of Bella Coola culture, and his words brought home the tragedy which the spread of civilization brings to so many, and the responsibility resting upon the white people as a whole.

153 Until an intelligence test is devised to correlate the mental 118 ability of the white man with that of the native, it is impossible to compare the two scientifically. None the less, the writer deliberately expresses the opinion that Joshua Moody and Jim Pollard are two of the most brilliant men he has met in any walk of life. They are undoubtedly the most able of the Bella Coola; others have only slightly less ability, while the mass of the population compares favourably with an 178 average white community. Their ability, however, is deficiently conditioned by their conservatism. Absolute trust in the traditions of their ancestors has checked speculation, as the established explanation is never questioned; new inventions, unauthorized by custom, have been regarded as almost sacri-
[124] legious; the force of public opinion, while valuable as a deterrent to anti-social practices, has effectively restrained innovations. The Bella Coola are a good example of a community where development has been atrophied by extreme conservatism fostered by religious beliefs.

105 Taking into account the material obstacles, the achiev-[322] ements of these people have not been insignificant. In former times, provided only with tools of stone and untempered copper, they built graceful canoes, made watertight boxes, hewed planks from mighty cedars, and erected large houses which called for considerable engineering skill. Judged by [533] white standards, their carving and painting lacked artistic deli-
[533] cacy, but it required no mean ability to portray crest designs to meet their own standards. Passing from the purely mechanical

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

515 sionally, in a half-hearted manner, but it is not unusual for a man to allow the basin of water in which he makes his ablutions to remain standing for two or three weeks. Not many [177] years ago the Carriers taught their neighbours to make a kind [246] of soap from the ashes of burnt cottonwood sticks thrown into [388] water; with this clothes are washed irregularly and in most cases from sheer necessity only. In former times bathing was [789] a semi-sacred rite, but this fell into disuse with the passing of [177] the old religion, and the use of soap and water merely for the [291] sake of cleanliness has not become a daily habit. The women have more vanity; the younger girls especially like to have new clothes, though they wear them carelessly, heedless of fit. [196] An effort is often made to clean up for ceremonial dances, but it entails little more than the removal of the more obvious dirt and the putting on, over unchanged undergarments, of a sweater. Pride in personal appearance, love of tidiness, delight in a clean house, are all quite foreign to the Bella Coola.

956 Probably the reason for lack of comforts in the houses is simply that the people do not feel the need for them. They [264] consider it no hardship to sit on a rickety chair, scoop up food [231] from a common dish and, if they think of it, throw morsels [152] down to the dog or the cat. The smell, the flies, the dirt, the chaos do not concern them. Capable of undergoing privations, hardships, and even sufferings, they think neither of the comfort of themselves nor of others. Their domestic animals are 231 often treated abominably, not through lack of affection or cruelty, but from callousness. More than once the writer has seen a favourite dog steal a piece of food from the table. Its master, after a furious blow or kick at it, would suddenly, as if by inspiration, throw a choice bit to the animal, saying:

"Why, he must have been hungry!"

Though the Bella Coola feel a kinship with animals unknown to the white man, it is not combined with any recognition of their feelings as living creatures. There are, of course, many exceptions, but on the whole public opinion demands [577] generosity and kindness only towards human members of the group. The moral code is not concerned with animals.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

105 of their omnipresence; the guiding force of public opinion is 182 seen as a check on individual licence, fostered or inculcated by [626] the ties which hold together ancestral families and make it impossible for a man to lead an isolated life where others will not be affected by his actions. If the white man is willing to receive new ideas, he will learn much from the comments of the Bella Coola on his own customs. Many have been to [556] Victoria or Vancouver, and they feel that the contrasts of wealth observable in such big cities are atrocious; they ask [602] how this is compatible with Christianity. They feel that it is unnatural for a man not to receive support from his cousins of [556] all degrees; that the hoarding of wealth for the mere gratification of personal desires is selfish; that the selling of land is extraordinary; and that failure to ascribe every incident to supernatural causes is sacrilegious. These differences of viewpoint on so many matters explain the first impression of strangeness. A careful investigator comes to realize that he is among a people who fundamentally differ but slightly from his compatriots, though outwardly they have little in common. With respect to love, ambition, parental affection, sense of honour, pride, intelligence, even humour and vanity, the Bella Coola are essentially similar to ourselves. Unfortunately, these characteristics are expressed in ways unintelligible and often repellant to the casual traveller. If he will only look beneath the surface, he will find a people who are neither saints nor sinners, but essentially human, with the faults and follies as well as the elements of strength and wisdom which comprise, as Kipling puts it, "Men in a world of men."

177 The coming of the white civilization has been cataclysmic
[161] to the Bella Coola. Within two generations they have been reduced to a mere handful; instead of living in scattered vil-
[36] lages, roaming the mountains for game and fishing at will, they now dwell in a single settlement and the taking of animals and fish is subject to law; the introduction of metal tools and mechanical appliances has revolutionized their mode of life; new foods, new clothing, new furniture has altered their living conditions; fermented drink has presented a factor unknown

Lillooet Commonwealth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

to their forefathers. Profound as these material changes have 177 been, those of a psychological nature have been even more important. New worlds have been thrown open to them, stimulating ideas have been brought to their attention, and they have realized for the first time that the world is infinitely larger than they had imagined. Hand in hand with this extension of knowledge has gone disbelief in their own ancient lore. [191]
The white man, whose superiority and mechanical skill they admit, positively denies the actuality of their mythology, and laughs at the dramatic performances which were wont to fill the winter with engrossing interest. Such rites can flourish [196] only in an attitude of profound belief: this has been so shaken that the dances continue listlessly, a mere shadow of a once living art. The young people were the first to embrace a scepticism that has rapidly grown into disbelief of the faith of [171] their ancestors, and a half-concealed scorn for their elders, the [561] upholders of the old customs. Worst of all, prohibition of the potlatch has made it impossible for a man to reach a position [556] of social eminence. Moreover, since the holding of any type [431] of ceremonial requires a distribution of gifts, formal gatherings of all kinds have become virtually impossible; even marriages [581] have no longer the social support that formerly made them so lasting.

These cumulative blows would be enough to shake any 177 civilization, and that of the Bella Coola has been entirely 182 unable to adjust itself to the new conditions. The young people, having lost respect for their elders, are deprived of the advice and support essential to the continuity of culture. They ape the white man's dress; they want his mechanical devices, but have failed to assimilate them. For example, a gramophone in a Bella Coola house is an anachronism, while several similar articles spoil the old picture but do not provide a new one.
Seeking to copy the new ways thrown open to them, they have achieved the outward show but not the substance, and in so doing have destroyed their own culture. In the old days they were ambitious to hold potlatches and willing to work steadily towards that goal; now, new desires have not kept pace with their earning ability and a man can easily his wages by working for a few months each summer. The decline of community has left a blank in their lives, too easily filled, alas, with drinking, idleness, and vice. It is inevitable that the old vices and old ambitions should pass, but the prohibition of these before new ones had taken their place, has been disastrous. The Bella Coola have lost their pride, a calamity as fatal to a people as to an individual.

They have shown undoubted ability in developing such of their own talents as fit the needs and requirements of the white man. Expert carpenters for generations, they have readily learnt the use of new tools and now build houses and boats of considerable constructional skill. They have proved themselves valuable employees of the canneries which rely to a large extent upon Indian labour. Under instruction from a white teacher, a number of the younger men have formed a band which gives creditable performances with wind and percussion instruments. One can only deplore the fact that the skill of the Bella Coola in carving, painting, acting, singing, composing, and story-telling could not have been guided into channels where it would have developed and added lustre to the new world in which they find themselves.

The white man's civilization presses forward as an overwhelming flood, blotting out the cultures of lesser peoples in all parts of the world. This is inevitable, probably it is well that it should be so, but it offers little consolation to a tribe like the Bella Coola. Their life has been destroyed; and, wonderingly, half-proudly, half-plaintively, the survivors watch the downfall of all that their ancestors cherished. Too often the white man fails to understand this; too often he fails to realize that progress, as he sees it, is wiping out valuable elements of civilizations other than his own instead of seeking the good in them and preserving it for the benefit of himself and the native alike. The Bella Coola culture is dying, and with it will pass forever something created by a Canadian people, not great perhaps, but ineffably stamped with their personality.

of the older people remember seeing in their youth another type, labrets, with a high raised point, this may have been identical with the labrets which others describe as having an elevated base and a low point. Its apparently different craft was the mother's, named from one of the gents, probably the white-footed gent. A strip of maple fastened along each side coupled the canoe in mourning, with a sound like that of the peculiar resting flight of the bird. The bow was often carved in the form of a bird's head and the stern in that of a tail to further the resemblance. Its living Bella Coola claims to have seen one of these canoes, though some had heard of them from their grandparents. The large, open cups of cedar made by the Haida are known to the Bella Coola, but not concerned by them. Sails were used on all ocean-going canoes, they were usually of matting, though skins sewn together were occasionally employed.

Canoes are occasionally lashed together. In several footer dances a wide platform for dancing is required, and the usual is met by lashing planks crosswise over two canoes, near the bow and stern, thus fastening them together. Planking is laid on the two supports and a platform is constructed. Careful inquiries showed that this fastening was merely a temporary arrangement, the beams were not found in any particular manner, nor was there any fixed distance between the craft. Sometimes the same expedient was used for transport when the load was too heavy for two canoes separately, a device which is said to have been used more commonly by the tribes of the upper coast than the Bella Coola. Canoes lashed together are termed ts-ontsip.

Rafts, ts-ulwal'a, consisting of rough logs fastened together with cross-pieces, were commonly used on the lakes of the interior, and occasionally for river work where canoes were unavailable and there was no time to make them. Another expedient in similar emergencies was to make bark canoes, such as are still constructed by the Carriers. The Bella Coola regard the construction of these as definite copying, and do not profess to have as much skill as their teachers whose canoes, it is said, can be folded for packing. There is a tradition that, many generations ago, a few clever Bella Coola knew how to make skin canoes.

THE PREPARATION OF CEDAR-BARK.

Early spring is the time to ts-ulwal'a, that is, to gather the inner bark of the cedar. Men occasionally assist in the task, though this is really woman's work. The worker selects a small cedar, choosing one about six inches in diameter, with smooth trunk and relatively free from knots. With a knife she makes a horizontal incision in the bark, two or three feet from the ground, sometimes girdling the sapling. Then she inserts her [illegible] flowers to, and has stamen filled in to form the necessary. Even as the process [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible] 1-5 (1929-1931) 1931
[illegible]

[illegible] MAGIC AND WITCHCRAFT AMONG THE BELLACOOLA

By [illegible]

MANY of the Bellacoola Indians today believe in sympathetic magic and witchcraft, after over a hundred years of contact with white men. Most of them live within hearing of the bells of the mission church, and the government schools. Not a few of the men take logging contracts; some of them hunt and operate motor boats; many of them join the fishing fleets for the salmon canneries; most of the women work in the canneries; and all dress as the white men's stores.

The Bellacoola lived at the heads of the long inlets half way up the Pacific Coast of Canada and in the tributary Bella Coola valley. Now, numbering perhaps two hundred and fifty, they, with the exception of a few families, are concentrated on one reservation at the mouth of the Bella Coola river. The Bella Coola valley has been called the Norway of Canada. This was where Sir Alexander Mackenzie, the first white man to cross Canada overland, reached the sea.

Historically, the Bellacoola were of the North Pacific Coast culture of America, which is characterized by the extensive use of red cedar and sea products, particularly salmon, the making of graceful, sea-going canoes, each hewn from a single cedar, the erection of large rectangular houses made of cedar planks, with carved house posts and totem poles, lack of pottery, and expertness in carpenter work, carving, and painting. This culture belongs to the barefoot area, but the Bellacoolas were moccasins to a certain extent. The art of the area was that best known from the paintings and carvings of the totem poles, largely of conventionalized animal forms. The life centred around a very highly developed social organization, an extensive and powerful financial system, and property rights to names, rituals and honors. The Bellacoola language is one of the Salish linguistic stock. They

Achillea millefolium L., Yarrow

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.
Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the roots, boiled, and the decoction taken internally as frequent intervals for colds.
Leaves chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.
Gitksan: The young plant, except the roots, gathered between June 1 and July 31, boiled, and the decoction sampled for sore throats. Roots, washed by the dead stalks, dug out at other seasons and used instead.

Artemisia discolor Dougl., Sagebrush, Coast Wormwood

Bella Coola: Used for medicine.
Southern Carrier: Chewed and applied to sprains and swellings.
Northern Carrier: Sagebrush (sp. ?) steeped in water and the tea decoction taken internally for headache.

Artemisia Gnaphalodes Green, Evergreen

Bella Coola: Leaves boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pains in the body, but not for pains in the limbs. Not used for colds.
Southern Carrier: Not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

Taraxacum officinale Weber., Common Dandelion introduced

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and the decoction taken internally for pain in the stomach, but not for diarrhoea or vomiting. Remedy said to have been learned from white men.
Gitksan: Not used.

Lactuca spicata (Lam.) Hooke., Tall Lettuce

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, and many cups of the decoction taken internally for heart trouble, hemorrhage, pains in the body (but not in the limbs), for vomiting, or for diarrhoea. Neither an emetic nor a purgative. Milky juice not used.
Gitksan: Not used.

Prenanthes alata (Hook.) Gray, Rattlesnake Root

Bella Coola: Roots boiled, two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily for colds. For a baby only a small spoonful given three or four times a day.
Bella Coola: Chewed, and applied to burns or to any painful part of the body.
Boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction taken internally daily.

Mimulus alsine Bland, Moss

Southern Carrier: Entire plant, except the "roots", boiled, and two or three cupfuls of the decoction used to bathe a swollen face.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] words of Kwakiutl derivation will become clear by a glance at the following list, which contains words that can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin:—

[illegible]

[illegible]

With these names and customs the clan traditions must have found their way to the Bella Coola, but their social organization differed fundamentally from that of the Bella Bella branch of the Kwakiutl. While the latter, owing to intimate contact with the northern tribes, had adopted the four-clan system with gyneaceum maternal descent, the Bella Coola were still distinctly divided into village communities that were not exogamic. It seems very likely that the potency with which the ownership of a clan tradition was guarded by the Coast tribes was very early transferred among the Bella Coola. Two means were available for preventing outsiders from acquiring the traditions. Among the Coast tribes with gyneaceum maternal institutions, among whom a limited number of clans existed, the ordinary law of inheritance was sufficient to retain the traditions inside of the clan. But as among the Bella Coola, if their organization at an early time was similar to that of the Coast Salish, it is likely that the child was counted as well a member of the father's as of the mother's family, although the young women generally moved to the village occupied by her husband. If the child belonged to the families of both parents, it had the right to use the traditions of either family; and consequently in the course of a few generations, the traditions acquired by each family would have spread practically over the whole tribe. There were only two methods possible to avoid this result. The one was to prevent marriages outside the village community; and this method would seem to have been most natural for a tribe organized in village communities, members of which were allowed to intermarry. The other method would have been to regulate the laws of inheritance in such a way that the child had to [illegible] other [illegible] or mother, but has a half and the right to use the property of both parents. It seems to us, which that the matter method [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to develop under the existing social conditions, and that in the [illegible] we must ascribe the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The occurrence of endogamic marriage among this tribe is quite isolated on the Pacific coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and by this means preserve their property rights. It is interesting to note that the southern Kwakiutl, who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, have adopted exogamic institutions; but there is a notable difference in the organization of the village community between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find four families to each village,—usually three men and one woman. It seems that there are generally called brothers and sisters, but they were essentially independently by birth, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relatives. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one single being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, who are forbidden to intermarry; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and may intermarry.

It interests us, therefore, that the various social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the contact of the Coast tribes upon the home social unit of the Salish village community. The possession of clan traditions was felt as a great advantage, and consequently the desire developed to possess clan traditions. These were acquired partly by intermarriage with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The desire to guard the traditions which were once acquired led to the development of endogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the whole tribe.

The jealousy with which the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family try to prevent other families from knowing its own clan traditions. For this reason the clan traditions of the whole tribe are remarkably inconsistent. We find, for instance, that the well-known raven legend of the northern Coast tribes has been utilized by many families as a family tradition. But while one family uses one part of the tradition, other families use other parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola we find the most contradictory myths in regard to important events in the world's history. Some families maintain that the Raven liberated the sun, while, according to another one, the Hawk was essential in bringing about the present state of affairs. Still others say that Tsimo'ten, during his travels, caused the sun to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions relating to the visit of the Hawk and Wasp to their fellow, the Bear, are also very remarkable. Although a considerable amount of [illegible] contradiction is inherent in all the mythologies of the South Pacific [illegible] they continue exist with a degree of intensity [illegible] Bella Coola, and I present the fact that the traditions are kept secret by the various families [illegible] the various conditions.

The prayers of the Bella Coola directed to Sun or Thing but a considerable resemblance to the prayers of the Tsimshian addressed to Lord the sky. In both tribes we find the idea that when the Sun prays he [illegible] a will for their numbers and men will be happy; consequently the prayer to the deity "to wipe his face" occurs quite often.

One of the most important customs that the Bella Coola borrowed from the Coast tribes is the Initiation ceremonial, with which are connected the various secret societies, particularly the custom of ceremonial cannibalism. The ceremonies and the paraphernalia used by the Bella Coola and by the Kwakiutl are practically identical. I will show (in [illegible]) the legend explaining the origin of cannibalism. Among the Bella Bella and Kwakiutl, another tradition is told to explain the origin of this custom. The tradition tells of a spirit called Baxbakualanuxsiwae, who lives in the woods, and who initiates the members of the Cannibal Society. The series of traditions clustering around this being differ fundamentally from those referring to the Cannibal Society of the Bella Coola. The custom has also spread to the Tsimshian, who say that the secret societies were introduced by a hunter who was taken into the lands of a chief by a white bear. Inside he saw a house, in which the various societies were performing their ceremonies. It appears, therefore, that the same ritual which is practised by the a distinct tribe is explained by three fundamentally distinct myths; and we must conclude that in this case the ritual is older than the myth,—that the latter has been invented in order to explain customs that were borrowed from foreign tribes, so that the ritual is the primary phenomenon, while the myth is secondary.[1]

These considerations explain some of the psychological motives for the development of certain traditions and myths, as well as the various inconsistency of the clan traditions of the Bella Coola. They do not, however, explain the most fundamental characteristic of the traditions of the tribe. I pointed out in the third chapter of this paper, that, notwithstanding the numerous contradictions contained in family legends, the conception of the world and the functions of the various deities are so well defined that we must consider the mythology of this tribe vastly superior to that of the neighboring tribes. While the latter believe in a great many spirits which are not coordinated, we have here a system of deities. The existence of a systematic mythology among the Bella Coola proves that under favorable conditions the advance from the lower forms of beliefs to higher forms may be a very rapid one.

[1] See Report of the U. S. National Museum for [illegible].

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

Lib. Seventh B-1 (1922-1924) 1948
NEX Bellacoola NEX

quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild-fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet. The same is true of grouse. Always plentiful, these birds were commonly killed, but never in large numbers. 223 [136] [262]

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, hump-back, dog, and coho salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steel-head could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the olachen, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,[1] allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to eat berries without olachen grease. Trout and bull-heads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance. 226 262 [251] [252] [263] [237] [735] [556]

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the corner-stone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed 262 [241] [251] [178] 824 322 sun attached to another land above the one of which our sky is the underside. Boas (p. 28) has described this upper land in some detail. A number of Bella Coola were questioned on this subject, but for some time no one could be found with knowledge of its existence. At length one of the older people remembered that a man who had died some thirty years ago had a personal story concerned with it, and later a Kimsquit man was able to furnish definite information. He explained that in his family there was a myth dealing with this matter; others might have heard this myth, but since it was not their property, of course they would not be able to impart the facts contained in it, nor would they necessarily believe it. Consequently, an upper land, superimposed above that which is immediately over the earth, cannot be described as a Bella Coola belief; it is shared, so far as could be ascertained, by only two families.

[1] See Appendix A for a description of olachen fishing.

The chief feature of this uppermost world is its distance and unapproachableness. To the supernatural beings living in the intermediate land it is a far-off place; in fact, their attitude towards it corresponds to that with which mortals regard the land above their own. The supernatural ones can, when they wish, visit this upper world, which is called Nuqui-lâlo. A sun shines there, but it is a different kind of sun from that known to mortals. On the whole it appears that this upper sky-land does not differ materially from either the earth or the land immediately above. No human being has ever reached this distant land, so what little is known about it was brought down in the beginning of time by the first people.

In addition to these two upper worlds, the Bella Coola know of one, or perhaps two, below. One of these is inhabited by ghosts.[1] It somewhat resembles the earth, but is unsubstantial and ethereal. It is considered to be immediately

[1] At the present time the Bella Coola are in a state of transition between the old beliefs and the new. This concept is held only by the older people, so it might be more accurate to describe it as one which they, the tribe as a whole, used to know. It has been thought advisable to use the present tense throughout in recording customs and beliefs which are now rapidly passing away.

b:Mc Gerald: E-9 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

from the moon and stated that there were mountains and snow on it. It is commonly stated that the marks on the moon represent a man carrying a bucket.

The stars figure but slightly either in Bella Coola mythology or thought; it is not even known who made them. Two in the Great Bear constellation are called respectively Tpikoie and Xwpuus, "Little Girls." A lone star in the same part of the sky, named A'ise, is said to be following the girls to the forest for illicit intercourse.

Moon, stars, and shows all the sun, were, and still are to a certain extent, used by the Bella Coola in computing the passage of time. There are no individuals with the definite prerogative of keeping count of time, but formerly wise old men used to do so.[1] Differences of opinion were the rule rather than the exception, a condition which often led to bitter disputes concerning the proper date for starting the winter ceremonials. Boas (p. 41) has recorded the Bella Coola calendar in greater detail than the present writer has been able to do. The making of calendrical observations is a lost art and the following list of the months was all that could be learnt. It will be noted that these agree with Boas in regard to the months in the early part of the year, but not in those between the summer and winter solstices; no explanation is offered for this disparity.

First moon after the summer solstice: Sikilamtak, which has the significance, "The Time for Sockeye Salmon to Ascend the River."

Second moon after the summer solstice: Sl'islalit, "The Time for Eating Dog Salmon."

Third moon after the summer solstice: Sl'ismai·ut, "The Time for Eating Coho Salmon."

Fourth moon after the summer solstice: Sioilpum, "The Time for Gathering Fern Root," or Sidakoo di Awo'lilwolnix,

[1] Kimsquit informant stated that there were professional calendrical experts in his home, when he was a young lad although members of the hamat society (II, chap. 1) sometimes attended to this matter.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not systematized; if a man is asked about the powers or functions of a certain supernatural being, he will usually answer by recounting a story in which that being appears. What is known respecting many of the lesser supernatural beings depends upon information contained in stories, and as many of these are personal possessions, it follows that there is tremendous variation in individual knowledge. Psychologically, this is of little importance; there are enough supernatural beings for everyone to know some of them, and to expect to meet or hear them in the forests. To insert many of the stories contained in later chapters would break the sequence of description; all that is here attempted is to give a general summary, in a way foreign to Bella Coola thought. 771 776* [424] [184]

Supernatural beings are by no means all-powerful. It is true that they have miraculous powers and can work weal or woe to human beings who chance to come in contact with them, but likewise they may sometimes be overwhelmed by mortals armed with objects steeped in human essence, such as a blanket which has been worn until it is impregnated not only with the smell, but the physical being of its owner. In particular, shamans or other mortals of great strength have been able to conquer the supernatural ones. Consequently, it may be said that although supernatural beings live on a plane different from that of mortals, they are not omnipotent. Long, long ago, man was able to come in contact with them more frequently, but that golden age when the semi-mythical ancestors of the Bella Coola were living has long since passed away, though it is only within the last few years that such beings, particularly supernatural animals, have become comparatively rare. The Bella Coola give three main reasons for this: 776* [756] [773] 776* 178

(1) Supernatural animals do not like the sound of muskets and have moved far away.

(2) With increasing dependence on the canning industry, fewer hunters penetrate into their haunts in the distant parts of the mountains.

(3) The younger Bella Coola no longer take pains to purify themselves as a means of placating supernatural beings.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

and eagles whom he invites to devour it. In so doing, he does not address them by their usual names, but calls Wolf, Ałkwi-gunum, "The Devourer of Meat Which He Does Not Kill," that is, "The Biting Scavenger"; and Eagle, Ałsiłkuyutmunum, "The Constant Eater," that is, "The One Who Eats before He Is Hungry." Next morning the flesh has been devoured and the hunter believes his guests have eaten it. Animals and birds, being supernatural, can hear the words of mortals and read their thoughts. The significance of these actions is that animals have the power to conceal themselves, so a hunter must gain their favour before he can hope to succeed. Belief in the efficacy of such customs as these is rapidly falling into decay and bear meat is now often eaten, but the skull is carefully placed in an evergreen tree near where the animal is slain, so that it may come back to life.

224 825 [552] [178] [262]

Fish, likewise, are immortal. In autumn the streams are choked with dead and dying salmon, but the Bella Coola know that they are not really dead, they have merely shed their worthless blankets in accordance with Ałquntźm's decrees. At that season of the year he causes the rivers to rise so that they will sweep away these useless and outworn cloaks.

825 [785] [776] [823]

Although the salmon, from the kindness of their hearts, allow human beings to feast on their blankets, yet they have certain likes and dislikes which are carefully observed. From the time the first spring salmon appear (I, pp. 759-761) until the rising of the July moon, women are not allowed to eat them or to go near the river. Men may eat the flesh, but instead of throwing the bones to dogs, they carefully return them to the river saying:

[262] [784] [562]

"Please come back tomorrow."

If this is inconvenient, bones can be thrown into the woods with impunity.

Salmon, like men and animals, live a human-like existence in their homes far beneath the surface of the ocean. They lack and desire earthly objects, especially pounded cedar-bark (see Appendix A) to use as sponges for their children, so the Bella Coola throw pieces of it and eagle down on the water.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

974 becomes critical. Only a shaman (I, p. 339) can return one, and 955 if he fails death always results. In some cases a spirit leaves [953] its owner without apparent reason; he becomes insane, tries [956] to eat dirt, and his relatives realize at once what is the matter. They summon a shaman who takes off his cape, hangs it like a pouch on his stick, and points it in all directions as he sings his shaman's song. Finally he locates what is missing, and traps it in his cloak, which he places around the sick man. This restores the element and the sufferer recovers immediately. Another method is for the shaman to press the back of the patient's neck, and by blowing and spitting cause the wandering spirit to return. Either cure must be performed by a shaman because of the supernatural power required.

974 Spirits can be extracted in various ways. Shamans can draw one forth by sucking at the back of the neck between their cupped hands; in former times, some were so powerful that they could extract them by their mere presence. During 974 kwiat dances (II, chap. i), the uninitiated are told that if they 575 enter the house where a ceremony is taking place, or even pass
[535] on the sidewalk outside the door, their spirits will be drawn from them by the power within and attracted to the dancer or to the sacred platform on which he is concealed. Many [178] stories are told of this, which were firmly believed by the uninitiated until the last few years. Members of the society claim that their great power acts as a magnet to the spirits of all but their associates, except children in arms; the latter can be taken by their mothers into the house, because their supernatural elements have not developed sufficient strength to 974 leave their bodies. A person may also lose his spirit through a sudden shock. If two people meet unexpectedly in the forest and one of them shouts loudly at the other, even if only in fun, the spasmodic contraction of the muscles is enough to expel it.
[961] The person to whom this happens falls down as if dead, and [750] though he soon recovers, his spirit has left him, and if it is not brought back by a shaman he dies a lingering death.

975 At death, the spirit permanently leaves the body. In some

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

611
614

ferent units with which he is connected, but the following is an instance of survival for several generations. Ḵ̓wai-lib is an orphan about ten years of age, now living in Bella Coola; he is looked upon with considerable respect as being a member of ancestral families in Bella Coola, Kimsquit, Smith Inlet, Kitkatla, and Kitlobe. His pedigree, given below, explains his powers. The symbol = marks a marriage, and the male is shown on the left in each case.

Theoretically, Ḵ̓wai-lib is as much a native of Smith Inlet as he is of Bella Coola where his father made his home. If he should visit Smith Inlet and make known his pedigree, he would be received by the members of the ancestral family of his great-great-grandmother.[1] His welcome would be more assured if he were the owner of a name from their origin myth. Difficulties of communication and frequent wars made it virtually impossible in the old days to keep in touch with relatives in distant tribes, except in the case of a mighty chief who was able to invite visitors from great distances to feasts. Thus names taken by women to foreign husbands were virtually lost to the members of her ancestral family. In the course of a few generations, such designations carried afield would be revived as if dormant by some member of the family, and all recollection of the foreign marriage forgotten.

[628]
614
553
178

[1] On the Bella Coola are now living in a single village, it was impossible to obtain a numbers instances of the ownership by one individual of rights in a number of localities within the tribal area. It appears certain, however, that the sentiments expressed with regard to Ḵ̓wai-lib at Smith Inlet are identical with those formerly held for generations in ancestral families located in different Bella Coola villages.

[628]

The of this process of loss is the assimilation to an origi names originally brought into the ancestral family nan from abroad. Unless intercourse and friendly were maintained by "return marriages," in a few ge no tradition would be remembered to account for the this, if used at all, would be interwoven into the wel ncestral myth. Hence a myth is not static with re e names embodied in it. These change from generat eration; it is probable that elements of the story in like additions and alterations, even though the pen consider this to be the case.

The la regard the ancestral family as a social unit, not onl of the present, but as stretching back to the first ser f the earth. Viewed from this angle, it is in fact, th admitted to be so by the Bella Coola, a unilateral with patrilineal descent, which may, in both the mo nd most ancient generations, be marked by matrilin t instead. A man frequently uses prerogatives o rough his mother, her mother, or even her mother, but it is tacitly assumed that for many previo ons such rights passed in the patrilineal line.
Sometimes uccession extended back to the beginning of time; ses, prerogatives were transmitted matrilineally for able period after the settlement of the earth, before becoming patrilineal.

It thus far assumed that the only prerogative wrapped ancestral name is a knowledge of the myth in which bodied. But there are others. For example, several t inhabitants of the world are said to have crests les, each of which was displayed by its owner at the when he took for himself a name. Thenceforth, erson entitled to use that particular totem-pole dance he person with the legal right to the name in question. ame principle governs all dance names; each entitle to perform a certain ceremonial. Thus it is possible e the previous definition by saying that:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names are also willed, but since their value depends on the 578 goods expended to validate them, there is seldom bitterness 614 about their allotment. Indeed, a chief who is the legal owner 553 of a designation which came from above in the beginning of time, will in many cases choose to elevate his position with [428] respect to a title of comparatively recent date. But if any person who is not a member of the ancestral family should [685] dare to use an ancestral name, all the members rise to avenge the theft, for such they feel it to be. In recent years, however, [178] this practice has become comparatively common. In such cases a man, eager to share in the glories of a myth and able to give a potlatch, has validated an ancestral name to which he has no right. The presence of the white man alone restrains the injured ancestral family. Names are sometimes lent or hired to those who are not members of the group for [426] definite sums; the recipient recompenses the individual. If [427] such names are not returned for several generations quarrels are apt to arise since the recipient claims to be the real owner and not the temporary possessor. During his tenancy of the name he is entitled to any prerogative attached to it, but he is not considered a bona fide member of the ancestral family.

Instances have occurred in which an old man or woman, [428] believing himself to be the last survivor of an ancestral family, has donated his names and myth to those who have befriended him, or these have been taken by those who buried him. Some [557] individuals are constantly watching to conduct the funerals of friendless old people in the hope of so obtaining names. But in almost every case this leads to friction, since it is virtually impossible for an ancestral family to die out. Perhaps in the next generation, perhaps in the following one, some youth will claim descent from the first ancestors of the supposedly defunct family, and claim the myth and names embodied therein. This [628] leads to a feud with the person, or his descendants, who has received the names through aid given to the "last" of the family.

Such instances of an ancestral family becoming practically 614
621

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

226 lies in public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man 626 who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a 614
tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members [627] of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family [582] is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of [601] the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, [178] and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members 614 of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby 622 one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following 431 interesting comment was received. The previous winter the 171 informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

594 be made more powerful by magical means or the ritual acts of 869 relatives. Although these often entail great labour and expense, parents seldom neglect their duty; in fact, care for their children is one of the strongest Bella Coola characteristics, though the methods used are so foreign to the white man that he has difficulty in realizing their meaning. The hope of both [847] parents is to have children to carry on their names; infanticide is unknown and the death of an infant is mourned almost as [586] much as that of an adult. Sterility and impotency are frequent causes for divorce.

163 At the present time there is a high birth-rate in Bella [165] Coola, although the heavy infant mortality prevents any appreciable increase in the population. In the old days, it is said, there were always large families, though much confidence cannot be placed in this statement. In families where there are 593 several children, the first-born, whether boy or girl, assumes an important position. His or her influence, as eldest, is naturally considerable, and the parents foster this through the vague feeling that it is proper for the eldest to be the most important in the family. In adult years, and after marriage, the influence of the eldest of a family continues to have considerable weight with younger brothers and sisters.

592 If a man is poor he cannot hope to have more than one wife, 556 and his family circle will be limited to their children, and perhaps to elderly parents. On the other hand, a wealthy and [595] powerful man usually has a larger family. Not only may he have several wives, but his aged relatives, and those of his wife,
[602] look to him for support and assistance. Such are usually welcome to live in his house; they lend what aid they can in collecting food, and it gratifies a man's pride and sense of power to be closely surrounded by a large family. The Bella
[888] Coola are, on the whole, considerate to their aged relatives.[18]

[178] [18]This is not true of the present. During the winter of 1923-4 a feeble old man, living alone, was often in actual want of food. Disliked and degraded, of a mean disposition himself, none of his surviving relatives, of whom the nearest were nephews, would take him into their houses. Commenting on this man's fate, several informants pointed out how, in the old days, such a one could have found

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The married sons of a chief usually live in his house, and if he 592 is very powerful the husbands of his daughters may also reside 556 with him. Such a man is at the zenith of power, surrounded 622 by a close group, formed of elderly relatives, of children and 602 grandchildren. Connections by marriage are also added to the family group. At the present time, for example, one Bella Coola man is looking after his brother's widow, and it is felt that she is a member of his family.

Another way in which a rich man can increase the size of 556 his family is by adoption. Parents who have lost an infant 597 may adopt the child of some member of the ancestral family of 614 either father or mother. The matter is usually arranged soon after birth, and the transfer takes place immediately after weaning. The real parents are willing since they know that the adopting parents will be able to validate valuable prerogatives and names for the child, which they themselves are unable to do. This desire for their child's welfare overrules parental love. In such cases the real father or mother can likewise bestow names and other prerogatives on the child, who really becomes a member of two families. This is often done by an [887] old couple whose own children have married and moved away, and who thus find themselves lonely. It is considered disgraceful for parents to allow their children to be adopted by anyone not a member of their ancestral family, since that would be an admission of inability to bring up a child in the path of his ancestors.

"Your father was not strong," could be said to such a child as a reproach.

In the case of an orphan some wealthy relative is almost 736 always ready to adopt him. Consequently, as he grows up, he 597 receives his full share of the ancestral origin myth, and the names embodied therein, so that the loss of his own parents is of little consequence in the course of life. Occasionally a child is not adopted by relatives, and then his fate is indeed hard.

shelter in the house of any chief, and shared in the food which was being distributed at the almost continuous ceremonial feasts. Now, each family lives alone and no one feels any responsibility for this old man. [178]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

601

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Brother or sister of a grandparent	Addressed as the grandparent, especially when living in the same family. The terms are further widely applied to elderly members of the same ancestral family.	waxuaxtsis Seldom used term; more commonly spoken of by name, or as grandparents.
Great grandparents	As grandparents.	As grandparents.
Elderly male relatives spoken of collectively	.....	mānmānukīsats
Elderly female relatives spoken of collectively	.....	sīnsīnamis These two terms are used with respect to a man's "power" through the possession of many elderly relatives.
Eldest brother or sister	By name, or ḳualem.	ḳualem
Second oldest brother or sister	By name.	ás-iko-tl, or alisht al di ḳualem
Third oldest brother or sister	" "	alisk
Fourth oldest brother or sister	" "	ḳwarwam
Youngest brother or sister	" " or sapinee.	sayi

[178]

As the present time the intermediate terms are rarely, if ever, used. Ḳualem and sayi are continually employed, the former for a brother or sister older than the speaker, the latter for a brother or sister younger than the speaker. When necessary sex is usually indicated by giving the person's name, or by the use of sex-denoting particles.

Only brother with several sisters	.....	smilkpists
Only sister with several brothers	.....	ásqwisists
Stepbrother or sister, same father, different mother	By name, or ḳualem, or sapinee, according to relative age.	nunmool di mānee
Stepbrother or sister, same mother, different father	By name, or ḳualem, or sapinee, according to relative age.	nunmool tri sīnee

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

differentiate between cross- and ortho-cousins, and the un- 601 systematic groupings of nephews and nieces show "family," as opposed to classificatory, principles. Finally, rhetorical [602] terms for the ancestral family, for many ancestors, and many descendants, correspond to the importance of a large number of relatives in Bella Coola thought.

In many parts of the world the classificatory system of 601 relationship occurs where the community is divided into clans. 614
The occurrence of some of these features among the Bella 178 Coola raises the question of whether or not they should be regarded as survivals from an earlier clan form of social organization. The Bella Coola may once have had clans, but their relationship system does not furnish any real evidence to this effect. The reciprocal terms really have the significance, "Relation by marriage of the same generation," or "of a generation once removed," a form of address which does not require explanation in any ancient form of social organization. Moreover, the importance of the eldest child, as potential transmitter of the glories of the ancestral family, is sufficient [561] reason for differentiating brothers and sisters in terms of their relative ages. This feature suggests that in former times this was more important than it has been in the recent past. It is not implied that the Bella Coola never had a clan system, as such may have been the case many generations ago, but their kinship terminology can be explained without that hypothesis. The somewhat wide application to cousins of terms which are properly limited to brothers and sisters may easily have been [177] derived from a process of copying. The Bella Coola are well acquainted with the clan system of the northern coastal tribes, so that it is by no means impossible, or unlikely, that they should have adopted the principle of applying the same kinship term to many individuals, and hence to members of their own ancestral families. Finally, the somewhat vague and unsys- 601 tematic application of terms to relatives according to whether or not they are members of the immediate family, is a feature not at all surprising in view of the essential fluidity of Bella

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

171 lieved that all the Kitkatla chiefs were powerful, but Tsabsia
+ 556 was the greatest of all. It is said that one of his prerogatives[1]
622 was to exercise jus primae noctis whenever a Kitkatla was 829 married. Without question, tales of this chief's prowess have become exaggerated in transmission, none the less they show that the Bella Coola realize the great importance of the northern chiefs. Concerning their nearer neighbours, the Bella Bella, the Bella Coola understand the way in which the members of a family combine to help their chief in the giving of presents. They say that the Bella Bella consider the Bella Coola practice of each one endeavouring to make himself a chief to be foolish in the extreme. Such is also said to be the opinion among the Kwakiutl, who support their contention that in Bella Coola all are chiefs, from the fact that flooring exists under the seats of all, whereas in Fort Rupert, their home, such occurs only beneath the seats of chiefs.

262 Corresponding to the extreme paucity of functions pos-
574 sessed by Bella Coola chiefs, their prerogatives are likewise
622 scanty. Indeed, they take their validated seats only during certain rites of the secret society connected with chiefs, at potlatches, and at ceremonial meals. These last occur whenever a deer or seal is killed; the latter is considered a great delicacy.[2] Anyone can kill a seal, but it would be unthinkable for a Bella [225] Coola to share its flesh with his immediate family only. The [252] animal is cleaned, the hole made by bullet or spear carefully plugged, and the carcass boiled whole in a large box. Mean-
[203] while a herald (I, p. 244) summons the chiefs to the house where the successful hunter lives. If the meal is to consist merely of one small seal, only a few chiefs are invited, those of greatest influence through their possession of "strong" seats. When several seals have been killed, the number invited is corres-
[562] pondingly larger, but no woman may partake unless she ranks

[1]This is said to have been a personal prerogative, not shared by all chiefs, and requiring validation by valuable presents.

[2]Only traces of the rite described in this paragraph occur at the present time. In fact, the reservation of seal meat for chiefs alone was discontinued towards the close of the last century.

[178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

622 there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by 623 members of the kusiut society that none would dare go there.
778 If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-[575] place of the Qomqo·ts chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village.
The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can enter. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some 178 of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the 532 stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of 778 the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing tunes; they picked out the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others [211] were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

622 When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting 623 he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The 201 person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

578 The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who 622 succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows 682 became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many [152] examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 769 [575] [535] to a complicated figure such as a whale, and in that case an expert dancer among the guests is called upon to perform. It is announced that this is, "to make clean the road for the dead."

After each masked figure has disappeared, the sound of whistling from without grows gradually weaker, as the apparition returns whence it came. In solemn silence X takes a copper[a] which he has had in readiness, breaks it across his knee,[b] and throws it either into the fire or down on the ground in the track that the figure has taken. Then the announcer calls out loudly:

"It is for his crest.[c] It has 'made bone for the dead.'" Then he continues, speaking for X and using the first person:

"My heart is glad at seeing my father.[d] At death he returned back on the path of my family's ancestors and donned our ancient crest. He now lives in Nazmät-a, whence he came to visit us and whither he has now gone back."

[178] The significance of the throwing down of a copper is entirely unknown to the modern Bella Coola, although they still perform the ritual. In some vague way it is felt that "bone," which may imply stability, has been provided for the deceased. The act thus appears in the light of an offering to the dead, but this sentiment is not clearly appreciated by the participants in the rite; the present has been made for, rather than to, the one being mourned.

The copper, now valueless, is picked up by any chief and given to a poor man.

After a short interval a number of youths begin to distribute presents, provided by X, which have been placed in readiness. [562] [431] Gifts of equal value are given to all foreign male guests; while the women receive ones less valuable. These presents

[325] [436]

[a] One of the plaques of native copper, such as were formerly beaten out cold and used as tokens of value by the coast tribes of British Columbia. Their employment by the Bella Coola will be described later in greater detail (I, p. 252).

[b] The breaking is sometimes omitted.

[c] That is: "For the dead man, now in form of his crest."

[d] Or whatever relative the deceased may have been.

688 his relatives. This punishment is customary in cases of the 693 upsetting of a canoe. Death is the penalty for throwing refuse [177] into the river, particularly during the summer, and until the coming of the white man the River Guardian exacted it without hesitation.

THE PROFESSION OF UTTERING A DRONING CRY

424 At the appearance of masked figures representing super-551 natural beings, whether in tsaaé or kwiné dances, many of the [575] women repeatedly utter a peculiar, high-pitched, droning cry
[463] which adds considerably to the weirdness and impressiveness
[431] of the occasion. Ability to do this depends on an ancestral prerogative duly confirmed by the distribution of presents.
[773] Many ancestral myths describe how some of the first women were given by Alqwntám, or acquired in other ways, the right to drone, and mention is made of the name used by each with respect to this prerogative. Unlike the one previously described, many of the first women possessed this privilege, which is accordingly common at the present time. A name [553] of this type is usually confirmed in girlhood, sometimes even in infancy, and being of relatively slight importance may be validated at a ceremony of less dignity than a potlatch. One of these names is Nuuuqwelelaiqwa, which has reference to [773] the blue-green sheen of some abalone-shell brought from the east by Raven in the beginning of time, as described in the ancestral myth in which this name is included. For many [178] years there has been considerable laxity with regard to this prerogative, and women lacking it have even been urged to drone in order to add to the solemnity of the occasion and to increase the wonder of the uninitiated.

424 There is another similar prerogative, enabling the incum-
767 bent to drone at mourning ceremonies. In the beginning of 463 time, Smooa of Kimsquit married Tlélwaitl, the daughter of a Bella Bella chief, who had this right. It has since been 793 transmitted from one of her descendants to another at Kimsquit.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 between the two societies. Presently the elderly a'alk returns, 575 clad in his ceremonial costume consisting of the head-gear, a blanket, and a narrow apron from which hang deer hooves, [184] small pieces of copper, or other jingling articles. The singers [292] strike up his song, and he dances near the fire in a manner depending upon which of the four dances he has the right to [535] perform. Again the siki leaves the house; when he returns he announces that a tutwinam is coming with a song for the youth, naming the one who is to be made an a'alk. A moment passes, and in stalks a masked figure depicting the form taken by the first ancestor of the novice, or the being from which one of his later forefathers received an a'alk prerogative. Sometimes two of these beings appear. The apparition circles the fire, stops beside the singers, and chants a song to them in a low voice. Then it enters the back-room and is seen no more. Presently the singers strike up the song they have just heard. To those who are neither a'alk nor susaok it seems that the song was brought by the supernatural visitor; in reality, it is the one previously composed by the singers and taught by them to the wearer of the mask to lend realism to the performance. The youth concealed within the back-room does not emerge on this occasion, the song is merely sung in practice. Sometimes the masked figure appears during the daytime and walks openly along the shore of the river like a foreign guest, as indeed it is said to be.

The coming of a tutwinam is one of the points of resem-[184] blance between a'alk and susaok rites. The older people agree [178] that this has long been a feature of the former society, adopted by the latter in recent years. The description given in this section appears to be of the original and proper use, although, as already noted, the susaok have recently employed tutwinam for somewhat different purposes.

It is uncertain whether or not the a'alk novice remains secluded any longer within the back-room. In ancient times he probably did, but with the recent growth of the susaok

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 society and decline of the a'alk, concealment has become lim- 575 ited to initiates of the former organization.

No more a'alk dances take place during the potlatch pre- [178] liminaries, but with the coming of the first group of foreign guests, the host displays as many types of dance as he is en- 556 titled to, including a'alk if he has the necessary prerogative. 575
On this occasion other a'alk, especially relatives of the donor, 535 give their dances, the only time that such are used at potlatches except by novices receiving names. This is repeated on the arrival of every party of guests.

Meanwhile the novice, or novices, has been practising the proper steps for his appearance, which always occurs immediately before the entry of the masked figure representing the donor's dead relative. As already mentioned, there are four kinds of a'alk dances, known as nusqwal,[9] llaiyākam, qi'aqa, and am'lel-a. A similar song is used for a dancer of any one [533] of these four; the text describes some small incident of the ancestral myth in which the name occurs, such as the bringing down of the prerogative by the first incumbent in the beginning of time. At the proper moment, the singers beat this out and the audience joins them in singing it. Then the singers begin to strike rapidly on the floor with double beats, assisted [533] by the guests who clap their hands in rapid couplets. Out comes the dancer, resplendent in his head-dress decorated with weasel skins, and women with the required prerogative begin to drone. If his prerogative is as a llaiyākam or qi'aqa, he proceeds to a place beside the fire and begins to run around it, sunwise, in short mincing steps, revolving at the same time on himself. He clasps his hands behind his back and bends down, then stands upright with palms extended upwards, never ceasing to move his feet in rapid steps. This type of dance is far more violent than a nusaok one, and the amount of energy expended by a dancer in his rapid circuits of the fire is tremendous. Never, even for a moment, are his feet quiet, while his body twists and bends in an amazing fashion. After two

[9]Among the supernatural beings, the nusqwal is a yearling mountain goat. [776]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 574 535 [533] [525] [526] [178]

presents to the singers and heralds who have rendered assistance. Instead of dispersing immediately, the guests may remain to gamble or wrestle. Since there is no solemnity attached to the affair, it is a time for indulgence in amusements of all kinds. These conclude the chief features of the a'alk dances. Probably they once played an important part in the lives of the Bella Coola, but with the increase in importance of the ɬɬsaok, they have decayed into little more than a form of entertainment.

A'alk ORIGIN MYTHS

551 575 793

Theoretically, every Bella Coola a'alk should be able to record the myth in which his name is embodied, but few can do so. Of course if a man has been able to validate both ancestral and a'alk names from the same myth, that is his authorization for both. In many cases a myth is split, and the portion containing an a'alk appellation is given to some member of the ancestral family, other than the chief able to validate the most important ancestral name. In such a case, the a'alk can record little more than that his designation came down with a specified group of the first people. This, for example, is the explanation given by a Kimsquit nusqual for his name Sinxālotla which came to earth with Smaoaw (I, p. 332) in the beginning of time. Another Kimsquit a'alk, Tlaiyākam, whose prerogative is to perform the dance of that name, states that it was brought down by Sinuxtl (I, p. 326), who assumed the designation of Tlaiyākam after its performance. This early settler had the additional name of W'i'tālao.

539

The two following origin myths were obtained in some detail:

Once,[1] long, long ago, Ilquantw came to the conclusion that it was not good for the inhabitants of the world to be afraid of supernatural beings. He decided that the best way to dispel this dread would be to arrange a marriage between his daughter, Sunaw-a, and a mortal; so he

[115] [177]

[1] Related by Mrs. Willie Mack. European elements have obviously been incorporated into the first part of this legend, though the narrator considered the whole tale to be ancient.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

patrons and claiming to possess supernatural powers. In contrast to the a'alk, the kusiut are well organized and regulated; its members are proud of their powers, and scornful of those who lack the same. Under these circumstances, it is not difficult to understand jealousy between the two. Until relatively recent times, the a'alk were numerically stronger, and included some chiefs, whereas the strength of the kusiut society depended on the supernatural strength claimed by its members. It is true that individuals occasionally belonged to both, if they happened to possess prerogatives of both kinds, but, as a rule, the a'alk were young men and the kusiut were older people. This rivalry was formerly so intense that all who were not members of the latter society were often termed a'alk irrespective of whether or not they actually possessed dances of that type; Carrier Indians alone were not so designated. During the summer, members of the two societies dwelt amicably together, but during the winter, when dances took place, there were continual bickerings. The kusiut constantly endeavoured to impress their rivals with their own prowess; while the a'alk, not convinced of the others' power, used to mock them in their songs. This was the usual practice in case of some error in kusiut ritual. The a'alk frequently disobeyed the orders of the kusiut and a number of them once tried to pry up a huge boulder beneath which was the "power" of a certain kusiut (II, p. 8). In recent years the kusiut society has entirely gained the supremacy, but it is agreed by all Bella Coola that in former years this was by no means the case, and that a'alk did not hesitate even to kill one of their rivals.

Miscellaneous Ceremonies

The rites described in this chapter and the one preceding comprise the potlatch of the Bella Coola so far as its details could be learnt. Until the increase of wealth in recent years, the potlatch was rare, and it is unlikely that in any village more than one month in the year was consumed in the provided with means of sustenance, a house, and certain supernatural powers. The right to the names of these people, as well as to the type of ceremonial objects used by them, has been the privilege of their descendants. But these early Bella Coola, like their modern descendants, had several designations, each carrying with it a definite prerogative. In a single myth there may be embodied a dozen or more names and incidents which are quoted at the present day to authorize such different phases of culture as dances, rights to hunting-grounds, professions, names of dogs, or kusiut prerogatives.[1] Any myth which gives the initial use of a name, a dance, or any other prerogative, is termed a smaiusta. Each of these is, or was in the old days, remembered with great care and never recounted in full detail except to the members of the ancestral family whose names are embodied in it. Even at potlatches the full details of the myth are not laid bare. Indeed, if a young man is of a flighty, garrulous disposition, unlikely to preserve the dignity of his ancestral fame, the details are concealed from him. Even at the present time there is much resentment at any unauthorized use of a smaiusta, and in the old days this would inevitably have led to bloodshed.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Boas (p. 116) states that the terms smaiusta and sumsma are synonymous. The writer feels certain that this is an error. It was discussed repeatedly with various Bella Coola, all of whom agreed that a sumsma is a mere story which can be told by anyone, whereas a smaiusta is a myth possessed by the individual, or individuals, whose prerogatives are derived from it. To the Bella Coola the two are utterly different.

None the less, there is no doubt that records of the past change from one category to the other. A wealthy chief, eager to give a potlatch, but lacking the mythical authorization, must frequently have used a sumsma, claiming the hero as an ancestor. There would be veiled amusement at him for doing so, but the prestige of one who can give potlatches is so great that in time his claim would probably be accepted. The two

[1] The details of these will be described later.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

178 versions of the myth given (vol. I, pp. 313-19) is a case in point.
773 The first was told as a smaiusta by a woman who claimed to be a descendant of the people figuring in it; the second, as a story, sumsma, by a man. In view of the reliability of both informants, it seems highly probable that this is a story, partly converted to a myth. In other examples there are incidents resembling the supernatural tales given in vol. I, chap. IX, and here too it appears probable that sumsma have been assimilated into smaiusta. It is complimentary to the truthfulness [577] of the Bella Coola, and to the respect they show for intangible [424] property, that none of the myths recorded were smaiusta owned by others. Repeatedly an informant would say that he knew one, but would not tell it since it belonged to some other family.

128 After collecting a few myths, in each of which it was stated
773 that the first settlers at village X were A, B, and C, with their sisters, P and Q, it seemed as if it would have been possible, before the culture of the Bella Coola had fallen into its present decay, to make a census of those whom they believe to have been first settlers of this earth, and that such a list would have had few contradictions. This was soon found to be false. Two myths may give different people as the first occupants of a certain village, nor does such contradiction trouble the Bella Coola. Each man, convinced of the authenticity of his own family account, is quite willing to believe that the one belonging [811] to someone else is equally correct. This characteristic lack of logical consistency has already been mentioned in other connections. Boas (p. 61) likewise gives an instance of uncertainty as to the first occupants of a village, though, on the whole, he found Bella Coola mythology to be more codified than the present writer has done. In view of their lack of systematization in other matters, it would have been surprising if they had evolved a census of their first ancestors, accepted by all as accurate.

Another matter to be considered at this point is the simi- [178] larity of detail in many myths. In part this can be explained

I:36: Howeitt E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

by the assumption that sumsma have been elevated into smáiuste; in this case it would not be impossible for the same story to have been used by two or more families. A more common explanation is the splitting of myths. Although, theoretically, one can never be altered, and portions in the possession of other individuals are remembered as such, there must have been many cases in which the owner of a section told the whole as his own property. This would not be difficult in cases where he moved away from the other members of his family. In course of time, with the assimilation of elements in themselves not strictly mythological, two myths would evolve having a few incidents in common. If asked concerning this, the Bella Coola explain that the first people were quite as capable of doing the same things as two modern men. The occurrence of the same name, or names, in different myths does not, according to them, prove a connection, since many of the first people had the same names.

Finally, there have been included a number of myths dealing with the coming to earth of people in other localities. Probably these are, in origin, those of other tribes, more or less assimilated to the Bella Coola pattern. Each was said to have been obtained by the marriage of one of the descendants of the people described therein with a Bella Coola.

No further explanation is needed for the following myths which are arranged, as far as possible, according to the list already given of Bella Coola towns.

Bella Coola Origin Myths

Origin Myth of Ilpálat[*]

In the beginning of time, Ilpaxstów, in his form of Saw, the Sun, sent down a man, Y'xyalt'mai, to Mount Nar-mitlaix (also called Ilpaxstwaikhs, Ispatsk, and Ilkilmikhs), a mountain on the north side of the Bella Coola River about two miles from the sea, near the upper end of the Indian reserve. With him came Xwaxwaxwa, the Hummingbird, [*]Related by Mrs. Walkem.

1:56:Howaith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

plied to provide abundant food for all; it became the ancestor of all the beaver of the upper valley. Owing to their position higher up the Bella Coola, Taiałwala and his brothers considered that they were nearer to the sun than any of the people dwelling below, a fact of which they were exceedingly proud. Moreover, having been sent down by him, the sun was their crest. 551

There were two large boulders in the river near the settlement, which Aiquantw had shown Taiałwala how to use as supports for a salmon-weir. With the help of his brothers, a hole was drilled in one of the rocks; then they felled a large tree upstream and allowed it to drift down until the butt lodged in the perforated boulder and the head swung across against the other. With this as base, other trunks were woven in upright so that the river was almost spanned and a fine dam constructed. In this they caught so many salmon that Taiałwala and his brothers were able to call people from far and near to potlatches and feast them liberally on the fish. In course of time their sister was married to a chief from another town. Henceforth, whenever one of her brothers gave a potlatch, he was able to rebuy his sister on a lavish scale with the teeming salmon. The sun had taught the women a song for such occasions, which has since been used as a prerogative by her descendants when rebuying themselves from their husbands. [424] [583]

Taiałwala made a long voyage of exploration during which he reached the Skeena River. He made friends with the inhabitants of the town, Kyemas, who gave him the name, Xwulkas,[*] meaning whale in their language. Continuing his journey, he ultimately circled the earth before returning home. He obtained several other designations, including Ailamka from the Kwakiutl people.[]

Years after the settlement of Snaik-ol, the drilled stone supporting the salmon-weir broke and the ruins were swept away downstream. The people cut their hair and blackened their faces in mourning, then moved to Stuar where a number of their daughters had married chiefs.

ORIGIN MYTH OF Nasnay[]

It is common to add details from a story to a family myth in order to increase its length and importance. Almost cer- [178] [114]

[*] It appears that Xwulkas is an attempt to pronounce the English, whale-boat, an interesting example of the way in which modern words have been incorporated into ancient myths and been clothed with the glamour of antiquity. [178]

[] Such are still used by members of the ancestral family descended from Taiałwala. [551]

[] Related by Mrs. Webber, who had learnt it from her late father, Sneathlis, a chief of Sand, whose hamlet name was Sneatlump.

Schoolcraft E-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEB Bellacoola NEB

539 [178] [114]

tainly this has been done with the following, in spite of the fact that Boas (p. 53) records it in greater detail than the writer was able to obtain. A second version was obtained from a reliable informant who recounted it as a mere tale without hesitation. He may have been ignorant that it was the myth of another family, or may have disregarded that point, though this is unlikely. The content itself strongly supports the view that details of the usual "story" type have been added.

In the beginning of time there came down to the river which enters North Bentinck Arm at Green Bay a man, Nuxsey, and his wife, Sumsiustakka. They went down the river to Green Bay, since called Nuxsey from the man, where they built their house and settled. In time a son was born, to whom they gave the name Slskło. The child grew with phenomenal rapidity until before long he had acquired the strength and intelligence of a man. One day Slskło went for a walk up the river, carrying his bow and arrows. He met what he thought was a man, though it was really a black bear in human form. The supernatural one invited Slskło to go home with him, which the youth did. As soon as he entered the abode he realized that he was in a bear's house, but he did not disclose to his host that he had this knowledge. The bear brought to his guest some skunk cabbage, saying that it was dry salmon; to bears skunk cabbage is dry salmon. The food was broken in small fragments and served on a very small dish so that Slskło was afraid that there would not be enough, though Black Bear assured him that he would not be able to eat it all. So it proved. Slskło ate and ate until he could eat no more, without diminishing the amount of food on the dish.

Then Black Bear said, "You must spend the night here; tomorrow you can return."

So Slskło slept that night in Bear's house.

Next day—it was really next year, because one night in the land of supernatural beings is equivalent to a year in the land of mortals—Black Bear said:

"I make you a shaman (I, p. 539). One end of your bow, as far as the middle, will be as if coated with power. If you have a quarrel with a man just wave that end towards him and he will fall dead. If you wish him to come to life again) wave the other end and he will be revived."

Then Black Bear took off his pelt and gave it to Slskło, saying, "If you want to strike down several people, put on my skin, scatter eagle down on it, and then shake yourself. The down will fly in all directions

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Bella bella NES

BC
* 539

he travelled the whole distance on a single billow, so asked to be sent on a four-billow wave. His canoe was a sea-lion's stomach, into which he climbed through the mouth and which he made watertight by tying up the entrance with the animal's entrails. Whether or not the creature was alive is not clear, but at any rate the man set off in the strange craft. He felt as if he were on the back of an animal which made long, easy, slow bounds; it was the slow surging of a gigantic Pacific comber. After four bounds he untied the neck and found himself at home.

BC
[552]
[551]

Certain names have been preserved from this myth. The name Nequqa is now used by a dog, as the owner is the last of her family. Another name is Tlaxamymil, "The Crash," derived from the metallic sound of the closing door of the sea-lion house. The name Namatsta was also obtained inside the house, but the details of its significance are lost.

BB
539
BC
* 539
[178]
[424]

AN EARLY MYTH OF Kilde-t[19]

As has been said, ambitious individuals, especially if they lack origin myths of the customary kind, sometimes claim ordinary stories as such. The following is almost certainly a case in point. It was obtained from an unreliable informant, who claimed it as a family myth, and said he had used it at a potlatch. He asserted that it was a Bella Bella story, transmitted through the marriage of one of his ancestors with a Bella Bella woman. Another informant, well versed in Bella Bella folk-lore, recounted another version of the same myth as a mere tale. There seems little doubt that the first narrator had merely laid claim to a common story to supply the deficiency of a true myth.

In the beginning, there came down to earth at the head of Gas Bay, Kilde-t, a solitary man whose name was Kiadn-a. He was so lonely that he made for himself from soft punky wood a woman, dressed her in blankets and clothing, and gave her the name, Qua'lems, which is in the Bella Bella language. Kiadn-a was a great hunter; every day he went out to seek mountain goats, which provided him with great quantities of grease, as well as yarn that he wove into blankets. Before leaving the house he always placed Qua'lems in front of a loom, put food beside her and told her to eat as much as she liked and to work diligently.

[19] Related by Kimsquit Alec.

-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

173 583 648

it is believed that a son of Smaoan married the daughter of a Kitlobe chief (I, p. 338). As dower she brought her husband several Kitlobe names, which were transmitted in time to her children and which remained in Smaoan's home, Kimsquit, for many generations. The Bella Coola believe that it was remembered for hundreds of years that these designations did not belong there. Whenever one was conferred, the myth was recounted to tell how it first came to Kimsquit; whereas in Kitlobe when the myth from which the names were taken was related, it was always added that those in question could not be used since they were now in Kimsquit. About one hundred and fifty years ago, Ätsqiutl, a Kimsquit woman, was married to a Kitlobe man to repay this debt, and cement friendship between the two tribes. She took as dower the names long ago brought from Kitlobe. Similarly, if any name or other prerogative of an ancestral myth has been alienated from the ancestral family to which it belongs, a father searches for a woman who will be able to restore it to his son as a marriage gift. The word used for searching is "hunt," the term applied to seeking fur-bearing animals.

The accompanying pedigree illustrates a return marriage. Qwahila's daughter was married to a Fort Rupert man and took with her as dower several Bella Coola names and other prerogatives. The loss of these was remembered and they were brought back by the marriage of Yäkotlɛ, a member of Qwahila's ancestral family, with a daughter of the woman who had gone to Fort Rupert. Usually several generations elapse before a return marriage is made. This incident was perfectly well known to the son of Yäkotlɛ.

Qwahila = of Qomqo·ts
|
Nakso·sa = Daughter of Fort Rupert
|
Yäkotlɛ = Daughter of Qomqo·ts

If parents who are seeking a wife for their son have also a daughter approaching marriageable age, they may try to avoid a later return marriage by arranging that their daughter shall be married to a brother, or other near relative, of their son's wife. Exchange marriage was formerly more common than [178]

583

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

583 at present, though even now it is considered highly desirable.
[178] The sentiment is that already described: the more closely the parents are bound together by ties of common ancestry, the greater will be their children's ceremonial strength. Further, reciprocal alliances of this type obviate all danger of feuds, since return marriages are not required.

582 In recent years it has become fashionable, or socially
178 "smart," with some Bella Coola families to seek wives from 648 unrelated ancestral families, and even from other tribes. It is said that this practice was initiated by Potles, an important chief who died between 1870 and 1880. He sought foreign marriages on acccount of the prerogatives which were brought as dowers by his wives, and considered that such rights, transmissable to his children, more than compensated for the lack of strength provided by related ancestors. Many have followed his example, with the result that some ancestral families have entirely abandoned the endogamic tendency. Boas (p. 124) has made the same observation. Although this exogamic [581] principle is directly contrary to that which has already been described, yet it should be noted that each has the same explanation—the search for a wife able to bring most to her as yet unborn children.

584 Should the parents consider a foreign woman as wife for 581 their son, then her worth is discussed from every angle. One woman may have the right to good hunting grounds, the family of another may have some valuable sisaok prerogatives, a third some kusiut rites. Anxious thought is put on the relative values of these. One man had heard of the French system of dot, and emphasized strongly how far superior to, and more sensible it was than the Canadian practice. In recent years [178] the younger Bella Coola have been arranging their own marriages, and the older men lament bitterly that they are influenced only by the beauty and working ability of the girl, not by her real worth, the prerogatives which she can bring to her children.

Although parents consider chiefly the ancestry of their

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

584 as soon as possible. Though strictly legal, and commonly practised even long ago, this is not considered a desirable preliminary, since the children lack the strength which would have been theirs if their parents had been long engaged. In recent
● 178 years the custom of short engagements has become popular, 584 though the older Bella Coola feel resentment, saying that the woman is simply "bought" with goods or money at the actual wedding. The return of such sums in due course does not compensate for the omission of the lengthy period of engagement. A few years ago a powerful chief even "bought" husbands for his grand-daughters. His influence was so great that by bestowing large sums on the families of the youths they accepted the young women as wives. The girls in question were desirable in every way, according to Bella Coola standards, but by marrying without a long engagement and suitable presents the husbands, and their families, failed to live up to the dignity of their ancestry. These are breakings down of the ancient rites, and as such are lamented by the older people.

583 Sometimes, despite the wishes of their parents, a boy and 584 girl announce their desire to marry by living together. After much storming, the parents usually decide to make the best of a bad business by performing the marriage rites as soon as possible and by lavish expenditure on them to lessen the impediment placed against the future offspring by lack of long engagement of their parents. But such a child can never be [858] called an älqim, which has the significance of something good that has long been sought for, such as a smoothed-grained tree that carpenters like. It will thus be seen that the marriage ceremony must be carried out, irrespective of whether or not it has been preceded by a lengthy period of engagement in which the first proposal was made by the boy's family, by a shorter one in which the girl's family took the initiative, or by no period of engagement whatever. These rites can now be described.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ciety. These are given several times, serving to recall the 533 ceremonies in which the chief took part during his life. At 575 intervals, the new song is repeated and susaok members of the 766 audience join in as they become familiar with the words. Frequently one or more relatives of the deceased dance in his [535]
stead during the singing. The details of this rite, especially of the songs used at it, differ considerably according to the actions of the person during life; if a mighty chief, the donor of many potlatches, this fact is described in the song, whereas only an incident from the ancestral myth can be used for a young susaok. If some of his female relatives are professional [767] wailers, they function during the ceremony. In all circumstances, the rite aims to comfort the grieving kinsmen, an end which it usually achieves.

As already described, susaok ceremonial was in a state of 575 transition at the time of the coming of the white man. Pre- 766
vious to that date, a spectacular funeral prerogative had been 177 adopted from Rivers Inlet,[4] which has since been claimed by a 424 number of susaok. All the Bella Coola know of this ceremony, and most of them desire to perform it at the death of a dearly [178] loved relative; at the present time this is possible owing to the slight regard paid to prerogatives, but it is certain that a few years ago it would have been forbidden to most people, and that it was never a universal Bella Coola rite.

When this rite is performed, the corpse is allowed to remain 575
in its coffin for at least one night after the day on which 766 Mtlakila came and the susaok songs were sung. Meanwhile the carpenters have prepared an imitation body, usually of 532 rags on a light framework, and a wooden representation of the deceased's crest. Since this figure is to come through the roof and carry aloft the corpse, stout hooks are attached to its feet.
In theory, the bird or animal disguise used by the first ancestor

[4]One old Bella Coola stated that this prerogative was obtained during his own life-time from a Rivers Inlet chief who moved to Tăl-ie. It is impossible to state accurately when this ritual was adopted by the Bella Coola, though it is unquestionably of recent origin.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 766 [532] of the deceased, traced patrilineally, should come for the body, but this is difficult to arrange in case of whale, bear, and other marine or land mammals. Consequently, it has been customary to use only raven or eagle for this purpose, and it is assumed that at least one of these birds is present in the ancestral history of every individual as a result of the marriage of some of his forbears with a woman possessing one of these crests.[1] It is a common practice for an influential sisaok to prepare a figure of this kind during his life-time and tell a son or other trusted relative where it has been hidden; if this has been done, it obviates the necessity of carpenters manufacturing one at short notice.

Several days are often required to complete these arrangements, but on the first evening possible, which may be two or three days after the death, the people are summoned to the dead man's house. The singers take their usual positions behind the fire and beat out the song used at the mourning ceremony already described; then, as on that occasion, they follow it with a number of the deceased's sisaok songs. Once more they strike up the one newly composed and, as it is proceeding, whistling is heard, accompanied by the screaming of an eagle or the croaking of a raven. Those who are not members of the sisaok society do not understand that these sounds are produced by hidden members blowing whistles on the roof. There is a crash on the planking and, through a space opened by the removal of several boards, the face of the bird crest can be seen peering in. It is a dramatic spectacle and the audience gasps appreciatively, especially those who see in it a manifestation of the supernatural, testifying to the importance of the deceased. If the stage management has been accurate, the figure appears at the termination of the song, but if it has arrived during the actual singing, the singers beat time slowly and cease to use their voices. The eagle, or raven, keeps squealing repeatedly and gradually comes through [178] [1]The use of only raven or eagle is probably a degeneration due to recent decay of custom.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

body became eagle down and was wafted upwards is psychologically of the type which might serve as basis for a rite of this kind. If the descendants of the person to whom this had happened had dramatized the incident at subsequent deaths, a custom analogous to the one here described would have arisen. 575 766 424 [773]

DISPOSAL OF THE BODY

There is no fixed time for the disposal of a corpse. When possible, it takes place on the day following death, but as many as four days may elapse if delay is necessary for the performance of the rite just described. Another reason for postponement is the absence of near relatives; if they can be summoned within four or five days, the funeral may be delayed until their arrival. There is always endless discussion concerning the exact details; all relatives and members of the ancestral family take part, though the wishes of a son, brother, or other near kinsman are usually followed. In this, as in so many points of Bella Coola ritual, an influential chief often overrules the desires even of those who are more closely related to the deceased. 764 [796] [554]

Heralds announce the hour chosen,[8] usually about noon, and the people begin to assemble in the deceased's house, even strangers being welcome. Women wail dolorously, and another indication of the occasion is the bundles containing clothing, cooking utensils, and other articles belonging to the dead person. The lid of the coffin has been left open, but when everything is ready, an elderly man is asked to strike it, once, with a stone; then the lid is closed. Planks have been removed and a hole made in one of the front corners of the house, through which the man throws out the stone. The women redouble their lamentations as an old woman, previously asked to do so, lights a bundle of dyed and undyed cedar-bark and climbs through the opening carrying this. No request has been made for pall-bearers, but any strong men, especially [203] [609]

[8]This is done at present, even after the carrying away of the "body." In former times it was omitted when the corpse was secretly buried by the sisook. [178]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

764 are never disturbed, being considered, in some vague way, "bad." The tools used for digging the grave are left standing upright in the loose earth, an action for which no explanation can be given by the Bella Coola. When these various rites have been performed, the funeral party returns to the village and disperses.

766 845 At present, interment is the customary method for disposing of the bodies of all except twins, whose bodies are placed in trees. Formerly, other means were sometimes employed, as 764 they still are occasionally. Instead of inhumation, a coffin 178 was frequently placed on a scaffold close behind the deceased's house. Whenever another relative died, planks were laid across, above the first box, and the new one deposited on these, so that in time the scaffold grew to resemble a house-like structure with many compartments. In the last century a certain shaman, Åskankots by name, is said to have pointed out that corpses were frequently carried off by wolves, snuuq, and other animals. For this reason he persuaded the people to inter their dead.

764 Somewhat similar to this practice was the placing of corpses in trees. Until the last few years this was sometimes done with poor children; formerly, it was not unknown even for chiefs. An elderly Kimsquit man mentioned that the coffin containing the body of his grandfather, a chief, was placed in the crotch of a tree where no rain could penetrate. This means of disposal was probably never habitual. Even at the present time, the corpse of a dearly loved child is occasionally placed above, instead of under the ground. If the parents desire to do this, they erect in the cemetery a carved figure of one of their crests and deposit the coffin on top of it. This is, of course, a graphic representation of the deceased's origin myth and symbolizes the way in which the dead person has become associated with it.

According to several of the older men, cremation was practised by the Bella Coola for some time after the first settlement of the earth. A fire was built outside the house and the body

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

177 squatting, now it is customary to use the extended position.
764 It is impossible to state whether this is the direct result of white teaching, or whether the ease with which large boxes can now be made has led to interment at full length.

RITES FOLLOWING DISPOSAL OF THE BODY

768 Interment of the corpse does not end the ceremonial necessitated by a death in the community. As already described, some of the clothing and utensils of the dead person are burned during the funeral, but all are not destroyed at that time. The proportion kept for future treatment is immaterial, nor is there any established usage concerning the type of object reserved. During the days following the funeral, relatives of the deceased carefully gather his clothing, cooking utensils, rifles, and all other articles which have been his personal property or used exclusively by him. On the fourth day, these are taken to the cemetery by his immediate family, accompanied by as many of their friends as wish to show their sympathy. A fire is kindled near the grave and on it is deposited whatever can be burnt; other objects are either cast into the flames or piled near at hand (see Plate 17). It is most important that every article belonging to the deceased should be disposed of in this way. There are two reasons for this. First, it is considered indecent to use the possessions of a dead person; they would have the effect of poison on anyone doing so. Secondly, the ghost of the de-
[775] ceased receives goods that are burnt or deposited on the grave [753] four days after the funeral. If deprived of what belongs to him, a ghost punishes the offenders by causing sickness.
178 Occasionally a new rifle, or some other treasured possession, 768 is kept by a relative or friend; this is contrary to the established custom, but is justified by considering the article to be a gift from the deceased or a memento of him. No one would accept such a legacy unless he felt sure that the dead man entertained such kindly sentiments towards him that he would be glad to have his friend receive it.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In recent years the number of incombustible objects has increased enormously with the introduction of metal utensils, gramophones, and other things obtained from white traders. Although these are considered to be of use to the ghost, and must be carefully placed near the grave, they can be publicly exchanged for others by a relative. The sentiments expressed on such occasions are that the ghost, though aware of what is taking place, does not resent an open transfer; and that it is unnecessary to deposit the equivalent of what has been removed. There is undoubtedly a vague idea that the ghost uses, not the actual object, but its essence, which is received by the deposition. It must be emphasized that this feeling has not become crystallized to such a state that it is customary to replace goods laid on the grave with others. Such an exchange is a rare event and would cause animosity if carried out by anyone except a near relative.

Sometimes a dying person requests that a house be erected over his grave, a common Bella Bella custom. This is built immediately after the funeral and articles that cannot be burnt are placed within it instead of being piled on the ground. The sorrowing relatives may choose to erect a picket fence around the spot, but no other mark for the grave is put up until a memorial potlatch several years after death. House or fence soon falls into decay and rarely an effort is made to repair either. Nor is the grave itself disturbed. Cow-parsnips, which are much used for food, grow frequently in cemeteries, but no one would gather the shoots that rise above a grave; they are food belonging to the dead person. The white man has taught the Bella Coola how to plant apple-trees and these are often set out in graveyards, though the fruit is allowed to fall to the ground for the benefit of those interred beneath. The Bella Bella are said formerly to have replaced at intervals the coffin containing a dead person, but this seems never to have been a Bella Coola practice. Indeed, a grave is never

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 769 diate family. Confusion is probable only when a chief is bereaved after he has stored up goods and made preliminary preparations for a potlatch; he may then carry out the rites intended, but designate the ceremony a memorial potlatch. [575] More often, however, the affair is limited to rites associated with the deceased. Consequently, there is omission of the initiation of neophytes into the sisaok and a'alk societies,[11] there is no establishment of new seats for young relatives of the donor, and no strengthening of his own. It must be emphasized once more that there is no unalterable sequence of prescribed rituals at either potlatch or memorial potlatch; the omissions just mentioned are customary, not universal, and when present the ritual of the two ceremonies is identical. Except on those rare occasions when omitted at a potlatch, the return of a dead relative is the central feature of both. [184]

In recent years, the great increase in wealth has made it possible for a chief to perform a memorial potlatch soon after the death of an esteemed relative. This was rarely the case in former times, but as there was no other reason for which valuables were so ardently desired, every expedient was used to obtain the necessary goods. Occasionally, a chief happened to have the needful goods stored up so that he could give a memorial potlatch almost immediately. To such a fortunate individual the term, yeotla, was applied, a word difficult to translate but combining the significances of rich, ready, fortunate, and revered. [78]

Memorial potlatches, like those of the ordinary kind, are usually held in the early autumn, though occasionally one may be postponed until after the kusiut season. When an intending donor has decided that he owns sufficient goods, he first calls in his fellow-chiefs and makes known his intentions, at the same time expounding in considerable detail the myths which he proposes to use as themes for mourning songs, and for other [796] [533]

[11] Performance of such rites at a memorial potlatch would be considered sinful by the Bella Bella and were always omitted during the period when their influence was important.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

departed. A few days later the same ritual was carried out again, with a similar lavish distribution of food. This was often done at intervals of two or three days for several weeks, depending on how much food the donor was prepared to use. The amount required was so great that the rite was considered, in some ways, more difficult than a potlatch.

As already mentioned, however, it became customary in the last century to incorporate features of the ordinary potlatch into one of a memorial nature. In such cases the first singing of the mourning songs with display of marks by the professional mourners is as just recorded, but there is no recalling of the guests merely to listen once more to the songs. Instead, the ritual differs but slightly from that of an ordinary potlatch as already described (I, p. 182). An occasion is found to conduct the guests to the memorial-posts erected, and to inform them of the significance of the designs depicted. This same practice has been continued since the introduction of tombstones, and the meaning of the writing upon them is interpreted. The entry of the deceased in the form of his crest, and the subsequent use of a copper, is the same as already recorded. This is frequently followed by the singing of a sisook mourning song if one of the near relatives owns this prerogative of foreign origin. If so, he walks slowly around the fire in a wide circle, shaking his rattle, and singing, unaccompanied. Most, if not all of these songs, are in the Bella Bella language and the right to use one has in every case been obtained through intermarriage with a member of that tribe. At intervals, heralds call out:

"Listen to the chief's lament."[27]

When presents are distributed to validate the whole ceremony, mention is always made of the different features for which they are given. As at a potlatch, the most important is the return of the dead, but at a memorial potlatch another essential is the display of the memorial-posts. These have been carved, painted, and set up, but are worthless unless validated [27]There is no reason why this should not take place at a potlatch, but no instance of its performance was noted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 769 a man and assuage his sorrow to know that he has shown fitting respect to the dead, there is also a gain in social prestige. As the whole community respects, admires, and sometimes envies a man for having carried out a memorial potlatch, there is no doubt that he is pleased and gratified to such an extent that his grief is dulled. These two factors must constantly be kept in mind; memorial potlatches serve to commemorate the dead, but in so doing they add to the social importance of the donors. The two combine to bring considerable comfort to the chief who has lost a dear relative. In some cases the social prestige is the real motive, the grief assumed and unimportant; but in others the latter is the only factor that matters, and a chief is entirely oblivious to any increase in his own status. In most memorial potlatches, both feelings are present in the mind of the donor, and both are gratified.

DETAILED ACCOUNT OF A FUNERAL

764 114 In the preceding pages, an attempt has been made to describe the traditional death rites of the Bella Coola. The following section comprises a detailed account of funeral ceremonies witnessed in 1922. The contrast between these and the ones already recorded, will indicate some of the changes [178] in custom which are of such importance in studies of cultural [182] growth or decline. The following description will also serve to demonstrate a point repeatedly mentioned, the manner in [571] which business transactions and arrangements of all kinds take place whenever the people have been called together.

[123] On June 27, 1922, the death occurred in Bella Coola of Jessie, Mrs. Samuel King, daughter of Captain Schooner. The latter, now deceased, was one of the writer's most trusted friends, and as a result of this friendship it was possible not only to attend the actual rites, but to ascertain much of the feeling underlying them. This advantage had its drawbacks, since it was manifestly impossible to question either the father or the husband of the woman too closely. The details will be de-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

764 stepson, George Nelson, had not been living with his wife for 159 about one year.

Early in the afternoon of June 27, Captain Schooner was notified by telephone of the serious illness of his daughter at the cannery where she was working. He set out immediately, but found her dead on his arrival. Without waiting to consult Samuel King, he called together the chiefs who happened to be [622] in the vicinity, Willie Mack, Jim Pollard, Billy Pollard, Bobby Nebby, and Alexander Clallaman.[11] He informed them that 764 he did not propose to let his daughter be thrown carelessly into 769 the ground like a dog, but that he was going to hold a memorial potlatch immediately after the funeral. Schooner, being a *556 numiit chief as well as father of the dead woman, was able to 159 do as he liked, and no one objected to this plan, although in [178] former times such a ceremony neither took place at once, nor in summer. If Samuel had been present, he would have been consulted as a matter of course. It was quite fitting for Jessie to be buried by her father, since she had borne her husband no children, and had been rebought several times. Moreover, Samuel lacked the determination and prestige of his father-in-law. Having settled this main point, Captain Schooner intimated that as Jessie's granddaughter, Dan Nelson's infant, was at the point of death, it would be well to combine the mourning for both at the single ceremony. No mention was made of the amount to be used for the rite. Schooner himself had $200 to expend for the purpose which would have been sufficient, and his attitude was that he neither knew nor cared whether his relatives would assist him. Soon after the other chiefs had left, Reuben Schooner arrived from the logging-camp from which he had been summoned. Father and son discussed arrangements not only for the actual interment, a simple matter, but for the memorial potlatch. It was decided that the dead woman should return as a composite figure consisting of Eagle, Raven, and Blackfish, three of her crests of which the masks were available. They agreed that Timothy Snow[48] was the best carpenter available and that he should be commissioned to put them in shape and arrange their use. Reuben wanted to sing a sisaok mourning song, to which he had a prerogative derived from his Bella Bella mother, and it was also decided that the band[49] should play. Reuben informed his father that he would contribute $60 towards the expenditure.

[11] None of these was closely related to the Schooner family.

I:McIlwraith E-9 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

764 769 556+ 159 [593]

Meanwhile Jessie had been washed by female friends, clad in her best clothing, and laid in her coffin. This was a rough box, contributed by the manager of the cannery and shaped like a white man's coffin. At intervals, women came near and wailed dolorously without heeding others similarly engaged. The news was carried to all the Bella Coola, those men who owned gasoline launches taking the word to the logging-camps without being requested to do so. A Carrier Indian who happened to be returning from the cannery spread the word through the village, where each woman who received the message hurried off to some friend, with whom she began to wail.

764 159 [203]

Early on the following morning, Captain Schooner returned home with his wife, Jessie's stepmother. He had been crying and was sad, but seemed willing to talk. He spoke of the proposed memorial potlatch, and expressed the sentiments recorded on vol. I, p. 473. He was grave and dignified, absolutely determined to perform what he considered to be the necessary ritual, oblivious of consequences, and heedless of what he held to be an unjust law. During that summer, Captain Schooner had been a rather heavy drinker, but on this occasion he abstained from wine, and said that he hoped no one would show disrespect to his daughter by appearing in a drunken condition either at the funeral or the subsequent rites. It is [769] [273]

[48] He was not closely related to the Schooners.

[49] Most of the younger Bella Coola were members of the band, performing white man's music on white man's instruments. Andy Schooner was bandmaster, but it is unlikely that this influenced the decision, since the performance of the band was customary at funerals when the writer was in Bella Coola.

[78]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

for the Carriers and other foreigners. The cook began to ladle the rice into basins provided by Captain Schooner; these were taken by some of the younger men who poured helpings into the dishes of the guests. Spoons had been forgotten, and there was delay until these were provided by slivers split from a block of wood for the purpose. Contrary to ancient usage, no attempt was made to serve food to the guests in order of their rank. Men, women, and children were sitting everywhere, the infants kept moving around and crying continually throughout the performance, but no one seemed to be disturbed thereby. 769 556* 264 [178] [852]

When everyone had eaten, Nebuchadnezzar, who had been sitting facing the other singers, beat on the floor to attract attention and then rose to speak. He asked the help of all to make the ceremony a success, and thus assuage the grief of the bereaved relatives. 769 556*

Joe Williams and his daughter had taken their places on the right-hand side of the hall and had requested Willie Mack, a fluent speaker and influential chief, to assist them in announcing the financial transactions. They spread a blanket on the floor on which the bills were counted, and beside this Willie knelt. Joe gave him a sum of money, which was counted and re-counted; Willie then held it up in the vain hope that it could be seen by everyone in the hall. He announced the amount, also that it was to rebuy (the divorced) Mrs. George Nelson from her late husband, and that it would "make clean the place where she sat." A young man delivered the money to George who added it to the general stock for later distribution. Next a copper was produced, held up, and presented to him for the same purpose. Meanwhile Joe, assisted by his mother and other relatives, had been counting the money which they proposed to give to Captain Schooner in settlement of the previously contracted debt. One hundred and fifty dollars were produced and handed to Willie Mack, who held them up and announced that it was in return for the $100 given by Captain Schooner on a previous occasion to Joe Williams, his wife, his son, his daughter, his mother, and his stepfather. The bills 769 556* 583 [537] 769 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"Child, you are an eagle now. You are like Xemcua.[33] He will provide an eagle cloak for you." 769

The theme was continued throughout as if Captain Schooner were speaking and lamenting his daughter. At intervals the phrase was repeated, "My child has fled home." The leader of the singers, Jim Pollard in this case, kept calling out to the audience to cry and sing, and as many of them joined in as had come in earlier to listen to the words. The whole effect was strikingly dignified and impressive. 556* 533

Captain Schooner joined the singers for the second mourning song, since he alone was familiar with the details of the ancestral myth which formed the theme. In former times a bereaved parent would never have been obliged to assist in this way. Kimsquit Alec had composed the tune during the day and Billy Pollard called out the words, line by line, inviting the guests to join in. The theme consisted of instructions to Jessie: [178]

"Go," it ran, "To the mountain whither Qyil[34] came. Thence travel to the Skeena where you will assume the form of a whale and be able to spout like one.[35] Go then to the far north where you will enter the copper house within which dwells a copper raven and where the salmon are taitaimx."[36]

This song was sung in the manner already described.

The third mourning song was one composed for a Täl-io chief, Smaouxek, who had lost his daughter during the smallpox epidemic. Its use was justifiable, as Smaouxek was Jessie's mother's mother's mother's brother. It had a double significance since the dead woman's mother had allowed it to be used when lamenting the death of a brother of Samuel King, a member of the same ancestral family. Captain Schooner had altered the words to make them applicable to the present situation. The theme was:

[33]One of the first settlers of the earth, an ancestor of Jessie.

[34]Another of her first ancestors.

[35]One of Jessie's first ancestors had landed on the Skeena and there assumed the form and characteristics of a whale.

[36]An incident in one of Jessie's ancestral myths.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

769 "Please stop crying. We have made good your memory.
+556 You are a light to your brother. Go to Smaoxsk where he 533 stands among the abalone-shells far to the south.[28] Thence go overland to Rivers Inlet where a shāmtsk will serve as canoe for you." You will see the long house where your ancestor obtained shaman's power."[29]

Meanwhile Reuben Schooner had been out of sight behind the curtain of the stage. After a short interval, he emerged [292] wearing a blue blanket decorated with mother-of-pearl buttons sewn on in raven design. He was followed by two other influential members of the xsaak society, Alexander Clallaman and Nebuchadnezzar, similarly attired. Reuben began to sing in a low, sad, penetrating voice of considerable musical power and, followed by the other two, walked slowly in a sunwise circle around the hall, all the time shaking his right hand, held projecting outwards at right angles from his elbow. The song was in Bella Bella, and even the singer did not fully understand the meaning, and few of the audience had any idea of its significance. When the three had almost completed the first circuit, someone brought Reuben a rattle, which he clutched in his right hand as he continued his way. The reason of the shaking at once became evident; he should have had a rattle throughout but few of these were left in Bella Coolā at the time and it [178] had not been possible to borrow one before beginning his song. Again the three slowly circled the hall, Alexander and Nebuchadnezzar calling out at intervals:

"Listen to the mourning song of the chief."

After the second circuit of the hall, Reuben paused near the singers and spoke to Alec Davis, a xsaak sibi. The latter [424] rose and stated how the prerogative of sibi, including the right to sing, unaccompanied, a mourning song on occasions such as this had been transmitted both to Reuben and his brother Harry from Ao-sti, a Bella Bella chief to whom they were

[28] An incident in one of Jenie's ancestral myths.
[29] An incident in one of Jenie's ancestral myths.
[30] An incident in one of Jenie's ancestral myths.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

related through their mother. After a little further discussion, Harry took the rattle from his brother and began to sing as he walked around the hall, followed by Alexander and Nebuchadnezzar. Harry was less familiar than his brother with the proper words, but supplied this deficiency by humming. He was also less at ease, and he lacked the musical ability which had made his brother's singing so impressive. After a single circuit, he restored the rattle to Reuben, who continued to go around the hall as he sang. This time he paused at intervals, and kept glancing towards the door, his whole attitude betraying that something was interfering with the previously arranged plans. The purpose of the singing was to summon the dead woman in the form of her crest, but she did not appear. In early times those who were not Asaad were told that the words and music penetrated to the upper regions, reminding the deceased of the grief of his relatives and persuading him to return. This belief had passed away at the time of the ceremony here described, but the fiction was continued, and it had been planned that the representation of the deceased should enter when the song was finished. It later transpired that the delay was due to a number of white people who, having gathered at the doorway, made the performer unwilling to put on his masks and disguise. Reuben continued to sing half-heartedly, and finally cried out:

"Perhaps I have lost my power, it does not come."

Alec Davis, who had previously left the hall, came rushing in and called out in a loud voice:

"Xemsila [Jessie's ancestral name and the one in connection with which she had been made a chief] is coming. She has been to the scenes of her ancestral myths. Her crests have taken her. She comes as Eagle, Raven, and Blackfish, bearing her grandchild."*

The speaker is a morose, rather surly individual, usually undignified and often drunk, but on this occasion his manner had changed in a remarkable degree. His eyes were bright, his

*Although not yet dead, all hope had been abandoned for the child's recovery.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

lowed the actor, blowing eagle down over him repeatedly. After one circuit of the hall, the performer passed out through the front door, from the vicinity of which was heard once more the large whistles and the screaming of the eagle, both growing less distinct as if the bird were flying away. 769 556* 535

The wearer of the mask displayed considerable dramatic talent and succeeded in giving a realistic display in spite of the glaring lights which exposed his bare feet and betrayed the human handicraft of the mask in a manner impossible in the native type of house with a single, central fire as the sole illumination. The Carriers had watched the performance with interest, probably tinged with contempt, but to the Bella Coola it was no mere spectacle, it was a religious rite of the highest importance. All the spectators realized that the figure was human, but this seemed inconsequential as they gazed upon the representation of the dead woman in the form of her crests, to which they believed she had been transformed by death. Even the children were silent, and the only sound during the passage was the wailing of a sleepy infant. The eagle crest belonged to Jessie by virtue of membership in the ancestral family descended from her father's first ancestor, traced patrilineally, who had come to earth at Tsmesl in the form of this bird. The blackfish was a crest acquired through her mother; the raven represented a copper raven belonging to an ancestral myth of the dying grandchild. In former times, carpenters would have worked for weeks preparing an elaborate composite figure, but Captain Schooner wished no delay in the ceremony for fear of police interference, so that it was necessary to use what masks happened to be in existence and to place them in conjunction by means of the crude white sheet. Jessie had not been initiated into the ɬaɬaɬ society, but no opposition was raised to the use of ɬaɬaɬ whistles both on account of her status as chief, and owing to the influence of her father who, a nuuitl chief, feared no restrictions and heeded no conventions. Besides, both her brothers were influ- 769 556* 424 178 [575 622]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

769 *556 ential nsaak. In former times it is certain that objections would have been raised to this breach of ceremonial privilege.

[424] [178] [575] [622] There was a pause for several minutes after the withdrawal of the figure. Then Reuben threw a copper on the floor in the track taken by the actor "to make bone for the dead woman." A number of chiefs went forward to join the singers and discuss whether or not the copper should be redeemed. No one wished to do so, so Captain Schooner said he would have it fastened to a post over Jessie's grave, a proposition to which all agreed.

769 *556 533 After interminable discussion in which Captain Schooner, Nebuchadnezzar, Reuben Schooner, Jim Pollard, and Alec Davis took the principal parts, it was decided to sing the fourth mourning song at this point. There was no reason why this should not have been done at the customary time, after the other three, but wide latitude in detail was allowed in this [178] ceremony; in fact, exact ritual never flourished in Bella Coola and has become increasingly rare in recent years. This song had been composed a number of years previously when Captain Schooner had called in the Bella Bella to a memorial potlatch, and great care had been expended on its composition owing to the skill of the guests in songs of this type. The words, altered to fit the circumstances, were phrased as if George and Dan were lamenting the loss of their mother and other relatives.

"I, we," they ran, "are thinking of our mother, our brothers, our sisters, our mother's brothers, our mother's sisters, our father's brothers, our father's sisters, of all our dead relatives. Please, ye chiefs from abroad, turn your heads, listen to our wail. You revered great ones, let us all cry together. It is we who have called you hither; look upon us."

This song was sung in the manner already described, except that more of the Bella Coola were familiar with the words and tune and could accordingly join in.

769 *556 Meanwhile Captain Schooner, with his sons Reuben and Harry and his grandsons George Nelson and Andy Schooner, had been crouching in a corner of the hall, poring over the money which was to be distributed to validate the ceremony,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 like power, and will tell their son to try the same method. In
* 787 this way a descendant of shamans has a better chance to become one than anybody else. Another indication that a person is likely to become a shaman is to be wakened from sleep by a mouse. As he sits up, hastily, thinking that someone has called [825] him, all that he sees is the disappearing rodent. Mice have a rather peculiar position in the eyes of the Bella Coola, since they believe that these animals regard themselves as superior to mankind.

"The food of mortals is our food," say the mice.

His parents now tell the boy that he is likely to become a shaman, and that he must accordingly take great care of him-[785] self. If he is an adult, he will begin to observe ceremonial chastity, and in any case will spend much time alone, avoiding the trivialities of life in the village, and will think little about mundane matters. At intervals he goes alone to the forest, especially to some spot beside a waterfall, the kind of place that supernatural beings frequent. Here he lies down, sometimes for several days, with evergreen boughs spread beneath and above him. These are clean and nullify the mortal odour so objectionable to supernatural beings, so that his chance of obtaining a visitation is increased. He does not know what may appear to him, but he carefully remembers his dreams[1] which, as his thoughts are centred on lofty subjects, are likewise about matters of importance. If his dream is sufficiently clear to warrant the term vision, the recipient should remain, fasting, for four days on the spot where it occurred, and should say nothing about it when he returns home. His strength increases with every vision, until at last, sometimes after a period of thirty years or more, he will obtain a real one and the power to cure a disease. Sometimes dreams come to him in the village, but they are more likely to occur in a secluded spot in the [178] forest. It is impossible to obtain examples of these dreams since, for a long time, no one has been brave enough to seek [828] [1] The Bella Coola do not differentiate between mental images that appear in sleep and visions seen during waking hours.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

power in this way, but their type can be judged by the shamanistic performances hereafter described, many of which are believed to have been derived from them. 756 * 787 * [178] ●

The members of different families have remembered various means of making a person "clean" so that a supernatural being is likely to visit him. Almost every family knows one or more of these, and an individual who shows signs of becoming a shaman will be taught how to use his family method. In conjunction with this, the seeker after power will further purify himself by abstaining from sexual intercourse, by frequent washing in hot springs, by eating small portions of the tails of snakes and the heads of toads, and by avoiding food prepared by a widow or by a girl secluded after puberty. In this way he hopes that his dreams will be fruitful, and that a vision may be granted him as he lies in the forest on his evergreen couch. 756 * 783 787 * [785]

The following are some of the methods to be practised at dawn every fourth day.

(1) The seeker after power locates a small stream on either side of which there are growing two shoots of devil's club. At dawn he breaks off the four stems and strips from them the bark, which he uses to scrub himself in the cold water. As he does so he says:

"Please give me power that I may see what I wish to see."

This is addressed to the plant itself, not to the supreme god. It is a request to be able to see some one of the many supernatural beings that roam the forests, but which are invisible, or appear only as animals, to all but shamans. The words are not a fixed formula, and similar ones are said in connection with each method. After washing, the seeker for power throws the bark and peeled stem into the water. [782]

(2) Again selecting a secluded stream, the would-be shaman picks up a smooth, water-worn pebble from one side of it, and with this rubs his body, then carefully replaces it in the exact position from which he took it. He repeats the process with a second stone, crosses the stream and does likewise with two stones from the farther margin.

* 756 789 cealed cord succeeded in drawing feathers, previously placed on the surface, around in the direction in which she was dancing. It was impossible to learn the details of the method employed in this trick. The subterfuge was long ago practised by a shaman.

A simple but effective trick was the substitution of a baton made of light maple wood for one of the heavy type used by the singers. The real stick had been passed around the audience and apparently returned to one of the singers, though in reality the false one had been given to him. As he beat time the hollow sound that emanated was a source of surprise to the uninitiated spectators, nor was their wonder lessened when a real baton was again handed around, as if it were the one that had been in use.

[178] According to an informant, the last time that a supernatural being helped the person on whom it had conferred shamanistic power to perform a rite of this kind was about 1870. A man who had fallen from his canoe into the ocean was rescued, but for a long time was ill as a result of exposure. [776] [787] River Measurer, the supernatural being who governs the height of tides in the river, appeared and made him a shaman with the ability to cure through the use of a wash-basin. As this shaman danced, he had a large box filled with water. Presently he called on one of the uninitiated to examine the height of the water and point out to his fellows how high it was. A little later he called a second man who likewise indicated on the outside of the box the height of the liquid within. It had fallen, though its disappearance seemed inexplicable.

781 789 The above furnishes a good example of the attitude of the uninitiated. The informant, a very intelligent Bella Coola, gave a number of instances of the conjuring methods employed, some of which he had helped to carry out. Unquestionably, this was of the same nature, yet, because he was deceived at the time of its performance, he readily believed that the rite was supernatural; since then he had never thought of doubting them renders it more likely that they will grant his requests. Therefore, a shaman is usually called upon to perform the following rites: 756* 782

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(1) Washing the mouth of a person who has died without voiding from his body the first salmon or olachen of the season (I, p. 436). [764]

(2) Asking assistance for the complicated rites of the potlatch (I, p. 192). [556]

(3) Request for assistance before starting on a journey, by puffing eagle down into the air (I, p. 106). [484]

(4) Request for aid by means of placing food on the water and blowing eagle down into the air at Mesatche Nose and Kwatna (I, p. 109).

In fact a supplication to any supernatural being can be made with greater prospect of success by a shaman than by any other person.

The Power of Shamans

As has been said, a shaman actually has power within himself, and this is so strong that it may be a source of danger to others. If a man should pass behind one so endowed when the latter is eating, his spirit would be drawn from his body into the shaman's mouth, which would close with a click, crushing the spirit and killing the man. This is quite involuntary on the part of the shaman. It happened more than once among the early inhabitants, and since that time people have been very careful not to pass behind an eating shaman; this taboo was still in force until about 1885. A shaman, too, is said to be able to recall a spirit which has left its body, and thus caused illness. It is believed by some that shamans can see the position of a person's tally post, and so judge the length of his life. These examples show the varying beliefs of different Bella Coola concerning the powers of shamans. 756* [761] [264] [178] [755]

But the force within the shaman is really more dangerous to its possessor than to others. As certain "unclean" objects are able to subdue supernatural beings, so do these same ob- 756* 783 841

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

a lad has been drowned in spite of efforts to rescue him, means that a beaver has been caught. 787 * 224

To dream of seeing a kusiut dancer in full costume means that a fisher, lynx, wolverine, mountain goat, wolf, or black bear has been caught.

To dream of fighting people, especially if arrows are used, means that a grizzly bear has been caught.

To dream of playing children means that deer will be seen the following day.

To dream of swimming means that an otter has been caught.

To dream of fondling a woman and playing with her breasts means that a marten has been caught.

Obscene dreams mean that squirrels or pack-rats have been caught.

To dream of a woman with whom the hunter has held illicit intercourse means that absolutely nothing has been caught.

Until recent years these interpretations were believed without question and no hunter bothered to examine his traps unless he had received such indications of success. A hunter's wife likewise obtains information of her husband's fortune in dreams. [178]

All dreams cannot be translated. One man, for example, stated that in his sleep he had often seen a supernatural being enter his house, turn to the left, pick up one of the heavy floor boards and carry it around the fire as if it had been a tray. The apparition always told him to do likewise, but though he has tried repeatedly in his dreams, he has always found it too heavy. Such an image might serve a shaman as theme for a dramatic performance, though, of course, the element of curing the sick would be lacking. Another dream experienced several times by the same man when ill is that of being carried with the speed of light to a flat land somewhat similar to this, but located on the top of a range of lofty mountains. It contains numerous grassy meadows studded with trees of which the 787 * [756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

beneath the surface, and throw it in a second time. Repeat this four times. If the wrapping has been carefully fastened, little water leaks in and the child suffers no discomfort. This causes him to grow up confident and brave with regard to canoeing and every kind of activity on the river. Like the last medicine, this is not potent for one who has held sexual intercourse. It cannot be applied to a girl since beaver are unfavourable to women who must observe many taboos concerning them. 825 789 856

To Cause Modesty and Respect for One's Elders

When a boy is about six or eight years of age, his father beats him lightly, four times, with a rope-end. This is done in the early morning, then he takes his son to wash immediately. Four days later the beating and washing are repeated. From this time on, a parent should whip his son four times every fourth morning until he is old enough to marry. The force of the chastisements increases as the lad grows older, so that when he is about fourteen years of age, he is beaten with the full force of his parent's arm. It is a point of honour for a lad to endure his whippings without whimpering; one who shows the pain he is suffering is laughed at by his fellows and not allowed to wash with them. This medicine makes a child strong, manly, respectful to his elders, and, generally, the type of individual to whom supernatural beings are likely to show favour. 789 856 [152]

This practice has long been discontinued and it was impossible to learn whether or not it had ever been carried out with full vigour. Several of the older men stated that in their childhood they had been beaten periodically by their fathers, but none had had this last over a period of years. It was claimed that such had been the case in earlier times, but it seems almost certain that this type of chastisement could never have been carried out regularly. During the winter, for example, when kusiut dances were taking place, the whole community used to sleep late and it is improbable that a father rose every fourth [178]

535 contact with supernatural beings, so that it is a time for grave
*575 thoughts and decorous behaviour. Even by day the members
796 pass from house to house with dignified mien, not loitering [787] around the sidewalks nor indulging in frivolity. Every effort is made to prevent quarrels between members who are expected to show by their appearance and actions the gravity of the rites in which they are engaged. Night after night they assemble at the house wherein the dance is taking place; those who have performed, and are therefore most closely in touch with the supernatural, even sleep there, not returning to their own houses until March. A dance usually lasts four nights, and during that time the performer's house, in which it takes place, is termed a nuqpik, "An Empty House." The significance of this designation is unknown.

178 Membership in the society depends on a duly validated
*575 ancestral prerogative to perform one of the many kusiut dances.
[424] At the present time every Bella Coola is a kusiut, even babes in arms being initiated, but formerly no one was admitted until he or she had reached an age of discretion. Some informants went so far as to say that the hair of an initiate must have begun to turn grey, and all agreed that no one was ever admitted until at least twenty, or more often, twenty-five years of age. Initiates were frequently still older; one woman, for example, stated that her mother was past the age of child-[551] bearing before admission. Since only a member of the society could be called by a kusiut name, the uninitiated continued to be known by the ancestral names conferred on them at infancy until they received kusiut designations. The importance of the 178 society depends on the belief of the uninitiated in the super-*575 natural powers of its members, and as there are now none to 796 impress, the rites carried out today are little more than pic-
128 tures of what took place years ago. It is the aim of the Bella Coola to carry out the dances as if uninitiated persons were in attendance, and since most of the following information was obtained from men who well remembered their sensations when not members of the society, it is justifiable to use the present

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575*
tense throughout this chapter, and to assume the presence of a [178] number of young men and women ignorant of the significance [796] of the rites. Formerly, the kukusiut often had difficulty in im- [128] pressing the uninitiated with their prowess, and feuds with the [578] a'alk were common.

Although membership in the kusiut society depends on an 554 ancestral prerogative, it is essentially a democratic institution. 556
A certain amount of wealth is necessary to validate a kusiut 575* prerogative, but nothing comparable to that required for a potlatch; in fact, poor men are often persons of great importance within the ranks of the society. Nor are the preroga- [527] tives considered to be as valuable as ancestral rights, so that slaves are often admitted as kukusiut by their masters. An important kusiut is not esteemed by the community in the same way as the donor of many potlatches; in short, membership in the society brings limited ceremonial and semi-religious advantage, not social prestige of a public nature.

Powers and Functions of the Society

Any secret society can be viewed from the standpoints of a 575* member, and of a non-member. The scope of the kusiut organ- 869 ization can be most clearly outlined by describing first what an uninitiated person knows about it. From his infancy, parents impress upon a child the supernatural powers of the kukusiut and the dangers attached to their rites. Such instruction is perhaps strongest where one, or both, is not a member. They then voice their own fears, and do not merely deceive for the good of the society. Steeped as every child is in a firm belief of the near presence of the supernatural, he readily believes what he is told. He learns, for example, that if, without spe- [784] cial invitation, he dares enter the house where a kusiut dance [774] is taking place—at any time during the four days or more that it lasts—his spirit will be drawn from him. This is sufficient [626] to deter him from prying too closely into the rites. Strangely enough, there seem always to have been differences in teaching with respect to this deception. It is believed that if a non- 000

*575 untranslatable word with the significance of "One who has 778 suffered loss through faulty concealment [of his repository]."
425 Some of these vaults[1] are said to be dangerous to the unin-[784] itiated who avoid them and in this way the sanctity of some chiefs' meeting-places is guarded.

*575 According to Kimsquit belief, Ano°likwolsaix has a hus-778 band, Almoqltaikila, who dwells with her in every repository.
776 If an uninitiated person should chance to find a vault, he falls dead before the power emanating from Ano°likwolsaix. Her husband then restores the dead by blowing violently on the back of the victim's neck, accompanying this with cries of hoip. When a person is initiated into the kusiut society, the uninitiated hear the songs used, in many of which are references to the experiences of the novice with this supernatural pair.

*575 Turning now to the manner in which the kukusiut regard their own society, it is evident that the most important duty of each member is to aid in impressing and deceiving the uninitiated. The prestige of the organization depends upon the ability of its members to inspire awe, hence any weakness in fulfilling this obligation is an anti-social act. For this purpose the society acts as a whole. Many kukusiut have, for example, [424] Cannibal prerogatives, and on occasion the Cannibals, having the same functions, work together, but they do not form a separate organization of their own.[2] Many of the means employed to deceive and impress the uninitiated have already been described. Mythology records, and it appears to be a [773] fact, that long ago the ascendancy of the kukusiut was often [178] challenged by the a'alk and other uninitiated, but when the white man came the society had reached a position of such eminence that the powers of its members were unquestioned. Moreover, the combined strength of virtually all the seniors of the tribe was so great that an uninitiated person could not assert himself even if he was suspicious.

[688] Although members of the society exert every effort to con-

[2]The Bella Coola state that such sub-societies are found among the Kwakiutl.

[1] [i.e. - a repository of supernatural power - ANALYST]

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 567 struggling in fear, to the secret meeting-place. Here the marshals discuss what shall be done with him; some suggest that he be killed, others a lesser fate, and finally someone advises his initiation. After apparently due deliberation, this is decided upon; the slave is told the mysteries of the society and is warned of the dire fate which will befall him if he tells the uninitiated of his knowledge. The actual ceremonial rites of *575 796 admission do not vary according to the preliminaries used.

Initiation can take place at any time during the kusiut season. After consulting with the marshals in order to choose an evening when no other dance is to take place, the relatives of the neophyte, whom it will be convenient to term X, invite the kukusiut to their house. Sometimes songs are sung by way of rehearsal, at other times food is distributed at once. As the people are eating, one of the marshals stands up to address them, saying that X's relatives propose to take him to the repository of the name ———, so that he may become a kusiut. X, to whom this may be the first intimation, is called from his house and taken from the village by several of his kinsmen, with one or more of the marshals. The kukusiut disperse and tell the uninitiated in the other houses that X has gone to meet Ăno'likwolsaix. His companions hear the news with mingled envy and thankfulness that they are not to have this dangerous privilege.

[178] In ancient times X and his guides may actually have proceeded to his repository, but for several generations at least it has been customary for the party merely to go to some lonely spot in the woods for the night. Those accompanying X tell him as much of the ritual of the society as they think fit, not forgetting to emphasize the trust put upon him, and the fate which will befall him if he should communicate his knowledge. [787] [184] He is expected to report that he went to the repository where, lying face downwards on the ground, he saw Ăno'likwolsaix; in Kimsquit he is supposed also to see her husband.[9]

[776] [9]According to one old Bella Coola a sister of Ăno'likwolsaix also remains in every repository.

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 some ashes which he puts into his mouth and chews. Of course 791 he masticates only the ashes but X, unaware of this, is con-796 cerned for the fate of his spirit. At last it is restored to him [774] and he is told that the siki has altered it from that of an [781] uninitiated person to that of a kusiut.[11] The psychological effect of this act on the mind of a young man who has not had time to adjust himself to his new knowledge and who is firmly convinced of the powers of the siki is tremendous.

The first siki now instructs two kukusiut sitting on either side of X to lie down to serve as a seat for him. They do so, irrespective of who they may be. If the novice is still ignorant of the full mysteries of the society, the siki announces that he is going to get a call for X. He walks around the house, peering here and there as if seeking something, and then pounces as if he had caught an object between his hands. A whistle [534] is heard, such as the novice knows accompanies the coming of every call; but he does not know that the noise is made by compressing a goat or bear bladder-whistle between two sticks held beneath the armpit. This is the "mystery" of the strange noises.

*575 "Do you know what makes that noise?" ask the two kuku- 796 siut on whom X is sitting.

If X denies all knowledge, the mystery is explained to him, [688] and he is warned that he will be killed if he communicates the information to uninitiated persons. If he answers that he knows the cause, he is asked who has told him. Perhaps some lad has been peeking and has told X of what he has seen; in that case the over-inquisitive youth is at once initiated to prevent further leakage of information. As soon as X has learnt the great secret he moves to one side and the singers take their positions behind the fire. His father, or whoever it
[425] may be from whom he is to obtain his name, then stands up
[553] and unfolds its origin, telling which supernatural being is his patron, and the locality of his repository. X sometimes re-

[178] [11]This part of the rite has been omitted for so many years that many of the middle-aged kukusiut have forgotten it.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

each house in succession, borrowing filled chamber vessels. 575* Five or six men are waiting for X with these, and as he enters 796* his house, they pour urine over him. Thus restored to partial sanity, he cries out in a different tone of voice, and at once visits every house. The kukusiut are still with him, but need not guard him as closely since he is now less liable to frenzy. The uninitiated are greatly relieved at this removal of peril from among them. Later in the day kukusiut go to the different houses, asking for choice salmon-grease with which the Cannibal will later be fed. The giving of the first food to X, the later sending aloft of his call, and the restrictions which he observes for the rest of the winter do not differ from those described for other Cannibals.

Snuuq's patron is a snuuq of the Mountain which became [776] petrified in the beginning of time. At his repository there is a [778] spring beneath a large boulder. Uninitiated persons passing the spot are often terrified by hearing the growling of a Cannibal from beneath the stone. It is in this place that persons [757] suffering from virulent skin disease are washed by X, as described in a previous chapter.

Few particulars could be learnt of the rite as carried out by Qolliaohmx, though it is said to resemble the one just described in every respect. The prerogative was obtained in a vision of [424] one of the Cannibal's early ancestors, who located the reposi- [787] tory of the name beneath a large, flat stone, directly in the [778] old trail up the valley. When anyone treads on it, reverberation is heard. The writer was a spectator when the present 575* Qolliaohmx gave his dance in January, 1924, but the rite was 796* performed in such a perfunctory manner that little could be 178 learnt from it. The Cannibal wore two bands of dyed cedar-bark on his left forearm, under one of which was a container of red paint. Uttering his cry of xua·, xua·, xua·, and looking around with a wild air, he frequently buried his face in his arm, between the bands. The red paint made a realistic representation of blood, especially as it dropped with red smudges on the floor. On this occasion, the dancer appeared

*575 in a flesh-coloured bathing-suit, imitating the nakedness of
*796 earlier years. The writer was talking to one of the marshals, 178 a very old man, and remarked how different the present rites must appear to him.

"Yes," replied the old man. "But after all, the change is not so great. In former years we imitated what the supernatural beings did, now we imitate what our fathers did."

Many ethnologists, acquainted with the elaborate rituals carried out on the coast early in this century, have expressed surprise at the rapidity with which these have dwindled to mere shadows. The writer believes that one factor for the Bella Coola decline in ritual, is the realization that the rites are imitative, and that accordingly their significance need not be lost when further imitation is added.

*575 Further research would undoubtedly have added particu-
*796 lars of the manner in which other Cannibals carried out their rites, but to obtain the full details of all would have been detrimental to other types of investigation; it is believed that the above descriptions are typical. Before passing to other dances, a few general remarks on the Cannibal ritual may prove useful.

*575 In view of the arduous character of the dance, and the
*796 necessity for impressing the uninitiated with the great power
424 of the Cannibals, the marshals usually prohibit a man from [562] acting unless he is physically strong. Rarely, however, a woman is allowed to be a Cannibal if she has the necessary prerogative, but usually only if she is the last survivor of her family. In such cases the shorter rite is the more common.

[538] As before stated, kusiut origin myths are supposed to be
[173] remembered, but in practice few kukusiut know the history of their prerogatives. The process of forgetting has undoubtedly increased in the last few years, but the writer feels confident that they were never maintained with the same care as origin myths connected with the first people.

nusiutälsap and has part of that day as well as all of qothm and nəhusam to complete his task. On the evening of nusiutälsap, the kukusiut are summoned as usual to practise X's two songs. The ritual on this night as well as on the following, qothm, appears to be of the usual kusiut type although one informant stated that complete silence reigns in order to spread the fiction among the uninitiated in the neighbouring houses that X is waiting quietly to commune with the supernatural beings, and that consequently the customary dancing is omitted. This is probably a modern deviation from the traditional usage. 575* 796* [532] [178]

On the night of nəhusam a herald summons the kukusiut to X's house with the cry:

> Tcälätt dənai nəmənkəmi dəkusiutai
> Come to the little kusiut dance. [539]

This is merely a rhetorical remark since the dance is really one of major import. They enter, and are at once given a small meal.[1] Then the cry is raised for the uninitiated. When they are seated, X appears from the back-room, carrying before him the fungus, held by the shorter end of rope projecting above, while the longer is coiled up behind it out of sight. The kukusiut begin to beat time furiously as X slowly circles the fire. Then, solemnly and carefully, he sets the fungus on the floor where, to the wonder of the uninitiated, it disappears from sight as though it had sunk into the planks. This is, in fact, the case, since the carpenters have prepared a small hole in the floor through which it disappears, leaving only the cord lying on the surface. Any four kukusiut men are called forward to support X and stand, two on either side of him. The dancer bends down, picks up the string easily with one hand and draws up the fungus into sight, taking care not to raise it high enough to expose the longer end of the rope passing through the hole. He lowers his burden and the fungus disappears from sight. X whispers to one of his four assistants and the latter calls out, as if just prompted:

[1] This may be also a modern innovation. [178]

[The Fungus Dance]

575 from a distance. When one of the participants has speared 796 the object, it is drawn to shore and carried into the house.
[424] The uninitiated are then called in and enter, often covering their heads with blankets to prevent their spirits being drawn from them. None of the Bella Coola appears to know what governed, in the old days, the choice between these two performances.

575 The Fungus dance differs considerably from typical kusiat
796 rituals already described. In part this is certainly due to decay of custom. When the writer witnessed the dance in the 178 winter of 1923-4 it was carried out very crudely by Snunéka'kai, who, unwilling to admit this, was secretive about the proper ritual. Consequently, the performance of the dance was more of a hindrance than a help to the investigator. But even when full weight is given to this circumstance, it is clear that the Fungus dance is peculiar, particularly in the omission of masked figures on nuhuram.

575 The ritual on that occasion was further complicated by the 796 fact that Snunéka'kai has also the prerogative of dancing at an eclipse of either the sun or the moon, and insisted on this 821 fact being brought out in connection with her songs. Four of [424] these were composed instead of the usual two, and the supernatural beings described in them were:

[533] Alquntám: under the name of Sunálotla.

[776] The Moon.

Smaien-a: This was introduced on account of being the [532] place from which the Salmon-Bringer leaps to the sun. A mask representing this place of petrified power is always painted with salmon designs and the blanket of the wearer is decorated in the same way.

The Snung mouths that act as posts at the ends of the sun's course.

Shlím: A supernatural being dwelling under the river who is able to use a fungus in a dance held there. Detailed information about this creature could not be obtained.

[533] At any eclipse, no matter what the season of the year or

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Mystery Dance]

* 575
2 796

plains that until the three correct solutions have been given, X will be able neither to eat nor to sleep. Moreover, this would mean a continuation of the kwiat season far into the spring. X is supposed to know the three answers but to be unable to communicate them, though if a nearly correct reply is given, he shows it by dancing violently. A clever actor is thus able to instil considerable action into the proceedings by leading on an eager guesser with movements of increased animation, but the result is always the same—his dancing grows weaker as if the one replying had strayed into a false path. A marshal explains that the failure is due to the supernatural being Awayalikailais having robbed the guesser of his mental ability. When the replies have stopped, X takes up his stick and leaves the house, followed by his escort. He enters the dwelling immediately above, where the same performance is repeated: this is done in each house of the village.

All the kukwiat return with X to his home where what little is left of the night is passed in eating and in listening to speeches from the marshals.

In the morning the carpenters erect a circular enclosure between the fire and the back-room. It is raised on posts about four feet long, has a diameter of approximately twelve feet, and is surrounded by a wall three or four feet high, often decorated with paintings according to the dancer's wishes. The uninitiated are told that X must remain in this, except when on periodic visits to the other houses, until the three answers have been guessed, and that he must not eat, sleep, or even sit down. In recent years the prohibition with regard [178] to eating has been neglected, but it is said that in the last century one man abstained from all food except fern root for two months. X climbs into the enclosure and throughout the day the uninitiated in the other houses can hear the rattling of his dance apron as he moves to and fro.

Just before dusk the kukwiat assemble in X's home, preparatory to sallying forth to every house in the village as on the previous evening. The remembrancers attend him, care-

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Mystery Dance]

*575 masks representing the three successful answers. Little atten-
*796 tion is paid to actual design, and the workmen use their ini-
532 tiative to a considerable extent.[a] One mask always made is that of Snuslaxwai, a being who appears to act as concealer for Ałquntām. As far as could be learnt, if Ałquntām wishes to conceal anything from a human being, such as the hiding-places in a Mystery dance, Snuslaxwai is entrusted with the task. In addition to the usual well-known supernatural beings, X often orders representations of mammals, birds, or fish; he may even ask a man to make a mask without stipulations and then the finished product is as much a surprise to him as to anyone else. There is no relationship between the masks made [556] and the guesses registered. If X is wealthy, the number to be constructed may run to fifty or more. Nusiutālsap concludes in the usual way as soon as all the work has been allotted.

Two days is not long enough for the completion of such a large number of masks, so nēhusam must be postponed, and qoṭlm is correspondingly delayed for four days. In the evening the heralds invite first the kukusiut and then the eager, though fearful uninitiated. They take their places and in Kimsquit, not [184] in Bella Coola, marvel at some of the masks hanging behind the fire, though no explanation is vouchsafed them until the following evening. Presently the singers begin to beat out one of *575 X's songs and he starts dancing violently, only to stop long
*796 before it is ended. The musicians quickly change to another; he performs briefly, then ceases; this is repeated for a third tune, and similarly for a fourth, a fifth, and so on. If the preliminaries have been long drawn out, X may have as many as twenty songs and he dances to a fragment of each. After he has performed, the singers strike up the tune of any kusiut

[178] [a] Possibly this disregard for exact portrayal of supernatural beings is a modern degeneration. The Bella Coola of today say quite frankly that they have forgotten many beings used by their ancestors, so have no hesitation in inventing new designs and naming them even for natural phenomena which they consider must be caused by supernatural agency. On the other hand, the burning of masks, which seems to be an old practice, would tend to lessen conventionalization in all but the best-known figures.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

[The Mystery Dance]

statements. Non-members recognize that Deer, Varied Thrush, and Wolf are really persons, but they have no idea who or what they are, while their whole training, combined with the atmosphere with which the whole ceremony is surrounded, makes it easy for them to believe that they are seeing supernaturally endowed animals. If an uninitiated person should voice his doubts, he would be reported at once to the marshals by a spy and forthwith made a kuziut. 575* 796* 582 796 [781]

The next to come forth is a figure wearing a mask representing a man, and carrying a long stick to the end of which is tied a bundle of burning rags. The actor must be able to run swiftly, and, as he dashes at full speed around the fire, the strips of cloth are drawn out into a flaming stream behind him, producing a spectacular effect in the semi-gloom. Ano'lîkwolsaix explains that this is Shooting Star, a supernatural being who behaves peculiarly and who has, therefore, passed rapidly and without the droning invitation that accompanies the passage of the other visitors. When Qaxalên-i gave this dance, the rags were dipped in coal-oil to make them burn brightly, and one informant thought that this particular supernatural one was, perhaps, not shown in the old days. It must be remembered that details of the ceremony are constantly changing according to the skill and inventive ability of the carpenters. [178]

To the accompaniment of O..... from the announcer and the droning of the women, there next emerge four masked figures representing the four Carpenters. In whatever ceremonial they appear, their masks are the same because they, as master-artisans, are supposed to have fashioned them for themselves. They dance around the fire without singing and disappear behind the enclosure. Ano'lîkwolsaix explains that these are Masmusâlânux, the Carpenters of Naxpalxwaista.

Now Oqolikts Alqunîm comes forth. He is the herald of Alqunîm who summons the supernatural ones to Naxpalxwaista for the winter ceremonial. He wears a man's mask, surmounted by a wooden bird which can be made to flap its wings by means of a hidden cord, and he carries a staff on top dakaxiar and lack X's call in the usual manner. Then, two by two, the masks are cast on to the fire and the ceremonial is over.

THE DANCE OF THE TALLY POSTS

As previously described, a tally post is erected in the land above for every Bella Coola at birth. As long as this memorial is upright and firm, the individual to whom it refers enjoys health and prosperity, but if it becomes crooked he falls ill. The uninitiated believe that several dakaxiar have the prerogative of climbing to the land above during the ceremonial season and straightening leaning tally posts. This is such a useful activity that it must have exercised great influence on the uninitiated in early days, but the rite has not been properly carried out since the smallpox epidemic in the last century. The following account was obtained from two old men who remembered the manner in which a certain Ocikuif of Tsmusil performed a year or two before "The Great Sickness." Neither of the informants was a dasiar at the time, but they were able to supplement their recollections of the dance with what they afterwards learnt when initiated, so the following account is probably accurate in outline though deficient in detail. It will be convenient to refer to the dancer as X, and describe the ceremony in the present tense. It was also performed at Kimsquit many years ago.

The rite resembles Sacinqa dances in many respects. X must obtain the consent of the marshals during the preceding summer, and their permission is refused unless the prospective dancer is a man of proved discretion. If they agree, X asks a number of dakaxiar women to help him by making a very long and strong rope of nettle fibre. At intervals the work-women gather for the purpose in the back-room of X's house, taking care that no uninitiated see what they are doing. Every effort is made to ensure that there is no flaw in the rope as a break would be a serious matter, punishable by death.

Near the winter solstice the marshals choose a suitable time

[The Dance of the Murdered Slave]

* 575 *796 women drone, then she leaves the house, ostensibly to return to her repository up the valley.

The singers at once begin to compose a new song, describing X's visitor and something of her history. The ritual that follows is that of the ordinary lootémem and requires no special description. On the night of nacistálap a large number of [532] masks are ordered, including one series representing wasps, another of young lads, and still another of the latter with swollen faces. The only other part of the dance with a distinctive ritual is that of nakanem.

In the early evening the kukuciut assemble in X's house to [532] inspect the enormous wasps' nest which the carpenters have [178] erected behind the fire. In recent years this has been made of canvas, taking the place of matting. Within are several stages, on which the defenders stand, each a kuciut wearing a wasp's mask and carrying a miniature bow and arrow. The attackers are other members of the society chosen for their small stature and armed with clubs and branches; each wears a boy's mask and each carries a second, representing the same individual with badly swollen face. Considerable time is required to perfect the arrangements and select the performers, but at last all is in readiness and the uninitiated are called in.

They marvel at the enormous wasps' nest and presently [714] witness an assault on it. The attackers, protected by armour, valiantly beat on the structure with clubs as they swing their [825] branches as if brushing away the angry insects; this is the way that boys normally attack a wasps' nest. The defenders discharge their arrows and at intervals one of the attackers calls out in pain and falls down, presently rising with badly swollen face. The uninitiated do not realize that he has slipped the second mask from beneath his blanket to his face. X stands at one side, throwing his arm with a sweeping motion in the direction of the combat, while Ana'kiwalaxie gives her customary explanations. At last the nest is beaten down whereupon one of the Cannibals begins to growl and the uninitiated rush away. The ritual concludes in the usual way.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 *
796 *
776 assemble to witness the dance of Alqunŭm. This is his function in the land above, so it is natural for him to do the same in this world.

THE DANCE OF Alqunŭm'S FISHERMAN

Alqunŭm in the land above has a servant who uses a hand-net, xots, in fishing for his master. He is accordingly known as Alqunŭm's Xoxpstŭm, "Fisherman," and is patron for a kuciut.

THE DANCE OF THE TOP

The playful Sŭwollpumalsh Alqunŭm has a favourite toy consisting of a stick which can be made to spin between the hands. This top, if it may so be termed, is patron for some kuciut. The writer was unable to learn how it is displayed on nuhuam.

THE DANCE OF THE PETRIFIED HAMMER

The patron of one kuciut is a hammer which in some way was changed to stone in the beginning of time when the Bella Coola River first flowed to the sea.

THE DANCE OF THE GRIZZLY BEAR

A kuciut named Bŭtsut has, as patron, a grizzly bear resident in Xmoqua's house.

424
575 *
796 *
539
[178]

VARIOUS ORIGIN MYTHS

In most cases kuciut dances have been preserved until the present day, although the myths on which they depend have long since been forgotten, but the reverse is sometimes the case. The following myths, were recorded with few, or no details of the associated dances. In several cases, one of the same type has already been recorded, so that the significance will be apparent.

A COMPOSITE ORIGIN MYTH[20]

Long ago there lived in Stuac a man and his wife who were powerful, prosperous, and able to give their children many good names. This [20]Related by Mrs. Willie Mack.

[115]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 575
* 796
781 figures are really beings from another world. The explanation lies in the profound belief of all Bella Coola in the near presence of the supernatural; consequently, a supernatural explanation is the one normally given for all unusual incidents. The dances themselves are filled with strange manifestations, particularly the weird whistling concerning the origin of which the uninitiated have no idea. Once convinced by this means of the presence of unknown powers, it is easy for them to believe that the masked figures are visitors from the other world. Nor was their belief in former days shaken by certain representations which were palpably false, such as that of the sun. No one could believe that the disk which moved across the back of the house was the sun itself; but on the other hand it seemed marvellous to the uninitiated, ignorant of the means used to portray it. To the white man there seems a fundamental difference between a supernatural being and the representation of a strange object made to move by unseen means, but to the Bella Coola both belong to another realm, and are accordingly akin. Moreover, there were occasions when the uninitiated must have seen the shifting or actual falling of a mask, for example, during the fight with wasps. But here again the deep belief of the non-members came to the help of the kukusiut, who told their guests that this was caused by the coming of a call to the actor, and what might easily have become doubt and suspicion was thus changed to respect.

[178]
[123]
[114]

The writer laboured under two tremendous difficulties in collecting information about kusiut matters; the present dances are mere shadows of what they formerly were, and there are no more uninitiated. His presence and quest for information served to stimulate interest and led to a partial revival of the old rites, but the bulk of his material was obtained from informants rather than from actual observation. It is a universal characteristic of mankind to idealize accounts of former practices, so it is not only possible, but probable, that the foregoing descriptions are more perfect than many of the rites to which they refer. Even when full allowance is made for this, the fact still remains that the kukusiut were able to carry out dances in which they deceived the uninitiated. Above all, it is clear that those who were not members of the society had the greatest respect for the powers of those who were, and although doubt may have existed concerning the identity of the supernatural visitors, there was not the slightest concerning the ability of the kukusiut to have, for example, their stomachs ripped open. The writer discussed this point with too many old men and women to have the slightest uncertainty on this point, and he feels confident that anyone who could have listened to the account of a reliable old man concerning his fears when he had "killed" a kusiut in this manner, would have shared his conviction.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* 781 114

It would be fascinating to discuss at some length the probable history of the kusiut society, but this would entail a comparison with the rites of other coastal tribes and belongs to the realm of comparative ethnology. This monograph deals only with Bella Coola practices as the writer saw them or heard them described, so that the history of the society can only be treated from this angle. It appears certain that the rites have increased in secrecy. One old marshal with whom the matter was discussed remembered having heard that long ago masks were constructed in the presence of the uninitiated. Considered as an isolated statement this would have little value, but in conjunction with information derived from Kimsquit it becomes of importance. It is true that in Kimsquit the masks are made in secret, but they are shown to the uninitiated as masks, and the writer was told of one instance in which Tlogats, during his round of the village, fell into the water and remained there all day, to the amusement of non-members who recognized that he was merely a disguised human being. It is even said that long ago the manufacture of masks was entrusted to influential uninitiated. It is clear that there has been a tremendous increase in secrecy even at Kimsquit, and a great deal more at Bella Coola. The writer believes that

575* 796* 178● 184 532

*575 long ago the kusiut society was composed of individuals re-
*796 garded as having supernatural endowments, and who perhaps 178 believed this themselves. In course of time their influence
184 increased to such an extent that they were able to convince
[532] non-members of the supernatural origin of objects used in their ceremonial.

[115] Unfortunately, information from Kimsquit was obtained almost exclusively from one old man, who, though a marshal well informed in kusiut matters and in many ways an almost ideal informant, had long since realized that the dances could be nothing more than representations, and it is possible that his remarks were coloured by this knowledge. Though he tended to minimize the attitude of belief with which the un-
[781] initiated regarded masked figures, yet he fully agreed with every statement made by the Bella Coola themselves with regard to the firm belief of non-members concerning the supernatural powers of the dancers. He also confirmed statements
[688] respecting punishment if an error should occur, and mentioned the shooting of a Bella Bella dancer who had allowed his mask to fall during a sisaok dance. As far as actual ritual is concerned, the differences in procedure between Bella Coola and Kimsquit are unimportant, and differences in belief are less than they appear at first sight. The Bella Coola kukusiut
[781] seem to have perfected their organization and to have been able to impress the uninitiated to a greater extent than their Kimsquit fellows, but the fundamentals of the society are identical.

*575 Traditions concerning the early history of the society are *796 probably of little value historically, but they are important as 173 indicating the mental attitude of the Bella Coola. Considering the importance of the society there are relatively few accounts of what took place long ago; the Bella Coola know that it exists, believe that the rites are identical with those carried out by their ancestors for generations, and theorize no further. It was only in the beginning of time that things were radically different; it is believed that then all the people were endowed

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

173 he lapsed into silence, knowing that the odds were too great for him.
*575 The Cannibal realized that if this powerful man could be initiated into 578 their society he would be a source of strength, so he said:

"You are now an initiate of mine."

Xɪmxɪmlaix understood that this meant he was to be initiated into the kusiut society. He agreed, but asked to be permitted to complete the a'alk dance which he was performing that evening, and to get beating sticks for which he had gone to the forest. The kukusiut were only too willing to grant this dispensation in their joy at having a valuable recruit.

On his return to the village, Xɪmxɪmlaix told his fellow a'alk that he was going to be a kusiut and they were greatly grieved at loss of their leader. That night they gave the dance which had been started and composed a song of which the theme was the way in which their rivals had fallen until their heads were upside down. The kukusiut, mocked in this way, feared that this was a prelude to further trouble with the a'alk, but Xɪmxɪmlaix duly carried out his promise and was enrolled as a kusiut. Bereft of their leader, many of his disconsolate associates were admitted as kukusiut, and ever since that time there has been relatively little friction between the two societies. In due course the Cannibal gave his dance with a song describing how he had met a strange creature over whom he had prevailed; this was, of course, the uninitiated Xɪmxɪmlaix.

[203] To these two is attributed the origin of the practice of shoving to decide priority of invitation giving. It is said that *[796] both Xɪmxɪmlaix and the Cannibal once wished to invite the people to a ceremony on the same evening and agreed to shove against each other to decide which should have preference. Xɪmxɪmlaix prevailed, and the Cannibal duly postponed his dance and went with his associates to the winner's house.

As before stated, stories of this kind dealing with the al-
• [178] leged history of the society are of slight value. As far as they go, they agree with other evidence pointing to the gradual growth of the kusiut society from a band of elders endowed with supernatural power to a society with enormous prestige, dominating the life of the community and entirely overshadowing the a'alk who seem once to have been their rivals.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

but the Bella Coola do not consider this aspect and the children grow up in an atmosphere entirely lacking in restraint of speech. Some stories teach a moral lesson, but they are recounted merely for entertainment. At the present time, no one knows who invented the stories; they have been handed down from dim antiquity and alterations or embellishments are considered improper, while the composition of new tales appears to be unknown. 538 [867] [178]

Another pastime is smoking. Among some Indian tribes the practice has a definite religious significance, but this appears to be lacking among the Bella Coola. Most of the men enjoy either a pipe or cigarettes, and some of the women also indulge, but few carry the habit to excess. All the older people affirmed that their ancestors had smoked for generations. Tobacco was not grown, but kinnikinick, *milix*ʷ', was used, and also a plant known as lsaix'. Another smoking mixture was bark of lsxwatelp, toasted before a fire until dried and brown, and then crumbled between the hands. These materials have given place entirely to imported tobacco, and the white man's pipe has replaced the native one. The latter consisted of a gooseberry cane from which the pith had been extracted; sometimes a small bowl of elderberry wood was added, but often the mixture to be smoked was simply placed within the end of the hollow stem. 276 [517] [249] [824] [177]

Adults, especially the men, are addicted to gambling. They are fond of placing stakes on a race or other trial of strength, and enjoy all kinds of games of chance. Some of the younger men have mastered a few of the simpler games of cards on which they spend a certain amount of time and money. The favourite gambling game, however, is one found in all parts of the coast, which is played with a pack of fifty-four smoothed crabapple sticks. The rules are complicated and no effort was made to learn more than the general principles. The pieces are divided among the eight or ten contestants and concealed; then one player guesses in whose hand a certain marked stick is hidden. If he is successful, the others pay him a forfeit; if 525

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

115 Schooner lacked the mental acumen of Joshua and Jim, but 177 he revealed himself as a tribal patriarch, proud of his family's [153] history and eager to assist his grandchildren and great-grandchildren, but feeling himself lost and helpless in the struggle before them. With sadness, but without bitterness, he used to speak of the approaching end of Bella Coola culture, and his words brought home the tragedy which the spread of civilization brings to so many, and the responsibility resting upon the white people as a whole.

153 Until an intelligence test is devised to correlate the mental 115 ability of the white man with that of the native, it is impossible to compare the two scientifically. None the less, the writer deliberately expresses the opinion that Joshua Moody and Jim Pollard are two of the most brilliant men he has met in any walk of life. They are undoubtedly the most able of the Bella Coola; others have only slightly less ability, while the mass of the population compares favourably with an average white community. Their ability, however, is defi-
• 178 nitely conditioned by their conservatism. Absolute trust in the traditions of their ancestors has checked speculation, as the established explanation is never questioned; new inventions, unauthorized by custom, have been regarded as almost sacri-
[626] legious; the force of public opinion, while valuable as a deterrent to anti-social practices, has effectively restrained innovations. The Bella Coola are a good example of a community where development has been atrophied by extreme conservatism fostered by religious beliefs.

105 Taking into account the material obstacles, the achievements of these people have not been insignificant. In former [322] times, provided only with tools of stone and untempered copper, they built graceful canoes, made watertight boxes, hewed planks from mighty cedars, and erected large houses which called for considerable engineering skill. Judged by [532] white standards, their carving and painting lacked artistic deli-
[535] cacy, but it required no mean ability to portray crest designs to meet their own standards. Passing from the purely mechanical

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

APPENDIX A

MECHANICAL PROCESSES

NO attempt was made to study either the material culture of the Bella Coola, or their methods of manufacturing, but information on some points was obtained incidentally. All sociological and religious features connected therewith have already been described. 121

THE TAKING AND PREPARATION OF OLACHEN

227

The run of olachen, spuiy, comes about the end of April, and as many as possible are caught. In preparation, nets, ähe'xⁿ, are brought out from the boxes where they have been stored during the winter, examined, and repaired. If necessary, new ones must be manufactured out of nettle-(lxwa-) fibre laid away by the women for this purpose. By rolling the material on their legs, they produce a thin twine; five strands of this are then interwoven, making a finished cord capable of resisting great strain. The nets are constructed by the men. The type used at the present time, which is said not to differ from that formerly employed, consists of a purse-like sack, oval in cross-section, open at the wider end and tapering very gradually to the other, which is closed. The total length is about thirty feet, the diameter at the open end about eight feet, and at the closed end about three feet. A new net is dipped in a mixture of boiled hemlock-bark to darken it, and then boiled in a solution of willow-bark to prevent the knots from slipping. [226] [221] [283] [462] [286] [386]

The setting out of a net is not an easy task, so two or three men agree to work as partners. In the present degenerate days, property rights are not respected and each group selects a suitable spot. The best location is where the water is about three feet deep and runs rapidly, but without ripples, over a smooth piece of the bottom; such a place is called a sklläy. When the fish begin to run plentifully, the partners paddle out to set their net, taking with them four stakes, each about ten feet in length. The weight of a full net is tremendous, so the poles have to be driven down at least six feet, a difficult task on account of the stony bottom. Selecting the exact spot, one of four posts, älkdjälos, is set upright and held in position by being tied to a cross-piece, nudjiqosta, fastened to the canoe for the purpose. While his two partners hold the craft steady, the third man begins to pound down the stake; metal mauls are now commonly used, but in former times this work was always done with an unhafted stone maul, lxwoma. The fishermen relieve one another intermittently until the top of the pole has been driven down to within 226 [476] [423] [178] [412] coast, and began the study with much misgiving. The results were surprisingly satisfactory.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

After a few weeks I found that I had sufficient knowledge of Chinook to dispense with interpreters and deal directly with the older people, a tremendous advantage. Pride of ancestry is one of the strongest characteristics of the Bella Coola, and once convinced of my sincere interest in and respect for their history, they were willing to talk. They resent the condescension with which most white men regard them, so that contact with one who was friendly and sympathetic came as a pleasant surprise. There were, of course, difficulties. The canning season had begun and every able-bodied man was working away from the village. The conviction of each person that he was the best source of information, and that conferences with another were useless or unreliable, caused distrust. The desire of each informant to discuss only what interested him; the complexity of Bella Coola life itself; the necessity of checking every statement, and the extreme difficulty of doing so on account of discrepancies in the myths of different families; the fear, almost groundless, of each individual that someone else had infringed on his rights by recounting some legend; and, not least, the need for tact, patience, and a sense of humour under all conditions, were some of the obstacles to be surmounted. Nor was Chinook entirely satisfactory. It has enough words for matters pertaining to fishing, hunting, and trading, but for the realms of sociology or theology it is inadequate. This difficulty could not have been overcome without the patient help of my informants. Animated by the desire to help, they used every expedient in the way of parallel and synonym to explain obscure terms. Sometimes a younger man was called in for some abstruse meaning; more often it gradually became clear from different applications. Once the significance of a word was definitely understood, I made a note of it and used it henceforth. A useful vocabulary was thus built up, and conversations were carried on in mixed Bella Coola and Chinook, eked out by whatever English words were known by the person with

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 have been many changes. Raven, the culture hero, taught 829 the early settlers many useful arts, and they were themselves so powerful that they were able to create ceremonial and other prerogatives in a manner impossible to their descendants. Moreover, the people realize that they have been influenced by neighbouring tribes since that time, but in spite of these additions, they believe that their life is patterned on that of their earliest forbears.

[181] As a group, the Bella Coola are philosophers. They demand a reason for everything, though once a reason has been given, and accepted, they think no more about the matter. The elaboration of Bella Coola mythology may be due in part to their desire to explain their social organization; but without question these myths, now accepted as facts, have had a great influence on the lives of the people. In fact the social structure of the tribe has tended to conform to the myths.

621 It is believed that each group of first people formed a village 773 community, and pre-empted hunting-grounds in the vicinity. These usually consisted of small valleys opening from the main [361] Bella Coola River, tracts which could thus be easily defined.
[226] Each group also took possession of a suitable part of the river for a salmon-weir, or, if located on the coast, a convenient place for an ocean fish-trap. In course of time the first people married, of necessity with members of other villages. According [591] to mythology, and equally according to modern practice, the women usually moved to the villages of their husbands. When 773 a child was born, it naturally grew up to share in the hunting-grounds of its father's village. Moreover, the father was able to bestow on his child various ceremonial dances; the concepts of some he had brought with him from above, others he had formulated on this earth. It is assumed that all the first people were mighty chiefs, able to initiate rites in a way that few modern men have been able to equal. But the mothers of these children, the first born on this earth, did not surrender the privileges of their own villages at marriage. Consequently, their children were of almost as much interest to the brothers

142 sally used but the older people state that beards were by no
144 means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made
[302] concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Potlas, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white [648] traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with [567] slave women and others of low family was not uncommon, but [622] it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to misconduct herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Potlas himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

142 Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be over-
144 looked in the case of this one individual, one must not dis-
826 regard the opinion of the people themselves on hairiness in general. They are proud of it and regard beards and mous-
[302] taches as marks of virility given to them by Älquntäm; baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hirsute than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride [186] that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say in scorn, "hairless like Chinamen." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate 20), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.[2]

Character

●181 It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have been displayed in their customs and beliefs, their habits, practices, and folk-lore, their outlook both towards the supernatural world and towards their fellows. 181

[2]This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been caused by Ainu mixture.

The following additional observations are the result of personal knowledge, and recorded after considerable thought.

When a white man begins to understand the Bella Coola, he cannot fail to be impressed by their deep belief in the supernatural. To them religion is no mental abstraction, but a living reality. They feel the presence of strange creatures around them, and they recognize non-human powers in every manifestation of their own minds; in fact, every incident, good or bad, is attributed to supernatural intervention. This does not mean that they regard life with stoic indifference, content to murmur Kismet at whatever fate befalls them. They realize that supernatural powers have endowed them with brains, with physical strength, and with the ability to win favour and gain help from active superhuman beings, and consequently they strive in a world teeming with potent forces. The individual toils as does a white man in the struggle of life, but he attributes his fortune, not to luck or to his unaided exertions, but to the assistance of non-human agents. If he is fortunate, it is because his spirit has been active; if unfortunate, because it has been too inert to protect him. 181 771

Contact with white men, particularly with missionaries, has raised tremendous problems for the Bella Coola. The older people have been but little affected; they may state that they are Christians, believing in the white man's god, but this often means only the knowledge of one more supernatural being whom they add to the already rich pantheon. It is quite otherwise with the younger people, particularly with those who have been away at school. Some adopt the new faith with fervor, continuing to see the same visions and to experience the same mental exaltations, but attributing them to Christianity. To others, however, loss of belief in their own faith has caused a general scepticism; though they may accept the new religion, it does not become the vital force which the old was to their 177 771 [181]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

177 fathers. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away 771 entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency [181] of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed.
Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omni-[181] presence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as [622] he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he [703] feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who performs some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth [769] incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected 177 by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present 626 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single 342 family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man [602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 The education and conversion of the younger men have 626 enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former 182
561

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

times, older relatives were revered, not only as senior members 177 of the ancestral family, but as those most familiar with myths 626 and other cherished possessions. With the spread of new ideas, 182
the young people no longer respect the lore of their elders, and 561
consequently do not heed their admonitions and advice. Theoretically, such self-reliance would seem desirable, but in practice it has led to unfortunate results. A young man, considering himself superior to the older people, glories in acting on his own initiative, but too often he lacks the requisite strength of character to guide his own life. If he wishes to drink, he does so; if he desires to marry, he chooses his mate without con- [581] sidering the transmission of ancestral rights which stabilized unions in former times; if he tires of his wife, he deserts her for another; if he cheats or steals, he is no longer restrained by relatives who fear disgrace. The elders, incapable of stemming the tide, watch sadly and ask seriously whether the coming of the white man has brought compensation for the loss it has caused. It is deplorable that the emancipation of the younger men and women has taken place before the development of the sense of individual responsibility and conscience which public opinion formerly rendered less necessary. Christianity provides a moral code for those who are fully converted, but for the many in the transition stage, the break-down of the old system of family influence has been tragic.

Profound religious beliefs and lack of individual initiative 181 are shared by all Bella Coola with the exception, perhaps, of a 177 few of the younger people who, having been educated at white man's schools, have adopted the new outlook unconditionally. In most characteristics they display as wide variability as any 577 other people. In truthfulness, for example, they range from 124 one extreme to the other. As the writer became familiar with the older men, he found it possible to recognize without difficulty the strength of some and the weakness of others. There are liars, but they can be easily detected owing to their lack of finesse. It is a pleasure to record the reliability of the author's friends and informants. Their veracity was checked repeat-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

128 light on obscure points. That is a task for the comparative student and nothing but confusion would result from such an incorporation in this volume. For the benefit of the reader, [114] footnotes have been inserted referring to The Mythology of the Bella Coola Indians[a] by Boas, the most comprehensive description of the tribe. In the field I deliberately disregarded published accounts.

182 And what of these people, the subject of this book?

The intimate experiences of the second winter in Bella Coola only confirmed my feeling of sadness at the decay of the old arts and crafts. Music, painting, carving, weaving, story-telling, acting, all are passing away. Only a handful of the tribe survives, and of them the younger people ape the white [illegible] in the lore and customs of their fathers. I know of few sadder experiences than talking with some Bella Coola patriarch and realizing the tragedy which he feels at the termination of his people's culture.

Though the individual may suffer, civilization must press onward and the life of the Indian will soon disappear. With it will pass forever manners, customs, beliefs, rites, and knowledge, data of value to students of man both now and in the future. Every year lessens the amount of information available. In Bella Coola, for example, the death of Captain Schooner left a gap which none could fill. Others must follow him, and within a short time there will be no ethnological work possible in that tribe. A tithe of the people may survive, but their culture, the growth of generations, will have been swept away.

000 Most of those to whom I am indebted for help in this study have passed away. Dr. A. C. Haddon and Dr. W. H. R. Rivers, both of Cambridge University, who were my mentors in anthropology, are dead; so too is Dr. E. Sapir, former Chief of the Anthropological Division in the National Museum, who gave me instruction in phonetics, and Mr. H. I. Smith, Dominion [127] Archaeologist, to whom are owing most of the photographs re-

[a] Memoirs of the American Museum of Natural History, vol. II, 1898.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

kenzie, making his memorable overland trip to the Pacific, records coming upon Indian villages at every few miles of his course. Boas describes the way in which the inhabitants of each of these claim to be descended from one group of ancestors. 173 361 175

Though it is impossible to estimate the former population of the Bella Coola valley with any degree of accuracy, it must have been in the thousands. In 1922 there were surviving rather more than three hundred individuals, who live in one village on an Indian reserve near the north bank of the Bella Coola River, about a quarter of a mile from the sea. In the last century the tribe was stricken with smallpox, and since then consumption, venereal disease, measles, and other diseases of the white man have taken their deadly toll. Changed conditions of life and decay of the rich ceremonial around which centred their interests in the old days are also contributory factors in their decline. Within the last few years, however, the population has begun to increase. 161 [164] [177] [182]

Bella Coola Villages

The following list of Bella Coola villages was obtained. In an effort to learn which had been deserted in recent years, the writer always asked whether or not a town was occupied at the time of Mackenzie's visit, an event of such great interest to the grandparents of the older people that the memory of it is still preserved. Villages said to have been occupied at that time are marked with an asterisk. 361 [124] [175]

Three rivers empty into the head of South Bentinck Arm, which is about one mile in width (see Plate 7). The Bella Coola, flowing from the east, enters at the southern edge, and the Nalpatskwan-e winds in from the north to the opposite angle of the head of the fiord. This stream, "The Nearest River" of the Bella Coola, so-called because of its proximity to the sea, is shown on maps as the Necleetaconnay. Between the mouths of these two is the Pe-ɔɔlb, a small stream rising 133 [103]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

It is the life that suffers;
761 whenever the skin is broken. Any wound may prove dan-
[752] gerous, but particularly one that cuts either of the invisible [827] lines along which vitality flows from the little finger to the little toe. An injury to one of these channels spreads rapidly and is in many cases fatal.

761 It is generally considered that a person dies if his life leaves his body. In contradiction to this, though the discrepancy 774 seems of slight importance to the Bella Coola, is the belief that it ascends at the winter solstice to the gathering of the supernatural beings in Nuxmálx to greet Alqantám. It is common knowledge that some part of the human body does this, but there is diversity of opinion regarding which it may be. Some say it is the spirit, but the consensus of opinion is that it is the life. If it is successful and receives presents in the land above, its owner will prosper on earth; if it is unfortunate, he will be the same; if it falls in the crush as the guests hurry forth to escape the heat of Alqantám's entry, he will die. By dreams 761 a man learns the fortune of his supernatural representative,
787 and from them he can judge what is in store for him during the coming year and receive intimations concerning birth and death, secret society matters and, in fact, every phase of human activity, since all are decided at the meeting of Alqantám and his associates. Dreams are considered to be especially important at this season of the year (I, p. 608) and information obtained from them may, perhaps, be the origin of the present firm conviction that some portion of the body actually ascends.
[182] Bella Coola beliefs have so broken down in recent years that lack of unanimity concerning the specific part is not surprising, nor does it alter the importance of this conviction. No attempt is made to explain how an individual can remain alive during the annual absence of his life.

761 Although the life is so ethereal, it really consists of four intangible elements which unite to form the immaterial whole. One of these parts, including the voice, is located in the throat, another in the trunk, a third in the legs, and a fourth in the feet; the body is thus divided into four quarters. The con-

1:McDougall E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

CHAPTER III

SOCIAL ORGANIZATION

Ancestral Family—The Village Community—The Family—Kinship Terms—Slaves

As in other communities, the social, religious, and economic aspects of Bella Coola life are interdependent, but there is an added complexity in the influence of mythological concepts. This not only complicates investigation in the field, but it also renders a logical description of their customs difficult. Some reference to practices recorded in detail in later chapters is unavoidable. 128 129

In many communities, ethnologists have been able to begin with the social organization of the people. Among the Bella Coola, this is impossible, since their religious beliefs colour every aspect of their life, and these must be understood by anyone who wishes to comprehend their culture as a whole. In this chapter, too, it is necessary to commence with a description of that aspect of mythology which serves as the cohesive bond to one of the social units, the ancestral family.

Ancestral Family

As recorded in the last chapter, it is believed that in the beginning of time Alquntin caused the first men and women to be created in his house above and sent them down to populate the earth. They came in groups of two, three, four, or more, brothers and sisters, or more rarely men and wife, to different parts of the Bella Coola valley. They brought with them tools, houses, clothing, even sustenance in the shape of fish and animals. More important, from the point of view of social organization, they brought with them names and ceremonial prerogatives. In fact, the Bella Coola believe that their culture was created by Alquntin in the distant past, and has not been the result of slow growth. It is true that there 123 [124]

614 The recent decay of Bella Coola culture may have destroyed [123] traces of more definite obligations with respect to the ancestral family, but all the evidence indicates that it has always been a fluid unit. Its very lack of functions makes it difficult to [125] discuss, and the above account was pieced together from scraps of information collected from many different people at various times; yet, intangible though it be, it is a very real unit to the Bella Coola and pervades their life. Each individual knows those to whom he is related. In many cases the exact kinship is lost, but it is remembered that a man from such-and-such a village married a woman from another village, and it is proved from the use by their descendants of names from the same origin myth. The concept of physical strength imparted by a closely akin ancestry is always present and gives a person the real "power" in the village founded by those first ancestors 614 of his. For the ancestral family is usually thought of in terms 621 of villages. A man belongs to the village where his first ancestor came to earth, though he is equally a member of other towns into which his ancestors may have married. A [554] man without ancestry, without ut'alem, is a miserable creature; he has no home in this world, or, theoretically, in the world to come. The ancestral family is a unit essentially held together by the ties of sentiment and pride of ancestry.

614 In addition to the above social elements of the ancestral 627 family, it is felt that all its members have certain tendencies.
If one of the first ancestors had a certain physical peculiarity, or met with a particular kind of fortune, either good or bad, his descendants are more likely to experience the same than any other people. These tendencies may skip many generations, and may be inherited either through the mother or the father. In fact, Bella Coola belief on this point closely agrees with modern knowledge of heredity; the term for such as is heritable tendency is ulkulim or ulkumaqlat. Such characteristics are:

(a) Proficiency in using tools;
(b) Ability as a hunter;

1:56:Dawson E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

431 child of a mixed Bella Coola and slave marriage. As long as 527 such an one maintained a position of importance in the com-578 munity by the distribution of presents, nothing was said, but [554] if he should fail to do so, he could be, and frequently was, insulted by having references made to his ancestry. In case of dispute or rivalry it was always a temptation to refer to such a blot, but if he had atoned for it with presents, references were considered improper. Unquestionably, memory of slave 554 ancestry was forgotten in course of time if the line was influ-567 ential, although recollections of the stigma were always cari-ed for at least two or three generations. At the present time the most influential woman in Bella Coola, the one who has given most presents, is the granddaughter of a Smith Inlet slave. This man had lived in Bella Coola for many years and had married another slave, by whom he had a son. The latter became the husband of an influential Raven woman. When she became pregnant, her family secured the liberation of her husband, and gave many presents to "wash the child." One daughter was born to this couple, the woman just mentioned.
Her mother's relations were influential, and her father was [555] such an expert cause-maker that he was able to win an honourable position for his daughter by presents of his handicraft.
The woman, possessed of considerable ability herself, has been able to give many ceremonies and so reach a position of eminence. No one dares insult her by mentioning her ancestry, but everyone knows about it and if her children should fail to hold their position, they would be open to insult on this score.
The woman has validated names and myths derived both from her mother and father, without explaining how the Smith Inlet traditions came to Bella Coola.

To sum up, it may be said that the position of slaves in Bella Coola was not particularly onerous, though it depended entirely on the will of their masters. Without status in the community, a slave could have been abused by a cruel owner, [182] though the public life of the village, where all lived and ate together, tended to break down the unnecessarily enforced differences of rank.

1:McDowalth E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

(a) The strengthening of the donor's seat. 532*

(c) The strengthening, or initial establishment, of seats for a number of young relatives of the donor who may, or may not, be those who are being initiated into the nuxalk society. Other youths may also be established on seats by their relatives. 796

The duration of a potlatch varies with the number of rites being performed. The preliminaries, including the beginning of seclusion for nuxalk initiates, requires at least several weeks, in some cases months. There is further delay of a week or more after the arrival of the first guests, as only when the last party has arrived can the actual potlatch begin. This can then be completed in three days and nights, although if many initiates are performing their nuxalk dances, a longer time is required.

What are the consequences of giving a potlatch?

In the first place the donor spreads the fame of his name far and wide, also the myth with which it is incorporated. Thus he increases the renown of his ancestors, a source of immense pride and gratification. 556*

More important even than this, it elevates the donor himself. With the proper carrying out of the complicated ritual and the knowledge that his name is now known among different tribes, a man experiences a feeling of mental superiority which enables him to take a leading part in the affairs of his community. In Bella Coola a chief (nuhlmq) is a person whose influence is paramount owing to his success in giving potlatches.[1] If several chiefs in one village have given potlatches, he who has given most is generally of greatest importance, although often a man of forceful character who has held, for example, five potlatches will be regarded with greater respect than one of lesser weight, even if he has given six. The whole system is exceedingly fluid, as might be expected where chieftainship depends on individual prowess. In theory, the man who holds the name of the first person to occupy a village, as

[56] 532* 622 [554] [182]

[1] Particularly if he has given four potlatches and can accordingly be described as a nuxalk chief (§ p. 179). In nuxalk songs the ordinary word nhlmmnum is also sometimes employed for "chief."

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

After bestowal of these presents, the siki of the penultimate group of guests shakes his rattle, and exactly the same procedure is carried out by members of his party. They, too, give presents to X and the other Bella Coola chiefs. The same rites are carried out by each party of guests in the reverse order of their arrival. It is frequently near dawn before the first-comers have completed their dances and distribution of gifts. X then gives another meal to all, with no restriction on the choice of food. This concludes the night's ceremony, and the guests depart, except those who are staying in X's house. 556 *

THE POTLATCH: FIRST DAY

Considering the lengthy ceremonials of the preceding evening, it is not surprising that on this day no one stirs early. The guests receive their breakfast in the houses where they are accommodated, and meanwhile a number of young men gather in X's house to assist in the preparation of food for the main meal of the day. During the previous night a large amount of smoked mountain goat has been put in water to soak. This is now placed in a number of food-boxes, ready for distribution, water is added and hot stones lifted in to bring it to a boil. When the water comes to the boil, mountain goat grease is added, and then bearberries; it is usually about two o'clock in the afternoon before the meal is ready. The guests are summoned and the food given them, the chiefs, as usual, receiving more than those of lower rank. After eating they disperse to await the evening rites. [251] [252] [554]

It was impossible to obtain an accurate account of the ritual carried out on the evening of this, the first day of the potlatch proper. The ceremonial was of less importance than those preceding and following, and it has long fallen into disuse. The guests take up their accustomed places, and the Bella Coola members of the nusek range themselves near them and behind the fire. The corners next the door are occupied by non-members of the society. The singers beat out two of [182] 556 * 575 [535]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

use his own discretion as to the design. At the top he always 211 places the bird or animal cloak in which his first ancestor, 556 traced patrilineally, came to this earth. Beneath this is the cloak of his mother's first ancestor if it differs from his father's. 778
There are no fixed rules for other representations. Sometimes 532 a man wishes to display the cloaks of the first ancestors of his wife, or wives; more often, the designs are of creatures with [773] which his own ancestors came in contact after reaching this earth.[4] One of the first settlers, Smaoan (I, p. 332), married a Bella Bella woman from whom he obtained a ceremony connected with a whale, an animal which has often been used on the totem-poles of his descendants. The lower figures on totem-poles often represent creatures from which a recent ancestor of the chief obtained supernatural assistance. Consequently, the number of designs which may be used is legion, and the order of portrayal is immaterial. Moreover, Bella Coola art is not sufficiently realistic for designs to be easily recognized, nor is there standard conventionalization of little used animals; so it follows that the designs on totem-poles are often unidentifiable.[5] This is of little consequence, since their value rests neither upon the artistic skill exhibited, nor even upon their significance in connection with the owner's ancestral myth, but upon the goods expended to validate the display.

All Bella Coola totem-poles are carved from the trunks of [824] huge cedars, with the wood cut away so that the designs stand out in high relief. The carvers are allowed great latitude both [184] in choice of form and colouring, hence there is wide variation

[4]Ontsamlaix is the term applied to animals with which ancestors came in contact, other than their cloaks. [825]

[5]This statement represents the layman's point of view, that is, of the Bella Coola who was not himself a carpenter-sculptor. It is probable that an expert would have greater facility in recognizing the conventionalized forms used by his associates, although the whole pattern of Bella Coola culture was opposed to extreme standardization. Unfortunately, wood-carving, in fact art work of every kind, had degenerated to such an extent that only one man with any recognized skill in that respect was still living when this study was made. He was both unreliable and uncooperative, so that it was impossible even to collect examples of his work, still less to record his interpretations of the designs of masks or other objects carved by his predecessors. [184] [182] [115]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

225 small ocean-going canoe, with an assistant who passed his paddle through the water in such a way that a slight phosphorescent streak resulted. This resembled the course of a salmon. In a short time a seal would rise in pursuit of the "fish," and the watchful hunter would harpoon it. The seal would rush off with the head of the weapon, which was attached by a long line to the shaft remaining in the hunter's hand He would play it like a huge fish, until the exhausted animal was drawn to the side of the canoe and clubbed. Several seals were often obtained by this means in the course of a single night.

224 424 The two usual methods of killing mountain goats are by cornering them with dogs and then choking them to death, or by shooting with rifle or bow. There was formerly a special method of snaring which had been handed down as a prerogative from the time of the first people. The hunter used to set his snares on a precipitous path commonly used by goats and had remarkable success. Others might know how to make snares and where the hunter set them, but no one would ever attempt this method of hunting without the proper prerogative. Another right, enjoyed by another hunter, was the catching of bears in a similar way in nooses.

424 556 182 Little need be said in conclusion about these particular privileges, except to emphasize that they are merely an aspect of the principle of validated prerogatives which permeates every phase of Bella Coola life. It is as natural for a man to be made a singer or a hunter by the distribution of presents as it is for him to acquire a dance by the same means. Each is contained in an ancestral myth, and the validation of the prerogative enables the incumbent either to function actively, or at least to enjoy the social prestige attached to the craftsman who has been duly confirmed in his vocation. The necessity of bestowing gifts to validate a prerogative introduces an economic element to the concept, but this is lessened by the fact that a poor man can acquire a name by a relatively small expenditure though he must forgo the prestige enjoyed by a man who has been able to elevate his professional names in a lavish manner. Selection is a constant factor in the social life of a Bella Coola; the man who uses all his wealth to acquire a firm seat cannot be "strong" in sisaok matters; the man who desires to specialize in kusiut affairs cannot afford to display an elaborate totem-pole. Amid these conflicting desires, it often happens that a man somewhat neglects his professional prerogatives, especially those of which the dignity has been slightly lessened through superior skill shown by individuals endowed with no more than native ability. Upstarts of this kind have always infringed upon professional dignity, and the coming of the white man has added a new factor which has almost destroyed vocational prerogatives.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

424 556 182 [555] [177]

A'alk Dances

The most important, as well as the most spectacular, dances that occur at potlatches are those given by members of the sisaok society. In addition to these, a feature of many potlatches is the performance of a'alk dances.[1] As already mentioned, from 1870 onwards there have been many changes in sisaok ritual; new elements have been acquired by the marriages of Bella Coola to members of the coastal tribes, with the result that details of procedure vary at every ceremony according to the prerogatives of the donor. Since 1910, the influence of white civilization has increased to such an extent that sisaok ceremonials have virtually been abandoned. This took place at a time when the ritual was in transition, a state of affairs which rendered difficult the collection of coherent information. A'alk dances are associated with sisaok, but the addition of new features to the latter was accompanied by a decay of the former. Both societies have now almost ceased to exist, but whereas the sisaok organization was abandoned during a period of change and accretion, that

177 535 575 [184] [796] [128]

[1] Called s'alpow in Kitamaat.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 performance of rites of this kind. But sociological and ethical [182] concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year, or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly [577] displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a 576 major sin. Anyone who happens to pass a house in which a meal is taking place must be invited to share it; to do other-574 wise would be considered rude. The person summoned must take at least a trifle to show that he is not churlish and too proud to eat with his host, while if he is hungry, he shares [177] whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of [273] the family should be the first to taste any wine[14] as proof that [342] it is not poisoned, but otherwise he fares little, if any, better [414] than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse through the construction of individual family houses with doors 476 and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suitable place for netting olachen or salmon must give some of his [226] catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, the first solicitor is given one, later comers, none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing is allowed to raise it and take some of the contents; if there are two fish, he may [685] remove one, if many, three or four. To take all would be a [626] despicable theft, sufficient to brand the transgressor as greedy;
[224] hence public opinion prevents the system from being carried to excess. A hunter who brings back several mountain goats or other large game is expected to invite his neighbours to a feast, which virtually means that he must share his takings.

556 Presents of this kind increase the prestige of the donor who 431 has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are advantageous investments since others must reciprocate. The system is carried to such lengths that, until recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavours to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift returns as much as [14] This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of home-brew.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

ceremony. The child singers first beat out the song of the present donor, then that of his predecessor, to which the latter dances once again. If food is plentiful, nuxixkämx ceremonies may be carried out every day for several weeks, or a year or two may elapse without one. A child's song is remembered from year to year and he dances whenever it is beaten out. The name acquired in this way is used semi-jocularly by a lad's comrades. After marriage, it is considered unfitting for a youth to be concerned with nuxixkämx and he normally becomes an a'alt.

852 867 [796] [533] [535] [551] [885]

Ceremonies of this kind have been discontinued for many years and it was impossible to obtain detailed accounts. The main features are clear: they served to instruct children in the methods of present-giving. According to one informant, there were two types of nuxixkämx ceremonial one of the humorous pattern above described in which, however, food alone was given away, and another in which miniature presents were distributed. This man believed that the latter was only possible for the children of wealthy chiefs, and that on such occasions the themes consisted of small incidents in the family myth. In either case, the importance of ceremonial can be judged from the manner in which it was impressed upon mere children.

[182] [556]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

585 covering" or "rope fastening" for her. Within a few days or weeks, they must invite their fellow-villagers to a ceremony of some kind. If it is winter this can be a sisaok dance, but in summer it must be a non-sacred affair. Y's father and other relatives attend, furnished with the usual gifts. When the ceremony is over and the time has come for the distribution of presents, a herald calls out that X has no seat. If he has already been established in one he calls out that it is not firm.[7] Y at once brings forward some of the goods provided by her relatives, and places these with the goods which X's family received at the wedding and are about to give away. The whole is then divided among the guests, together with presents provided by X for Y's relatives. The actual purpose of the rite may be to obtain names for some of X's young relatives or to establish seats for them: it is immaterial to Y's people to what end they are applied. Within recent years this [182] has sometimes taken place at a kusiut dance, but such overlapping between the two types of ceremonial is probably an innovation due to decay.

177 About 1910 an effort was made to introduce a marriage 585 custom of the Kwakiutl. According to the Bella Coola, among them the wife gives to her husband's relatives one or more boards studded with teeth of the sea-otter. This makes teeth for the bride, so that if she ever quarrels with another woman she can draw back her lips and shame her rival by saying:

"What can you do? You have no teeth, while I have two sets," or as many boards as have been given at her marriage.

[563] The grandson of a Fort Rupert Kwakiutl, living in Bella Coola and considered a member of the tribe, owned one of these boards and used it at the marriage of his daughter in 1914. It was first given to the mother of the bridegroom, and repurchased with a copper; then given to the bridegroom, and redeemed; finally given, and again repurchased, from the father of the groom. The woman for whom this was done can

[7] The preferred time for this establishment is during a potlatch and the ritual connected with it has already been described (I, p. 167).

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 repurchase of your mother have become nothing beneath your 583 feet."

When such an accident occurs, the relatives of X take some [558] future occasion to give presents to validate his child, with the announcement:

"The goods used from the repurchase of his mother have become nothing beneath his feet. We hereby supply that deficiency."

Thus it is demonstrated that the relatives of both parents are interested in his welfare, so that his path is clear before him.

553 Many women are only repurchased once, but an effort is 556 made to do this frequently since the more times, the greater 583 her prestige. After several repurchasings it is felt that the names and other prerogatives "dragged across" by Y have become valueless. But since new names have been taken to her husband on each occasion, the marks of friendship between the two families are still plain. Then it is that those first transmitted can be revived by relatives of Y, unless, of course, X has validated them for his children. If there is only one repurchasing, the names remain the definite property of X. This is not a clearly formulated law, merely a sentiment that the earlier names have been covered by those later given, and that accordingly Y's relatives, having done what was proper, can now use the titles once more. There is a constant interchange of names and privileges between families related by marriage.

556 It is virtually impossible to over-estimate the importance 583 of this rite of repurchase among the Bella Coola, one of the few customs preserved tenaciously amid the ruins of their [182] ancient culture. The writer was forcibly struck with the following instance which occurred while he was in Bella Coola:

About fifteen years before, a young man and woman had married with due formality. After three children had been [586] born, the mother took to drink and vice until her husband at last repudiated her, retaining possession of the children. The woman, weakened by disease, divorced by her husband, and

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER VIII

DEATH

Death Rites—Memorial Rites—Fate of the Dead

Death Rites

DEATH is marked by even more complicated and prolonged rites than marriage. Like so many primitive peoples, the Bella Coola not only carry out elaborate rituals soon after the actual decease, but hold lengthy commemorative and mourning ceremonials in later years. As these require the co-operation of a large number of people, the death of an individual affects a wider circle than his own relatives, and the celebrations have, therefore, an important social as well as religious significance. 76 796 [182]

OMENS OF DEATH

It is not surprising that the Bella Coola, believing in the omnipresence of the supernatural, should consider various peculiar occurrences to be omens of death. One of the simplest of these is to hear the falling of a tree when there is neither wind nor other reason to account for it. Such a fall is audible only to the person whom it warns of approaching death, either to himself or to one of his relatives. A number of men may be in the forest together, when one of them hears the crash of a tree and notices that his companions are unaware of it; he realizes that this is an omen and protects himself by calling out: 763

"Let this evil react against whoever has been plotting evil against me."

The basis of this custom is the belief that someone has been practising black magic against the hearer, who, by this answer, is able to cause the sorcery to recoil upon the malefactor. Even more dangerous than to hear a falling tree, is to have one crash [954] [824]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 769 a man and assuage his sorrow to know that he has shown fitting respect to the dead, there is also a gain in social prestige. As the whole community respects, admires, and sometimes envies a man for having carried out a memorial potlatch, there is no doubt that he is pleased and gratified to such an extent that his grief is dulled. These two factors must constantly be kept in mind; memorial potlatches serve to commemorate the dead, but in so doing they add to the social importance of the donors. The two combine to bring considerable comfort to the chief who has lost a dear relative. In some cases the social prestige is the real motive, the grief assumed and unimportant; but in others the latter is the only factor that matters, and a chief is entirely oblivious to any increase in his own status. In most memorial potlatches, both feelings are present in the mind of the donor, and both are gratified.

DETAILED ACCOUNT OF A FUNERAL

764 114 In the preceding pages, an attempt has been made to describe the traditional death rites of the Bella Coola. The following section comprises a detailed account of funeral ceremonies witnessed in 1922. The contrast between these and the ones already recorded, will indicate some of the changes [178] in custom which are of such importance in studies of cultural growth or decline. The following description will also serve [182] to demonstrate a point repeatedly mentioned, the manner in [57] which business transactions and arrangements of all kinds take place whenever the people have been called together.

[123] On June 27, 1922, the death occurred in Bella Coola of Jessie, Mrs. Samuel King, daughter of Captain Schooner. The latter, now deceased, was one of the writer's most trusted friends, and as a result of this friendship it was possible not only to attend the actual rites, but to ascertain much of the feeling underlying them. This advantage had its drawbacks, since it was manifestly impossible to question either the father or the husband of the woman too closely. The details will be de-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

777 A visitation is not regarded as an inheritable right, but as a
* 787 tendency; for generations no member of a family may see one [424] of these beasts, but the tradition is preserved, and when one is seen it is recalled that such have been observed by ancestors of the fortunate one. Instances have occurred in which a person has obtained good luck without the tradition of this being in his family, but they are rare. On the other hand, a man may lose the advantage of his possession, even if he owns [785] a portion of a mätqas or a sisiutl, through failure to observe ceremonial chastity.

776 Some of the Bella Coola believe that the mätqas and the sisiutl are the same animal, which can assume these two forms; others that the two are distinct supernatural creatures. In any case the powers and characteristics ascribed to them are the same. Most families have a tradition regarding the appear-
[173] ance of the one or the other to their ancestors, and the infor-[184] mation to be derived from them is always about that particular creature. Hence the details here described are probably not all known to any one individual.

* 789 The different types of appearances, and the different types 811 of taboos called forth, should be noted. These are due to ●182 failure on the part of the Bella Coola to rationalize the sum total of their concepts. Each man recounts what he believes to have happened to one of his ancestors or friends, irrespective of whether or not the methods used may be in direct contradiction to those employed by someone else on another occasion. A man who has heard of the mätqas, for example, from his father and mother, may describe contradictory modes of dealing with the creature, and in each case may affirm that disaster would have followed if the method described had not been carried out. Such lack of co-ordination is typical of the Bella Coola.

777 According to an elderly Kimsquit man, the mätqas was
* 789 brought down in the beginning of time by one of his own [773] ancestors, Omqemkikla. It is to this fact that he attributes his own near approach to one on two occasions. As it is fre

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

784 * 575 * 796 [787] sticks, while everyone calls out, hoip. This is repeated four times. The sticks continue to sound irregularly as the younger men pull the enclosure to pieces and throw it on the central fire. By these means the kukusiut have been freed from their contact with the supernatural and, perhaps even more important, the repositories have been "tied up," to use the native term, for another year. Those members of the society whose dances have taken place in the house now wash the black from their faces and all share a light meal. The marshals take this last opportunity of addressing their fellows, impressing on them the necessity of maintaining the secrecy of the rites during the summer season. Above all, they warn them to hide the whistles and other paraphernalia most carefully. This concludes the season's ceremony in the house in question; some of the kukusiut withdraw, others remain, and the uninitiated are free to enter and take up the old threads of family life, as it was before the coming of the first call.

If it is not too late at night the party may move to a second house and remove the taboo from it in the same way. More often this is done on the following night, when a second body of kukusiut are allowed to wash. Another house is visited on the next evening, and so on in succession till all the enclosures are burnt and the only visible mark of what has happened is the collar of dyed cedar-bark worn by each novice.

[424] There may be certain prerogatives connected with this finale which could not be learnt owing to its discontinuance for many years. In fact, one old woman claimed to have a definite right to sing at the destruction of the enclosures, but it was unfortunately impossible to investigate the matter.

Concluding Observations and History

* 575 * 796 ●182 571 It is virtually impossible to overestimate the importance of the sociological aspects of the society. During the ceremonial season the whole fabric of social life is altered; families are divided, parents and children being separated in many cases though an infant in arms, though uninitiated, can be brought to dances by its mother; distinctions between rich and poor, slave and freeman, become of slight importance; all that really matters is whether a person is or is not a kusiut. Membership in the society seems to the uninitiated the most desirable thing in life, although their fears are always so strong that they never cease to dread actual admission. The feeling of class consciousness which exists in a somewhat mild form at other seasons of the year, gives place to a powerful sentiment of superiority on the part of members of the society over those who are not so fortunate. Even the respect normally shown to chiefs is submerged since they, too, are subject to the rule of the marshals.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* 182● 571 [781]

Apart entirely from this attitude of superiority and inferiority, is the bond of fellowship engendered among members of the society by the rites. Whatever happens, the uninitiated must be deceived. Moreover, the psychological effect of gathering nightly in a body for a specific purpose is tremendous. Night after night they eat together; night after night they listen to the words of the marshals, who impress on them the need for co-operation and secrecy, who hold before them the good example set by their fellows who have carried out rites successfully, who emphasize the fact that they are doing as their fathers did. The ceremonial import is of greatest consequence at all these gatherings, but when the uninitiated have withdrawn the kukusiut relax somewhat and enjoy themselves. The food itself is always of the best and some of the usual restrictions are removed. It is, for example, the only time that women are allowed to eat the flesh of seals. If this delicacy is provided the marshals enjoy the tidbits, but after Cannibals, novices, and others have received preferential treatment, the remainder is distributed to all and sundry.

[262] 562 [264]

It has been stated by some writers, especially those unfamiliar with the significance of native ceremonial life, that the dances of the coastal tribes are orgies of immorality. This point was investigated with care and it may be stated posi-

575* 796* 577 293 834

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

177 fathers. Inherited beliefs are too deep-rooted to pass away 771 entirely within a few generations. Even those who claim to have adopted the new faith remain convinced of the potency [181] of magic, and of the existence of those supernatural creatures which do not actively conflict with the white man's creed. Such lack of consistency is a world-wide trait, particularly intelligible among the Bella Coola whose philosophy abounds in contradictions, dependent upon statements handed down in the origin myths of different families.

626 The Bella Coola are constrained not only by the omnipresence of supernatural beings; they are constantly subjected [181] to the influence of their fellows. They are far less individualistic than white people. A chief may boast that he can do as [622] he pleases, that he can disregard the restrictions of lesser men; he often does so, but only because public opinion recognizes that he has reached a position of eminence by giving many potlatches. The duly validated warrior is brave because he
[703] feels that everyone is aware of his valour. The man who per-[769] forms some ceremony in accordance with an ancestral myth incorporates himself with his forbears, and is strengthened by the conviction that he has gained their support and approbation. In every phase of life, a person is profoundly affected
177 by the approval or disapproval of his neighbours. At present
626 the construction of small houses, each occupied by a single 942 family, makes it possible for a man to hide himself, or to do work unknown to the rest of the community. This lessens the force of public opinion, although it is even now more potent than conscience in checking anti-social acts. Formerly, in communal houses, every action was fully known, making individual freedom of thought and act virtually impossible. A man [602] is chiefly influenced by his relatives who take a great share in what the white man would consider purely family affairs. The effect of the group upon the individual must not be overlooked, nor can it be over-stressed in a study of these people.

177 The education and conversion of the younger men have 626 enormously lessened their reliance upon their fellows. In former • 182
561

2;McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

times, older relatives were revered, not only as senior members 177
of the ancestral family, but as those most familiar with myths 626 and other cherished possessions. With the spread of new ideas, 182
the young people no longer respect the lore of their elders, and consequently do not heed their admonitions and advice. Theo- 561 retically, such self-reliance would seem desirable, but in practice it has led to unfortunate results. A young man, considering himself superior to the older people, glories in acting on his own initiative, but too often he lacks the requisite strength of character to guide his own life. If he wishes to drink, he does so; if he desires to marry, he chooses his mate without con- [581] sidering the transmission of ancestral rights which stabilized unions in former times; if he tires of his wife, he deserts her for another; if he cheats or steals, he is no longer restrained by relatives who fear disgrace. The elders, incapable of stemming the tide, watch sadly and ask seriously whether the coming of the white man has brought compensation for the loss it has caused. It is deplorable that the emancipation of the younger men and women has taken place before the development of the sense of individual responsibility and conscience which public opinion formerly rendered less necessary. Christianity provides a moral code for those who are fully converted, but for the many in the transition stage, the break-down of the old system of family influence has been tragic.

Profound religious beliefs and lack of individual initiative 181
are shared by all Bella Coola with the exception, perhaps, of a 177 few of the younger people who, having been educated at white man's schools, have adopted the new outlook unconditionally. In most characteristics they display as wide variability as any 577 other people. In truthfulness, for example, they range from 124 one extreme to the other. As the writer became familiar with the older men, he found it possible to recognize without difficulty the strength of some and the weakness of others. There are liars, but they can be easily detected owing to their lack of finesse. It is a pleasure to record the reliability of the author's friends and informants. Their veracity was checked repeat-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

group. The moral code is not concerned with animals. The 000 life of the Bella Coola would be unbearable to most white 522 people, yet they find it far from unpleasant. They sigh at present conditions, but there is much to amuse them notwithstanding. If several people are talking together, one is sure to hear bursts of laughter every few minutes. It takes little to interest them; a story they have heard a hundred times, the troubles of a neighbour with his wife, the eccentricity of a white man, the stupidity of the investigator, any of these is enough to cause a hearty laugh. When collecting information, [124] it was constantly necessary to joke with them; the most feeble witticism was enough, but they lost interest in the work unless kept smiling. Their sense of humour is not refined; jests [831] about sexual matters are common and are enjoyed alike by men, women, and children. It is not that their tastes are perverted, but rather that they have no reticence in discussing this topic, so they find it easy to see the ludicrous aspects of a subject which is ever near the surface in their minds. They have no hesitation in poking fun at their friends; a successful practical joke, such as hiding the writer's tobacco, is enough to fill them with amusement. If the victim shows temporary resentment, the glee of his friends is complete, and shrieks of laughter usually terminate the trick.

Unless the white man who comes to live among the Bella 105
Coola is unusually broad-minded, he is at first repelled by the 182 dirt and untidiness prevailing everywhere; even the people themselves seem unnatural. He finds it difficult to realize the sincerity of their religious beliefs, and the manner in which these influence their daily lives is hard to grasp. The potlatch system appears so grotesque that it seems to reflect a psychology diametrically opposed to his own. The force of public [626] opinion on personal conduct is almost incomprehensible. Gradually, however, he begins to understand the reasons underlying Bella Coola life. The potlatch becomes intelligible when regarded as a means of achieving fame; constant attention to supernatural beings is natural considering the firm conviction

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

105 of their omnipresence; the guiding force of public opinion is 182 seen as a check on individual licence, fostered or inculcated by [626] the ties which hold together ancestral families and make it impossible for a man to lead an isolated life where others will not be affected by his actions. If the white man is willing to receive new ideas, he will learn much from the comments of the Bella Coola on his own customs. Many have been to [556] Victoria or Vancouver, and they feel that the contrasts of wealth observable in such big cities are atrocious; they ask [602] how this is compatible with Christianity. They feel that it is unnatural for a man not to receive support from his cousins of [556] all degrees; that the hoarding of wealth for the mere gratification of personal desires is selfish; that the selling of land is extraordinary; and that failure to ascribe every incident to supernatural causes is sacrilegious. These differences of viewpoint on so many matters explain the first impression of strangeness. A careful investigator comes to realize that he is among a people who fundamentally differ but slightly from his compatriots, though outwardly they have little in common. With respect to love, ambition, parental affection, sense of honour, pride, intelligence, even humour and vanity, the Bella Coola are essentially similar to ourselves. Unfortunately, these characteristics are expressed in ways unintelligible and often repellant to the casual traveller. If he will only look beneath the surface, he will find a people who are neither saints nor sinners, but essentially human, with the faults and follies as well as the elements of strength and wisdom which comprise, as Kipling puts it, "Men in a world of men."

177 The coming of the white civilization has been cataclysmic [161] to the Bella Coola. Within two generations they have been [36] reduced to a mere handful; instead of living in scattered villages, roaming the mountains for game and fishing at will, they now dwell in a single settlement and the taking of animals and fish is subject to law; the introduction of metal tools and mechanical appliances has revolutionized their mode of life; new foods, new clothing, new furniture has altered their living conditions; fermented drink has presented a factor unknown to their forefathers. Profound as these material changes have been, those of a psychological nature have been even more important. New worlds have been thrown open to them, stimulating ideas have been brought to their attention, and they have realized for the first time that the world is infinitely larger than they had imagined. Hand in hand with this extension of knowledge has gone disbelief in their own ancient lore. The white man, whose superiority and mechanical skill they admit, positively denies the actuality of their mythology, and laughs at the dramatic performances which were wont to fill the winter with engrossing interest. Such rites can flourish only in an attitude of profound belief; this has been so shaken that the dances continue listlessly, a mere shadow of a once living art. The young people were the first to embrace a scepticism that has rapidly grown into disbelief of the faith of their ancestors, and a half-concealed scorn for their elders, the upholders of the old customs. Worse of all, prohibition of the potlatch has made it impossible for a man to reach a position of social eminence. Moreover, since the holding of any rank of ceremonial requires a distribution of gifts, formal gatherings of all kinds have become virtually impossible; even marriages have no longer the social support that formerly made them so lasting.

These cumulative blows would be enough to shake any civilization, and that of the Bella Coola has been entirely unable to adjust itself to the new conditions. The young people, having lost respect for their elders, are deprived of the advice and support essential to the continuity of culture. They ape the white man's dress; they want his mechanical devices, but have failed to assimilate them. For example, a gramophone in a Bella Coola house is an anachronism, while several similar articles spoil the old pictures but do not provide a new one. Seeking to copy the new ways thrown open to them, they have achieved the outward show but not the substance, and in so doing have discovered their own culture. In the old days they were ambitious to hold potlatches and willing to work steadily towards that goal; now, new desires have not kept pace with their earning ability and a man can satisfy his wants by working for a few months each summer. The decline of ceremonials has left a blank in their lives, too easily filled, alas, with drinking, idleness, and vice. It is inevitable that the old ways and old traditions should pass, but the prohibition of those before new ones had taken their place, has been disastrous. The Bella Coola have lost their pride, a calamity as fatal to a people as to an individual.

They have shown undoubted ability in developing each of their new talents to fit the needs and requirements of the white man. Taken captives for generations, they have readily learnt the use of new tools and new build houses and boats of considerable constructional skill. They have proved themselves valuable employees of the canneries which rely to a large extent upon Indian labour. Under instruction from a white teacher, a number of the younger men have formed a band which gives creditable performances with wind and percussion instruments. One can only deplore the fact that the skill of the Bella Coola in carving, painting, acting, singing, composing, and story-telling could not have been guided into channels where it would have developed and added honor to the new world in which they find themselves.

The white man's civilization passes forward as an ever-widening flood, blotting out the cultures of lower peoples in all parts of the world. This is inevitable, probably it is well that it should be so, but it offers little consolation to a tribe like the Bella Coola. Their life has been destroyed, and, wonderingly, half-gently, half-ghastlily, the survivors watch the downfall of all that their ancestors cherished. Too often the white man fails to understand this, too often he fails to realize that primitive, as he sees it, is wiping out valuable elements of civilizations other than his own instead of adding the good to them and preserving it for the benefit of himself and the native alike. The Bella Coola culture is dying, and with it will pass forever something created by a Canadian people, not great perhaps, but indelibly stamped with their personality.

[illegible]

STRING FIGURES

The only form of pastime which it was practical to investigate in any detail was the construction of string figures. These seem to have no economical or religious significance, they are made for recreation only, and it was found easy to learn a number while passing the time for other kinds of research. In fact, interest in them was one of the ways in which the writer became friends with a number of Bella Coola. As is to be expected, some individuals are more proficient in constructing complicated string figures than others, the old women being particularly adept. During the long idleness which occurs in all the dances is a common sight to see an old woman teaching a group of young girls the figures which she herself learnt when young. Some men remember a number from childhood, but the making of designs with string is regarded as more fitting for girls and women. Songs accompany many of the figures, and the singing of these is considered an essential part of the construction. It was noted that many more figures were known long ago; in fact, several of those here recorded were only obtained after repeated efforts on the part of an old woman to reconstruct those which she had been shown when a child. No attempt has made to learn all the Bella Coola figures, a larger number could doubtless have been collected, but those here described are the ones most commonly made.

The nomenclature used is that described by Miss Haddon[1] in itself following the method used by Rivers and Haddon. It will be assumed that the reader is familiar with this, including the meaning of the terms, "Opening A," "Position II," and "Movable." A string about two feet long will be found most convenient for making the Bella Coola figures.

1. A [illegible]

Double the loop, two straight sticks take the place of the usual one, but these will be referred to as a single string or loop. The figure can be made equally well with a string one-half the usual length.

Place string as a single loop over left thumb and index finger and the right hand.

With right index finger hook down the string passing directly across left thumb and index finger and draw out to right, allowing right hand loop to slip over the hooked-down string.

[1] M. Haddon, Int., Studies from Miss Cam. Expedition, 1912.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] mother, but that it had not the right to use the [illegible] property of both parents. It seems to my mind that the former method was [illegible] rather the existing social conditions, and that to the [illegible] to the development of an endogamic system among the Bella Coola. The [illegible] of endogamic marriage among the tribe is [illegible] the coast. All the other tribes have exogamic institutions, and in the most primitive their property rights. It is interesting to note that the moieties [illegible], who originally seem to have been organized in village communities, [illegible] exogamic institutions; but there is a [illegible] difference in the organization of the village community, between the Bella Coola and the Kwakiutl. Among the Bella Coola we generally find [illegible] village—usually three men and one woman. It [illegible] are generally called brothers and sisters, but they are [illegible] independently by birth, and are therefore not necessarily considered as blood relatives. Among the Kwakiutl the village community are considered the descendants of one [illegible] being; consequently, among the latter tribe they are all relatives, and of definite to inheritance; while among the Bella Coola they are not relatives, and are inheritors.

It seems to me probable, that the various social system of the Bella Coola developed through the influence of the customs of the Coast tribes upon the [illegible] of the Salish village community. The possession of the [illegible] was not to a great advantage, and consequently the [illegible] developed in power and tradition. These were acquired partly by intermarriage with the Coast tribes, as is shown by the fact that many of these traditions are borrowed from these tribes, partly by independent invention. The [illegible] to guard by traditions which were once acquired led to the development of exogamic institutions, in order to prevent the spread of the traditions over the Coast tribe.

The [illegible] that the traditions are guarded has had the effect of making each family [illegible] to prevent other families from knowing to one [illegible] traditions of the whole tribe are [illegible]. We find, for instance, that the [illegible] Coast tribes has been utilized by many families [illegible] as with one family [illegible] of the traditions, [illegible] parts of the same tradition. Thus it happens that among the Bella Coola [illegible] that the most contradictory myths in regard to [illegible] family's history. Some families assume that the Bella Coola [illegible] the sea-wolf, according to another one, the Mink was [illegible] the present sons of chiefs. Still others say that [illegible] the sea-wolf, would be one to appear. The discrepancies in the traditions relating to the rank of the Mink and Wing in their father [illegible] considerable. Although a considerable amount of

1:46:Swanton E-5 (1902-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

[225] [773] [774] [775] [411] [774] [262] [185]

to the land above whence, in course of time, it comes down to earth again to reanimate a new body.[*] Consequently, the success of a hunter does not indicate his mastery over an animal so much as the latter's good-will in allowing itself to be slain by one who has pleased him by ceremonial chastity (I, p. 110), or by one who has been endowed with skill by some other supernatural being. Men are accordingly careful to obey the wishes of their quarry. Long ago, a mountain goat told a shaman that he and his friends liked soot, so a hunter who has killed one always smears two bands of soot across its face from the right eye to the left side of the mouth. Another shaman was told by a bear never to use owl-feathered arrows since none of his fellows killed with such would return. Plumes of other birds have since been used, probably those of mallard ducks. Sometimes the wishes of an animal require considerable ritual. For example, when a bear is killed, the carcass is stretched upon newly arranged evergreen boughs and skinned. The hunter reverses the pelt so that the tail lies near the neck, with the whole hanging loosely over the body. He pats it four times, as if pressing the skin back into place, and says:

"Please don't linger. Go home and return," or,

"Please come to me tomorrow. Tell your brothers, your sisters, your uncles, your aunts and your other relations to come to me."

Should this be omitted, the animal is likely to stand up, shiver, shake itself, causing the pelt to return to its place, and run away. Yearling mountain goats are especially prone to do this, as already mentioned. Even if an animal does not show its resentment by escaping in this way, it often refuses to return to earth unless the proper rites have been performed over its carcass.

Bears have another aversion: they do not like to be seen by men. So the hunter leaves the skinned body for wolves

[*] There are doubters in Bella Coola as in every other community, and several of the older men express disbelief in the immortality of animals.

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

773 ago the tide came further up the rivers than at present and did [123] not recede so far. This statement was made by an intelligent old man who said that the change had taken place during his own life-time.

773 One of Raven's most important alterations to Alpaxém's [133] intentions was with regard to the sexual act.

> In the beginning of time, the organs of women were on the forehead, those of men on the palm of the hand, and intercourse was effected by a man rubbing his hand across a woman's brow. Raven found that children would not result from this practice and accordingly altered the organs of both sexes to their present positions. In order to teach mankind the sexual act he then chose a woman and held intercourse with her, telling her that if the practice were carried out secretly and vigorously a child would be born. And nine months later the woman gave birth to an infant. Raven told the first inhabitants of the world that he wished them to have issue; they consequently held intercourse frequently and began many children until their descendants filled the Bella Coola valley.

The attitude of the Bella Coola towards this story is identical with their beliefs concerning Raven as the cause of death.

"Yes," they say, as they repeat the above story in answer to a question, "Raven taught our ancestors how to have children."

773 One side of their nature implicitly believes any story handed ● [195] down from the distant past, but few today are sufficiently naive actually to credit it. The more sophisticated frankly disbelieve, or pretend to do so. Doubts also arose with regard to [124] Raven as originator of linguistic differences. The Bella Coola state that Alpaxém intended only one language for the whole world, but Raven thought that this would lead to conflict and used his power to teach the ancestors of every tribe their special speech.

Many inventions and beliefs are attributed to Raven without any accompanying myth. It is said that almost all geo-
[103] graphical names are thus bestowed by him as places reached in his travels. It was Raven who taught men how to bait [224] hooks so long from to catch black cod; it was Raven who first

1:McDowalk E-1 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

554
556 *
[183]

ceed by the age-long power of his ancestor. Finally, in old age a powerful chief is careless where he seats himself; his fame is so great that he can afford to disregard all conventions.

POWER OF CHIEFS

It will be seen from the foregoing that chieftainship among the Bella Coola does not depend on hereditary rank, still less on an elective principle, but on the individual's prestige as displayed, especially in his ability to acquire for himself a first seat by the giving of presents. As he continues to do so his influence becomes ever greater. Consequently, it is impossible to state clearly what are the powers of a chief; such depend upon his prestige and influence. For a Bella Coola chief has no executive or judicial authority; what deference is shown to him depends on his success as a man, a factor which is constantly rising or falling.

The coming of the white man has enabled the Bella Coola to earn comparatively large sums of money by trapping and fishing. This in turn has enabled nearly everyone to give at least one potlatch, a very different sort of affair from that which prevailed in the last century when it required years of toil for a man to amass the necessary food and skins. Consequently, in many towns there were no men who had given potlatches, so that a man's prestige was estimated by the presents he had given at smaller ceremonies. Sometimes, moreover, a man preferred to increase his fame by giving items of a different nature, such as factor dances, and the presents thus distributed might elevate him in the eyes of the community, to a position above that of a man who had given a potlatch. This, however, was unusual.

After a fourth potlatch a man is accorded a position of eminence, and is termed a nemit chief. Nemit is an untranslatable word, with the significance of "prestige," an allusion to the amount of goods which have passed through his hands. Jealous and vulgar-minded persons pun on the word, applying

1:56 Seventh E-5 (922-1524)948
NE5 Bilacoola NE5

present, and the fame of the initiate is thereby carried farther afield than would be possible if only Bella Coola were in attendance. Every individual duly included and given a nuxit name finds himself commonly allied with others who have had a similar experience, and they form a grouping which may be termed the nuxit secret society. 553 556* 575

The close connection between this society and chiefs is obvious from the presence of names of both type in the same ancestral myths. Name the less, every chief, that is a person with duly validated ancestral name and cat, is not a nuxit, unless he has validated a nuxit name for himself and undergone the period of seclusion. Commonly, man may be a duly authorized member of the nuxit society, lacking a seat and the other marks of chieftainship. The relationship is, however, so close that the Bella Coola think of the nuxit society as a society of chiefs. Nuxit dances take place at potlatches and funerals, and occasionally at gatherings of less importance. Difficulties arise at the death of a chief who has failed to use some of his goods for the acquisition of a nuxit name. Such a case took place at the death of an important Bella Coola in the summer of 1915. Theoretically, he is ignorant of nuxit rites, but after much discussion there was used on account of his importance as a nuxit chief, an instance of the manner in which a man's personal importance overrides ceremonial decorum. 575 622 [553] [535] [766] [188]

The Bella Coola believe that only some of their nuxit name-groupings came to this earth at the beginning of time with their first ancestors, and that many more have been acquired here by supernatural experiences. These were especially common among their forbears as they spread over this earth making places to settle in the beginning of time. No nuxit name can be assumed casually; each must have had a specific origin. There are few nuxit origin myths, though theoretically there should be one to account for every name. The explanation appears to lie in the well-known fact that many nuxit groupings have been acquired comparatively recently 424 551 575 773 [77]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 example, there is a description of his totem-pole with a ball
556 at the top, and beneath it an eagle's nest containing two fledg-
798 lings towards which a grizzly bear is endeavouring to climb.
532 This is the only known instance of a pole on which the different figures stand in definite relationship to one another. No explanation is offered beyond the statement that this was the form used by Alkwi in the beginning of time. Another ancient pole, used by one of the ancestral families of Sneed, consists of [778] a simple shaft surmounted by a sphere; this represents a mountain which enters into their ancestral myth as supporting the sky.

As with all features embodied in ancestral myths, a chief can use his own discretion in cases where he has a choice of design. A totem-pole with specific figures is a common pre-[431] sent from a chief to his son-in-law, and it is a mark of respect [622] for the latter to use and validate this at the first opportunity, [606] in preference to one belonging to his own ancestral family. Since the pole erected at a potlatch may have no association with the ancestral name and myth of the donor, the underlying principle in all cases is that the value of the pole depends upon the quantity of gifts distributed to validate its erection. One man mentioned an instance in which he had become confused with regard to the proper design for the totem-pole connected with his ancestral myth, and had used one belonging to a second myth in association with a name from the first. Both were his property, the transaction was duly validated, and the matter passed off without question. It is possible that the [183] decay of custom which has followed the coming of the white man may have been partly responsible for this error, which was regarded as a somewhat stupid, though not improper mistake; yet it is clear that even when designs are remembered as portions of ancestral myths, they can be alienated from them and validated as isolated objects in the same manner as names and all other features of ancestral myths.

More often, the exact details of a pole are not included in the ancestral myth and a chief wishing to have one erected can

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

435 owner with a statement of its history and the amount expended
437 on it. The purchase of a copper is, therefore, a good business
*556 transaction, and it might be assumed that a chief with keen commercial instinct would endeavour to acquire as many as [171] possible. This is said to be the case in Fort Rupert, but in [182] Bella Coola public opinion is averse to the obtaining of coppers unless for use at potlatches. As every ambitious chief hopes to give potlatches, he can always claim that the acquisition of a copper is for this end, and that the sale of it is from a kindly desire to assist a fellow-chief who is nearer the desired goal than he himself. Consequently, the sale of coppers is tolerably common, and a chief is not considered to be mercenary unless he sells too frequently.

426 The intending donor of a potlatch can now proceed to the *556 ceremony, secure in the possession of a copper worthy to be thrown on the fire after the passage of his deceased relative. In addition, he may own another copper of too small value for this purpose. As described in the last chapter, he repeatedly calls together the inhabitants of his own village to sing which he validates by the distribution of presents, and at which he also gives away investment presents. He may decide to use his second copper for this purpose. All investment presents, [558] which are given only to men of standing in the community, must be repaid with interest unless the recipient is willing to decline in popular estimation; but when a gift of this kind consists of a copper, a return of 100 per cent is expected on the transaction. Borrowal of a copper in such circumstances is not spoken of as an investment present, ddimbuxnim, but as dwanq', which has the definite significance of something that must be returned with 100 per cent interest. If the value of the copper were $25 before this borrowal, it is now $50, since the new owner must repay this amount to the chief planning to give the potlatch. The new owner can use the copper in any way he desires; if he repays a previous indebtedness, he cancels $50 by giving it; whereas if he borrows it as dwanq', announcement is made that its value is $50, and he expects to

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NES Bellacoola NES

424
767
463 quit. Details of this prerogative were not obtainable, but it seems to follow the general type.

THE PROFESSION OF FIRST BERRY PICKER

All women can pick berries, but in every village there is at least one who has the prerogative of picking the first of every kind. The origin of this right is lost in dim antiquity, but, like all others, each first berry picker has a special professional name embedded in her ancestral myth which must be duly validated before she can function. One of these is Sôwawatsimôx-a, another is Ła'ya. Though normally reserved for women, one of these names is occasionally given to a male child, in which case it is said to have been hermaphroditized. No one would dare to pick berries until the legal picker has paraded up and down the sidewalk carrying on her back her picking basket decorated with a representation of the sun, an act which is believed to ripen the berries.

202
424
[463]
[551]
[522]
[532]
[189]

"Get ready to pick red chlorberries for whatever species is ripe! tomorrow," she keeps calling out.

The berries may then be picked by anyone. This is repeated for every variety. As far as could be learnt, there was no social mechanism to punish a woman who picked berries before the announcement of the official picker; obedience seems to have been so universal that infractions are said to have been unknown though formerly there may have been some penalty of which even the memory has disappeared.

[488]
[183]

THE PROFESSION OF WARRIOR

The profession of warrior is another prerogative handed down from the distant past and requiring validation before it can be used. As with other rights of this type, magical means are in many cases employed to make any young man brave and successful, but there are a number of warriors conferred as such by the distribution of presents at the time of bestowal or then of professional names. At the present time, it is

[761]
[424]
[463] [431]
[551]

1:McDowalk E-5 (1922-1924)1943
NEX Bella:coola NEX

provided with means of sustenance, a house, and certain supernatural powers. The rights to the names of these people, as well as to the type of ceremonial objects used by them, has been the privilege of their descendants. But these early Bella Coola, like their modern descendants, had several designations, each carrying with it a definite prerogative. In a single myth there may be embodied a dance or more names and incidents which are quoted at the present day to authorize such different phases of culture as dances, rights to hunting-grounds, protections, names of dogs, or kwaxa prerogatives.[7] Any myth which gives the initial use of a name, a dance, or any other prerogative, is termed a snaxnem. Each of these is, or was in the old days, remembered with great care and never recounted in full detail except to the members of the ancestral family whose names are embodied in it. Even at potlatches the full details of the myth are not told here. Indeed, if a young man is of a flighty, garrulous disposition, unlikely to preserve the dignity of his ancestral fame, the details are concealed from him. Even at the present time there is much resentment at any unauthorized use of a snaxnem, and in the old days this would inevitably have led to bloodshed.

Boas (p. 116) states that the terms snaxnem and sacrem are synonymous. The writer feels certain that this is an error. It was discussed repeatedly with various Bella Coola, all of whom agreed that a sacrem is a mere story which can be told by anyone, whereas a snaxnem is a myth possessed by the individual, or individuals, whose prerogatives are derived from it. To the Bella Coola the two are clearly different.

Now the law, there is no doubt that records of the past change from one category to the other. A wealthy chief, eager to give a potlatch, but lacking the mythical authorization, must frequently have used a sacrem, claiming the law as an sa, but the prestige of one who can give potlatches is so great that in time his claim would probably be accepted. The two

[7] The details of these will be described later.

1:96:Dwoath E-5 (1922-1924)968
NEA Bellacoola NEA

to a guest was regarded as amusing. In recent years, however, 37
some husbands have made a practice of renting their wives to [8] white men. This is not considered credutable, but the Bella [48] Coola do not strongly condemn breaches of the moral code, [53] which are regarded as the affair of the husband alone. There is said to be a Bella Bella custom by which a wife takes as recognized paramour one of the friends of her husband who is thought not only to know of this but to receive the presents which the lover gives his wife. The two continue to be friends and often have together; in fact, their mutual interest in the woman is a bond between them. No trace of this practice [71] could be found in Bella Coola.

POLYGYNY

It has thus far been assumed that the Bella Coola are 95
monogamous, an assumption correct only since the period of 56
white dominance. Previous to that time it was quite common 77] for wealthy men to have three, four, or more wives. Pielo, the important chief so often mentioned, had nine, ten, or eleven, the exact number is not known. A man wishing to take a second wife could do so in the manner already described, although the period of engagement was usually much shorter, and working for his parents-in-law was not expected. The reason for this was obvious to the Bella Coola. None but a chief of importance could afford more than a single wife, and such an one could not be expected to demean himself by working for anyone else. Besides, parents were glad to have their daughters married to a great chief, so willingly omitted the customary period of servitude. Two strained the distinction of having several wives. As far as could be learned, [2] the number of the sexes seems always to have been about practically every adult had a wife. A number of males were always slain in war, and it is to be assumed that polygyny was made possible only through the surplus of women thus caused.
The great majority of men had a single wife, some chiefs had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

595 556 two, but only one of great importance could hope to aspire to more, while the case of Putlu was considered to be unique and highly desirable.

595 571 A chief's wives always lived in the same house, and it is said that disputes were frequent. Putlu endeavoured to prevent jealousy by providing each woman with a special bedroom and sleeping for a single night with each in order. One informant had two wives when a young man, and he found that the only way to avoid constant bickering was by sleeping in one bed, between them. The evidence seems clear that plurality of wives was usually the cause of considerable friction, though this never deterred a man from taking a second wife if he could. The only special rule of incest in this regard was that two sisters could not be married at the same time.

[835 512] 595 183 626 In answer to questions about polyandry, two men told of a licentious woman who had two feeble-minded husbands between whom she used to sleep. The whole affair was considered disgusting, but public opinion did not ostracize the offenders since a person's marital affairs were considered to concern the individual only. It was accordingly assumed that 595 556 the institution of true polyandry did not exist, when, unexpectedly, information was volunteered about its occurrence in the families of influential men. A very powerful chief, if his only child was a daughter, quite frequently married her simultaneously to the sons of other chiefs. She was thus considered most fortunate, since only a wealthy man could provide for a daughter in this way, and expend the large quantities of goods necessary to ensure her proper marriage in each case. The husbands were never brothers, and seldom related, since the ambitious parent widely sought out the daughter with different ancestral families for the benefit of any resultant children. The joint wife was accustomed to live for a number of months in the home of one of her husbands, with her other husbands forming part of his household. She would then move to the house of another, who assumed the leadership of the group,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

type of dance differs from all other Bella Coola ones, since no inherited prerogative is required. Years ago such exhibitions were common, although curing shamans were rare.

The usual time for a shaman's performance is at the conclusion of the hoolai season, though one is sometimes held prior to that period if the would-be performer fears that the food which he has stored up for the event is likely to be frozen.

When he decides to give a dance, the shaman first summons the singers to his house and teaches them a song of his own composition. Theoretically both text and tune should have been received from his supernatural benefactor, but many performers undoubtedly employ songs used by shamans ancestors which they have chanced to remember. Another device is to describe a supernatural being seen in a dream. In some cases there is deliberate deception, but in most the performer persuades himself that he has received supernatural authorization. The texts are full of obscure allusions, a river, for example, is spoken of as swift running water. Often a man will measure a song for years, before collecting the wealth necessary to use it publicly, with the social prestige attached. A shaman always obtains a name from his supernatural benefactor, but if a man merely uses a feat observed in a dream, this is impossible, so he adopts the designation of some deceased shaman, soon convincing himself that it was uttered by the apparition. Others will probably remember this name, hence suspicions may easily be aroused concerning the authenticity of the performance, but it is not customary to voice these. The singers repeat the song which they have just heard, and continue doing so until they have mastered it. Sometimes they compose further songs themselves for the performer. During the practising, those who are not hoolaiai are expelled from the house. A shaman is a person who has come in contact with the supernatural; hence he is akin to the members of the society who, therefore, support him during his rite.* A herald is sent out

*Theoretically, a shaman need not be a hoolai, but exceptions usually occur only in those of religious and imaginative temperaments, who are in the majority of cases already members of the society.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1926) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

Few prerogatives are used when the uninitiated are present; they are essentially secret, but provide considerable amusement and are a welcome interlude in the serious rites. When the prerogative is made visible, carpenters must be employed to make it, and be paid for their work; hence this part of the ceremonial is often omitted. When no handicraft is required, it is more frequently called into play, but even in such cases its employment is not universal. Not being an essential part of the kwaxa rites, the use or omission of a prerogative is a matter which concerns the dancer alone, and he acts strictly in accordance with his own wishes, whether or not he desires the ceremony to be acc repeated by every possible show. It is impossible to estimate with accuracy the relative frequency of employment, but it is probable that prerogatives of the type under consideration are used in about one-third of the kwaxa ceremonials.

424
575*
796*
183
[532]

If a dancer decides to display a material prerogative, he consults with a carpenter before the coming of his call and asks him to make, for example, a wooden Hummingbird. On the night of kwaxawam, when all the kwaxa are present, the bird is seen to move across the back-wall of the house, pulled by concealed strings. The dancer rushes to it and appears to catch it, in reality hiding it beneath his clothing. The women drum and the heralds announce to the uninitiated in the neighbouring houses what has taken place. Carefully holding his hands cupped, as if clutching something of great value, the dancer moves to the centre of the house and returns the bird to the land above by throwing his hands upwards while the kwaxa call out hoip. This is the usual procedure when the prerogative is a bird, a small mammal, or a reptile. The same ceremonial is often repeated on the night of nuxalkilaq, particularly if the ritual proper to the occasion does not suffice to occupy the requisite time. If the prerogative is immaterial, the ritual differs. For example, when it is Fog, the dancer stretches his hands upwards, as if receiving something from above, and then makes the motion of throwing this "some-

424
575*
796*
787
[532]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

128 from Swabli. My informant's grandchildren regard them-
173 selves as Swabli boys, and their names are embodied in myths
361 of that village, although their forbears have not lived there
166 for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this case exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no cause to doubt the general accuracy of these. Names [554] embodied in the origin myths of different towns are used as prerogatives and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inaccuracies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

128 Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descen-
184 dants of people of different villages were found in most cases to be identical. There were a few differences in custom between [790] the people of Stuax and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on [101] the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

114 Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees 361 fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included Pe·ɛlb (no. 4), Nalqɛtskwan·e (no. 7), and Nuxālxm (no. 16).[10] All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 6, 8, 9, 19, and 24, were not known by several old men questioned on the subject.

101 The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political 619 unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recog- [631] nized that their origins and customs were similar. This was [197] also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living on South Bentinck Arm, and at the head of Dean Channel.

[10] Using in each case the spelling of this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

sun attached to another land above the one of which our sky is the underside. Boas (p. 28) has described this upper land in some detail. A number of Bella Coola were questioned on this subject, but for some time no one could be found with knowledge of its existence. At length one of the older people remembered that a man who had died some thirty years ago had a personal story connected with it, and later a Kimsquit man was able to furnish definite information. He explained that in his family there was a myth dealing with this matter; others might have heard this myth, but since it was not their property, of course they would not be able to impart the facts contained in it, nor would they necessarily believe it. Consequently, an upper land, superimposed above that which is immediately over the earth, cannot be described as a Bella Coola belief; it is shared, so far as could be ascertained, by only two families.

The chief feature of this uppermost world is its distance and unapproachableness. To the supernatural beings living in the intermediate land it is a far-off place; in fact, their attitude towards it corresponds to that with which mortals regard the land above their own. The supernatural ones can, when they wish, visit this upper world, which is called Naqui-iäls. A sun shines there, but it is a different kind of sun from that known to mortals. On the whole it appears that this upper sky-land does not differ materially from either the earth or the land immediately above. No human being has ever reached this distant land, so what little is known about it was brought down in the beginning of time by the first people.

In addition to these two upper worlds, the Bella Coola know of one, or perhaps two, below. One of these is inhabited by ghosts.[1] It somewhat resembles the earth, but is unsubstantial and ethereal. It is considered to be immediately

[1]At the present time the Bella Coola are in a state of transition between the old beliefs and the new. This concept is held only by the older people, so it might be more accurate to describe it as one which they, the tribe as a whole, used to know. It has been thought advisable to use the present tense throughout in recording customs and beliefs which are now rapidly passing away.

S.McDowell R-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

not systematized; if a man is asked about the powers or functions of a certain supernatural being, he will usually answer by recounting a story in which that being appears. What is known respecting many of the lesser supernatural beings depends upon information contained in stories, and as many of these are personal possessions, it follows that there is tremendous variation in individual knowledge. Psychologically, this is of little importance; there are enough supernatural beings for everyone to know some of them, and to expect to meet or hear them in the forests. To insert many of the stories contained in later chapters would break the sequence of description; all that is here attempted is to give a general summary, in a way foreign to Bella Coola thought.

Supernatural beings are by no means all-powerful. It is true that they have miraculous powers and can work weal or woe to human beings who chance to come in contact with them, but likewise they may sometimes be overwhelmed by morals armed with objects steeped in human essence, such as a blanket which has been worn until it is impregnated not only with the smell, but the physical being of its owner. In particular, shamans or other mortals of great strength have been able to conquer the supernatural ones. Consequently, it may be said that although supernatural beings live on a plane different from that of mortals, they are not omnipotent. Long, long ago, man was able to come in contact with them more frequently, but that golden age when the semi-mythical ancestors of the Bella Coola were living has long since passed away, though it is only within the last few years that such beings, particularly supernatural animals, have become comparatively rare. The Bella Coola give three main reasons for this:

(1) Supernatural animals do not like the sound of machines and have moved far away.

(2) With increasing dependence on the canning industry, fewer hunters penetrate into their haunts in the distant parts of the mountains.

(3) The younger Bella Coola no longer take pains to purify themselves as a means of placating supernatural beings.

[illegible] are many of them, are carefully used in accordance with the functions of the supreme deity. As a Bulla Coola has many names, corresponding to his membership in various societies, his professional prerogatives, his ancestral myths, and more religious, so has Myoomin, who is a supreme, many names, according to his special functions. It would be unbelievable for a Bulla Coola to pray to Myoomin, yet it is common for him to pray to Mosakai or Tsin, other names for the same being. The multiplicity of functions and designations approaches the point of obscuring the unity of Myoomin, which in fact, some Bulla Coola even deny. They state that Sumdalis, Mosakai, Snowbalis, and Nanakulais are one, but that Myoomin, Snowbalis, and Nanakulais are three distinct supernatural beings. This seeming confusion presents no difficulties to the Indian, since each family has its own myths in which such facts are recorded. He believes them, without questioning those of his neighbors, and it is even possible for an individual to believe two contradictory statements, if he happens to become the owner of two contradictory myths. Evidence collected in the field does not make clear whether the beliefs of the Bulla Coola illustrate an incomplete transformation of a single deity into a number of minor ones, or whether they represent the almost complete fusion of a number of beings in one. Following the practice of the great majority of the Bulla Coola, the supreme deity will be referred to as Myoomin.

The most obvious attribute of Myoomin is connected with the sun. He can enter it and use it as if it were his canoe. To have he committed a sun, and when he takes charge of the sun it appears as if the latter were a large, self-propelling vehicle boat with windows through which he looks forth. It is said that long ago he allowed sunk to take charge of the sun, but the malicious animal ran it so close to earth thereby nearly have killed almost all living creatures. When Myoomin wants the sun he wears a cloak, on the lining of which are salmon, covering this means the sun so earth to turn with salmon.

[illegible]

Whales, too, are sometimes observed in the rivers, but though they appear to resemble those of the ocean they are really their supernatural prototypes.

These human-like dwellers beneath the water can, as in this case, cause death, but they are usually regarded as unfriendly rather than dangerous. But there is one unknown being which the Bella Coola regard with unmixed awe, he is Kwaxsenx (see Plate 10), but of his supernatural one beneath the waves, or Hamatsa is but of those dwelling above. He lives in an enormous house under the sea which he fills, he eats nothing, and he completely lives that home. The Bella Coola believe that these beings are who human form at will,[1] and assume that their behaviour in Kwaxsenx's dwelling corresponds to that of human beings in the house of a worthy chief. In the beginning of time, when men were more powerful than in recent years, this house sometimes rose to the surface of the water and adventurous Bella Coola entered it on various occasions, hoping to their descendants who of the wonders it contained. These accounts have become family myths and are described with others of similar type in Chap. vi, vol. ii. Records of this kind vary greatly in detail, in fact, the agreement lies in broad outline. Sometimes it is stated that footmarks of the sea appear in Kwaxsenx's house in the Bella, other myths describe paintings of sea creatures around the walls and the manner in which these are brought to life by Kwaxsenx. Irrespective of the exact details, it is clear that he is chief of the unknown beings who serve him and hunt for him, the Bella Bella being especially proficient in this respect. Kwaxsenx exerts any right to his protégés and punishes any mortal who is unkind to them.

[1] Such Bella Coola manners concerning the transformation of sea and animals will be described in the sea series of the chapter.

been frightened on any time but rightful increased their fears. Their dogs heard the sound and howled in dread. The women threw on their few sacred white blankets, but only part of them, and some dry salmon, which all superstitious beings eldest. Then she and her husband fled home, moving backwards and forwards and disappointed about in all directions. The little dog was fellow them, but they considered themselves fortunate to reach Bella Coola considered.

The beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the supernatural beings you described are fairly exact. They know their appearance, when to expect, and what to do if one is encountered. In addition to these, they assume the existence of numerous of indefinite form which they term cmoq. Any supernatural creature, a talend for example, is spoken of as a cmoq in general, not specific, classification. Consequently, when one Bella Coola may describe as a cmoq is given a distinctive name by someone else with wider knowledge. So far as could be learnt, there is no designation other than cmoq for creatures which move from the cmoq to hyell so that the cmoq for salmon, and spend the summer in the lakes of the interior, or beneath the ice of glaciers. They can assume various forms, sometimes cmoq human, though they usually appear as giant, hairless, bear-like creatures with short legs and brown skin. Their eyes are large, round, and glassy-like. In whatever form these cmoq may appear, they are always certain to bring disaster to the beholder. One of the haunts of cmoq is beneath the glacier on Mount Qimsqa, behind the small mountain which rises behind Kimsquit, on the south side of the Bella Coola River about half a mile from the sea. It is said that only a few years ago a white man, having heard of these creatures, went to that place with a number of Bella Coola. All the latter were able to hear the roaring of the beasts louder than the whistle of a steamer, but the white man scoured and so it, though the power of the cmoq had affected him, for he died on the way back to the village.

Other cmoq are said to live near Kimsquit. The father of [illegible] cousin's crest to the question replied that his crest was the Raven. In Kitkata was a Raven man, too, and to the cousin's surprise, treated him as a brother for the rest of his stay in Vancouver. He shook with laughter as he recalled the experience and added that though he was quite willing to accept favors of this kind he would never dream of returning them. It is to be stated unhesitatingly that the Bella Coola have no totemic beliefs concerning their crests. There is not the slightest trace of respect towards the animal, nor yet of totemism.

Animal crests are not objects of religious veneration, nor do they have any importance in the realm of social life. The personal crest serves to indicate ownership of an ancestral myth describing that particular bird or animal. A wealthy chief is proud to display his crest on a totem-pole, or on a painting on the front wall of his house. Anyone seeing such a design is impressed with the glories of the family history of the owner to the latter's gratification. A living specimen of the bird or animal is treated with no respect, but is delineated as a measure of family history. For that reason a man is often tattooed[*] with his crest, that derived from his father's first ancestor on the right breast, that from his mother, on the left, and is owner of a canoe often carves his crest on its bow. After the death of a chief a memorial post is erected near his grave, decorated with a painting or carving of one or more crests to bind observers not only of the deceased, but of his family history, his most treasured possession. It is said, half

[*] [illegible]

[illegible] to understand the attitude of the Bulu Caste to the sexual act itself. Although it is a normal part of life (for no one would voluntarily abstain from all contact) yet the union of man and woman does not lack impact, since in very humanness distinguishes those who practice it in the eyes of supernatural beings, both anthropomorphic and zoomorphic. Those who indulge excessively become so over-charged with this characteristic that their undertakings are certain to fail, whereas those who remain continent for a considerable period are so freed from the corruption of material that they become almost supernatural themselves and always succeed in their ventures. If, after a period of restraint, a man holds intercourse, his materially human act adds typical human strength to that accumulated by chastity. Chastity alone gives power, but chastity consummated by intercourse at the proper period increases that power enormously. This somewhat complicated belief is accepted without question by every Bulu Caste, playing an important part in their lives, even in their present degraded condition. The following story illustrates the point rather clearly:

A party of Kingsmen Isle people had been present at a ceremonial at Smith Isle. While returning home, one canoe, containing a chief, his wife, and eighteen or twenty commoners, was caught by an unexpected south wind and driven on the rocky isle, Ono-ahuka, where the lighthouse now stands. The occupants managed to reach shore and to save their canoe. The chief was heavy, but they made a rude shelter of boughs in which they lived while the storm continued. Every day the chief sent out the young men to hunt food, and every day they returned empty-handed. The little food they had left them on landing was soon exhausted and they were starving. One night, when they were almost famished, the chief said to his wife:

"The youths have done their best. Now that death is before us I want to create a kindly feeling. I am going out, probably to die during the night, and I want you to allow each young man to sleep with you. It is a strange request for our condition to succeed, but the story of your shame will never be known, because we shall soon all be dead."

The wife acquiesced. The chief then told one of the young commoners to lie with her, and afterwards to call a councils to do likewise, [illegible] who, in turn, would pass on the request to their to might each each member of the party. This only is necessary to secure for a commoner to hold intercourse with a chief's wife, but is to enhance for a man to sit another to deep with his wife, as the result was surprised and rather frightened. Moreover, he acceded to the request, passed on the intercourse, and realized. So he was looking a and appeared to the surfaces, and he was able to kill it easily. Such to was followed in the same manner, realized, and then killed a and. Then morning when the chief returned to was delighted that all had turned out in accordance with his hopes. In the same time the wind dropped so that the party was able to return home.

The power which had brought the such within reach of the man had been augmented in their own bodies by these ritual acts after a rather lengthy period of continence. The Bella Coola believe that such a procedure always increases their strength and ability, therefore giving them a better chance to gain favour from supernatural beings, and to take advantage of opportunities offered. Shamans in particular are careful with regard to their marital life since animals know their acts and thoughts, and hide from one who has not made himself "clean" by continence, by mortification, and bathing. Some combine of these three elements, but since continence is the most prominent feature, the term may be considered as "ceremonial chastity."

In its simplest form this consists merely the three elements already mentioned. The longer the continence, the greater the power augmented by its mortification. A man who has practised abstinence for a year has such strength within himself that almost any good fortune may occur, and cases are known in which it has been carried out for even longer periods. More often, an individual practises ceremonial chastity in accordance with a family tradition. One old man gave the following recipe and was most emphatic that it always brought success in hunting and fishing. He added that on the two occasions he had tried it, he had brought back a phenomenal number of skins.

A person planning to set out on an expedition for any pur-

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] and the village constitutes a unit for all [illegible]. In fact the economical unity is its most important function.

With the exception of a few villages built on the southern, each Bella Coola settlement consists of a row of houses on the river bank. These are of the usual rectangular, plank-built type typical of the North-West Coast. In front of them stretches a sidewalk, usually supported by piles on the side nearest the river to make it level. The houses, too, in many cases have piles beneath their front walls, made necessary by the steep slope of the bank. In large villages there may be two rows of houses, behind and above one another. Usually there is a rough path parallel to the row of houses at the very edge of the river. The number of houses varies, before the smallpox epidemic some villages contained as many as thirty or forty, others only two or three. There is no definite arrangement of the houses, anyone may build where there is a vacant space. Much the same arrangement occurs in the one-room villages, each of which depends for its main sustenance on an seven fish-trap, as the river villages depend on a salmon-weir.

The central part of each house is occupied by a large fire, often with a considerable distance below the level of the floor, and around this is an open space free to all. Toward the side walls are raised the partitions, forming bedplaces for the old Green families, or for different members of one. In many cases the flooring is removed in three or four parts of the house for small fires on which different groups cook, the central fire being used for heating and for more important meals. The number of families occupying a house depends on its size, on importance (had with many relatives, often built on commons house which is occupied by one or more families, smaller houses contain only two or three. Life in the larger houses is free and open, people are constantly passing to and fro, and only when food is being distributed is given a share as a matter of course. Most of the houses are decorated with carved upright posts and painting on the house and back wall. A door through the back wall to the back room, an important [illegible].

of the father or the mother. In June, 1911, a Bella Coola girl had reached the age of about six months without having received a name. There was much adverse criticism about the parsimony of her father's father and her mother's father, who were both equally to blame, but who had ably been deterred by fear of the law prohibiting the potlatch.

In a child grown older he is helped in the performance of ceremonial rites by his parents and by his brothers and sisters. In this way, it is considered a sign of poverty if only the parents take part. If a man's own children do not appear likely to carry on the traditions of his original family, he has an instinctive inclination to favouring the children of their a brother or sister, since, like his own, they are all children of the same ancestral family. Especially in Kimsquit, it is customary for a man to help his sisters' children, and there is very little of knowledge of the real father, but rather a mark of respect and family feeling displayed by a man to his sisters. Moreover, in both Bella Coola proper and in Kimsquit, it is more improper for a name which a man has won to a position of dignity by the expenditure of much goods, to passed to his own son, it should go to a sister's sister. When a father maintains a name for his child it should have long dormant.

One aspect of the manner in which Atlantic merges imperceptibly into the ancestral family can be seen in the inheritance of names. When a man with his wives together to make his will he is guided in the choice of successors by the characteristics of the children. He will on receiving much from his father, but very children are dismal without hereditary. This is particularly true of men with which are bound up valuable dance prerogatives, whose, as previously mentioned, ancestral names of which the ignorance depends

[Accordingly, a [illegible] Bella Coola [illegible] Bella Bella [illegible] the children of the father [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] Bella Bella children. [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] the [illegible] years earlier. It appears that attempts were commonly made to kill chiefs by means of sympathetic magic, and it is quite possible that such attempts, becoming known, preyed upon the minds of the victims to such an extent that death resulted.

WEALTH

Since wealth is so important in chieftainship, it would be desirable at this point to consider the concept of wealth. Unfortunately, it is impossible to give a satisfactory treatment of this subject. The coming of the white man altered the economic aspects of Bella Coola life so radically, and at such an early period, that concrete examples of economic interpretations, so useful in a thorough study, could not be obtained in the field. It is possible that greater attention to this subject might have produced more satisfactory results, but I am doubtful of this.

In the old days, "wealth" was of two categories: (a) Prerogatives, tangible or intangible, which could be shown, personally or dramatically, or could be expounded in words; and (b) Goods which could be distributed for validating such prerogatives. Individual possessions, unused for distribution, were hardly considered as wealth; a sewing-machine, a bottle of whiskey, a bed, or some other luxury might give satisfaction to the owner, but did not increase his importance in the eyes of his fellows. The value of objects was only for their use in ceremonial distribution; indeed, prior to such distribution, they were only of potential value. This attitude controlled Bella Coola economics in the early days of contact, and still influences their behaviour. A native would hardly care to be fully concerned on the fact that he would gain no advantage from the goods on his shelves, since he hoped merely to sell them, not to give them away.

A man's relatives were expected to help him in the acquisition of goods, but the extent of their contributions was never

[illegible] THE BELLA COOLA SYSTEM

[illegible] unmodified. Boys and girls helped their parents, and there was no definite age at which they ceased to do so. The finality of the Bella Coola system was contrary to any contribution. The more important a chief became, the more did he receive from dependent relatives, but the more did they expect in the way of "return presents." It was advantageous to be generous, within the family circle as well as without, since life was so public that every transaction even of a "private" nature, was well known. Unquestionably, a greedy and strong-minded individual must frequently have taken advantage of help from his housemates, but there was no strict code of ethics to expect of this. In brief, it may be said that the acquisition of wealth was an unmodified, individual, matter; its distribution was likewise according to individual volition, although within a rigidly defined ethical pattern.

Sacred Sources

The ancestral names that chiefs desire to raise to a position of eminence are usually embedded in myths dealing with the first settlement of the earth, names which belong, as has been stated, to the ancestral family. Many of these traditions record other designations as well, each of which carries with it the prerogative of performing a type of dance known as ceremonial. These will be spoken of, henceforth, as sacred names. The Bella Coola do not know the meaning of this term. These names, like ancestral ones, are the potential property of members of the ancestral family, but can only be assumed when duly validated by presents. Such an assumption follows a period of seclusion in the back-room of the house. Both men and women are eligible. A person may be secluded in this way a number of times, acquiring a new sacred name on each occasion, but as presents must be distributed every time, it follows that only the children or relatives of wealthy chiefs can be so favoured. It is desirable to have the bestowal of a sacred name occur at a potlatch, since guests from foreign tribes are then

[illegible] THE [illegible] CIRCLE [illegible]

Although guests from different villas are sometimes invited to other communities, it is an patlatchan that they are essential. Since the validity of such connections as marriages, divorces, or the assumption of professional prerogatives depends on the presence of witnesses, and since the importance of such a rite depends on the number of witnesses, a man is always eager to carry out any public performance of a patlatch when he is aware of the attention of foreigners, and the consequent wide diffusion of knowledge of what he has done. The man who has invited guests is usually willing to allow others to perform at his patlatch, since it increases the complexity and importance of the affair. It follows that no two patlatches are alike, one will contain features entirely lacking in another. Moreover, the wealth of the donor determines how many rites he himself will cause to be performed. The fundamental concept of the patlatch is the inviting of guests from abroad to witness rites in connection with an invented myth, especially the return of a recently deceased relative of the donor to visit the living.

In any important patlatch the following rites are carried out, and in the account of the ritual it will be assumed that these rites are taking place. If the reader bears this summary in mind, he is less likely to be confused by the complication of rites.

(1) The return of a dead ancestor to visit the living.

(2) The initiation of young men or women into the ruled society. This includes the validation of a ruled name for each, and a period of seclusion in the back-room. The initiates may either be relatives of the donor of the patlatch, or young persons whose relatives are taking the opportunity to carry out the rite in the presence of foreigners. Some of the initiates may already be members of the society, undergoing a further period of seclusion in order to increase their status by a further distribution of presents.

(3) The payment by the wife of the donor and her family of goods to "release" her from her husband. This is a legal fiction, though necessary to maintain the status of the children.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] ing to several companions and others who had helped X [illegible] for his potlatch, but in Bella Coola this was usually done following night.

Now comes what the Bella Coola regard as the most [illegible] part feature of the potlatch.[illegible] The singers strike up one [illegible] songs of a secret nature, perhaps a song chosen for his [illegible] acting. As he dances, shut in his ceremonial curtain [illegible] hand drum, whistling is heard without the house. A masked [illegible] are making the noise and then suddenly is as if [illegible] appears to drop round and round. This is effected either [illegible] whistles of different size or by blowing harder. The [illegible] rushes out of the house. The whistling continues in a [illegible] short bursts, as if a conversation were being carried on [illegible] of language. The masked [illegible] returns, and the audience [illegible] by the mystery of the affair, leaves to his explanation.

"It is so and so," he announces, using the ancestral [illegible] of one of X's deceased relatives. "The ones has come not [illegible] to see (or whatever relation X may be to him) a visit, or bring him to."

While he speaks, continuous whistling is heard from [illegible], but when he leaves the house it once more takes [illegible] form of a dialogue. Suddenly he returns, followed by a [illegible] figure in the centre of a group of members of the secret [illegible] If the deceased's first ancestor had been an eagle, he [illegible] The figure will appear—an eagle mask on his head, [illegible] whole body, except perhaps the feet, covered by a large [illegible] thickly covered with eagle down and furnished with [illegible] wooden wings. The dancer is usually entirely [illegible] costumed, but he is guided by a number of the secret [illegible] presence is attributed to the necessity for guarding and [illegible] honour to the supernatural visitor. Among those who [illegible] there is always a man with a whistle, the [illegible] which simulates the cry of an eagle, and this is [illegible] ancestor. The actor bends in imitation of a bird and [illegible] himself, lifting his head and opening the movable beak [illegible]

[illegible] by means of a hidden string, while the whistle sounds. Then he 556* steps down and hops a few steps eagle fashion. Slowly, with 769 pauses and turnings around, the figure circles the fire and retires through the front door, always attended by a number 535 of masked. The actor displays considerable dramatic ability, 575 and the performance is striking effective in the large, plank-built house, illumined only by a smoky central fire which [532] casts flickering shadows over the intently watching audience.

The dogs, alone uninpressed by the solemnity of the occasion, skulk to and fro.

If a whale is represented, a large wooden frame-work is [592] carried by several men who walk inside of it. Raven, bear, or other animals may also be used, according to the ancestral myth of the deceased. Some of the first people came to this earth as men, but there have always been a sufficient number of intermarriages to permit everyone to portray some bird or beast, obtained from the family into which an ancestor married. A supernatural object claimed to have been seen by a forefather can also be used on these occasions. In some cases a composite figure is used. Such may have the head of an [532] eagle, a killer whale projecting from the back, and a raven on its chest. In such a case these three creatures have been connected with the ancestry of the deceased, and his spirit is believed to have assumed these forms. Great individual choice [14] is allowed in such matters.

If several of X's deceased relatives are being commemorated, the sound of whistling is again heard from without, a short time after the departure of the first masked figure. A senior named goes out, and the same ritual is repeated. This time the masked actor represents some other bird or animal.
Thus, or in some cases four, dead people are thus shown, though one is more customary. The actual management of the figures is left to the direction of the carpenters who have made them. Often a foreign workman is employed, as a mark of respect for his skill. In spite of all precautions there are often delays about the final preparations, especially with regard want to give valuable presents, but he need not give any. It is a deep disgrace to any man to be unable to return these presents. Nothing is said, nor does the donor take active steps to receive his returns, but the influence of the recipient perceptibly wanes. It is expected that a heavier rate of interest will be paid on presents received many years before repayment, but again this is a matter of individual volition. The debts of a man who dies while owing for goods received at potlatches are scrupulously discharged by his family. If they fail to do so, their own influence is lessened. 426 556* 558

One method of reducing the value of an investment present can be used by a man who feels unable to repay a large gift. The uncle of an elderly Bella Coola was once guest at a Kimsquit potlatch, where he received, as an investment present, a few large canoe and two hundred blankets. Not wishing to incur so large a liability he at once returned fifty of the blankets to his host for distribution among the guests. Consequently, he was expected to make return for only one hundred and fifty blankets, with whatever interest he desired. This action tended to lower his prestige, since it acknowledged his inability or unwillingness to repay his present. The chief in question, being firmly established in his chiefly status, did not fear to do this, though one of lesser rank would have hesitated to confess his inferiority.

It is on the value of the goods distributed in these three types of presentation; namely, recompense for work done, repayment of debts, and investment presents, that the importance of the potlatch, and consequently of X himself, is virtually judged. These distributions of presents are for the potlatch as a whole, including the return of the dead and the intangible prestige of X; the donations which follow are to validate specific transactions which can be omitted. In one or two families the whole course of the potlatch is changed, since the members have the prerogative of distributing their presents outside the house. In such a case the giving is done during the day instead of at night. Details of this ritual, 426 556* [184 424]

552 [420] [184] [424] which is said to have come as a prerogative obtained through marriage with a Kwakiutl woman, were not obtained.

After the distribution of investment presents comes the strengthening of X's seat.

His wife, aided by members of her family, has placed the necessary goods in readiness, though it is pretended they merely happen to be on hand. A herald takes his place near [208] the door, and another behind the fire. Beside the latter stands a chief, attired in a wood head-dress, who represents X. One of the heralds calls on this substitute to come forward, as if he were just entering the house, and shouts:

"There is no place for him to sit!"

Then he turns to X's wife, saying:

"See if you have not a few tribes in your room to strengthen him."

[192] The word for "strengthen" is wkdsata, or gkdsdstata, which means, "shoring up," as if X were wobbling on his chief-like base. The words have the other significance of "clothing." They represent the ethereal dignity wherewith a chief is garbed.

X's wife goes to her room, or to the place in the house where the goods are stored, and brings forth a large assortment of valuables, which are piled in a convenient spot. The substitute who is representing X then places himself in the latter's seat, which is to be made more solid by these goods. X's wife may tell the herald that they have still more goods for him, and in that case he calls out:

"His seat is too hard. Have you no soft cloths for it?"

The wife brings forward more goods to make her husband's seat more comfortable. The herald, who has been chosen for [209] his fluency, uses his originality in what he calls for from the wife; soft cloths for the seat is merely an example. In some cases, many presents are given; at other times, if the wife and her family be poor, there are few and of little worth. It is not essential that foreign guests witness the establishment or strengthening of a seat, though their presence means that X's

1:96:Haeckh E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

use his own discretion as to the design. At the top he always places the bird or animal cloak in which his first ancestor, traced patrilineally, came to this earth. Beneath this is the cloak of his mother's first ancestor if it differs from his father's. There are no fixed rules for other representations. Sometimes a man wishes to display the cloaks of the first ancestors of his wife, or wives; more often, the designs are of creatures with which his own ancestors came in contact after reaching this earth.[1] One of the first settlers, Smawa (I, p. 331), married a Bella Bella woman from whom he obtained a ceremony connected with a whale, an animal which has often been used on the totem-poles of his descendants. The lower figures on totem-poles often represent creatures from which a recent ancestor of the chief obtained supernatural assistance. Consequently, the number of designs which may be used is legion, and the order of portrayal is immaterial. Moreover, Bella Coola art is not sufficiently realistic for designs to be easily recognized, nor is there standard conventionalization of little used animals; so it follows that the designs on totem-poles are often unidentifiable.[2] This is of little consequence, since their value rests neither upon the artistic skill exhibited, nor even upon their significance in connection with the owner's ancestral myth, but upon the goods expended to validate the display.

All Bella Coola totem-poles are carved from the trunks of huge cedars, with the wood cut away so that the designs stand out in high relief. The carvers are allowed great latitude both in choice of form and colouring, hence there is wide variation

[1] Ahamaskin is the term applied to animals with which ancestors came in contact, other than their cloaks.

[2] The statement represents the layman's point of view, that is, of the Bella Coola who was not himself a carpenter-sculptor. It is probable that an expert would have greater facility in recognizing the conventionalized forms used by his ancestors, although the whole pattern of Bella Coola culture was opposed to extreme standardization. Unfortunately, wood-carving, in fact art work of every kind, had degenerated to such an extent that only one man with any recognized skill in that respect was still living when this study was made. He was both unreliable and uncooperative, so that it was impossible even to collect examples of his work, still less to record his interpretations of the designs of masks or other objects carved by his predecessors.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 in the appearance of the poles. Sometimes one is erected at *556 the front door of the house with an opening at its base through 978 which all must pass to enter the house, or a pole may be solid 582 and stand on the opposite side of the sidewalk; the choice in either case depending upon the usage recorded in the ancestral [184] myth. Instead of a totem-pole, a chief may display his ancestral cloaks by means of paintings on the front wall of his house, or by carved house-posts supporting the longitudinal beams, if such had been used by his ancestors. Moreover, a chief entitled to display a totem-pole may choose to use only paintings. If he validates these by presents, they give him the same dignity and importance as a totem-pole, particularly if he cannot validate its construction by lavish gifts. Most Bella Coola poles are only about fifteen to twenty feet in height, and though [171] it is possible that a few families had prerogatives entitling them to construct lofty poles, such as used by the Haida, it is unlikely that such were ever common.

When a chief who has erected a totem-pole before his house gives another potlatch, he may wish to put up a second pole beside the first. Occasionally two or three poles stand before the house of a chief, but one is more frequent or even none at [764] all. At death the pole is often taken to the cemetery where it acts as a memorial-post (I, p. 461). Otherwise it remains standing until some other occupant of the house wishes to erect another in its place, when the first is pulled down and neglected.

Coppers

*556 The Bella Coola use coppers for only two purposes: casting [969] on the ground upon which the representation of a deceased relative had trodden, or throwing into the fire when the figure has left the house. In either case, they are said to "make bone for the dead." Although used but rarely, the occasion when a copper is employed is so important that to obtain one and increase its value is a vital consideration for every chief.

[177 Most of the coppers now used by the Bella Coola are made 434]

1:McIlwraith X-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

224 THE PROFESSION OF HUNTER

424 Another profession which is entered by means of an ancestral prerogative is that of hunting. Many Bella Coola have [463] validated their right to this vocation, some by confirming names created by their early ancestors, others by legalizing those brought down from above in the beginning of time. [551] One of the latter is Lelaimkila, "The Brusher Off," so-called because the owner is such a successful hunter that he can sweep mountain goats from the mountains as easily as an ordinary person can brush insects from a wall. Unlike the professions of carpenter and singer, it is believed that legalization of a hunter's name always brings success to the holder; perhaps because everyone is more or less successful, it follows [555] that whatever good fortune is achieved by a professional hunter [556] can be attributed to the validation of his prerogative. Others, lacking this assistance, may be proficient, but their success never carries with it the social prestige gained by a man who has distributed goods to substantiate the prerogative.

224 There is a difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as 424 to whether or not certain hunting methods are inheritable pre- 184 rogatives. With the introduction of rifles, these have long [177] been discontinued, and no definite information was obtained regarding the social position of their users. Several of the older men believed that the contrivances depended upon ancestral prerogatives, whereas others stated that they were merely individual discoveries which could have been, and in many cases were, imitated by anyone. It seems probable that most of the following practices are prerogatives, although it may be that they are no more than special hunting devices suitable only in certain areas and, therefore, limited to the members of the ancestral family owning that particular locality.

223 The method about which the most definite information was 424 obtained, was one formerly employed by a certain Nusyalyiq to catch geese at Tāl·io. According to one elderly Bella Coola,

Lillooet Howitt E-5 (1922-1924)968
NEA Bellacoola NEA

expenditure though he must forgo the prestige enjoyed by a man who has been able to elevate his professional names in a lavish manner. Selection is a constant factor in the social life of a Bella Coola; the man who uses all his wealth to acquire a firm seat cannot be "strong" in sisaek matters; the man who desires to specialize in bacior affairs cannot afford to display an elaborate totem-pole. Amid these conflicting desires, it often happens that a man somewhat neglects his professional prerogatives, especially those of which the dignity has been slightly lessened through superior skill shown by individuals endowed with no more than native ability. Upstarts of this kind have always infringed upon professional dignity, and the coming of the white man has added a new factor which has almost destroyed vocational prerogatives.

424
556
182
[535]
[197]

A'alk Dances

The most important, as well as the most spectacular, dances that occur at potlatches are those given by members of the sisaek society. In addition to these, a feature of many potlatches is the performance of a'alk dances.[1] As already mentioned, from 1870 onwards there have been many changes in sisaek ritual; new elements have been acquired by the marriages of Bella Coola to members of the coastal tribes, with the result that details of procedure vary at every ceremony according to the prerogatives of the donor. Since 1910, the influence of white civilization has increased to such an extent that sisaek ceremonials have virtually been abandoned. This took place at a time when the ritual was in transition, a state of affairs which rendered difficult the collection of coherent information. A'alk dances are associated with sisaek, but the addition of new features to the latter was accompanied by a decay of the former. Both societies have now almost ceased to exist, but whereas the sisaek organization was abandoned during a period of change and accretion, that 197

535
575
[184]
[796]
[128]

[1] Called o'alpas in Kitsequit.

holder of the potlatch, may wish to confirm a prerogative and requests the donor to allow this to take place at his ceremony. Permission is never refused, since the more incidental eyes, the greater is the prestige of the whole. The young man on whom the name is to be conferred is always told what is planned for him, and his relatives instruct him what to do. 556 575

As the time for the potlatch drows near, the donor requests the singers to prepare an a'alk song for the youth. The donor always deals with some incident of his ancestral story with which the singers are already familiar. If a number of youths are to be made a'alk, a song must be composed for each. The carpenters are also requested to make for the initiate one, or sometimes two, masks representing a supernatural being, either human or animal, connected with the myth in which occurs the a'alk name about to be conferred. The design is chosen by the senior members of the ancestral family concerned; it is usually, though not necessarily, the same as that employed by the last incumbent of the name. If the designation about to be conferred is one which came down from above in the beginning of time, the mask usually represents the guise adopted by the first user of the name; if the prerogative were obtained on earth, it portrays the being from whom the right was received. These arrangements are made in secret, and are known only to the craftsmen, the donor of the potlatch, and his family. [533] 532 556 575

On the night of ôkstum, when the work for the potlatch is allotted, the youth who is to be made an a'alk is confined within the back-room of the house, presumably in company with the nuxnê initiates, though there is ambiguity on this point. After the general arrangements have been made, an elderly a'alk whose aid has been requested, suddenly rushes from the house as if he had heard some noise. One of the sîsî, or an influential chief, makes some allegedly witty remark as to why he has gone out, and then follows, taking with him the dance head-dress belonging to the a'alk. This is identical with the type worn by nuxnê, one of the many points of resemblance 556 575 184 536 between the two societies. Presently the elderly a'alt returns, clad in his ceremonial costume consisting of the headgear, a blanket, and a narrow apron from which long deer leaves, small pieces of copper, or other jingling articles. The singers strike up his song, and he dances near the fire in a manner depending upon which of the four dances he has the right to perform. Again the a'alt leaves the house; when he returns he announces that a ratsiwam is coming with a song for the youth, naming the one who is to be made an a'alt. A moment passes, and in walks a masked figure depicting the form taken by the first ancestor of the novice, or the being from which one of his lower forefathers received an a'alt prerogative. Sometimes two of these beings appear. The apparition circles the fire, stops beside the singers, and chants a song to them in a low voice. Then it enters the back-room and is seen no more. Presently the singers strike up the song they have just heard. To those who are neither a'alt nor nuxat it seems that the song was brought by the supernatural visitor; in reality, it is the one previously composed by the singers and taught by them to the wearer of the mask to lend realism to the performance. The youth concealed within the back-room does not emerge on this occasion, the song is merely sung in practice. Sometimes the masked figure appears during the daytime and walks openly along the shore of the river like a foreign guest, as indeed it is said to be.

The coming of a ratsiwam is one of the points of resemblance between a'alt and nuxat rites. The older people agree that this has long been a feature of the former society, adopted by the latter in recent years. The description given in this section appears to be of the original and proper use, although, as already noted, the nuxat have recently employed ratsiwam for somewhat different purposes.

It is uncertain whether or not the a'alt novice remains secluded any longer within the back-room. In ancient times he probably did, but with the recent growth of the nuxat the same manner the fourth speaker outlines a myth belonging to the uncovered family of X's mother, again with emphasis on the dances used by her ancestors. X, as a member of both uncovered families, can continue his rights from both sides, but it is customary for him to use no more than five or six personas. Should X have no claim to this privilege from either mother or father, an almost unthinkable situation, he is still to borrow the prerogative of using masks from friends. The sentiment on which this custom of myths is based is the one so often mentioned, it marks the close relationship between the future children and their noble ancestors of old, a source of strength to the former.

X's father now names those whom he wishes to assist him on the following day. These are the dancers, who are chosen primarily for their skill in dancing, and secondarily in accordance with their rank. With them he selects a number of persons to stand near and help or "cherish" them as they perform. He also asks the services of some of the women who are professional dancers; of the keeper of the marriage song of his uncovered family; and, finally, of a number of men to act near the singers and assist them with suggestions. It would be most exceptional for anyone so called upon to decline the honour. It is now morning by this time and the guests depart.

On the following morning, the actual wedding day, X's father calls to his house those selected the previous evening as dancers and their assistants. The former wear blankets decorated with small copper ornaments[1] and carry circular wooden rattles provided with handles. Their clothing and rattles may be their own, but if they do not possess suitable attire, it is incumbent on X's father to provide them. Skins are piled up within the house, and some of these are said to "make soft the [1] On the primary view there is uncertainty as to the proper clothing of a marriage dancer. Several informants stated that it was a copper-decorated blanket, whereas others said that there was no special attire, one man claimed that an attempt was made to imitate the form and costumes of X's first ancestors, and another that naked costume was used. Probably there was no uniformity in custom.

[illegible] above, yet this is believed to have occurred on one occasion to the daughter of a chief.

[illegible] Once, very hundred years ago, the daughter of a Bella Coola chief was married to the son of Tsutsumun, a Bella Bella chief, living at [illegible]. At the marriage, in Bella Coola, valuable presents were given by both families, as the girl was to live in Bella Bella with her husband. Some [illegible] later, Tsutsumun gave a large potlatch to which he had invited guests from all parts of the coast. As is duty bound, his daughter-in-law's relatives gave a certain amount of goods to relay her. They were not wealthy, so that the contribution was of small value. Tsutsumun had expected a larger present, and now found himself unable even to repay his obligations to those who had assembled. He did not immediately show his resentment, but soon afterwards sold his daughter-in-law as slave to a Gitbatla chief. The Bella Coola were justly indignant, but could not make up their minds what to do in such an unprecedented case. The girl cleverly escaped and made her way home after lengthy wanderings (1, p. 310).

[illegible] A husband demands faithfulness on the part of his wife, though he himself is often rather lax. Illicit intercourse is regarded not as a deadly sin, but as an infringement of the husband's prerogatives. But if a woman should bear a child at a time when it was impossible for the husband to have been the father, due to absence, he would probably accept it as his own and do no more than administer a beating, though some jealous men would divorce a wife for this. Bella Coola sentiment on such matters varies with the individual; it is universally considered to be a matter that concerns the husband alone and he can do as he thinks fit. The daughters of chiefs are usually faithful to their husbands, whereas those of poorer persons, unrestrained by the valuables expended at their marriages, are more lax. If the husband should catch an adulterer, he can, if bold, slay him on the spot and the exaction of blood revenge would be uncalled for. Usually a fight ends the matter, though the offender's family may give presents to the aggrieved husband, and his wife's relatives may also make donations to atone for their daughter's failings. A husband does not share his wife with anyone, and a question as to the lending of a wife husband upon with contempt by her family, was yet determined that nothing she had done should ruin her children's chances in life. Accordingly she demand $300 to her husband to enjoy herself. Marriage is accepted as a matter of course, but to be many times repurchased is the goal of every ambitious woman. In Tibet the custom prevails of depicting on the walls the number of coppers paid for repurchasing a wife. Thus her fame is displayed to all.

It is somewhat difficult for a white man to realize what a privilege the family of a wife considers it to repurchase her from her husband. If the latter is unwilling to give a potlatch, his relations-in-law may urge him to do so, and if he still declines to save himself they take the drastic step of inviting their fellow-villagers to assemble in his house where, with these guests as witnesses, the wife's relations give presents to her husband and his relations. They may make this presentation at any gathering where they are assured of a large audience. In so doing the donors have demonstrated their proper sentiments, in spite of the interests of the husband.

The assurance which the relatives of a wife have given her husband is a matter about which they can boast for the rest of their lives, a fact impressed upon the writer by listening to a quarrel between two Bella Coola men. One of them owned a horse and waggon which the other had hired to move some goods. The latter became very angry, claiming that the former had overcharged him and must be poor and greedy to be so eager to acquire money. The teamster, thus deeply insulted, silenced the other man by reminding him that the only reason he was wealthy was by means of the goods used to repurchase his, the teamster's, sister from her husband, brother of the man with whom he was disputing. To the observer the dispute was made more interesting by the fact that both the husband and wife had been dead for at least fifteen years, but their families had not ceased to remember the financial obligations connected with the marriage.

[illegible] but some if unaware of the fact, then realize that some supernatural, invisible visitor has arrived.

Thevitis go from house to house, and sometimes to adjacent villages as well,[1] inviting the people to pay a farewell visit to the dead man who will soon leave them. In this invitation the nawal name of the deceased is used. The guests assemble as one, irrespective of their rank or membership in the nawal society. To mark their grief, female relatives pull out tufts of their hair, and both men and women of the immediate family [illegible] their hair shave. The body, either in its coffin or covered with blankets, is placed between the central fire and the back-room, immediately behind the place where the singers take their stations. When all are present, a man or other near relative who is also a fluent speaker, stands up and expounds how the Chief, meaning Mahdvila, has come to visit the dead man, and how all should try to understand the song he has brought.[2] A hidden nawal has been blowing a whistle intermittently, and the singers pretend to be able to understand words of a song in its notes. In reality they have prepared in advance the new one which they now beat out, accompanied by their voices. The theme either describes the coming of the supernatural visitor, or recounts the number of protection given by the deceased, and the manner in which these will make smooth the path whither he is going in the same way that distributed goods validate a chief's seat in this world. This song is practised and improved upon until the humming of the whistle as if the singers were constantly gaining new ideas and embellishments from the words of the supernatural visitor. Sometimes a few incidents are added from the nawal myth. After several repetitions, a relative of the dead man asks the singers to beat out the latter's nawal songs, as many of them as are remembered from the time he was first initiated into the so-

[1] The Bala Bala are said to invite foreign guests to this ceremony.

[2] Sometimes the people are present when the coming of Mahdvila, heralded by whistling and a drumming on the roof, takes place. There are variations in this, as in all other nawal rites.

with to emphasize the importance of this society, even that the deception was always apparent, and that even the hooks and ropes by which the figure was manipulated could be seen. Still others regard the ceremony as a symbolic means of perceiving the manner in which a man's crest comes to carry away his spirit and life. It seems clear that different interpretations must always have been accepted by different members of the community. A young and ingenuous uninitiated, steeped in the atmosphere of the supernatural, may well have believed that he was gazing upon an actual supernatural being, as the senior could desired him to do; others must have recognized that a deception of some kind was being practiced, but domestication is such an important factor in Bella Coola life that individuals often disregard the difference between semblance and reality, and it is contrary to custom for a person to cast aspersions upon the prerogative of another. It is easy for such as one to accept the drama as a symbol or representation of the manner in which the crest carries off the intangible elements of the dead. This is certainly the attitude of the Bella Coola at the present time. Everyone realizes that the crest is of human manufacture and that the corpse itself is not carried away, but the rite is still performed and gratifies the survivors by giving them an opportunity to display their prerogative and the cleverness of the deceased's ancestor.

Perhaps because of its relatively recent introduction, details of the performance of this rite are not fully standardized. In some cases, the crest is made to appear at the same time as Mulukila, instead of at a subsequent ceremony. It is assumed that the origin of the rite is in some ancient myth in which the body was actually taken above by the crest, as not copied, with the aid of carpenters, by the descendants of the person to whom this occurred. There are no myths of this nature current in Bella Coola, although it is thought that such must have been common among the peoples of the outer coast to explain the prevalence of the practice in that area. One old man mentioned that an Owikl myth in which a [illegible] [764] [illegible] family. Confusion is probable only when a chief is removed after he has stored up goods and made preliminary preparations for a potlatch. He may then carry out the rites intended, but designate the occasion a memorial potlatch. [775] Where often, however, the effect is limited to rites associated with the deceased. Consequently, there is mention of the initiation of neophytes into the secret cult societies,* there is an establishment of new seats for young relatives of the dead, and an strengthening of his rank. It must be explained once more that there is no unalterable sequence of prescribed rituals in either potlatch or memorial potlatch. The variations just mentioned are customary, not universal, and often present the ritual of the two ceremonies as identical. Except in these rare occasions when combined in a potlatch, the return of a dead relative is the central feature of both.

[84] [77] In recent years, the great increase in wealth has made it possible for a chief to perform a memorial potlatch even after the death of an unnamed relative. This was rarely the case in former times, but as there was no other means by which relatives were so ardently desired, every expedient was used to obtain the necessary goods. Occasionally, a chief happened to have the needful goods stored up so that he could give a memorial potlatch almost immediately. To such a fortunate individual the term, yanla, was applied, a word difficult to translate but combining the significances of rich, ready, fortunate, and wealthy.

[790] Memorial potlatches, like those of the ordinary kind, are usually held in the early autumn, though occasionally one may be postponed until after the fishing season. When an intending donor has decided that he owns sufficient goods, he first calls in his fellow-chiefs and makes known his intentions, at the same time expounding in considerable detail the myths which he proposes to use as themes for mourning songs, and for other [535]

*Performance of such rites at a memorial potlatch would be considered sacrilege by the Bella Bella and were always omitted during the period when their influence was important.

A relation is not regarded as an inalienable right, but as a tendency. So generations as months of a family may use one of these names, but the tradition is preserved, and when one is seen to be needed that such form has observed by ancestors of the forenamed one. Instances have occurred in which a person has obtained good luck without the tradition of this being in his family, but they are few. On the other hand, a man may lose the advantage of his association, even if he owns a portion of a mātsqui or a wetsi, through failure to observe ceremonial chastity.

Some of the Bella Coola believe that the mātsqui and the wetsi are the same animal, whilings assume these two forms; others that the two are distinct supernatural creatures. In any case the powers and characteristics ascribed to them are the same. Most families have a tradition regarding the appearance of the one or the other to their ancestors, and the information to be derived from them is always about that particular creature. Hence the details here described are probably not all known to any one individual.

The different types of appearances, and the different types of unknown called forth, should be noted. These are due to failure on the part of the Bella Coola to rationalize the non-usual of their concepts. Each man recounts what he believes to have happened to one of his ancestors or friends, irrespective of whether or not the methods used may be in direct contradiction to those employed by someone else on another occasion. A man who has heard of the mātsqui, for example, from his father and mother, may describe contradictory means of dealing with the creature, and in each case may affirm that disaster would have followed if the method described had not been carried out. Such lack of co-ordination is typical of the Bella Coola.

According to an elderly Kimsquit man, the mātsqui was brought down in the beginning of time by one of his own ancestors, Omqumkilda. It is to this fact that he attributes his own near approach to one on two occasions. As it is fre-

538 In the beginning of time it used to sing

789 "I shall see a space and see where the Bella Coola River has been to bounds on account of the running salmon in it."

825 The people used to laugh as it repeated this song year after year, until the bird changed its song:

856 "I shall see a space and see where all is still and clear. There there [534] will be Death instead of salmon in Bella Coola."

The next year the streams were so clear that no fish could be caught and the surviving people asked the bird to return to its first song. When it did so, the waters became murky so that it was possible to catch salmon once more.

The Bella Bella, not the Bella Coola, use the body of a blue jay to cause an infant to grow up with the ability to master difficult tunes in the same way that the bird has a variety of notes. The method of applying this medicine could not be learnt.

789 Most of the above medicines are well known and can be applied by any parent. If, however, a man has employed one 856 of them successfully on a number of occasions, he is often requested to use his ability for others. In such a case, the father of the benefited child is expected to reimburse his friend.

[184] The application or non-application of such medicines is purely the concern of the child's family; they can use as many as they like, or none at all, according to their discretion.

The following medicines are used during the first year of life:

304 To Cause Beauty

789 Bandages of the softest undyed cedar-bark are prepared for infants of both sexes soon after birth. A woman who is a good

856 artist is requested to draw with charcoal two pictures on one

532 of the pieces of bark—of handsome men if the child is a boy, or of lovely women if a girl. An unmarked wrapping is fastened round the infant's head, then the painted one so arranged that one picture is over the forehead, the other over the occiput, and finally other plain bandages to cover the whole. These [826] are left in place for about one year. They flatten the forehead

*595 Alpanim comes and confers on Sacrist mercers with Sacrisbiain, his assistant in affairs connected with his functions as leader of the supernatural Sacrists.[1] This being acts as announcer and intermediary with Alpanim, but himself lacks the power of initiating mercers. The two discuss whether or not it is advisable to allow moral Sacrists to perform certain dances of the type known as Sacrisses (II, p. 108), and if so, they transmit the necessary power to the earthly dancer who has the proper prerogatives, thus enabling him to give a graphic representation of what is done in the upper land.

*595 This is the essence of the Sacrist dances. Each portrays a performance given by one of the supernatural beings in the house above, or some other aspect of his activities. Each earthly dancer has as patron a supernatural being, usually the one who carries out the dance of which his own is a model, and between patron and protégé there exists a relationship by means of which the latter receives the power necessary to perform. To do so, the uninitiated believes that he must receive a gnat, which can be translated as "call," from his associate above. Moreover, not only is each patron a supernatural being, but each is guided by Alpanim in the performance of the Sacrist rites in the land above, which indirectly increases the prestige of the protégé.

---

*595 [1] The differences of belief of individual Bella Coola, dependent upon family traditions, is nowhere shown with greater clearness than in this meeting of the leaders of the supernatural dances. It is clear that the Bella Coola have no uniformity of belief, even in what might be regarded as fundamental concepts. One informant, well versed in Sacrist mercers, asserted that there are five supernatural leaders, Alpanim and his assistants, Sacrisbiain, Sacrisplain, Sacrisbiain, and Sacrisbiain. Others were equally emphatic that Alpanim is the Sacrist name of the supreme deity, and that Sacrisbiain, Sacrisbiain, and Sacrisbiain, are merely other designations for the same deity with regard to different functions. This belief has been followed during the monograph, by designating the supreme deity as Alpanim, the name by which he is termed with respect to his Sacrist powers. These two opinions are not as basically different as appears at first sight. A man is considered as having two, or more, personalities with respect to different rites at which he is called by different names. Since the supreme deity is regarded as a superman, who functions in diverse manners, it is not difficult to understand how these are sometimes ascribed to different individuals, and sometimes to the one under different names.

[828]

*575 this unfortunately leads them to believe in the powers which 424 they claim. Each Sacrist prerogative has had one of these 775 origins:
776
[78] (a) It was brought down by the first people. Before coming to this earth each of them saw in the land above his patron, who instructed him in a type of dance, and told him where his repository on this world would be. It is assumed that the earliest men were in contact with all the supernatural beings before coming to this earth, but it is believed that each was "blind" to the powers of his fellows, and thus had only one.

[79] (b) It was derived from an experience with one of the supernatural beings of this world. In this case the repository was either at a spot indicated by the apparition, or at the actual scene of the vision.

(c) A powerful chief sometimes allowed an ancestral to a Sacrist name. It is believed that this occurred comparatively frequently in ancient times when chiefs had semi-supernatural power. In such cases each followed his own inclination in the choice of a patron,[1] and usually made his own repository within his house, giving strength to it by killing and burying a slave there. Although several Bella Coola informants described this, Kimsquit Indians denied that it could ever have taken place. They say that all repositories were long ago dug by Nawadjynum, a male supernatural being sent down by Alquetsim at the beginning of time to prepare the habitations of Ana'kwulaisis and her husband. After doing this, he returned to the land above where he has since resided.

[84]

It will thus be seen that the prerogative of a Sacrist is always derived from some experience of an ancestor. In carrying out the rite, the dancer feels that he is continuing the works of his forbears, a factor which increases his desire that neither error nor carelessness on his part shall dim the prestige of the society before the uninitiated. And, further, a man who has spent

*575
778

[1] The Bella Coola cite such actions as proof of the amazing abilities of their ancestors.

The making of the masks is allowed to different hahaiat, usually in accordance with the dancer's wishes, although a mandal normally gives out the actual tasks. The dancer, or one of his relatives, bestows presents on each person to whom work is allotted. The evening of nuxnalitsap is called nulimalus.

The third day is gulus. Those to whom mask making has been entrusted assemble early in the dancer's house to start their work. About noon they are provided with a meal, to which other hahaiat may be invited. By late afternoon, when most of the work has been accomplished, the ships are carefully swept up and burnt, and the house tidied, ready for the uninitiated who will be invited during the evening. On either this day or the one preceding, a platform, with raised sides, is built behind the fire on which the dancer can conceal himself and where he is supposed to remain during the remainder of the four days. About dusk the hahaiat are called in; the singers take their places behind the fire, Cannibals, Breakers, and Scratchers are in one of the back corners, where a screening enclosure may have been constructed for them, and the remainder group themselves without distinction around the walls. In Kimsquit, though not in Bella Coola, one or more of the masks may be displayed, suspended from a sloping pole behind the fire. If the singers think it necessary, they may practise the dancer's two songs once more. Then the uninitiated are called in, taking their places near the doorway. The singers beat out one of the dancer's songs and he dances in time to it, and the same is repeated for his second song. After some delay, which appears to be one of the requisites of every hahaiat performance, the singers strike up the songs of either a novice or a hahaiat, especially one who has already had a call during the ceremonial season, and the one thus summoned dances to his two songs. Late in the season, when many hahaiat have performed, only one song may be used, to prevent the ceremony dragging out to an interminable length, and songs of previous years are omitted. In any case, the ritual lasts for most of the night. When all have danced, the

[Kwakiutl Society Initiation]

*[illegible] struggling to free, to the secret meeting-place. There the [illegible] chiefs discuss what shall be done with him; some suggest [illegible] he be killed, others a lesser fate, and finally someone advises initiation. After apparently due deliberation, this is thus agreed; the slave is told the mysteries of the society and warned of the dire fate which will befall him if he is unwilling of his knowledge. The actual ceremonial the *[illegible] admission do not vary according to the preliminaries of [illegible]

Initiation can take place at any time during the season. After consulting with the marshals in order to an evening when no other dance is to take place, the relatives of the neophyte, whom it will be convenient to term X, are the Sodaxwa to their house. Sometimes songs are sung like of rehearsal, at other times food is distributed at once. As people are eating, one of the marshals stands up to the them, saying that X's relatives propose to take him to repository of the name ———, so that he may become Sacwa. X, to whom this may be the first intimation, is from his house and taken from the village by several kinsmen, with one or more of the marshals. The Sodaxwa parts and tell the uninitiated in the other houses that gone to meet Awi'kenulaic. His companions bear the with mingled envy and thankfulness that they are not this dangerous privilege.

[178] In ancient times X and his guides may actually have crawled to his repository, but for several generations it has been customary for the party merely to go to some spot in the woods for the night. Those accompanying him as much of the ritual of the society as they think fit forgetting to emphasize the trust put upon him, and the which will befall him if he should communicate his knowledge.
[187] He is expected to report that he went to the repository
[184] lying face downwards on the ground, he saw Awi'kenulaic, Kimaquit he is supposed also to see her husband.*

[176] *According to one old Bella Coola a sister of Awi'kenulaic also every repository.

[Kwakiutl Society Initiation]

X sometimes receives two prerogatives at his initiation, one from each parent, or from some other interested relative. In this case both are expounded. The singers listen intently, knowing that they will later be called upon to compose songs on the theme, or themes. According to some informants they immediately sing one, as if they had just created it, though it was really prepared in advance. The kukwiut listen until they have mastered it.

Helpers now distribute the food provided by X's father, or whoever is responsible for his initiation. At every kwiut ceremonial the marshals are the first recipients, then the singers, and finally the others without distinction. As the guests are eating, X's father gives presents to all, without deference to rank. An announcer calls out:

"Here are [for example] ten bear-skins from X's mother. They are to obtain for him his cedar-bark bracelets."

These goods are then distributed. Similarly other gifts from various relatives are handed out for his anklets, his blanket, his collar, his head-dress, and all other parts of his clothing. As each item of his ceremonial costume is validated, X dons the prepared article. A novice's head-dress consists of a round roll of dyed cedar-bark, covering a grass frame; in Staur and the other villages of the upper valley this is decorated with a tuft of swan's down. The kukwiut of these villages also wear a distinctive decoration consisting of a swan's skin with the feathers attached. In recent years it has been customary to pile all the goods together and distribute them as ály·ll, which has the significance of "something that has vanished for the novice's dyed cedar-bark." Theoretically, the aim of the donor is to bestow his presents on all equally, but if he finds that he has some remaining, he gives these to the chiefs, or to the relatives of someone whom he expects will soon be a novice. None of the goods used in general distributions are returnable, but a chief who receives an extra gift at the end usually remembers from whom it was received and cancels his indebtedness at the earliest opportunity. There is no close connection between the disbursements and the worth of the

[The Dance of Noakunim]

903 approaches the Bella Coola River, and proceeds up it, beneath 824 the surface of the water, invisible to all. Its destination is 825 Smaisw-a, whence its captain leaps to Nazqulwaiste to await the coming of Alqwaiim. The crew consists of a number of supernatural beings, who will be described in connection with the ceremonial on the night of sulaxam. This canoe, which brings the salmon and berries to Bella Coola, has four masts but no sails, and is enormous. Whenever the weather is fine, Noākynum lowers first one side and then the other of his craft so that the salmon may leave; after swimming around for a time they always return, refreshed by their exercise. In former [785 times when people were purified by ceremonial chastity, sev-
[831 eral succeeded in seeing the craft, and from them it is known [787 that it is about six hundred yards in length, that it travels without leaving a wake, that any canoes passing near are sucked along after it, and that a mallard duck, perched on the bow, quacks continuously. Intelligent informants agreed that the bringing of the salmon during the autumn was inconsistent, but they could offer no explanation. One man believed that [620 this was pointed out not many years ago by a man whose [776 patron was Noākynum, but that the marshals requested him not to upset established ritual by too much logic. Noākynum 575 is patron for several kukusiut, who are believed by the uninitiated to be able to see his canoe. As he passes up the river 796 the kusiut dances begin.
184

It is unnecessary to describe the full ritual in each village, 424 as this is supposed to be identical, and probably contains only 551 slight variations, if any. In Tcumstl the kusiut who has the prerogative of seeing Noākynum is a certain Qaxolān-i,[14] in Kimsquit, Ałuskinuasam,[15] and in Slskistl, Xemtnum. Although, [14]Details of this dance were learnt from the father of Qaxolān-i, who intimated that the name was a family possession. Several months later an old woman referred to the lending of this designation by her father and said that the present user had failed to return it. Bitter feelings are often caused by disputes of this kind.

115
426
578

[15]Meaning "Cloud Covered," a reference to the invisibility of his patron, as if the latter were hidden by clouds. Many kusiut names have signif. ances of this type.

[The Dance of Noakxnim]

of his relatives, has given them for this purpose. When he 575*
crouches during the chorus they crowd close around, almost 796* concealing him. Particularly in those dances fraught with danger to the performer, it is customary for any number of his 535 friends, either men or women, to dance to "help" him. Anyone wishing to do so merely stands up and begins, in time to the music, irrespective of what part of the house he may be in. [543]
It is considered contrary to good manners for a father so to help his son, or a brother a brother, but a dancer is pleased to have aid from anyone else. It is said that in Bella Bella [171] certain kukuxiut have definite prerogatives of helping in this way, but this is not the case in Bella Coola. Throughout every dance the kukuxiut women utter their droning cry. [533]

This, then, is the type of dance which the uninitiated in 575*
the lowest house see. They hear the song, too, and gaze with 796* awe at X, imbued as he is with the supernatural power of sight. Then the sounding-boards are picked up and taken to the next house, where the whole ceremonial is repeated. This is done at each house of the village.* All the kukuxiut now return to X's house, where he once more dances to his song. A box-drum is always used to help the singers in keeping time, and [534]
when the song has been finished two men continue in turn to beat it all day. X always arranges to have a relative or friend superintend the distribution of food, which follows his final [574] dancing. As the kukuxiut are eating, the marshals deliver their usual admonishments, a task that accompanies every meal. Then they call on the people to erect a raised platform between the fire and the back-wall of the house. Materials have been placed in readiness so that it is an easy matter to build a framework a few feet in height, of which the flat top is screened by a matting wall about three feet high. This is often decorated [531] with designs of dyed cedar-bark without ritual significance as far as the Bella Coola of today are aware. X climbs to this platform, the kukuxiut disperse, and only the incessant pounding of the drum proves that some unusual event is taking place.

*In Bella Coola, but perhaps not in Kimsquit.

[184]

* 575 salmon are properly looked after, in fact, he is practically the
* 796 supernatural archetype of the River Guardian. Imimâtnaix, 776 "The Mooring," is a supernatural child who stays with the Resident, and whose sole function appears to be the mooring of Nuâkynum's craft. Dakdakâmem is sent by Smaiem-a, who in this connection appears to have human intelligence, to greet Nuâkynum, and with him come Smaiem-a's son, Atâlmâtnum,* to assist Nuâkynum in poling his craft up the river. All these beings are patrons for different kukuxiut. The Resident is also known as Amtâklis.

* 575 The kukuxiut assemble in X's house as on the previous
* 796 occasions; according to some informants two songs are used 787 on this day, others say only one. The people proceed in the usual manner to the lowest house, and make their way up-
[533] stream. When about half through the village, however, X shrieks out that Nuwâtlam has brought a call to him. The woman and the heralds cry out loudly, X hastily returns to his own house, from which the uninitiated are at once expelled, and the kuxiut whistles sound from within. Nuwâtlam is one of the supernatural beings who has travelled with Nuâkynum for the sole purpose of bringing a call to X. If the calendrical
[805] experts have been successful in their reckonings, the November [821] moon will first be visible on the night of this day. Several of the older men admitted that errors were common, and that sometimes four days more had to elapse, in which it was said that Nuâkynum was poling up the river. As he passes, his dancers in the different villages receive their calls on successive nights. It is assumed that he can go by several adjacent [184] settlements on the same night, but the kuxiut season is two or three days shorter in Snuw and the upper villages than in Kumpo-ti. Exact information on this point was unavailable.
* 575 As already described, Nuâkynum travels to Smaiem-a, whence
* 796 he leaps to Nuxpulwaiste and places his pole within the house.
773 All the supernatural beings crowd in after him to wait for Alquaxâm, but as soon as the latter enters, Nuâkynum seizes his

*Some informants state that there are four of these beings.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

pole and starts his journey downstream. 575*

Now that X has received his call, the ceremonial continues 796* for four days more, in a manner typical of kuxiut dances. Only [773] variations from the pattern about to be described will be given in later dance rituals.

X spends the rest of this day on which the call has come 575* to him, the twenty-fourth of the whole rite, within his house. 796*
In the evening a herald summons the kukuxiut, this being the 184 night of kustómow. In Stuax the call used is: 203*

Shinap Stuaxo, "Cure, ye Stuax people," because it is believed that a call almost kills a Stuax person. This is probably true for the people of the other villages of the upper valley, but elsewhere this cry is used only when a novice receives his first call. In the lower valley and at Kimsquit the cry is:

Snapuxuldimut kukuxiut, "Bring light, ye kukuxiut."

Care is always taken to use the right expression with refer- 575*
ence to the locality of the dancer's repository, irrespective of 796* where he may happen to be living.

All the kukuxiut are expected to attend, in fact, they are 533 glad to do so, but attendance is compulsory for novices only.
When all have assembled, one of the leading singers takes command. The coming of his call is supposed to have made [787]
X light-headed, and he must be cured by a frenzied beating of sticks four times repeated. During this X himself remains quiescent. The singers now group themselves into a close circle to compose a song describing the supernatural beings seen by X during the day. As a rule, each man has one or more tunes in his mind which he hums to his associates as he softly beats time. Then another does the same, and this is repeated until unanimity of opinion is reached concerning the most suitable. The leader of the choir fits the proper words to this, assisted by his comrades and perhaps by X himself, or someone well acquainted with his prerogative.* As soon as the singers have finished their work they widen their circle and sing the song loudly so that it can be heard and learnt by all.

*This song, like the one used earlier, is sometimes prepared in advance.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

by X is called. Having dined, the guests depart while the craftsmen continue their labours. Towards dusk the house is cleared up, the chips thrown on the fire and everything made ready. On this night the uninitiated are invited, but there is a wide and important difference in ritual between Bella Coola and Kimsquit. In the former the masks are carefully concealed, whereas in Kimsquit one or two, or sometimes all, are suspended behind the fire by the carpenters. It is exceedingly difficult for an observer to understand why this practice does not at once remove all secrecy from the rite. The explanation appears to lie in the fact that the uninitiated, ignorant of how they have been made, see in these strange objects evidence of the power of the kukuriat. In Kimsquit, moreover, members of the society emphasize the fact that the dances are supernaturally endowed representations of what the beings above are doing and performing, and it is only at certain rites that they are actually supposed to be present. One old Bella Coola remembered having heard from his grandfather that long before his time the carpenters used to make the masks in their own houses where the uninitiated could see them; the dancer would come in, wave his arm over the craftsman's head and cry hoip if the workmanship was excellent. The man who described this expressed his own scepticism, and added that it would have destroyed the key-note of secrecy. A possible explanation of this important difference in ritual will be given at the end of this chapter; for the present it will be enough to point out that the masks are left suspended in Kimsquit, and concealed in Bella Coola.

Towards dusk the herald goes to every house to summon the kukuriat, who have adorned themselves for the ceremony by washing and painting, as the uninitiated have also done. The members assemble slowly, in fact an observer finds the interminable delays of every kuriat dance most provoking. At last all have appeared and taken their places around the fire, while the uninitiated eagerly wait near the door for the invitation which they know will soon be given. One of the mas-

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

pelled; a Cannibal (II, p. 71) begins to growl and those who are not members of the society leave hastily. 575* 796*

The next event is the burning of the masks. The wearers remove them and lay them on the floor in front of the back-room at the point marked O in the accompanying sketch. Then X asks a friend to help him. The person chosen picks up any two of the masks and carries them around the fire, eastwise, through B, where X is standing, to the point marked A (see Fig. 1). The helper throws one mask on the fire, and as he does so X lifts his arms, as if throwing up some heavy weight, at the same time uttering hoip, which has a beneficial effect in returning the mask whence it came.

FIG. 1.
Diagram showing positions of participants during mask-burning.

[789]

As one informant put it: "May you have a safe journey."

The assistant throws the second mask on the fire, and again X throws up his arms and cries hoip. He crosses to A where he twice repeats the same cry, then returns to B. The assistant picks up two more masks and throws them on the fire at the same place and in the same manner as the two preceding, X also doing as he did before. The masks are taken two at a time until all have been burnt. The explanation given is to avoid the danger of the uninitiated seeing them, but whether or not this is a mere rationalization is doubtful. The Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella do not burn their masks. Next the singers strike up the first of X's songs and he dances, while musicians and audience join in; this is repeated for each of his songs. If it is desired to hasten the ritual, the lengthy singing and dancing is replaced by X giving only a short dance, unaccompanied by music. The Bella Coola do not appear to understand why they dance at this time, although it is said that it makes easy the departure of the masks. [532] [171]

In Kimsquit the ritual of mask-burning is slightly different, [184]

[The Dance of Noakxnim]

*575 since a certain kusiut has the definite prerogative of throwing *796 them on the fire. As each is tossed into the flames he calls out:
●184 "Please return directly to the supernatural ones."

The only exception is for the mask of Ano'likwolsaix for which his cry is:

"Please return directly to your repository."

*575 Before X can again take his normal place in the community
*796 it is necessary to remove from him the call, which is conceived 987 as being something physical that has entered his body. This is the belief taught to the uninitiated so emphatically that the kukusiut themselves appear to believe it; at any rate, whatever their inward thoughts, they act as if the call had substance. As soon as the masks have been burnt one of the kukusiut suggests that it is time to expel the call. All the kukusiut in the house crowd around X, as many as can reach his body pressing against his stomach with their hands, always in an upward direction. Higher and higher they go, from stomach to chest, from chest to neck, as if massaging some object. At last it is thought to have been expelled, and X brings his hands together, as if holding something with great care. Suddenly he throws them up in the air, opening them as he does so, and calling out:

Ānukāldimut ola āmātaxgnu, "Go back to your ancient home."

Those ritual words have been handed down from ancient times and are used by every kusiut to dismiss his call. Whither it is sent is problematical. Some say to X's repository, others to Nusqulxwaista; the Bella Coola do not know. Often one of his songs has been sung on the sidewalk outside X's house; the call may be returned from there.

This rite ends the ceremony and the kukusiut disperse. It is obvious that every nsbusam must vary according to the patron of the dancer, but the above is typical of the ritual. A call can now come to any kusiut, and one often descends at this time, so that X's nsbusam is lsxtāmem for another dancer.

*575 For the rest of the ceremonial season X has to observe *796 certain rules. He must wear his collar of cedar-bark and 302
292

[The Dance of Wila]

"Path Clearers" see to it that no one passes between him and the fire. The uninitiated are not expelled from the house and their curiosity is aroused. Meanwhile the singers prepare songs for X, describing his supernatural patrons, and some kukusiut carpenters are instructed to make in secret ten small pieces of wood, about one foot in length and six inches wide, sometimes half-moon shaped. They cover these with dyed cedar-bark on which they paint the designs appropriate to each being.[31] On the morning of the fourth day,[32] X blackens his face with soot or charcoal, obtained by pouring water on a fire, and dons the usual kusiut costume. A herald then invites the kukusiut to assemble in X's house. Presently they proceed to the lowest house of the village, where the singers beat out the tunes of the "Path Clearers," remembered from a previous year. They dance, while X stands, shifting his feet and moving his apron as if he also wished to perform but was too weary to do so. This is repeated at every house of the village, except that in which the potlatch was held; most of the kukusiut follow the procession, as do some of the uninitiated. Finally, with X last of all, they enter the potlatch house, where foreign guests and many uninitiated have assembled.

In Kimsquit the preliminary four days of watching are omitted, but from this point on, the rites of the two areas are practically identical.[33] As X enters, all the kukusiut who have pounding sticks begin to beat on the floor and the women drone. Without delay, and without attention to the timeless thumping, X begins to dance, sunwise, around the fire, at intervals casting on it particles of eagle down which have the effect of making the supernatural ones above take their places. He calls out intermittently that he can see the beings above sitting down, and a herald repeats his remarks loudly. In Bella Coola the four "Path Clearers" walk close behind X.

[31]The distinctive designs are given by Boas, to whom the reader is referred.

[32]It is probable that X must first lie down when Nuŭkymx's dancer reports that the canoe is at the mouth of the river.

[33]It is uncertain whether the differences in ritual are typical of Bella Coola and Kimsquit, or merely represent variations in individual prerogatives.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Wi'.a]

*575 *796 782 The last to seat himself is Kulilias Nuskämpta, an obstreperous individual, who always wants more presents than anyone else. When X announces that the beings above have taken their places, a carpenter brings forward the object covered with cedar-bark and painted with a design of Xemxemälotla,[48] holds it above X's head, and then gives it to a herald who casts it into the fire. At the same time X throws on the flames some dyed cedar-bark, some undyed cedar-bark, a little eagle down, and some olachen grease, saying:

"Please Xemxemälotla,[49] accept this offering and be present," and throws his hands up in the air as if casting some object upwards.

Still dancing, X calls out hoip several times.

The painted representation and the cedar-bark are objects which Xemxemälotla likes to receive; the olachen grease supplies the flame on which they ascend to him. The same procedure is repeated for the eight other brothers, with slight variations in the words addressed to each. To Omqemkilka, for example, X says:

[534]

Ätcipul-ätnälkma Woodpecker-coloured[50] hmqemkilkaals Omqemkilka.[51]	dlxunnälxwumdätonas is the place where he sits,	exqätxmsuals the recipient,[52]

When the time comes to invite the hungry Thitcäplikäw-a, an offering of food instead of bark is cast upon the flames. X *575 continues to dance after the final gift, and presently a thud *796 is heard on the roof while some kusiut, chosen beforehand for the purpose, compresses a hidden bladder-whistle which the 787 uninitiated know is the voice of the call. Whether they be-

[48] In Kimsquit the offerings are made by a kusiut who has this prerogative in connection with the game Ishälkmas-a.

[49] His other name is Ocqäsem, "The Recipient of Many Gifts."

[50] Ätcipul-ätna is one of the larger woodpeckers, the species could not be identified.

[51] This designation, properly applied only to Xemxemälotla, is often used for his brothers as well.

[52] These words are virtually sung, each vertical line marking the end of each subdivision. A record was made of the music for the National Museum of Canada; record VII D 6a; singer, Jim Pollard.

[184] [776] [126]

[The Dance of Wila]

*575 *996 houses. The night's ceremony concludes with a meal and the admonitions of the marshals.

No further description is needed of the rites taking place the next day, that of nasiutâlsap, when a second song is composed, again dealing with X's patrons, and wood for masks is cut. The evening's ceremonial does not last as long as that of lustâmem.

[532] [302] [515] The next day, gotlem, the carpenters work at the masks, some of which must be finished by nightfall. Late in the evening both kukusiut and uninitiated prepare themselves by painting and washing; at this time the young men provide pans of warm water for their female friends. As already described, the kukusiut are the first to enter, followed by the uninitiated when all is ready. In Kimsquit they see the masks [184] of at least some of X's supernatural patrons suspended by cords of dyed cedar-bark from a sloping pole that stretches from the floor at the base of the back-room to the cross-beam behind the fire. It is said, although the informant could not guarantee the truth of the statement, that long ago masks had to be displayed at this dance, though it was optional at others. It is a serious and sacred time, one at which frivolity is quite out of place, and the marshals are in readiness to punish any [488] offender. One very old informant told of having seen a marshal strike down and kill a kusiut from another house for holding intercourse with a woman on this night. The heralds *[203] [537] stay near the door, repeating and enlarging on the remarks of the marshals; the fluency of these functionaries always adds appreciably to the success of any Bella Coola rite. On this occasion X and the dancer of Neâkymm must perform, followed by those who have danced in former years, according to the desire of the singers; later in the season, when many kukusiut have performed, the rite may continue almost till dawn, for all must dance. After the departure of the uninitiated the kukusiut eat leisurely, while a marshal addresses them, commenting on the ritual and, perhaps, asking a man

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Cannibal Dance]

among the Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, and Rivers Inlet people. Indeed, in Bella Coola a poor man may be the most dreaded Cannibal of all, if he has been able duly to validate and perform his right in this respect. Nor is the dance carried out with the same rigour in Bella Coola as among the tribes of the outer coast.

The ritual of different prerogatives varies to such an extent that several accounts must be given, in spite of the repetitions that this form of presentation entails. On account of the length of time necessary, a Cannibal dance usually begins early in the season. The following describes the manner in which Kämätslaks of Kimsquit, who can bite the living, carried out his rite; it was obtained from his brother, who is thoroughly conversant with the details. It will be convenient to refer to Kämätslaks as X, and to use the present tense throughout.

A meeting is held at which the marshals and others choose, in agreement with X and his relatives, a day suitable for him to commence his performance. Under normal circumstances it is on some qutlem that a marshal announces that he can hear X's call, and on the following evening, when the ritual has been completed, the uninitiated are startled to hear continuous whistling from the slopes of the mountains near the village. The instruments used are of the usual bladder type, but the long-drawn-out sound, termed Ñiulässa, is said to be the voice of the kindly supernatural woman, Switsmän·a.[41]

[41] The sole function of this being seems to be the restoring to life of those who appear to have been killed in the performance of hamat rites. The Bella Coola are uncertain whether or not she is identical with Tlaxoplilan·a. The noise which heralds her coming is produced by the whistles of four hulusiut who throughout the night range the forests and mountains within ear-shot of the village. By bending their heads up and down, they are able to increase the weirdness and apparent elusiveness of the sound. The four travel in single file; the leader blows, and when his breath is nearly exhausted he presses the hand of the second man, who starts whistling forthwith, while the original leader drops to the rear. As the second becomes weary, he signals in the same way to the third, and so on; in this way the whistling is continuous, and the uninitiated are convinced that it cannot be sounded by mortals, even if such an idea should occur to them. If a non-member should meet the four, they would at once kill him or make him a prisoner, keeping him out of sight until he could be initiated into the society.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 restraining him bend too, throwing him back into the centre
*796 of the circle with the aid of the rope and their bodies. Meanwhile the women are droning, and some of them pound on the 787 floor with sticks; intermittent calls of hoip and the sound of the whistle add to the weird confusion. The circle of kukusiut often revolves around X, each man jumping in time to his neighbours, so that the din is increased. After about ten minutes, the circle gradually contracts to a double line, and the rope is slipped over X's head, as if tying up a dangerous beast. One end is given to a kusiut willing to have a call, and he goes around leading X as if he were a captive animal. The heralds go to every house to report what has taken place.[48]

Towards dusk two young kukusiut are sent up the mountains. Soon after the sun has set, members of the society gather on the sidewalk outside X's house, to which X is led. He is still struggling, and the kukusiut press close around him, as if to restrain him; thereby effectually concealing everything from the uninitiated watching from the doorways of their houses. At a signal from one of the senior kukusiut, all the members of the society shriek out ye -- at the top of their voices. At the same time X, aided by his fellows, slips from his rope and hides himself within a box-drum, which is then carried back to his house. Warned by the cry, the two lads up the mountains forthwith begin to growl. This furnishes clear proof to the uninitiated that X has been able, owing to the power within him, to slip away from the closest bonds of his fellows and travel aloft. In answer to the growls from above, a kusiut with a powerful voice calls out:

"Go aloft on the right road. Your power will enable you to escape the dangers. But do not stray from the narrow trail."

[184] In Kimsquit, though not in Bella Coola, the kukusiut then go to every house, crying and wailing, thinking of the Cannibals

[48] It is not clear whether or not the uninitiated are sometimes present at the roping.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

who have gone aloft and never returned,[4] and of course increasing the fear of the uninitiated. They then go back to X's home where a marshal speaks, asking all to keep silence so that they will be able to hear X when he returns from the land above. No noise is permitted during his absence, even the discharge of muskets being forbidden. The man who carries the rope from which X escaped always receives a call on this night, because the supernatural beings have seen the important part he has played in the rite, and his patron recognizes it in this way. This is the fiction taught to the uninitiated and, accordingly, the rope-holder is some kusiut who wishes to have a call. After the usual curing,[5] one song is composed for the rope-holder, and sung very softly, since the night's ceremony is termed Ałoliqosnumx, "The Actionless Night," or Nuxstimut, "The Silent Night." The uninitiated believe that the kukusiut are filled with woe and foreboding at the fate before X. It is early morning before they disperse. 575* 796* 787 [184]

The next day, nusiutälsap for the rope-holder, the usual ritual is omitted since the pretence of grief and fear must still be preserved. Thus the necessary wood for the rope-holder's masks is cut silently. The collar and rope from which X escaped are hung on the wall of his house, and when a herald summons the kukusiut during the evening, he bids them assemble to watch over these objects. Although a second song, composed during the day, is practised for the rope-holder, it is done so softly that the uninitiated from neighbouring houses imagine that the kukusiut are really brooding over their loss. The only sound that reaches them is an occasional hoip, accentuating their fear. After the customary distribution of work and food the kukusiut disperse. 575* 796*

On the morrow, the rope-holder's qothm, the uninitiated are summoned, because it is assumed that members of the [787]

[4] If a Cannibal dies during his period of concealment he is buried secretly. The uninitiated are told that his power enabled him to cross a yawning chasm in the land above, but then it failed him, so that he was unable to return to his friends. [766] [772]

[5] This consists of the frenzied beating of sticks, repeated four times. [761]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 without apparent cause. It will be convenient to refer to *796 Łułulimut as X.

Having first obtained sanction from the marshals, X begins [184] his preparations. The continuous whistling that in Kimsquit presages a call to a Cannibal is lacking, but on the morning when it has been decided that X will start his dance, he discards his clothing and goes to the house in which a kusiut ceremony is taking place, and from which the uninitiated have accordingly been ejected. After droning for an instant, he suddenly leaps at a man and bites him. The "victim," warned of what is to happen, has probably prepared himself by making a small cut so that his blood can gush forth easily. Then X rushes from the house, growling ferociously, and biting a number of kukusiut, either men or women, on arm, neck, or leg. Several co-members accompany the Cannibal, while the uninitiated cower within the bedrooms, hoping to be unobserved. A herald goes continually through the village, calling out:

"The dreaded one [Pāxotla] has bitten three [or whatever the number may be] people."

X spends a considerable time rushing around biting people, the effect being greatly magnified by the outcry of his assistants and the terror of the uninitiated who cringe in fear lest they should be bitten by this seeming maniac with the strange power. When weary, X dashes off into the forest to rest; his followers go with him and sit down in two groups, men in one, women in the other.

About noon a herald goes to every house calling out, ipānap, which means, "Hold him down."

Two or more kukusiut have been sent up the mountain above the village while the others go to X's house, from which the uninitiated were expelled at the first signs of his fury. A rope, previously prepared, is lashed around X in spite of his struggles, and tied to pieces of wood on which several kukusiut sit to increase the weight, but arranged so that X can slip out of his bonds without the ruse being apparent. As a dog-eating placing their hands against his mouth and neck and pressing downwards to the chest as if forcing some object from his throat, constantly uttering the cry of hoip. When the obstacle has been driven down, X is offered his first food, choice morsels of dried salmon. He eats some of this but bites a small piece from the spoon, and does the same with the dish in which water is held to his lips. The assistance of a shaman is often required to feed the Cannibal.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The powers of, and restrictions upon, X for the remainder of the ceremonial season are identical with those already described. At the end of the period, however, the kukusiut assemble in X's house to rid him of his sqiols which, it will be remembered, had been forced from his mouth down into his chest. By means of a violent repetition of hoip and pressing with the hands, this is extracted and cast into another kusiut. As soon as the latter has received it, he acts as if he had become a Cannibal. Dashing out, he enters each house in turn, growling and calling out xwa-, xwa-, xwa-, and at intervals ripping up the planking from the floor or pulling off boards from the wall. Then the substitute re-enters X's house, where the power is returned to X himself, who, this done, rushes to every dwelling and repeats the growling and destruction. Though the uninitiated realize that two different individuals have appeared as Cannibals, they are too awe-stricken to feel anything but wonder. When he gets back to his own house, X is surrounded by the kukusiut who call out hoip, in unison four times, while as many of them as can find places press upwards with their hands against his neck and throat to expel the sqiols. This succeeds in sending back X's power to the mysterious regions above whence it came. While most of the kukusiut beat time vigorously, a number of them pull down the platform and cast it into the fire. They then have a meal, while a marshal gives weighty advice about the care that must be exercised during the coming year in guarding their sacred secrets from the uninitiated; whereupon they all disperse.

The chief contrasts between this rite and the one previously

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

described for Kimsquit are the lack of the cannibalistic incubus and the presence of the sqiolz. It must be emphasized that these are differences of individual prerogative alone; many Kimsquit Cannibals perform with sqiolz, many Bella Coola with incubus. 595* 796* 787 184 424

Although every effort was used to obtain not only the general principles of the rite, but also confirmation of details, it must be remembered that many of these were omitted at the performances observed, so that reliance had to be placed upon the accounts of participants. It is probable that errors of omission have been committed in consequence; these may account for some of the discrepancies, but the most potent factors are undoubtedly lack of uniformity in individual prerogatives, and failure to enforce absolute rigidity in ritual. The two accounts just given by no means illustrate all the variations possible in this dance; others will become evident in descriptions of the rites of Cannibals other than those who can bite the living.

The following is an account of the ritual of a Dog-eating Cannibal, Oleán i, of Sunxt. Long, long ago one of the ancestors of this man saw a pack of wolves devouring some dogs. In some mysterious way, which even the Bella Coola do not profess to be able to understand, the power of a wolf entered the beholder so that he was impelled to eat dogs. He was then carried away to the mysterious land above where he saw and was assisted by several supernatural beings. The first Oleán i was able to transmit to one of his relatives his ability to eat dogs, and the prerogative has since been carried out by his descendants. Should the holder of the name fail to tell his destined heir the details of the experiences which are to be embodied in his songs, his successor can obtain these from the singers who, of course, are familiar with the themes used on previous occasions. The repository of the name, Oleán i, is beneath a huge boulder not far from some carved rocks behind the village of Sunxt (see Plate 6).[1] It is said that many years ago some reckless uninitiated placed poles as levers beneath 595* 796* 787 773 [424] 595* 796* [798]

[1] [see category 116, p 84 (F) - ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

meal with admonitions from the marshals; then they too disperse. 575* 796*

During the following day a hole is dug behind the fire of sufficient depth to conceal X, when standing in it, as high as the thighs. Towards dusk he takes up his position in this pit; his face is blackened and he wears the customary cedar-bark collar and a belt-apron to hold the frame in place. An assistant lies down on the floor immediately in front of him with his head in the hole beside X's feet so that the two men, instead of appearing as such, seem to be only one seated upon the ground. As night falls the kukusiut take their places and the more influential members of the society press forward to see that X and his assistant are properly disguised so that the fact that they are really two is not apparent. When all is in readiness, the Bella Coola practice is for a herald to summon the waiting uninitiated, but in Kimsquit one of the marshals orders some of the younger men to extinguish the fire, before this is done, so that as the non-members come to the door their fears are increased by finding the house in deep darkness. The heralds guide them to their places in the front corners, where they sit in shuddering expectancy for about an hour. The stillness is broken only by the occasional sound of a whistle and the laboured breathing of the guests. Suddenly the hush is shattered by the voice of a kuṡiut calling out four times ăn-ăn-ai, the ejaculation used in pain. [184] [192] [152]

To the spell-bound uninitiated it seems as if the supernatural beings surrounding him had become too much for him, so that he cried out in the agony of his soul. Resinous sticks have been placed in readiness and a fire is quickly kindled. The Cannibals growl savagely in their corners and the uninitiated shiver. From this point forth the ritual in Bella Coola and Kimsquit is identical. [184]

X circles the fire, sunwise, four times and appears to seat himself on the floor with outstretched legs though in reality he is standing in the hole. One of the ănuyax stands up and announces:

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

After a short interval, she is answered by the singer in the lower, western, rear corner of the house as follows: 575* 796*

Saqunkotsänitwewit	itlasnitsman·aatdja	skäpälpälpäläsidus
Let there come to earth	the voice of Snitsmän·a	to revive 533 539

diyälkaipum·ilsutdai
the one who has so injured himself.

The general meaning of this song is obvious, although there are several obscure expressions which serve to increase the wonder and fear of the uninitiated. Silence follows the singing, then whistling is heard and a herald announces that one of the puppet-patrons inserted into X has left him and gone to the region above. Similar whistling announces the departure of others at intervals. When several have done so, it is time for the first to return. A thud, made by a hidden accomplice, is heard on the roof and whistling breaks out afresh. Sometimes the puppet-patron returns to X, but more often to its invoker, and the transference previously enacted is repeated over the body of the dancer who continues to lie as if lifeless. Now and then the uninitiated are invited forward to look at him and they notice that the gaping wound is slowly closing, an easy matter to arrange in the dim light of the house. At intervals the puppet-patrons go and return from the land above, and the proceedings are sometimes enlivened by the owners telling a herald, who in turn informs the audience, what the puppet-patron saw on its journey aloft. Usually each goes and returns four times in the course of the night. Each of the women selected to sing the mourning songs performs once, standing in a corner of the house and waving a wand wound with alternate bands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark. So the long night passes. Towards dawn continuous whistling is heard. This is made by several men with a whistle apiece; each begins to blow as soon as the breath of his partner is nearly exhausted. It is known to be the voice of Snitsmän·a. In Kimsquit, but not in Bella Coola, this is the signal for the entry of the giant toad. Carpenters have made a wooden figure of the amphibian and by means of concealed strings it is

575* 796* 787 [533] 575* 796* [776] [184] [532]

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

* 575 The singers have also composed a song for each of the dwayar
* 796 and these too must be practised, while the men dance or remain 533 still as they think fit. Since no uninitiated are present the affair is purely a rehearsal. The words of each of these songs is of the manner in which the patron helped X to survive his ordeal. By this time it is late and the kukusiut disperse after the usual meal and admonitions of the marshals.

* 575 The next day, qothm, the carpenters assemble early in the
* 796 morning to start work. Since X is entitled to portray any of 532 the supernatural beings who are companions of his patron in the land above, it follows that there is wide variation in his choice of masks to be manufactured. The principal supernatural beings are always shown, and any animals, since all are supernatural, can likewise be displayed. As usual, a few kukusiut are invited at midday to share the meal provided for the carpenters. The number of masks to be provided is often so great that two days or more are necessary for their completion, in which case no ceremony takes place on the night which would normally be qothm; the kukusiut merely gather [533] and again practise their songs.

* 575 But the day after is qothm. At dusk the kukusiut are called
* 796 in for a final rehearsal of the songs, and then a summons is sent [515] to the uninitiated, who have been washing and beautifying themselves in eager anticipation. In Kimsquit it is customary [532] to hang some of the masks on a sloping pole behind the fire and [584] the sight of these amazes the non-members. First the singers
[781] beat out the song of one of the women mourners and she dances in time to it, while the heralds near the door keep up a steady
[535] stream of remarks, encouraging the woman to perform yet [834] more strenuously and to have no modesty about shaking her breasts. Then another of the women dances, followed in succession by the third and fourth if that is the number who sang the mourning songs. Next the dwayar perform, each in succession accompanying the song composed for him. Now comes the central feature of the evening, the performance of X himself. As the singers strike up the shaman's song which he is

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Beheading Dance]

*575 floor. The rope draws through itself, becomes untangled, and *796 the blood stains previously placed on it become apparent. The [592] kukusiut rehearse the decapitation a number of times until every detail is perfect. Shielded by the gloom of the house, one of the carpenters fastens a thin cord to the portrait-mask and practises drawing it gradually towards X, who finally rises as if restored to life by the return of his head. The mask is actually concealed and X stands up at his natural height. Since this is the feat which will be done in the presence of the uninitiated, it must be worked out with precision. When the marshals are satisfied that everything is in good shape they permit the kukusiut to disperse. A similar practice is carried out for the Stomach-Cutting dance if the marshals consider it necessary. The night after the rehearsal the call comes to X, who parades to every house in the village. On his fourth circuit he carries a rope in his hand instead of a knife; the kukusiut weep as they did on the previous occasion, and any uninitiated who have seen or heard of the rite realize the fate in store for X. The next day, nuxnitlap, a number of kukusiut are dispatched for wood, and in the evening some of the work is allotted and arrangements made for singing the mourning songs and for the use of puppet-patrons by the ênayu. The marshals take advantage of the opportunity to harangue their hearers.

"Take heed what you do," they say. "Alqwstêm and the other supernatural ones have sent down a powerful call to us. Unless we make strong our spirits we will be unable to bear up under the weight of it."

Qulm passes without variation from the type already described, and on the following night the kukusiut assemble early for nakusam. When they have taken their places, the fire is extinguished; then the uninitiated are called in and guided to their places near the door.[10] After an hour's delay, punctuated by the whistles, the fire is built up and X goes around it four times, while the kukusiut beat furiously with sticks. X calls [184] [10] In Kimsquit only.

[The Mystery Dance]

*575 *796 qoiłm, and it is agreed that the call shall come to him on the following evening.

X's first task is to prepare, or to have made for him, a stick which he will use throughout the ceremony. It is of yellow [184] cedar, about five feet in length; in Kimsquit it is decorated with four bands of swan feathers, in Bella Coola with alternate bands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark.

[787] The following evening the call comes to X. He utters a low whistle, resembling a hoot, goes towards the fire and slowly revolves on himself. The łuł̓aziut women present begin to drone and the uninitiated are expelled. Constantly turning on himself, X slowly moves sunwise around the flames, repeating his hoot three times, once at each side of the fire. He stands behind it and calls out loudly:

"Please say exactly what you want; whatever it is, I will do it."

After the customary frenzied beating, he withdraws to the back-room. Heralds go to all the houses, reporting what has taken place and summoning the łuł̓aziut. When all have gathered, X appears and asks for the usual collar of dyed cedar-bark and a dance-apron. These are provided, put on him and his face is blackened. Under the guidance of a marshal or singer, the łuł̓aziut men beat furiously on the floor, without time or rhythm, until the leader motions them to conclude with four thunderous beats. In the stillness that follows X begins to chatter loudly, without using exact words, and everyone realizes that this is an invitation to guess who are the three supernatural beings in whom his power is localized. Some-[424] times the meaning is made still more evident by his carrying the stick previously mentioned, which is the prerogative of Mystery dancers alone. The guests enter into the spirit of the dance and call out their guesses, naming little known supernatural beings, parts of beings, or manifestations of the supernatural; sometimes three or four answer at the same time. The four remembrancers have placed themselves near X and it is their duty to recollect the replies. When łuł̓aziut alone

[The Mystery Dance]

*575 This is such an important occasion that leading kukusiut from *796 neighbouring towns are often invited to be present. If this is [574] to be done, heralds are sent for the purpose during the following day.

Next evening the kukusiut are invited to X's house in the usual manner, many of them unaware that the answer is soon to be given. The customary ritual is carried out and the uninitiated summoned in due course. By this time X is supposed to have been weakened by his long fast, and to give colour to that claim, two assistants support him as he totters feebly to and fro in his enclosure. Instead of waving his stick horizontally above his head, X now rests his weight on it, with his helpers holding the ends. After the customary frenzied beating with sticks, X again invites guesses, but still no one can find the three answers. Meanwhile the father or some elderly friend of the youth chosen to guess correctly, slips down to where he is sitting and whispers to him to try, for example, Aimaltua. The youth timidly does so, and at once X begins to shake violently, and calls frantically:

"More! More!"

*575 In Kimsquit, though not in Bella Coola, the long drawn-*796 out whistling of Snitsmän-a is heard, though of course the un-184 initiated do not know that four kukusiut have been sent out for this purpose. The excitement becomes intense.

The man who is prompting the successful guesser whispers to him the second answer. The young man calls it out and X becomes more and more excited, shaking wildly and shouting:

"More! More! You mortal."

Finally the third answer is given. In Bella Coola the dancer leaps high in the air from his enclosure and falls to the ground beneath as if dead. Saipnäs of Kimsquit, on the other hand, whose patron is the wild Kekoslum, becomes frenzied, breaks his stick and enclosure and acts like a raging, though feeble, lunatic. Irrespective of X's behaviour, the marshals ask the uninitiated to withdraw, and the growling Cannibals add point to the request. It is at this juncture in Bella Coola

Z:McIlwraith E-9 (1922-1924) 1968
NEb Bellacoola NEb

[The Mystery Dance]

that the whistle of Snitzmán·a is heard. The uninitiated, hearing the sound from the other houses, realize that the kindly being is approaching and are not surprised when a herald presently comes around to announce that X has recovered. In Kimsquit, X's frenzy slowly leaves him, and from this point onwards there are no differences in ritual between the two localities. The singers beat out a new song, prepared in readiness, of which the theme is Snitzmán·a, "The Restorer." X dances to it, and afterwards to any four of the numerous songs previously composed for him. Then he sits down, the first time he has done so, in public at any rate, since the beginning of the rite. Food is next distributed, the marshals make their usual remarks and the kukuziut finally go to bed. From this point on, the ceremony follows the regular kuziut pattern; this occasion, when the riddles are solved, corresponds to Isustémem. The successful guesser is dealt with as an initiate in the manner already described. Some of the uninitiated sitting near the youth often realize that he has been prompted by his father, but they regard this as a mere sign of solicitude, assuming that the parent's supernatural power enabled him to solve the problem. It seems clear to them that he could not have known the answer for any length of time because, like others, he had many times guessed and failed.

575v 996v [184] 533

The next day is nuziustélsap. In the morning all the kukuziut assemble in X's house to learn another new song; this corresponds to the second of a dance which lacks the long preliminaries of this one. A number of kukuziut accompany X to the forest to get the necessary wood for the masks. Mystery dancers have the right to exhibit any, and as many, supernatural beings as they please, hence a large amount of wood must be brought back. In the evening comes the allotment of work. X may do it himself, but usually he asks his father, or some other elderly relative to act on his behalf. Since all his relatives contribute, the actual distribution of labour is not a task in which X alone is concerned. Ana'kéwulsais must be portrayed, and the three best carpenters are entrusted with

575v 996v 532 [424]

B: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

[The Mystery Dance]

masks representing the three successful answers. Little attention is paid to actual design, and the workmen use their initiative to a considerable extent.* One mask always made is that of Swaslarwai, a being who appears to act as concealer for Alquntám. As far as could be learnt, if Alquntám wishes to conceal anything from a human being, such as the hiding-places in a Mystery dance, Swaslarwai is entrusted with the task. In addition to the usual well-known supernatural beings, X often orders representations of mammals, birds, or fish; he may even ask a man to make a mask without stipulations and then the finished product is as much a surprise to him as to anyone else. There is no relationship between the masks made and the guesses registered. If X is wealthy, the number to be constructed may run to fifty or more. Nuxiatálxap concludes in the usual way as soon as all the work has been allotted.

Two days is not long enough for the completion of such a large number of masks, so nalaxam must be postponed, and qoilom is correspondingly delayed for four days. In the evening the heralds invite first the kukaxiat and then the eager, though fearful uninitiated. They take their places and in Kimsquit, not in Bella Coola, marvel at some of the masks hanging behind the fire, though no explanation is vouchsafed them until the following evening. Presently the singers begin to beat out one of X's songs and he starts dancing violently, only to stop long before it is ended. The musicians quickly change to another; he performs briefly, then ceases; this is repeated for a third tune, and similarly for a fourth, a fifth, and so on. If the preliminaries have been long drawn out, X may have as many as twenty songs and he dances to a fragment of each. After he has performed, the singers strike up the tune of any kaxiat

*Possibly this disregard for exact portrayal of supernatural beings is a modern degeneration. The Bella Coola of today say quite frankly that they have forgotten many beings used by their ancestors, so have no hesitation in inventing new designs and naming them even for natural phenomena which they consider must be caused by supernatural agency. On the other hand, the burning of masks, which seems to be an old practice, would tend to hasten supersedimentation in all but the best-known figures.

Z:McIlwraith R-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEG Bellacoola NEG

has retired from sight. Ano'likwolsaix gives her customary dance, her head bent as if she constantly wished to rest it on someone's shoulder, and her opposite arm waving violently. After one circuit of the fire she withdraws from sight behind the matting. Then the marshals tell the uninitiated to withdraw, and the growling Cannibals hurry them forth. The evening's ceremonjals conclude in the usual way, except that the masks are not burnt. 575* 796* [776] [532]

The length of time required for the figures to appear and perform is so great that nəkusam can seldom be completed on a single night. When the marshals decide that it is too late for further drama, they can call a postponement at any time; the uninitiated are told to withdraw and the kukusiut disperse shortly afterwards. The following evening they are recalled and the ritual is carried on from the point where the break was made. In this account it has been assumed that it is possible to complete the display without postponement.

Four nights later everyone is called back once again. The kukusiut first take their places, and then the uninitiated are summoned. The ritual on this occasion is identical with that just described for nəkusam with the same promenade of supernatural beings and the same explanations by Ano'likwolsaix. After the uninitiated depart the masks are burnt, two at a time, in the manner previously described, this being the last event in the Mystery Dance. [532]

THE DANCE OF W'inwina

Nəkkynum is not, according to Bella Coola mythology, the only bringer of salmon to the river, nor is he the only one whose action has been dramatized as a kusiut dance. A similar purveyor of fish is W'inwina[a] who comes every year to Bella Coola. Boas (p. 38) has recorded the origin myth connected with the rite, and states that the movements of this being influence the duration of the kusiut season; this observation was not confirmed. W'inwina is supposed to return from the 575* 796* 776 825 184 824

[a] Also called Kwakwəlijotas, "What Brings Our Food."

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

land of the salmon early in January, and it is owing to his successful raid that there is a plentiful supply of fish the following year. The fact that the Bella Coola attribute the same function to Nodźynum provides no difficulties to native philosophers.

"Different individuals have different stories," they say, and the fact that the two are contradictory is a matter of no consequence.

The incidents described in the following myth are always spoken of as having taken place long ago, and yet the coming of W'inwina is an annual event, a confusion disconcerting to the investigator though not to the Bella Coola themselves.

W'inwina[a] once led a raiding party against the salmon, whose home is far to the west, and against the berries who live in a flat and warm country beyond even the land of salmon. His crew consisted of birds who are spoken of in the myth by unusual designations, said to be either their supernatural or their kwsiut names. One informant spoke of these beings as individuals, and only added that they were birds as an afterthought, while another emphasized their avian rather than their human characteristics. This is not surprising, considering that the story belongs to the distant past when birds and human beings were not as clearly differentiated as they now are. W'inwina's crew consisted of:

The Bald Eagle, Tźźkwak;

The Hawk (l) species, Źnukiqakźaix;

The Raven, 'Źnwaqźźlaix, "He Who Talks at Dawn and Wakens Everyone";

The Water Ouzel, Źźkmarośźźka, "The Walking One";

The Great Blue Heron, Masanźźlźw, "Long Neck";

The Hermaphrodite, Źźla'yao;

The Cormorant, Źwełwźźźla, who joined the expedition at Bella Bella as a passenger;

Four lazy supernatural beings, Kamźźźźl.

The expedition was under the especial protection of Kalsets, a female supernatural shaman, who guided the canoe in which the raiders travelled by the force of her intellect as if it had been a compass. After a lengthy journey, the party reached the land of the salmon where the clouds obligingly drifted low in the heavens so that the fish could not see their

[a] A word etymologically connected with wine, the Bella Coola term for raid.

[The Dance of Winwina]

424 Another kusiut derived the prerogative of having Winwina
773 as patron from a myth previously cited (II, p. 43). After 776 Raven had seen Noäkxnim and obtained him for Ällilimnälaxix, he flew down the fiord once more, observed Winwina, and made him patron for Omqomkilka.

*575 The ritual of the dance of Winwina does not vary, irre-
*796 spective of its origin; accordingly one account will suffice and the performer can be referred to as X.

[778] This dance occurs also at Kimsquit where the repository [424] is actually in the ocean a few yards from shore.

[184] Winwina is supposed to return to Bella Coola when the January moon is full;[87] accordingly X consults the marshals and makes his preparations slightly before that date. Four days before the full moon, the uninitiated are excluded from the house and a raised enclosure is built between the fire and the back-room. This rite differs from most kusiut dances in that the call does not come at this time. Irrespective of whether or not the kukusiut happen to be present on the evening of this day, X mounts to the enclosure and sits there, looking westward for the return of Winwina. Heralds inform the uninitiated in the other houses of what is taking place. X [292] wears a collar of dyed cedar-bark and a head-dress of eagle tail feathers, but his face is not blackened.

For three nights and three days X remains in the enclosure, gazing to the west, and meanwhile no uninitiated dare even to pass outside of his house. As the fourth night is falling, messengers summon the kukusiut who enter and sit in silence as if waiting for something; the heralds inform non-members that X's vigil will soon be over. After an interval they are likewise called in, and eagerly take their places near the door, where they receive a share of the food being served. Suddenly X jumps down from the enclosure and cries out loudly:

"The supernatural young man has left his child with strangers while he has been on a journey. Now he is returning, [805] [87]Owing to faulty calendrical observations the exact date is seldom found.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 *796 They dispute in this manner concerning the capture of every kind of salmon and even about the berries. Ano°likwolsaix keeps up a running stream of comments to the uninitiated.

"Listen to the stupid Kāmālālkl. That is what they did when they went with Winwina. They spent most of their time sleeping, and the rest of it arguing. Don't you be such silly fools as they are. Watch what you are doing, and you may be fortunate enough to see me in the woods and become a kusiut."

As soon as the uninitiated have watched these beings for a time, they are expelled and the ritual ends in the usual manner.

763 776 In conclusion, a word may be said regarding the attitude of the Bella Coola to Winwina and his canoe. Like all other supernatural manifestations it is capable of bringing good or evil to the beholder. An ancestor of every Winwina dancer must have seen it and obtained it as patron, but it is a dangerous visitor none the less. Sometimes, at night, a hunter encamped on one of the fiords hears a grunting sound accompanied by short paddle strokes; if he calls out "yao!" loudly, no harm will come to him, but if he omits to do so he will soon die. One informant affirmed that within his lifetime a party of Kimsquit hunters were waiting for high tide when they heard the grunting. They failed to hail the craft and presently a sound reached them as if a number of paddles had been placed in the water to check the course of a canoe; in fact, the ripples splashed on the shore at their feet. In a few years they were all dead.

THE DANCE OF MOTHER-NATURE

*575 *796 824 [184] [776] One of the most interesting of the Bella Coola dances is that portraying Nunuoska, who is virtually Mother-Nature, giving birth to the flowers and trees in the spring. The following account is of the manner in which Kalän·i, a Kimsquit man, performed the rite. The ritual appears to be identical in Bella Coola, so only one account need be given, and the performer may be spoken of as X.

This dance can take place at any time during the ceremonial

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 natural, any of them can act in this capacity, though it is *796 usually added that the animal in question is the one resident 776 in the land above. One patron of this type is the ordinary 825 river bull-head. It is said that long ago this fish wanted to [773] follow his friends, the salmon, to the ocean, but was persuaded to remain in the river to act as nurse to their children in his house, the river bottom. Early in the world's history he objected to people exposing his dwelling, that is, pulling up the [821] stones from the river-bed where he was wont to lie, and showed [226] his resentment by sending a very cold wind. Ever since that time boys are not allowed to fish for bull-heads in winter. As far as could be learnt, this dance has no special features.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL HERRING-HEAD

One of the supernatural beings living in the land above who is patron for a certain kusiut is the head of a female herring. Little is known of this being, even her appearance is subject to [532] doubt. For the nebasam of her protégé, a number of masks representing herring, as well as human-like beings, are prepared. When the uninitiated are present, one of the disguised figures calls to his fellows to bring their nets and capture the fish.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL DOG SALMON

Another fish dwelling in the land above is Dakdakänus, the supernatural dog salmon. He is patron of some kusiut but the ritual of the dance, known as osnäxmunaix, was not obtained. The similarity between Dakdakänus and Dakdakänmem, those who await Noäkxnm, appears merely to be an accidental re-[192] semblance in terminology, dependent upon a stem meaning "to come," or "coming." The significance of this in connection with the supernatural dog salmon could not be ascertained.

*575
*796 776
●184
[755]

THE DANCE OF Ämoqltaikila

In Kimsquit it is believed that Änoºlikwolsaix has a husband, Ämoqltaikila, who is patron for several kusiut dancers. His function is to restore to life any uninitiated who chance to stumble upon a repository and are stricken down by his wife. Like a shaman, he does this by blowing violently upon the back of the victim's neck and calling out, hoip. From constant repetition his mouth has become large and round. When displayed on nebusam, the mask representing Ālmoqltaikila is painted black and has bulging, blown-out cheeks, and a round protruding mouth as if in the act of blowing. Neither the dance nor belief in this figure appear to occur in Bella Coola itself.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575* 796* 776 184 755 532

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL BARK-BEATER

In the land above there lives a supernatural woman who spends all her time in pounding cedar-bark such as is used, either dyed or undyed, for ceremonial objects of different kinds. Her name is Spikpiknum di Sinxälotla and she is patron for various kukusiut. On the nebusam of her Kimsquit protégés, she appears as a masked figure engaged in her usual occupation and makes a circuit of the house while a salmon is displayed. The relationship between this being and the salmon is problematical, and it is uncertain whether or not the same rite is practised in Bella Coola.

532

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL AWAKENER

Every morning in Nusqulxwaista the woman Spaixpaxnmän·a goes around waking up the supernatural beings. She is patron for several kusiut dancers. On the nebusam of her protégé, a masked figure representing the Awakener goes to every house in the village and pounds on the doors, but does not enter, to the relief of the uninitiated who have sought refuge within the bed-rooms.

575* 796* 776 532

THE DANCE OF DAWN

Not only must the supernatural beings be aroused in the morning, but every day the Sun himself must be requested to appear; this is done by the beings known as Xemxemtnum, who are patrons for several kukusiut. On nebusam they appear and Ano°likwolsaix explains to the uninitiated who they are and

821

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Dawn]

* 575 what they do. With them comes the being Onstcitoma, "The
* 796 Sleeper," wearing a mask to represent a drowsy man who con-776 stantly yawns and rubs his eyes. It is explained that this [532] being delights in sleep and does not care if the sun never rises.

THE DANCE OF THE GREEDY ONE

Nusixilxixaikm, also called Tutwai·os, is a greedy creature who spends his time going from one supernatural being to another in the land above, always begging for food. He is patron for several kukusiut and on the nebusam of one of his [532] protégés a masked figure representing the Greedy One visits every house in the village asking for food. The uninitiated retreat to the bed-rooms, but the kukusiut comply with his [431] request. In consequence the dancer's house is filled with food which is given away to the kukusiut guests.

THE DANCE OF THE REPOSITORY MAKER

[778] Some repositories were constructed in the beginning of time by the supernatural being, Nunudjixnm, who is patron for [532] several kukusiut. On the nebusam of one of his protégés a figure, masked to represent a male being, appears and Ano°lik-wolsaix explains that this is the maker of repositories. It is [184] uncertain whether this being is found in Bella Coola or only in Kimsquit.

THE DANCE OF Älquntäm'S SLAVE

In the land above there lives a slave of Älquntäm who spends his time providing fuel for the fires in Nusqulxwaista. He is patron for a Bella Coola kusiut, though the details of his dance were not obtained.

THE DANCE OF Älquntäm'S HERALD

Oqolikts Älquntäm is patron for several kukusiut. During the nebusam of one of his protégés a masked figure representing him visits every house in the village, bidding the kukusiut

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

they refer. Even when full allowance is made for this, the fact still remains that the kukusiut were able to carry out dances in which they deceived the uninitiated. Above all, it is clear that those who were not members of the society had the greatest respect for the powers of those who were, and although doubt may have existed concerning the identity of the supernatural visitors, there was not the slightest concerning the ability of the kukusiut to have, for example, their stomachs ripped open. The writer discussed this point with too many old men and women to have the slightest uncertainty on this point, and he feels confident that anyone who could have listened to the account of a reliable old man concerning his fears when he had "killed" a kusiut in this manner, would have shared his conviction.

575* 796* 781 114

It would be fascinating to discuss at some length the probable history of the kusiut society, but this would entail a comparison with the rites of other coastal tribes and belongs to the realm of comparative ethnology. This monograph deals only with Bella Coola practices as the writer saw them or heard them described, so that the history of the society can only be treated from this angle. It appears certain that the rites have increased in secrecy. One old marshal with whom the matter was discussed remembered having heard that long ago masks were constructed in the presence of the uninitiated. Considered as an isolated statement this would have little value, but in conjunction with information derived from Kimsquit it becomes of importance. It is true that in Kimsquit the masks are made in secret, but they are shown to the uninitiated as masks, and the writer was told of one instance in which Ťloqots, during his round of the village, fell into the water and remained there all day, to the amusement of non-members who recognized that he was merely a disguised human being. It is even said that long ago the manufacture of masks was entrusted to influential uninitiated. It is clear that there has been a tremendous increase in secrecy even at Kimsquit, and a great deal more at Bella Coola. The writer believes that

575* 796* 178 184 532

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 long ago the kusiut society was composed of individuals re-
*796 garded as having supernatural endowments, and who perhaps 178 believed this themselves. In course of time their influence
●184 increased to such an extent that they were able to convince
[532] non-members of the supernatural origin of objects used in their ceremonial.

[115] Unfortunately, information from Kimsquit was obtained almost exclusively from one old man, who, though a marshal well informed in kusiut matters and in many ways an almost ideal informant, had long since realized that the dances could be nothing more than representations, and it is possible that his remarks were coloured by this knowledge. Though he tended to minimize the attitude of belief with which the un-
[781] initiated regarded masked figures, yet he fully agreed with every statement made by the Bella Coola themselves with regard to the firm belief of non-members concerning the supernatural powers of the dancers. He also confirmed statements
[688] respecting punishment if an error should occur, and mentioned the shooting of a Bella Bella dancer who had allowed his mask to fall during a susaok dance. As far as actual ritual is concerned, the differences in procedure between Bella Coola and Kimsquit are unimportant, and differences in belief are less than they appear at first sight. The Bella Coola kukusiut
[781] seem to have perfected their organization and to have been able to impress the uninitiated to a greater extent than their Kimsquit fellows, but the fundamentals of the society are identical.

*575 Traditions concerning the early history of the society are *796 probably of little value historically, but they are important as 173 indicating the mental attitude of the Bella Coola. Considering the importance of the society there are relatively few accounts of what took place long ago; the Bella Coola know that it exists, believe that the rites are identical with those carried out by their ancestors for generations, and theorize no further. It was only in the beginning of time that things were radically different; it is believed that then all the people were endowed

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

776 575 [534] The Thunder-bird and his companions appear in the kō'siut ceremonial. When they enter the house, a dancer appears who carries an instrument in the shape of a bird-rattle (Plate XI, Fig. 7), which is provided with holes in its lower side, and has a loose back. This implement is filled with cedar-bark and eagle-down, and is shaken by the dancer. The eagle-down is thus made to fly about in the house, symbolizing the wealth and power of the Thunder-bird.

IV.

184 773 In the preceding pages I have summarized the principal features of Bella Coola mythology, which are characteristic of the traditions of the whole tribe. Besides these, there are other groups of traditions which are very conflicting. One reason for the existence of numerous contradictory traditions must be looked for in the peculiar social organization of the Bella Coola. In former times, when the tribe was populous, the Bella Coola inhabited a great many villages. The inhabitants of each village are considered the descendants of a number of mythical ancestors who were sent down by SEMX. Each of these village communities has traditions of its own, which are its property, and which are not well known to the rest of the tribe. Many of these traditions refer to the origin of our world, and for this reason a number of the most important myths differ in various villages. Indications of such conflicting ideas may be found in the traditions recorded in the preceding pages. To make this subject clear, it is necessary to describe somewhat fully the traditions belonging to a number of village communities. Before recording these traditions I shall enumerate the villages of the tribe. 103 361 773 The following list is the result of repeated inquiries. In it the names and locations of the villages are given in consecutive order from the mouth of Bentinck Arm upward along Bella Coola River, and the names of the mythical ancestors of the village communities have been added where these have been ascertained.

VILLAGE.	LOCATION.	ANCESTORS.
1. Q'oā'LNA	At the bay of this name.
2. Sr'tia	At the entrance of South Bentinck Arm.	Tōtosō'NA.
3. Nusxē'q!	On North Bentinck Arm.	Semsiutā'k'as, Nusqoa'-xlanē, Sxīsta, and their sister Ē'NL'ALANA.
4. Pē'ixla	At the entrance of the valley opening on the north side of the mouth of Bella Coola River.	Stā'tomx· Yuyō'lk", Mkmtsi't, Sisia'L.
5. Atqla'xL	The present mission at the north side of Bella Coola River, near its mouth.	Isyō'yōt, Xemxē'mtx-nkm, Snuxnala'ls, and their sister Lugal'tsia.

?;Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

575 796 them. Let the chief give them red cedar-bark." The people take small pieces of blankets, and sew red cedar-bark on to them in designs corresponding to the paintings on the faces of these deities, and they give these to the deities in order to appease them. Then they throw grease into the fire. During all this time É'xêm stands in the rear of the house; and when a painting has been finished, the man who offers it to the deity shouts, "Xêmxêmalá'ôɪla t'aix·tau'!" ("This is Xêmxêmalá'ôɪla.") And É'xêm sings, "Yayak·lamêts'êk·a wa k'waɪtɛnai'x·aɪ t'aix· tai'ya; aɪt'aɪ.'ô'mataxstôs nusk·asiôtstaai'x asɛlkulatôtita'ya." As soon as he has finished his song, a loud noise is heard on the roof, as though a heavy stone were falling down. É'xêm arises and performs a dance, while the noise of whistles is heard proceeding from him.

575 I am not familiar with the details of the ceremonial, and shall proceed to record the principal characteristics of the various societies. The Cannibal is initiated in the House of Myths by Bá'ɛxôɪla. I recorded above (p. 34) how a young man was initiated by this spirit, and how he was returned to his friends. The return of the Cannibal is accompanied by ceremonies similar to those recorded in this tradition. It seems that the ceremonies of the [184] Cannibals of various families are much alike, each having a tradition of its own referring to the initiation. It is believed that all the Cannibals, during their initiation, go up to the sky. I was told that on this journey they have to take human flesh along for food. It is said that in former times the chiefs held a council the night preceding the beginning of the ceremonies, and any one who wanted to show his liberality offered one of his slaves to be killed in order to serve as food for Bá'ɛxôɪla. The offer was accepted, and a [266] payment made for the slave. The latter was killed, and the members of the Bá'ɛxôɪla order devoured one-half of the body before the departure of the novice to the woods.

The spirit appears to the novice while he is in the woods, and takes him up to the House of Myths, where he is initiated. Early one morning he returns, and is heard outside of the houses. He has lost all his hair except a little in the median line of the head. It is believed that it has been torn off by the strong wind blowing in the higher regions. Some Cannibals do 575 796 not devour human flesh, but tear dogs to pieces or devour raw salmon. The ceremonial consists in pacifying the Cannibal, and exorcising the spirit that possesses him. This is the object of the kû'siut ceremonial. After a Cannibal has returned, the people try to capture him. When he is first heard to approach, the speaker, whose face is painted black, and who wears a cedar-bark ring, and is covered with eagle-down, shouts, "Tix·ma'ts'ɛn tak·'axta'ɪɪl tɛɪɪ'ai'ôts'ai. P'alx·êxtsalatstɛnai' tix·ma'ts'ɛn tasiswalô'ɪɪl t'aɪ'aiôtat'ai'!" ("Arise, it may be our Cannibal. Awake!") The Cannibal is accompanied by four assistants, who are called Aɪɪlpa, and who from time to time utter

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

619 others. This differentiated them clearly from all neighbouring [197] tribes.

B. Ceremonial. A member of a secret society in any of [575] the above towns was accepted as a member in any other one.
[609] A person of another tribe, even if known to belong to a comparable society, was treated as an uninitiated person.

C. Origin and Religion. The people of Bella Coola, Tăl·ie, and Kimsquit felt themselves to be akin through acceptance of the fact that their ancestors had been created together in the beginning of time. This marked them off with [771] great clearness from all other tribes, especially from the Carriers of the interior. This belief formed a sentimental and religious bond of great strength.

Neighbouring Tribes

648 It is desirable to describe, briefly, the tribes with which the Bella Coola came in contact.

THE CARRIERS

East of Bella Coola, amid the mountains of the interior, roved the Carriers. In summer they often came down to the river valley to fish or trade for salmon, and in winter they were sometimes forced by cold and starvation again to visit the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, or Rivers Inlet people. There was a [563] good deal of intermarriage between them and the inhabitants of the upper valley, so that the wanderers were able to spend the cold months with relatives. None the less, the Bella Coola
[180] considered these people utterly foreign in habits and beliefs,
[578] and to call a man a "Carrier" was, and still is, a deadly insult. The Carriers lacked the rich ceremonial life of the coastal peoples who, therefore, regarded them with scorn and con-
[796] tempt. The presence of a few of the much-despised Carriers was, however, almost necessary to the correct performance of the winter dances since they were uninitiated spectators whom it was necessary to impress and delude.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bella bella NE5

THE BELLA BELLA

BC 648

West of Bella Coola lived the Bella Bella, known as ułqwlāsimx. Although linguistic differences prevented free exchange of ideas, and active hostility was not unknown, there was considerable intermarriage between the two tribes. The Bella Coola recognized the similarity of culture between them; in fact, whereas a Carrier was despised for lack of knowledge of ceremonial and dramatic matters, a Bella Bella was respected for his superior lore in that respect. The Bella Coola believe that many of their rites have been obtained from them.

BB [101] [563] BC [563] [186]

The chief Bella Bella villages are said to have been: Qwałna, on "Kwatna" Bay; Nā'mu, at "Namu"; Qwiyai, four miles from the last-mentioned; Nulam.

BB 361 [191] [563]

At Qwałna, the nearest settlement, so many of the people spoke Bella Coola that it was practically bilingual. There had been so many intermarriages for generations that the people were not considered foreigners; in fact, Boas includes it among Bella Coola villages (p. 48). There were seven villages on Kwatna Inlet and the Kwatna River which flows in from the south-east.

BC [563] [648]

(1) Sinułkemitł, "Where It Spoke": a small outpost on the eastern shore of Kwatna Inlet near the entrance. There may once have been a permanent settlement at the site, but for many years it was used only as a look-out station when raiders were expected.

BB 173 361

It is said that on one occasion, long, long ago, a party of Kwatna people was encamped at this spot, waiting for enemy raiders whose approach had been reported. They did not appear when expected and one of the watchers, wearied by the long wait, said to the genital organs of one of his female companions who had annoyed him:

"Tell us what is going to happen."

"You will all be killed to-morrow," answered a rumbling voice from the organs, to the great amazement of everybody.

So it transpired. The hostile raiders surprised the watchers the next day and only one escaped to tell the tale.

The place has since been known as, "Where It Spoke." It was long ago deserted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

human beings, in the beginning of time when they were semi-supernatural, sometimes prevailed against him. One story actually records his murder. From the point of view of morality, an angle from which the Bella Coola themselves do not regard him, Ałquntäm is neither moral nor immoral; he has the virtues and vices of a man. That, in fact, is a fair summing up of Ałquntäm; he is a superman, creator of life, supreme god in the sense that he is chief of the supernatural beings, but not an all-powerful deity.

Compared with Ałquntäm, other supernatural beings are insignificant. The Bella Coola do not regard them as a hierarchy with definitely graded rank and power; accordingly, the order in which they are described is immaterial. Reference has already been made to the supernatural Carpenters.[9] There are four of them, created by Ałquntäm in the beginning of time; it was they who constructed the mountains and rivers of this land, the animals and birds populating them, and supervised the making of mankind. They are considered to be four brothers, collectively known as Mesmesälänux.

The eldest and most powerful is Yulätimut, "He Who Completes Any Task with a Single Smoothing Motion."

The second brother is Mätläbälitcak, "He Who Completes Any Task with a Single Stroke of an Adze."

The third brother is Mälläpexwak, "He Who Completes Any Task with Two Strokes of His Adze."

The fourth and youngest brother is sltlulak, "He Who Completes Any Task in a Single Day."

In Kimsquit, Mätläbälitcak is often called Mesmesälänux and the collective term is not used. These names explain the beliefs of the Bella Coola with regard to the powers of the Carpenters. After their work in the beginning of time, the three younger brothers returned to Nusmät·a, where they have since resided, but Yulätimut came to earth and married a Bella Bella woman. The Bella Coola admit that members of this

[9]Cf. Boas, p. 32.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 tribe are superior to themselves in carpentry, and ascribe their [186] skill to the fact that many of them are descendants of Yulā-
[648] timut. Some of the coastal tribes are said to believe that Alquntām erred in the manufacture of many of the sea mammals, giving them, for example, human heads on fish bodies; he later rectified this by sending his Carpenters to adjust their form. This is not a Bella Coola belief. One elderly man stated that the skill of the Carpenters in painting and modelling was derived from a little girl named Qaxtanae; no confirmation could be obtained for this statement and the information was vague and unreliable.

Since their creation of the sky and many features of this world, as well as birds and animals, the Carpenters have entered but little into the lives of the Bella Coola. Like other supernatural beings, they are capable of going anywhere, but for many generations they have not been seen on this earth.
[575] Their most important function, perhaps, is to act as patrons for various kusiut dancers. This subject will be described in detail in vol. II, chap. 1; for the moment it is enough to say that many supernatural beings regard members of this semi-sacred society as their protégés, and grant them power to per-[535] form dances. On these occasions masked figures are used to represent the patrons, thus enlightening uninitiated persons as to the appearance and attributes of various supernatural beings.

Among the many residents of Nusmāt·a are two sons of Alquntām, Sānolqumulelts Alquntām and Sno'elxelts Alquntām. The former in particular is dearly loved by his father and is often spoken of as Nuslexwanuxwdam, "The Cherished One."
[575] These two beings take no part in the affairs of mortals except as patrons of kusiut dancers. Like all supernatural beings they are considered to be immortal. Since Alquntām has two sons it is to be assumed that he has, or had, a wife. Her name is not generally known, although she is sometimes spoken of as [538] Nusmāt·aien·a, "The Woman of Nusmāt·a." There are also many stories describing his amours with human women resulting in semi-supernatural offspring.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

* 776 encountered on land, but the sea likewise is the home of anthropomorphic creatures. Far beneath the surface is a land much [772] like the earth, inhabited by people resembling humans who sometimes assist a drowning person. The mysteries of this undersea world are known to the Bella Coola chiefly through accounts handed down from generation to generation, though its inhabitants have often appeared at the surface. Their hair is long and somewhat reddish, their bodies are hairless, and their faces are in many cases stained with black. One man stated that about three years before a Japanese, fishing near Namu, had caught in his net one of these people, a girl about two years old. He drew her into his boat, where she squatted on the bottom, docile and submissive. After a time the fisherman became frightened and threw his captive overboard. The [648] Bella Coola say that the Bella Bella, greater seafarers than [186] themselves, have more extensive knowledge of these undersea dwellers.

539 Similar, if not identical, beings live beneath rivers and lakes; they have often been seen on the surface, and occa- * 776 sionally, long, long ago, certain fortunate individuals saw their houses. Accounts of such are embodied in Bella Coola mythology and will be described later. The following can be considered an example of a simple type:

About three hundred years ago, Lewumewumlaix, a Kimsquit fisherman, built a pier-like framework, projecting into the Dean River, on which to stand while fishing for salmon with a long-handled[14] scoop-net. One August day he was using his net when, after a number of successful sweeps, it became very heavy. As the net came to the surface he found, to his amazement, that a small boy was hanging on the rim. A number of people who had been watching from the shore, called to him to throw away his net with its uncanny haul. Heedless of this advice, Lewumewumlaix tried to lift his net and, on finding it too heavy, began to draw it through the water so as to drag it out on the shore. All went well for the first few yards, till suddenly the boy shoved against the net, pushing the fisherman into the water on the other side of the pier. Immediately the supernatural one vanished from sight. As the bystanders rushed to [14]The handles of nets of this type are said to have been about thirty feet in length.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 with the objects back on the fire. In some cases four sets of 575 cloths are used. This rite, which is regarded as very impor-
783 tant, frees the lads from the supernatural powers with which 789 they have been endowed, and permits them finally to leave the back-room and return to normal life, just as their earlier cleansing freed them from the tutwinam. During their period of seclusion no initiate can perform a kusiut ceremony of any kind. The supernatural beings of the two societies, though closely akin, are yet independent, and it would be unthinkable for a man to enter into contact with the two at the same time, unless he should be the owner of a rare prerogative enabling [424] him to do so. Only a few men have the right, which un-
[177] doubtedly was derived either from the Bella Bella or the people of Rivers Inlet.

556 X pays the functioning siki with new clothing. This com-575 pletes the whole ceremony. The guests either return home or [465] adjourn to some other house where a potlatch is taking place, but no rites mark their departure.

556 Such, then, are the principal features of the Bella Coola
171 potlatch. Without making a careful comparison of its features with those of neighbouring tribes, the following points stand out with great clearness:

(1) The basic concepts of the potlatch in Bella Coola are the same as those of the rite practised elsewhere on the coast.

(2) A potlatch has not the same importance at Bella Coola as it has on other parts of the coast, especially among the Kwakiutl. All informants stated repeatedly that they did not [186] carry their potlatches to the same lengths as did the "foolish" Kwakiutl, nor were they as keen financiers. A Bella Coola would never entirely impoverish himself by lavish giving.

(3) The potlatch, though fundamentally the same as it is elsewhere on the coast, has certain rites characteristic of the locality. The central Bella Coola feature, the return of a dead ancestor, is not equally important elsewhere. It would be interesting to be able to trace the history of this. The most

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In one case where an orphan woman, without relatives, repurchased herself by her own arduous labours, the announcement was made: 553 556 583

"Y's belt has come to rebuy her."

The reference was to the manner in which she had looped up her clothing with a belt when working. If Y's father should die after amassing goods to repurchase her, they are used for the purpose intended and the announcement is:

"Y's father's anus has come to rebuy her."

The ancestral family descended from the first settlers at Snulle·tl have the prerogative of singing a special song as they rebuy one of their daughters. This was used by their first ancestors on a like occasion. The theme is: [424] [533]

"I, I, I am the highest of you all. No one of you is capable of doing what I can accomplish. You all live on what I void."

The significance of this last sentence is that the village of Snulle·tl is farthest up the Bella Coola River. Its inhabitants used to claim that the people of the other villages lived on the refuse which they threw into the river, a source of pride to them. [186]

After announcing the various relatives who have rebought Y, the presents are counted and carried into X's house. The statement concerning their number, who has given them, and for what purpose, is repeated to the foreign guests there assembled, and they are then piled indiscriminately in a large heap for future distribution. At this juncture X calls out:

"Come in, come in," as though he were welcoming arrivals from a distance.

Y's relatives enter, and the ritual of the potlatch continues in the manner already described. The origin myth in which Y's new name is embodied is related in considerable detail, especially its recent history, that is, by whom it was last used and any pertinent items connected with its transmission. If she has received several names from different myths, each is similarly expounded.

As has been said, many women's names have been created 551 553

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

587 carried out in toto, since the repurchasing has wiped out the original expenditure. This is not necessary in the case of elderly widows or widowers. It is considered fitting for a widow or widower to wait for at least six months before re-[186] marrying. The Bella Coola say that in Bella Bella wives are willed, as if they were slaves.

586 In spite of the efforts made to ensure the stability of marriage by elaborate ceremonies and repeated exchange of presents by the two families, divorce is not unknown. Due to the decay of Bella Coola culture, it is now the rule and not the exception. It was difficult to obtain satisfactory data concerning its prevalence in the old days. Unquestionably every effort was made by both families to keep together a husband and wife who had been wed with due ceremony, but it is evident that these attempts were not always successful. If a husband deserts his wife, or she him, and refuses to return, it is considered that the marriage contract is at an end. The usual grounds for desertion on his part are childlessness, inability of the wife to help at potlatches, and habitual faithlessness. Continued cruelty and neglect are the usual reasons for a woman abandoning her husband. These factors seem to have governed divorce in years gone by, as well as at the present time. The most unfortunate consequence, in the eyes of the Bella Coola, is the stigma it casts on the children. The younger ones normally remain with the mother, those older use their own discretion, and sometimes pass back and forth from one parent to the other. Both mother and father continue to take an interest in their welfare, and a child can receive prerogatives from either, irrespective of which he is living with. None the less, there is a sentimental bar against the children of a divorced couple who can be shamed by a reference to the marital faithlessness of a parent. This factor, combined with the difficulties, financial and otherwise, between the two families, explains the efforts made to prevent divorce and the odium with which it is regarded. Of course, if husband and wife are poor persons or slaves, married without elaborate

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NE6

#539
#956
#987

palm of one hand. The conspirators had been hoping for such an indication, since it gave the information to the brother who was peering through a crack. The younger sister persuaded the older one to hold up her palms to the fire to warm them, thus giving the brother an opportunity to shoot through a knot-hole in the wall of the house. His arrow transfixed his sister's hand and she fell, helpless, whereupon he entered and slew her.

The surviving brother and sister abandoned their home and travelled for a very long time without seeing anyone. Finally, they settled on a mountain top and married. Since that time Carriers have married their sisters.*

[186]

THE MARRIAGE OF Thiedpilden-a's DAUGHTER

Long ago, when the world was still sparsely populated, there were two poor orphans, a brother and sister, quite alone, without relatives. The boy, who was about eighteen years old, took great care of the girl. In summer, when the people scattered over the country in search of food, the two went together to catch and dry salmon for the winter. The brother had great success. He caught many fish which he suspended on a frame to dry, in charge of his sister, while he went away for four or five days. On his return all the drying salmon had disappeared.

[251]

"That is unkind of my sister," he said to himself, "to have eaten all these fish so greedily."

He went to bed without saying anything, but next morning asked her:

"Is it you who have eaten all our food?"

The girl replied in a frightened whisper:

"Don't speak to me about it. I am terrified. A supernatural woman stole it. I think it was Thiedpilden-a. I heard something approaching and hid myself. A huge woman came to the drying rack, her snout-like mouth ranged among the fish and sucked them down like lightning, while her teeth rattled as if they were loose in her jaws. She went away as soon as she had finished our salmon."

Next morning the boy hade his sister hide, as he was going to attack the robber of his food. He prepared a bow with a strong arrow and took up his position in ambush overlooking the rack on which hung the salmon he had recently caught. Soon he heard a voice and presently Thiedpilden-a appeared, wearing a shaman's collar of dyed and undyed cedar-bark or shavings bands, plentifully sprinkled with eagle down. Her teeth rattled loudly in their sockets. When near the rack, her mouth formed itself into a snout with which she began to suck in the salmon with a horrible

*This statement is undoubtedly a mere expression of Bella Coola contempt for their neighbours.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Several Bella Coola were questioned concerning the Cannibal spirit which Boas has described for the Kwakiutl. Some had never heard of such a creature, others had vague knowledge concerning it, and two men were able to give it a name. The one called it Bäxbäxqwanälocîwa, the other Bäxbäxqwaiwa. All informants agreed that this creature was not a part of the Cannibal rites of Bella Coola and one man suggested that the cannibalistic incubus rendered it unnecessary. The Bella Coola believe that this Cannibal spirit is used in Bella Bella. During 1923 there came to Bella Coola an old Kimsquit Indian who had left his home many years ago and had since been living at Smith Inlet(?). With him came his son, a grown man, who had inherited from his mother a Kwakiutl Cannibal prerogative which he displayed in the winter of 1923-4. After the dancer had, theoretically, returned from the regions above, a large masked figure representing Bäxbäxqwaiwa entered through the front-door. As the singers beat time, it hopped to and fro, up and down, with snapping beak. The Bella Coola were intensely interested, and one had only to listen to their remarks when wondering what it might be, to be convinced that the Cannibal spirit is a strange concept to them. The most frequent hypothesis was that it was a hauhau, since the masked figure did resemble this supernatural bird. The Bella Coola greatly admired the dance, and were by no means ashamed to confess their inferiority as dancers to the Kwakiutl. After the disappearance of the masked figure, the singers sang the Cannibal's song and he danced in normal fashion, which was commented upon as another difference in custom.

575* 796* 776 [171] [171] [428] [424] [186] [171]

THE SCRATCH DANCE

Only less awe-inspiring than the Cannibal dance is the Scratch dance. Those hakuxiat who have this prerogative are able to scratch the bodies of their fellows, so that long, bloody weals result. The privileges and restrictions of Scratchers are closely akin to those of Cannibals, as the following points show:

575* 424 [796]*

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

WAR WITH THE CARRIERS

B C 648 721

The only other people with whom the Bella Coola came into frequent conflict were the Carriers. Some of the latter used to spend the winter among the coastal tribes, and had even intermarried with them to a considerable extent, but their mode of life was so different that they were always viewed as foreign in thought and outlook. The Bella Coola despised them for their dirtiness, their fondness for unsavoury food, and, above all, for their ignorance of kusiut and susook matters. This distrust was mutual and not infrequently led to bloodshed. Owing to the location of the Carriers, they could not be reached by canoes, and the Bella Coola had no liking for long overland journeys. The mobility and relative lack of permanent villages made it difficult to bring the Carriers to bay, so that warfare between them and the Bella Coola usually took the form of a killing followed by a raid for revenge; continued hostility was virtually unknown. The people of the lower villages were scarcely affected, but in former times there seems to have been a considerable amount of intermittent fighting between the inhabitants of the upper valley and the Carriers living east of them.

B [186] B [484]

B C 648 726

The following account, claimed to be historical, describes what was said to be a typical raid, followed by a counter-attack.

On one occasion all the young people of Suasi, Nuktli, Ăsăwăwi, and Sauisli went on a picnic to a large, clear tract of ground up the valley, where they spent their time, playing and singing. Towards nightfall two young men, who had not come with the others, drew near cautiously until they could call a girl who was a friend of one of the two. She slipped off quietly from her companions and passed the night with her lover and his comrade in the woods. Towards dawn a party of marauding Carrier Indians swooped down on the sleeping picnickers who, unarmed and unprepared, could make no resistance. With the exception of two pretty girls carried off as slaves, all were slain. The three who had been in the woods hurried back to the villages with the news.

The men of the four towns prepared for action. They went to the picnic ground and brought back the corpses for burial, thus learning for

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

142 sally used but the older people state that beards were by no
144 means rare in former times. Careful inquiries were made
[302] concerning the ancestry of a man, about seventy years of age in 1922, whose curly beard suggests that he must be a half-breed, as indeed he is assumed to be by the white settlers of the valley. His father was Potles, the most influential chief of recent years, his mother was herself the daughter of an important chief. None of the older men had ever heard the slightest rumour of faithlessness on her part. There were white [648] traders on the coast at the time of his birth, and intercourse with [567] slave women and others of low family was not uncommon, but [622] it would have been difficult for a chief's wife to misconduct herself, and still more difficult for her to conceal all knowledge of it in view of the open life which prevailed at that period. Moreover, it is said that Potles himself had a similar beard, as did also the parents of several men who in 1922 were fifty or sixty years of age.

142 Although the possibility of white mixture cannot be over-
144 looked in the case of this one individual, one must not dis-
826 regard the opinion of the people themselves on hairiness in general. They are proud of it and regard beards and mous-
[302] taches as marks of virility given to them by Ałquntäm; baldness and lack of facial hair are considered a sign of weakness. They aver that their fathers and grandfathers were even more hirsute than they. Furthermore, they point out with pride [186] that this is a difference between themselves and the tribes of the interior, who are, as they say in scorn, "hairless like Chinamen." Finally, it is noteworthy that the hair on the head of many Bella Coola is wavy, or even curly (see Plate 20), instead of straight as among the majority of Indian tribes.[2]

Character

181 It is an almost impossible task to describe briefly the characteristics of a people. Those of the Bella Coola have

[2]This characteristic has led the writer to wonder if it could possibly have been caused by Ainu mixture.

3: Smith E-5 (1920-1923) 1925
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

105 are apparently more recent comers to the coast than their neighbors and have not fully adopted this coast culture.

The following examples of sympathetic magic and witchcraft, collected during 1920 to 1923 among the Bellacoola, illustrate the extent of their belief in this direction. 114 121

Most of this information was given me by the late Captain Schooner, born about 1848, and Joshua Moody, born about 1868, both apparently full-blood Bellacoola Indians. Neither of them spoke English and both gave me the data in Chinook jargon, which I have endeavored to interpret and arrange in logical order, but have tried to render in as nearly as possible the Indian mode of thought, feeling and expression. Schooner was a pagan gentleman. Joshua has great knowledge of plants and animals, and is a Bellacoola scientist, but his great ambition and jealousy, combined with his disloyalty in giving up his own people's customs and adopting a very thin veneer of Christianity, color his statements relating to beliefs, although his plant and animal data have always withstood cross examination and comparison with the data supplied by other Indians. Alec Davis and Mrs. Willie Mack told of the toad. They do not talk English and spoke to me in Chinook jargon. Only the accounts about the grizzly bear skin and the bracelet of beaver skin, which were given me by Mrs. Stoessiger, were told in English. 115 [191] [191]

The material was not given as accounts of magic or witchcraft, but rather as part of the data regarding the properties of plants and animals of which I was endeavoring to collect as complete information as possible. 114 121

Joshua, who is even younger than Captain Schooner, remembers the time when Mr. John Clayton was the only white man living in the Bella Coola valley, and when they saw only one other white man every year or two. Consequently these men remember the old Bellacoola beliefs before they were much, if at all, affected by European ideas. 114 115

It will be noticed that magic among the Bellacoola is considered of use both for beneficial and injurious purposes, and that the materials giving effect to it are of both plant and animal origin. 789 754

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

MATERIA MEDICA OF THE BELLA COOLA AND NEIGHBOURING TRIBES OF BRITISH COLUMBIA

By Harlan I. Smith

INTRODUCTION

This paper describes the materia medica of four tribes of British Columbia, the Bella Coola of Bella Coola valley, the Gitksan of Skeena river, the Carrier who live in the territory behind both of these tribes, and the Sikani of the headwaters of Peace river. Among the Bella Coola the medicines are largely family possessions known to a few individuals only, so that two families may have different remedies for the same specific complaint; but this is not the case among the other tribes. Everywhere magical practices enter largely into the treatment of disease, but are not touched upon in this report. It was impossible for the Indians to diagnose many of their maladies, so that the identifications given here are in many cases problematical.

Most of the information relating to the Bella Coola was given the writer in 1920-22, by Joshua Moody, apparently a full-blood Bella Coola Indian, born about 1868. As he did not speak English he gave the data in Chinook jargon, which has been interpreted and arranged in logical order. Joshua is an Indian scientist with great knowledge of the local plants and animals. He remembers when Mr. John Clayton was the only white man living in Bella Coola valley, and when the inhabitants saw only one other white man every year or two. Consequently he can recall the old Bella Coola material culture before it was much affected by European ideas.

Some of the information relating to the Bella Coola was given the writer in 1922-23 by the late Captain Schooner, also, apparently, a full-blood, born about 1848, who used the Chinook jargon. Alec Davis, Alexander Clelaman, Louie Hall, and other Bella Coola Indians likewise gave information and corroboration.

Most of the information relating to the Southern Carrier Indians of Ulkatcho was secured during 1920-1922 from Charlie West, alias Pretty Charlie or Handsome Charlie, a native of that place, born about 1871. Charlie used the peculiar form of broken or pidgeon English commonly employed for communication between the whites and the Carrier and Chilcotin Indians of this region.

The information about the Sikani and the Northern Carriers of Hagwelget is from stray field notes kindly supplied by Mr. D. Jenness.

The information relating to the Gitksan was secured in 1925-26 from the late John Fowler and Abraham Fowler of Kitwanga, Luke Fowler and Bob Robinson of Hazelton, with additions and corroboration from a few others, all old Gitksan Indians, apparently full-blood. The information was secured mainly in English, although Abraham Fowler used also the Chinook jargon.

The method the writer employed was to submit specimens of the plants to his informants and question them concerning all their uses. Of the information thus obtained only the medicinal portion has been presented here. The plants were later identified by Mr. M. O. Malte, of the National Museum, Ottawa.

B
C
S 121
757
[101]
[31]
B [424]
B 115
[191]
C 115
C [198]
C
S [127]
T 115
T [191]
B
C
S 129
126

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 776 the top. He concluded that this must be the home of the woman. Before the door of her house, wherever it may be, there are miniature totem-poles which open their painted mouths and speak in the voice of the animal or bird portrayed. The writer did not hear that her home was in the land above [114] Nusmät·a, as Boas (p. 28) states. At the present time knowledge of Kämai·ts is so scanty that failure to confirm the previous observation is not surprising.

One or two passing remarks of elderly informants imply that Kämai·ts may once have been more important to Bella Coola belief than she is now. One old man, already in his [775] dotage, stated that long ago the dead used to dwell in her house. Another declared that long ago prayers were addressed [782] to her, which is never done now. The word kämai·ts is commonly used by the Bella Coola in a manner difficult to trans- [192] late. It serves as equivalent for "please" or "thank you," but has an underlying significance of a supernatural benison or appeal. It is not a word to be used in casual conversation; it is reserved for important occasions or times of emotional stress. The comparative unimportance of Kämai·ts probably rests on the fact that she belongs merely to the realm of ancient history and has no sociological significance, even as the patron of a kusiut dancer.

772 Another supernatural being so far removed from this world that he enters but little into the lives of the Bella Coola, is * 776 Sninia. He is the male being whom Älquntäm sent down from above in the beginning of time to hold the earth in position, and who has since performed this duty. He lives among the ice of the far north, and has not been seen by mortals for many generations. He holds a rope fastened to the earth; when he is afraid that it has slipped slightly he takes a new grip and pulls the rope taut, pressing the world against the soles of his feet as he sits with legs extended, as a man would do to hold tight a kicking salmon. It is the tightening of the rope which [823] causes an earthquake. If Sninia should lose his grip entirely 575 the earth would capsize. He is patron for several kusiut * 776 dancers.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 *

monograph the term "potlatch" will be limited to this, the łum. [104]

Every Bella Coola is, or should be, able to recount how, in the beginning of time, the supreme god, Älquntäm, caused his ancestors to be created in his house in the land above, whence they were sent down to populate the earth. A creation legend of this type is a man's most treasured possession.[4] Most myths describe the adventures of these first people, how they prospered in the Bella Coola country until they were able to invite to their homes guests from far and near, to whom they showed what they had achieved, through the assistance of Älquntäm, or of some other supernatural being. In so doing they were carrying out Älquntäm's wishes. He told some of these first people that if they accumulated much wealth, in those days chiefly food, there was danger that the provisions first stored would rot, hence they should cut away the bottom of the pile and present it to other men and women. The Bella Coola term for "to cut out that which is rotten" is łłł, hence the origin, according to their belief, of the word łum, which thus has the significance of "a giving away of long accumulated goods which otherwise might rot."

556 * 773 [424] [192]

By the splendour of his gifts each of the first people able to give a potlatch (łum), spread the knowledge of his name and fame to the towns whence his guests had assembled. Further, those who had received dances from Älquntäm were able to demonstrate them. In course of time those who had first given potlatches died, but on taking their fathers' names, the sons, or other descendants, endeavoured to uphold the parental tradition by inviting guests from afar and giving them valuable presents. At such a ceremony the family history, or family myth, was recounted, so that the donor of a potlatch not only increased his own prestige, he incorporated therewith the traditions of his parent. This is the essence of the potlatch as carried out today.[5]

[574]

[4]Examples of these are given in vol. I, chap. VI.

[5]It has been found convenient to use the present tense throughout, although the potlatch is not now carried out in its entirety.

[104]

*539 and Qwax, the Raven. The former flew ahead to clear a path down the mountain slope for Yuyulk"mai. At that time there was no sun, everything was dark and bleak. As they descended the mountain, they remembered that they had forgotten to bring from above the sticks for making fire which Sınx had promised them. So Raven assumed the form of a deer, returned to the upper regions, collected the desired appliances, and rejoined his companions below. Sınx had given Yuyulk"mai a stone hammer to use in making a salmon-weir, so he chose a site near the river, where the village of Ālqāläxl now stands, and built a house of evergreen boughs. The perpetual gloom annoyed Raven so that he determined to release light, sxem, which he knew was in a container in the house above. Once again he ascended and succeeded in uncovering the light of the sun which has since shone forth on this world. From this Raven took for himself the name, Qunqwnım uldidā sxem.

When Yuyulk"mai awoke after the first night in his new house, he found a salmon-weir ready for him, built by Sınx while he was sleeping. That night he slept again, but nothing had altered in the morning.

*539 During the day, Sınx appeared to Yuyulk"mai, saying:

551 "I bring you the name, Sınxälotla. When you give a potlatch, carve my face on your totem-pole."

The next day Sınx came again.

"I bring you the name, Sınxäkila," he said. "When you give a potlatch, carve my face on the bench where the chiefs sit."

The third day Sınx appeared once more, saying:

"I bring you the name, Ānuxemlaix. When you give a potlatch, paint my face on the back wall of your house."

Next day Sınx appeared in the form of a stump with numerous radiating roots, scoured and polished by the river.

"You will have the name Ālqexqi'djut,"[4] he said. "If you find a hammer used in the construction of salmon-weirs, you will know that other people are living above you on the river. Put abalone-shell on the hammer."

*539 With these instructions Sınx went away and never came back.

In course of time, when the population of the earth increased, Yuyulk"mai became rich and invited the people to a potlatch. The name he used on this occasion was Sınxälotla and he carved the face of Sınx on his totem-pole, as he had been instructed to do. A few years later he gave another potlatch, with the name Sınxäkila, and this time he carved Sınx's face on the bench where the chiefs sat. When he gave [192] [4] Meaning, "A glance downwards." It is the word used when a person looks downwards between his legs, or over his shoulders, a reference to the manner in which Sınx, from aloft, watches the actions of mortals.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

525 were about to die. During the day he spent much of his time aimlessly
* 539 making miniature wooden darts and circles of pliant wood, such as are
* 787 used in a game, and idly tossing these around. One day when he was so engaged he heard someone come to the door, and looking up he saw a strange man.

"A wina[1] is coming to Djusdju·sa," said the stranger.

"Come in," replied Djusdju·sa.

The stranger was a supernatural being, though whether Djusdju·sa was at once aware of this is doubtful.

"What do you bet?" asked the stranger, assuming that they would play with the darts and hoops which Djusdju·sa held in his hands.

"Alas, I have nothing," said the miserable man, though all his gambling instincts were aroused. "All I own in the world is a dried salmon fin which I use to chew on; I can barely keep alive with that and clams."

"Come on," said the supernatural stranger; "I will wager this pair of decorated moccasins against your salmon fin."

They gambled and Djusdju·sa won.

The loser handed over the moccasins, saying, "Go down to the beach and put just the toes of these shoes into the ocean."

Then he disappeared.

Djusdju·sa placed the toes in the water, and instantly the sea was filled with small herring-like fish called ḵmän·i. Djusdju·sa caught and devoured as many of these as he wanted, but he did not clean himself, nor did he tell his brothers of his good fortune on their return.

Next day the supernatural stranger again appeared, offering to wager another pair of shoes against one of the hoops which Djusdju·sa had made. Once more the lad was victorious, receiving a pair of moccasins which, when dipped in the sea, brought countless spring salmon. The following day he won a pair which attracted the sockeye salmon, and on successive days ones to bring other species of salmon, until he was able to attract every kind. Finally, during his brothers' absence one day, Djusdju·sa, throwing off his disguise of lethargy, filled the house with all kinds of salmon. Great was the surprise of the hunters on their return; they asked him if he had become endowed with supernatural power, and he replied that he had. In exchange for being taught to gamble with crab-apple sticks, the supernatural one had so cleaned Djusdju·sa's eyes that he could see where the king-stick[2] was concealed; hence he would be able to win on all occasions.

[192] [628]

[1]Wina, the term used for a raiding-party, is also applied to a contest in any game of skill, especially one in which teams or individuals from different villages take part.

[2]This is a marked stick and the players guess in whose hand it is concealed.

2: McIlwraith NE6 Bellacoola NE6

103, 192, 551, 773, 776

/For a Bella Coola-English vocabulary which includes place names, personal names, and names of spirits, gods, mythological characters and places, see category 116, pp. 573-630./

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER I

WINTER CEREMONIAL DANCES

000

General Observations on the Kusiut Society — Powers and Functions of the Society — Initiation — The Ritual of Specific Dances — Various Origin Myths — Kusiut Prerogatives Other than Dances — The Death of a Kusiut — The Final Rite — Concluding Observations and History.

General Observations on the Kusiut Society

IN view of the importance of the kusiut society in the lives of the Bella Coola, it would seem logical to have described it in an earlier part of this monograph. Though an integral part of the complicated structure of social organization, it is a secret, semi-religious grouping which can best be treated separately. The word kusiut is connected etymologically, according to native belief, with siut, the term for a supernatural being. Thus the meaning of the society's designation is "The Supernatural," or "The Learned," for siut has both these significations. A member of the society is likewise called a kusiut, plural, kukusiut. 575* 575* 192 [776]

The investigator soon learns of the existence of the society. If he asks a man his name, and then inquires further what type of designation it is, the answer is always that it is his kusiut name, that is, the one by which he is known as a member of the society. Ancestral names are used only at potlatches or other ceremonial occasions, whereas an individual's kusiut appellation is the one which he uses commonly. Moreover, for about three months of every year the Bella Coola live in an atmosphere of kusiut dances with a performance, or its preliminaries, taking place almost every night. Preparations for this ceremonial season, for so it may be termed, begin four days after the September moon is full, while the actual dances commence early in November and are continued until March. During this period the kukusiut are believed to be in intimate 551 575* [124] 535 575* 796 [787]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

meal with admonitions from the marshals; then they too disperse. 575* 796*

During the following day a hole is dug behind the fire of sufficient depth to conceal X, when standing in it, as high as the thighs. Towards dusk he takes up his position in this pit; his face is blackened and he wears the customary cedar-bark collar and a belt-apron to hold the frame in place. An assistant lies down on the floor immediately in front of him with his head in the hole beside X's feet so that the two men, instead of appearing as such, seem to be only one seated upon the ground. As night falls the kukusiut take their places and the more influential members of the society press forward to see that X and his assistant are properly disguised so that the fact that they are really two is not apparent. When all is in readiness, the Bella Coola practice is for a herald to summon the waiting uninitiated, but in Kimsquit one of the marshals orders some of the younger men to extinguish the fire, before this is done, so that as the non-members come to the door their fears are increased by finding the house in deep darkness. The heralds guide them to their places in the front corners, where they sit in shuddering expectancy for about an hour. The stillness is broken only by the occasional sound of a whistle and the laboured breathing of the guests. Suddenly the hush is shattered by the voice of a kusiut calling out four times än·än·ai·, the ejaculation used in pain. [184] [192] [152]

To the spell-bound uninitiated it seems as if the supernatural beings surrounding him had become too much for him, so that he cried out in the agony of his soul. Resinous sticks have been placed in readiness and a fire is quickly kindled. The Cannibals growl savagely in their corners and the uninitiated shiver. From this point forth the ritual in Bella Coola and Kimsquit is identical. [184]

X circles the fire, sunwise, four times and appears to seat himself on the floor with outstretched legs though in reality he is standing in the hole. One of the änuyax stands up and announces:

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 575 *796 776 825 184 824 773 824 825 539

land of the salmon early in January, and it is owing to his successful raid that there is a plentiful supply of fish the following year. The fact that the Bella Coola attribute the same function to Nēākynim provides no difficulties to native philosophers.

"Different individuals have different stories," they say, and the fact that the two are contradictory is a matter of no consequence.

The incidents described in the following myth are always spoken of as having taken place long ago, and yet the coming of Winwina is an annual event, a confusion disconcerting to the investigator though not to the Bella Coola themselves.

Winwina[*] once led a raiding party against the salmon, whose home is far to the west, and against the berries who live in a flat and warm country beyond even the land of salmon. His crew consisted of birds who are spoken of in the myth by unusual designations, said to be either their supernatural or their kusiut names. One informant spoke of these beings as individuals, and only added that they were birds as an afterthought, while another emphasized their avian rather than their human characteristics. This is not surprising, considering that the story belongs to the distant past when birds and human beings were not as clearly differentiated as they now are. Winwina's crew consisted of:

The Bald Eagle, Tcēkwak;

The Hawk (l) species, Ānukiqakstix;

The Raven, 'Łaxwaqstlaix, "He Who Talks at Dawn and Wakens Everyone";

The Water Ouzel, Tlikmaxstlika, "The Walking One";

The Great Blue Heron, Mazaxilian, "Long Neck";

The Hermaphrodite, Ala'yas;

The Cormorant, Kwakwā'la, who joined the expedition at Bella Bella as a passenger;

Four lazy supernatural beings, Kāmalālkl.

The expedition was under the especial protection of Kalxsta, a female supernatural shaman, who guided the canoe in which the raiders travelled by the force of her intellect as if it had been a compass. After a lengthy journey, the party reached the land of the salmon where the clouds obligingly drifted low in the heavens so that the fish could not see their

[192]

[*] A word etymologically connected with wina, the Bella Coola term for raid.

[The Dance of the Tally Posts]

*575 *796 [417] During qothm and nuluxam days the carpenters gather in X's house where they construct a long ladder. The uprights and rungs are of split cedar, and each of the latter is decorated with a tuft of dyed, and a tuft of undyed cedar-bark; two white eagle-tail feathers are fastened to the top. In the afternoon of nuluxam, a kusiut who is also a chief blackens his face, dons a collar of dyed cedar-bark and sallies forth to invite guests from the adjacent villages. About the same time the smoke-vent in X's house is pushed back and the ladder is erected, projecting a considerable distance above the roof. The uninitiated see it clearly and wonder what it may portend. In the evening the kukusiut assemble and the singers beat out X's two songs for the benefit of the guest visitors. Then the uninitiated are called in. They see the lower part of the ladder, and gaze with wonder on X who keeps walking backwards and [292] forwards in his raised enclosure, clad in a dance-apron and a black blanket to which is tied one end of the long rope. Two kukusiut assistants hold a section of it as if to anchor him. The dancer carries a rattle which he keeps shaking violently. His two songs are sung and everything is now ready for the main performance. Still shaking his rattle, X climbs the ladder and disappears from sight through the roof, dragging the rope after him. The sound of the rattle grows gradually fainter and fainter, but the cable is steadily drawn up through the opening. It is so realistic that the uninitiated hardly require the explanation given by an eloquent kusiut that a strange power has come to X, enabling him to climb up a ladder which lengthens of its own accord until he will ultimately reach the land above. The orator explains how the dancer will be able to straighten the tally posts, and thus have it in his power to govern the life of an individual, though normally it is only the supernatural beings who can do so. In this connection he employs the term [192] mulatsta, a word seldom used which has the significance of "A Measuring of the Span of Life."

As at kusiutum dances, spies guard the doorway and threaten death to the kukusiut unless X return in safety. No

[The Sun Dance]

*575 dance of Neăkxmm is omitted owing to the large expenditure
*796 required, X must sing, without a call, in conjunction with the W'l-a dancer. In this case also the details are lacking.

[424] Likewise at the winter solstice, when the tarrying Ălquntăm
[821] at last enters Nusqulxwaista to greet the waiting supernatural kukusiut, it is incumbent on his protégé to perform in his honour below. The singers are always ready with a new song for the occasion, and in the evening his fellows assemble in his house to learn it. X wears the usual ceremonial collar, but he lacks the awe-inspiring qualities of a kusiut who has had a call. When the song has been sufficiently practised, the uninitiated are brought in to listen to it and to watch the dancing of X. At the conclusion of the performance they are given a little food, provided by X, which they carry away while the kukusiut remain to eat at their ease and listen to the admonitions of the marshals. It is probable that the ritual carried out at the beginning of the ceremonial season is identical with the above.
[821] One old man stated that long ago it was customary to dance in the same manner at the summer solstice; this might be expected, but confirmation was unobtainable.

*575 Like the protégé of Thunder, X is sometimes called upon 796 to perform during the non-ceremonial season. But whereas a 821 Thunder dancer acts when his patron is apparent by peals of sound, X must do so when his patron is invisible through an eclipse.[] The ritual is almost identical with that already described for a Thunder dancer so nothing but additional details need be inserted. X visits every house shaking a rattle, which is not the case with Thunder dancers. After his circuit of the village, the kukusiut gather in his house where the singers are [533] composing a new song describing the phenomenon. The words explain that Eclipse, the supernatural being Nuqsulx[w], has blocked or destroyed the path of the Sun, and add how disastrous it would be if the Sun could not recover its way. Later on, the uninitiated are called in to watch X's dance which, like

[*] The Bella Coola term both for "eclipse" and the being responsible is Nuqsulx[w] which also means "A Fire That Has Died Out."

[796]
[792]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the one that takes place at a thunder-storm, is said to "make good the path" of the patron. It would formerly have been a very serious offence for a Sun dancer not to perform at an eclipse; his failure would probably have been punished with death by the marshals. One informant vividly recalled his fears when he failed to perform at an eclipse soon after his conversion to Christianity, and reiterated that he had been in deadly peril from the marshals in spite of the white man's law.

575* 796* 821 688 177

THE MOON DANCE

The Sun is not the only heavenly body that acts as patron to kusiut dancers, the Moon also has many human protégés. Among them is Nałuimăx, "The Moon When It Is Unobscured," of Tsmotl, from whom the following account of the Moon dance was obtained. As usual, he can be spoken of as X.

776 551 424

The Moon dance can take place at any time during the ceremonial season, subject, of course, to X's wishes and the consent of the marshals. The coming of the call is heralded in the usual manner and the kukusiut presently assemble to learn the song just composed. It describes the following supernatural beings:

Asiutănem:[11] A woman who lives in the moon and who can be seen in certain of its phases, always carrying a bucket of water.

575* 796*

The two Aiqwaiust: These two beings are able periodically to blacken the Moon's face, thus causing an eclipse.

821 776

The two Snitsmăn·a:[12] These kindly women clean the Moon's face after it has been blackened. It is these beings who come to earth to assist stricken kukusiut.

The song also describes how no supernatural being dares to pass the Moon's house during an eclipse, a prohibition similar to that obeyed by uninitiated with regard to passing outside a house where a kusiut ceremony is taking place.

784

[11] Asiutănem is the usual term for ghost; no reason was given for the application of the same designation to the woman living in the moon.

[12] There is difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as to whether or not there is more than one of these beings.

775 192

*575 natural, any of them can act in this capacity, though it is *796 usually added that the animal in question is the one resident 776 in the land above. One patron of this type is the ordinary 825 river bull-head. It is said that long ago this fish wanted to [773] follow his friends, the salmon, to the ocean, but was persuaded to remain in the river to act as nurse to their children in his house, the river bottom. Early in the world's history he objected to people exposing his dwelling, that is, pulling up the [821] stones from the river-bed where he was wont to lie, and showed [226] his resentment by sending a very cold wind. Ever since that time boys are not allowed to fish for bull-heads in winter. As far as could be learned, this dance has no special features.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL HERRING-HEAD

One of the supernatural beings living in the land above who is patron for a certain lacier is the head of a female herring.
Little is known of this being, even her appearance is subject to [532] doubt. For the nekaxw of her protégé, a number of masks representing herring, as well as human-like beings, are prepared. When the uninitiated are present, one of the disguised figures calls to his fellows to bring their nets and capture the fish.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL DOG SALMON

Another fish dwelling in the land above is Dakdakinux, the supernatural dog salmon. He is patron of some lacier but the ritual of the dance, known as xnkwnamain, was not obtained.
The similarity between Dakdakinux and Dakdakinuxw, those who await Nakkynux, appears merely to be an accidental re-● [192] semblance in terminology, dependent upon a stem meaning "to come," or "coming." The significance of this in connection with the supernatural dog salmon could not be ascertained.

*575
*796 776
184
[755]

THE DANCE OF Almaqhaikila

In Kimsquit it is believed that Awikinalaxa has a husband, Almaqhaikila, who is patron for several lacier dances.
His function is to restore to life any uninitiated who chance to Lincoln E-9 (1922-1924) 1948

NEA Bellacoola NEA.

Nuxalkmc Songs

The texts of nuxalkmc songs are fragmentary and unsatisfactory. The rites in which they were used have long been discontinued and, since they were never ceremonially important, there was nothing to impress either tunes or words on the minds of the singers. In addition, it is probable that the songs were always less carefully constructed than those of other types.

Song Used for Xalset(a), a Kwaqut Man(b)

Kwanamtsinqa	Ahamtsinkwinqa	ximxmalkmalat
Be happy,	so people,	it is about to come,
ala'alhqyakalat	alaqalakwinqa
that hidden one(c),	Raven.

[illegible]

Xalset'i	Xalset'i	ma mat yat
Xalset(d)!	Xalset!	ma mat yat(e).

(a) This word means "Raven." It is most unlikely that it was the dancer's own designation, more probably a nickname used in connection with the nuxalkmc rite.
(b) Recorded as song VII D 56, National Museum of Canada, singer, Louis Hall.
(c) This signifies a person who is hidden ceremonially, such as a hamat dancer who has gone to the land above. The dancer expected to be a Cannibal and the rite in which this song was used served as a kind of rehearsal.
(d) This refrain replaces a second and third part of the song itself.
(e) A meaningless series of choral ejaculations.

Song Used for a Kwaqut Woman(a)

Ximxqalqmqalakt	Sqaiwanakat	tsqaiwanakatlaka	alayanatlaka
They heard	of Town(b),	when they were playing	long ago(c).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 56, National Museum of Canada, singer, Joe Pielasat.
(b) The chorus being of a town, the dancer wore a deer-skin.
(c) As in many nuxalkmc songs, the words refer to an ancient story, probably one describing the adventures of deer and wolves, see vol. II, p. 416.

Song Used for Wanaqlaim, a Kwaqut Man(a)

Lilimayanimq	mamayaqam ai	natqalki	qalamqa
Run in all directions,	as dogs,	for the first time	it is there ximqalkmat	xamtsinkwat	mamk	mamk
he brings much food(b),	go below the house	?(c)	?(d).

[551]
[746]
[575]
[595]
[776]
[792]

*583 (c) Recorded as song VII D 3c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Louis Hall.
[776] (d) Presumably a reference to Nankyum, the dancer's hatlal spirit(?).
[192] (e) The meaning of this word is not known; it is considered to be quite distinct from the identical term in Chinook jargon for "dance."
(f) The meaning of the whole song is extremely obscure.

Marriage Songs

*533 As marriage songs, two distinct classes may be considered:
585 A. Those used at weddings;
[582] B. Shaming songs used in connection with divorce rites.
[578] The former are said to have been handed down from the distant past and consist of a few almost meaningless words. The latter are composed whenever required, and consist of foul allusions to the person being ridiculed.

WEDDING SONGS

Sisaw Marriage Song(a)

Nawa-qwalilmaiqwanaxal	yaw xalqaqlayulus	alhaqlqwanlaqala
Dressed for joy	Qalaiyu(b)	when they brought al'alhaxwanulus	yaw dalqaqay-mualus
the girl	from the place of light(c).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Lame Charlie.
[778] (b) Qalaiyu came down with xyaxyaxal in the beginning of time, and brought, as a gift from Alqaxnim, the prerogative of dancing at weddings. He landed at [424] Kimsquit, and no explanation is given by the Bella Coola for the use of this song by the people of Sisaw.
[778] (c) A reference to a marriage among the first people on earth. One of Qalaiyu's companions married a woman whose relatives had brought light with them from above.

Kimsquit Marriage Song(a)

Sal'Nlalimqwanulus	yaw dasmatchlanuls	mustqalyustulumulus
They went down	Xemtch(b)	with his relatives yaw xalqaqlayulanuls
Qalaiyu (c)(d).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[illegible] you are the prey of misfortune,	si [illegible] you unmarried mother;	[illegible] you are spill(d), you women	593* 586
[illegible] who pretend to be illegible.	Aiem Alas(f)!	Yumtsain I am ashamed,	comtsain I am Sam(g). 578

[WOODLESS CONCO]

B [illegible] Exactly similar	[illegible] is the little boy's nose	[illegible] to that of the round-headed
[illegible] Eskeri(h).	Aiem Alas!	Yumtsain I am ashamed,	comtsain I am Sam.

[WOODLESS CONCO]

C The third part, if it ever existed, has been forgotten.

(a) This differs from most Sisyutlam songs in that Sam was an unmarried mother, not a faithless wife. She was held up to scorn by the men of Kimsquit and this song composed for her by a certain Sisyutlam. [848]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 36a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(c) It is said that women, even of slave blood, used to endeavour to increase their importance in the eyes of their children by boasting, falsely, of ancestral history. [554]

(d) A term of opprobrium, difficult to translate. It is said to imply slave ancestry, but is more probably a mere epithet, referring to the female organs. [195]

(e) This is addressed to women in general. [192]

(f) An expression of pain or sorrow, used under all circumstances.

(g) The theme is here changed as if it were Sam herself speaking. This is a common device in all kinds of songs.

(h) Eskeri was supposed to be the father of Sam's child.

Mourning Songs

Mourning songs excel all other Bella Coola compositions in length, complexity, and wealth of detail. Especially those composed for mighty chiefs contain numerous references to the ancestral history of the deceased and mention incidents referred to in origin myths, a source of pride to the survivors and of envy to those who listen. 593* [765] [766]

Song Used for Kyai when Mourning his Son, Kyisaeia

A Sitsuclem | [illegible] | Sitlinapsem | [illegible]
Why has my son done so(i)? Come, ye who are residents of foreign lands(i)

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*533 (aa) Referring to a spot outside Smith Inlet.
[996] (bb) That is: Tlelukt'ānā' had just stilled the rough sea. She was another of Qwinao's first ancestors, the most powerful of a group of four consisting of her brothers, Nain'akwas, Tleowika'lis, and Tlāliatlis, and of herself.
(cc) Qwinao's house, a reference to an incident in Qwinao's ancestral myth.
(dd) The house contained whistles and other valuables which they obtained.
[551] (ee) That is: All people, everywhere, know of Nain'akwas and Tleowika'lis. Each name, though singular, has a plural significance since the other brothers are likewise implied.
(ff) Referring again to the band of first settlers.
(gg) A place on the mainland opposite the north end of Vancouver Island.

Song Used for Sinuxetl(a)

A Y'ao kā'āsmaiustīmqudax	dānuĺoldaiāmk'ĺdiĺs	yao ikāĺskadnimodaox
They(b) will presently inform(c)	my dead relatives(d)	when they reach yao ulāttowuxiqudstao	dulukājudjimultsidax	duolnuditxāmāthmdax
the outer places(e);	they(f) see(g)	where they first came down.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Kawanāulm-āsmāin	aiyawasmaiustaĺsaĺs	āltusālainaoskidax
I clothe myself with(h)	my ancestral myth,	as it was dāsāhuiye mokidax	pāuwuuqwsum-ālstskidax	aiyalāmtsai'aisudax in the time	of the Nunuqsmāls(i)	house.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Skāmāwulumuuuoimī'	dāsqwnutsamstānaoĺsandax	stāminlqwlāsitl
Had just emerged(j)	the place where our relatives get their food(k).
Aiyadāmāmtsymax	stāllārikālmut-skidax	aiyawaāks-udax
Thither went	when it became dry(l)	Waāks.
Stāltiyuklālmudax	dāno'aqān-āmkldatl	aiyatāmān-ukstitl
That is why	all people, everywhere, know	of my ancestors(m).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 37, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. Both words and tune were composed by him about 1907.
(b) Referring to Waāks and his band, (I, p. 350). Sinuxetl was descended from this group of first people.
[192] (c) The significance of this word is stronger than inform. It means that Waāks will relate to the deceased their ancestral myth.
(d) The chief for whom this song was composed had lost several relatives.
(e) Referring to Goose Island, Yel-ārlaix, where Waāks landed.
(f) Referring again to the deceased.
[192] [775] (g) The significance of this word is stronger than see. It means that those recently dead will gaze with rapture on the places which belong to them owing to their ancestral myth.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533*
226

Nuthlḑwaqotsmkx	oldisxtcntcnki	oldisxtcntcnki
Swallow right down(c),	to your very tail,	to your very tail;

dinustamwakalulan·islaix
why you cannot even break one of our hairs(d).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 9a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Louie Hall.
(b) The vocative form is used.
(c) That is: Swallow the bait.
(d) A reference to the use of human hairs for fishlines. The lad is, of course, trying to "dare" the fish.

Fishing Song(a)

This is a song sung by lads as they splash in the water after minnows, trying to drive them ashore.

Waksdimān·u	Waksdimān·u
Who is your father?	Who is your father?
Qwalaiyulānk	dimān·u	qwalaiyulānk	dimān·u
"Rotten stomach"(b)	is your father;	"Rotten stomach"	is your father.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 26b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) It is uncertain whether this refers to any particular kind of fish, or is merely a general term of opprobrium.

Song Sung to a Cormorant(a)

533*
825

When a cormorant is seen near a canoe, the paddlers often sing the following song. The bird, delighted, is said to come near and dance around the craft.

Qānāxemāks	dallopān·idax	qānāxemāks	dalsitaowidax
Dance,	cormorant,	dance,	cormorant(b).

Nustsaik
Take the breast(c).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 34c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) This is the Bella Bella word for cormorant.
(c) The singer insisted on inserting this refrain after the song. It is really a lullaby and it is doubtful whether it normally accompanies the cormorant song.

[192]

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 825 said, "This is my home. I will go ashore here." He went, and took along the Salmon which he had captured. Ever since that time there are salmon at Bella Bella. The others travelled on, and came to the mouth of Bella Coola River. Then they threw all the various kinds of fish into the water. The Salmon jumped, and began to ascend the river. Then Winwt'na arose in his canoe and told each at what season he was to arrive. He scattered the berries over the mountains and through the valleys, and told them at what season to ripen. After he had done so, he invited his companions into his house, and gave them a feast.

773 825 192 In this tradition the birds and animals are not called by their ordinary names, but by mythical names. These names are as follows:—

ENGLISH.	ORDINARY NAME.	MYTHICAL NAME.
Spring salmon	ämt.	t'oh'ō'ła'timōt
Sockeye salmon	sämt.	nanōiak'anēxtłm'm ("very long")
Humpback salmon	k'ap'ai'	anuk'pmai'x'.
Dog salmon	ijlō	sasa'łłoa ("fair weather")
Silver salmon	wa'ła	k'ipstōtōsa'łaix ("making himself beautiful")
Salmon (sp.?)	——	ō'sip'ēq
Cloud	sk'lē'noas	tsa'koak' ("long hand")
Hawk (?)	stsix'ta'ex	anuk'k'iqtsaix' ("looking down into water")
Wren	moxat'a'łaqa	t.'ik'ma'łat.aix' ("jumper")
Crane	xaq'ā'na	masaxē'łian
Raven	qoa'x	t.xoa'xoaqsai'łaix' ("rising early")
Cormorant	t.'ō'pana	k'oa k'oagała
Hermaphrodite	sx'ints	sta'ya ō

773 According to the belief of the Bella Coola, Winwt'na's canoe arrives from the country of the Salmon every year. It stays in the country of the Bella Coola for nine months, and then returns to the country of the Salmon. At the moment when it leaves, another canoe, which is named "No'ak'nɛm" or "Nunuk'au'tsnɛm," which brings the kō'siut ceremonial, arrives from the country S'anōk!pta'łtua. The canoe reaches a distant point of land before the departure of the canoe of the Salmon. After four days it reaches a nearer point of land. Four days more, and it is seen at the point of land nearest to the mouth of Bella Coola River. Another four days, and it reaches the mouth of the river. The Indians believe that there is a house named Snō'amłtɛnank' at this place. A post is standing in the water in front of the house. It is called Snutēxoałaaxtstɛna'nk'. In the house live three men who are named Naapsułaaxai'x', A'mł.tag'ilis, and Tix'ti'k'a'nɛmem. The canoe is tied up in front of this house. As soon as it arrives, the kō'siut ceremonial begins. At the head-waters of Bella Coola River, forming the watershed between Bute Inlet and Bentinck Arm, is a mountain called

7:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1900 NE6 Bellacoola NE6

174 words of Kwakiutl derivation will become clear by a glance at the following 177 list, which contains words that can be proved to be of Kwakiutl origin:—

776 a'tokoala = shaman.

Alk" = speaker.
E'mask'in (p. 49) (Kwakiutl, He'mask'in) = the greatest chief.
Hau'hau (p. 100) = a fabulous bird.
L'ā'qoqila = the copper maker.
L'ā'qomēlks = sister of Maumaola'nix (the ending, lks, designates "woman" in Kwakiutl).
Lēqumail' = mythologic al name of deer.
Ma'lsk'ilat.
Mentsu't (p. 48).
Mia'ltoa = the country of the salmon (p. 38) (Kwakiutl, mē) = salmon.
No'akila (pp. 49, 66).
O'meatk'as (p. 70) = the real O'mēlt.
O'meatmāi (p. 70).
Omq'ōmk'lik'a (p. 33) (Kwakiutl, Q'ō'mq'ōmkilik a) = the wealthiest one.
Pō'tas.
Qanātsla'qs (p. 49).
Q'ōmō'qoa (p. 32) = the wealthy one.
Q'ō'mqātis (p. 49) = rich at opposite side of river.
Q'ō'mtsiwa (p. 33) = wealthy at mouth of river.
Smai'yakila (p. 29) = the one who must be worshipped.
sl'siut = a fabulous fish or snake (pp. 28, 44, 48).
Smyyalō'ola (p. 29).
T'ō'pewas (p. 97) = the fawn.
Winwi'na (p. 38) = war.
Wa'k'intmai (p. 30) = the greatest river.

[95]

174 With these names and customs the clan traditions must have found their 177 way to the Bella Coola, but their social organization differed fundamentally 424 from that of the Bella Bella branch of the Kwakiutl. While the latter, 614 owing to intimate contact with the northern tribes, had adopted the four-clan
[621] system with prevalent maternal descent, the Bella Coola were still distinctly divided into village communities that were not exogamic. It seems very likely that the jealousy with which the ownership of a clan tradition was guarded by the Coast tribes was very early introduced among the Bella Coola. Two means were available for preventing outsiders from acquiring the traditions. Among the Coast tribes with prevailing maternal institutions, among whom a limited number of clans existed, the ordinary law of inheritance was sufficient to retain the tradition inside of the clan. Not so among the Bella Coola.
174 If their organization at an early time was similar to that of the Coast Salish, 182 it is likely that the child was counted as well a member of the father's as 424 of the mother's family, although the young woman generally moved to the 614 village occupied by her husband. If the child belonged to the families of [591] both parents, it had the right to use the tradition of either family; and consequently in the course of a few generations, the traditions acquired by each family would have spread practically over the whole tribe. There were [851] only two methods possible to avoid this result. The one was to prevent marriages outside the village community; and this method would seem to have been most natural for a tribe organized in village communities, members [621] of which were allowed to intermarry. The other method would have been to regulate the laws of inheritance in such a way that the child had to

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

524 ulnar side of distal ulnar thumb string; hook down this string through thumb loops.

Insert left index finger into left thumb loops from distal side, passing to ulnar side of the two distal radial index finger strings, and to radial side of proximal radial thumb string; bend index finger upwards and away from manipulator, taking up this proximal radial thumb string on dorsal aspect of index finger.

Release left thumb and extend.

There is now a diamond-shaped figure of two strands near the left hand; pass left thumb into this diamond away from manipulator and take up on its back the two strings forming the right lower side of the diamond.

Insert left index finger, with its loop, into left thumb loops from proximal side.

FIG. 19. "A Porcupine."

With tips of right thumb and index finger lift loop from left index finger, drawing this loop through left thumb loops.

Release left thumb and index finger.

Replace loop held between tips of right thumb and index finger on left thumb, without twisting.

Release right thumb and little finger.

Extend right middle finger loop by passing into it, from proximal side, all the digits of the right hand.

Extend and the porcupine appears (Figure 19). Its head is bent [825] downwards near the left hand, and its tail is the loop around the right radial thumb string.

The manipulator sings:[1]

Ayawiskisan-inu	nuyattstkaitl	uxkaostuan-inu	alasolan-inu
Don't hurry away,	go easily,[2]	when you go	to your house, skalkulakas

O porcupine!

XVI. AN EAGLE'S NEST

Opening A with middle fingers.

Insert thumbs into middle finger loops from proximal side and transfer these loops to thumbs, keeping them distal, and at the same time releasing middle fingers.

[1] Recorded as song VII D 18b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
[2] A form indicating address to a feminine creature.

[12L]
[193]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

With left index, middle, ring, and little fingers hook down from proximal side the right ulnar little finger string. 524

Release right little finger.

With right little finger hook down right ulnar thumb string.

Release right thumb.

With right index finger hook down left radial thumb string.

Release left thumb.

By extending gently the figure appears. The crooked figure near the left hand represents the cripple, the upright figure near the right hand with projecting centre represents a man with umbilical hernia (Figure 21).

The following dialogue in song accompanies this figure:[9]

The man with hernia sings:

Xai, xai, xai,	alkeltumx	diwdqlatai
Hi! Hi! Hi!	Hurry up,	you cripple.[10]

The cripple answers:

Stuaiaiyustnu	dinusqotai	xai, xai, xai
Don't say that	you man with umbilical hernia.	Hi! Hi! Hi!

XVIII. THE Snmnq

Bella Coola opening.

Pass middle, ring, and little fingers into index finger loops from proximal side, and hook down radial index finger string.

With thumbs take up radial index finger string from proximal side, keeping this string distal.

Bring hands together; insert left thumb into right distal thumb and index finger loop from proximal side; lift this loop from thumb, but not from the index finger, without extending.

Insert right thumb into left middle thumb and index finger loop from proximal side and lift this loop from left thumb, but not from index finger.

Extend.

There are now two loops on each thumb and one on each index finger.

Pass middle fingers into loops hooked down by ring and little fingers from proximal side.

Each loop hooked down by the middle, ring, and little fingers is crossed by the proximal ulnar thumb string; with backs of middle fingers take up this string where it crosses the hooked down loop.

Pass middle fingers, still carrying on their backs the string just picked up, through index finger loops from proximal side, and into both thumb loops from distal side.

[9]Recorded as song VII D 6e, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. [126]
[10]The form indicates that a masculine cripple is indicated. [193]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

APPENDIX D

BELLA COOLA-ENGLISH VOCABULARY

DURING the period in the field, the writer's attention was devoted entirely to sociological and religious investigation, and no attempt was made either to analyse the intricacies of the Bella Coola language or to record texts. This part of the monograph consists only of words which were collected fortuitously, and no effort was made to compile an exhaustive list, or even a representative one. This explains the preponderence of proper names, and the large number of nouns connected with rituals of all kinds, some of which are rapidly disappearing from common usage. Many of these were used by the writer continually in gathering technical data, and their interpretation is unquestionably correct. A few words, however, were not rechecked on different occasions, or from different informants, so that some errors may have crept in, either in translation or in recording. No terms have been employed of which the writer has any real doubt, but the same accuracy is not claimed for this vocabulary as for the monograph as a whole. Lack of knowledge of Bella Coola grammar made it impracticable to utilize the words recorded in the songs, since many of them include affixes and other structural elements that affect the root.

128
192*
[114]
[193]

In listing the words alphabetically, the following arbitrary system of letter order has been followed and all symbols have been disregarded, for example, a and ā are not separated.

ə follows a.
ɔ follows a.
ɛ follows e.
ɪ follows i.
ɨ follows ł.
ʊ follows u.

A

192*
[575]

a'alk: 1—Loosely organized society of which the members can perform four types of dance.
2—Member of the society.
Ahakha: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ahsikim: Chief of sea-lions in the beginning of time.
ahsuk, vocative, ahsuk: Resident.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

As they grow older the plainness of feature is more pronounced, accompanied by increasing heaviness of body (see Plate 16). Many of the adults are corpulent and move with slow, awkward gait. As a rule the men have great strength and are capable of prolonged and arduous exertion, particularly in paddling; in fact, constant use of canoes may have developed this powerful, ungainly build. Few are good walkers or packers; such, if they are found, usually belong to the lighter interior type. Among the grown people the face, though unbeautiful, often has a kindly expression, even becoming attractive in laughter or when a friendly grin spreads from ear to ear. With advancing age the prominent nose seems to grow larger, frequently becoming almost aquiline (see Plate 17). Many of the older people assert that this was even more common in former times. In time the face becomes lined with wrinkles and the body appears to shrink (see Plate 18). The teeth are in many cases worn down to the gums; this seems to cause no discomfort, though an old person cannot utter the glottal stops and velar sounds with which the language abounds without emitting a fine spray of saliva. They are absolutely unable to pronounce several of the Bella Coola words, while the constant spitting is a disagreeable feature of their conversation, particularly to an investigator striving, often vainly, to record sounds accurately. The deep wrinkles of old women give them a benign "grandmotherly" expression, which makes them more attractive in extreme age than in youth (see Plate 19). Senile decay is so frequent that the return to infancy in mind as well as in physical powers is regarded as normal.

Among the coastal tribes hair on the face is not uncommon, but in this characteristic the Bella Coola are pre-eminent. Nearly all the men have sparse moustaches, at least; many have a heavy growth, and several are full-bearded. That this was due to white mixture was assumed at first, but no evidence could be found to support this view. There are a number of half-breeds in the community but they are no more hirsute than the full-blooded Indians. Razors are now almost univer-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

224 785 sible, selecting small twigs from which the bark and spines have been rubbed off. This acts as an emetic, so that before washing in the morning he has vomited from his stomach all [824] polluting matter, especially any human hair which animals [278] consider particularly unclean. Before dawn he goes to the [783] river and remains beneath the surface as long as possible, irrespective of the coldness of the water. Then he returns slowly to his house. Four nights later the same acts are repeated. These eight nights of continence are followed by two further periods, each of four nights, making a total of sixteen. Thus fortified, a hunter anticipates great success.

785 A person practising ceremonial chastity is in a condition peculiarly susceptible to disaster, and must observe certain restrictions. If, for example, anyone sees him as he returns from washing in the morning, the power which he has been accumulating so laboriously is lost. Owing to this belief, it is customary for a man to wash long before dawn and to come creeping into his house through a hole in the floor. He must always be the last to retire at night, the first to rise in the morning; and he must say nothing about what he is doing. Intercourse is, of course, absolutely forbidden except on the proper nights, and at other times he must not even put his arm around his wife. Failure to obey these restrictions destroys any advantage from [837] ceremonial chastity, while actual disaster follows should a man's wife misconduct herself with anyone else when he is using her for this purpose. If she is unfaithful, her husband is certain to be slain by an animal when hunting, or to slip and be killed on a mountain trail. Animals know all that human beings do [825] or think, and they punish anyone who is unable to perform ceremonial chastity fittingly. Behind these restrictions there 831 is undoubtedly the sentiment that intercourse, held duly and 785 properly at the right time, is not a mere desire of the flesh, but a ceremonial act. Indeed, when the Bella Coola speak of it in [833] connection with ceremonial chastity, they do not use the [195] common term, e·m, which has a coarse implication, but xoldjut which has a polite and almost sacred implication.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

593 on the value of the goods distributed in connection with them, 614 usually revert to the ancestral family and can be revived by 553 any member of it. It seems needless to publish lengthy pedi-
428 grees, illustrating the transmission of ancestral names; it will suffice to say that such sometimes pass from father to son, from a man to his brother's son, his sister's son, his sister, his daughter, or to other relatives belonging to the immediate family. On the other hand, with equal frequency, names pass from a man to distant relatives of the same ancestral family.

59 Thus the Bella Coola family, important though it is in the life of the individual, cannot be defined with exactitude either as regards composition or functions; it varies according to the importance of its head, and tends to merge in the ancestral families of the parents.

Kinship Terms

601 In Bella Coola, as in so many parts of the world, kinship terms mirror the social life of the community. The Bella Coola system of nomenclature is not as clear-cut in its application as in other regions, and requires considerable explanation concerning the uses of many of the terms. It will be seen that the system, although fundamentally founded on the family, presents many classificatory features. Whether or not these are to be ascribed to an ancient clan system is most doubtful; a short discussion of that point will be found at the end of this section.

The terms are arranged in the following order: first, an individual's relatives of the preceding generation, then those of the next preceding, with their parents, then those of the present generation, followed by terms for kin of the generations following. Finally come relations by marriage.

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Father.....	Atso	Atsi
	This term is properly used only by a small child, though often continued by an adult as a term of endearment.	Term used only by a small child.

[195]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

TERM	DIRECT ADDRESS	INDIRECT ADDRESS
Father (continued)....	mûn Term used, rarely, by an adult of either sex; sisso is more common. Mûn is often used by an adult when speaking to any old man as a courtesy title.	mûn Used by an adult.
Mother's husband....	sisse Terms used by small children.	sisi
	mûn Used by adult; more commonly sisso.	mûndimut Used by adult.
Mother.....	mômao Used by baby.	mômi Used by baby.
	qômao Used by small child.	qômi Used by small child.
	sisin Used by adults of either sex with same limitations as mûn.	sisin
Father's wife.....	mômao or qômao Used by small children.	mômi or qômi
	sisin Used by adults, more commonly qômao.	sisindimut Used by adults.
	The application to step-parents of the terms usually limited to the real parents is merely a mark of endearment, without social significance.
Parent of either sex...	âlqwallaiyely	ômstalâykt
	These terms are used for a parent of either sex when old and feeble. Their use is a mark of courtesy and implies respect for those with wide knowledge of family history.
Father's brother.....	sisai, or by name, or âlqwallaiyely	sisi
Mother's brother.....	" " "	"
Father's sister.....	suksom " "	suksom
Mother's sister.....	" " "	"
	If the family contains more distant relatives of the generation preceding that of the speaker, for example, a father's father's brother's son, or a mother's mother's brother's daughter, the terms sisi and suksom may be applied in courtesy to these individuals.
Father's father.....	kukpai, or more commonly, sisso	kukpi
Mother's father.....	" " " "	"
Father's mother.....	kîpao " " qômao	kîpa
Mother's mother.....	" " " "	"
	Especially when living together, children usually address their grandparents by the terms properly applied to parents.

601
195
[888]
[595]
[888]
601

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the food and goods distributed, since it was winter and the 553 people were in dire straits on account of the destruction of all 556 * their stores. In consequence, the uncle decided to make a new name for his nephew, Sk̓ámł, "Charred Wood." By virtue of the goods expended this name became an honourable title, and was maintained by lavish presents. Any similar incident connected with a potlatch can be made the origin of a designation. Another example of a manufactured name is one derived from a peculiarity of the man giving the potlatch. A number of years ago a chief was jeered at by his associates on account of the frequency with which he had to visit the toilet. When next he gave a potlatch he created the name Ałpstl-a, "The Toilet One," and gave great dignity to the designation by presents.

Since a seat is valuable only on account of the goods ex- 554 pended in obtaining it with respect to a certain name, it is 556 * obvious that names and seats are closely associated. A man who wishes his son to succeed to his own location in the house seats the youth, as has been described, at his feet. It may be a matter of years before he actually takes his father's position, but during that time he is treated with respect; he is still a commoner, but it is recognized that his parent considers him likely to "make good" and become a true chief by ability to give presents. Should he fail to do so, inexorably his influence wanes, in spite of his name and duly validated seat. He keeps the latter, but it is no longer considered one of importance. Thus, too, the course of names from generation to generation [551] is a series of curves; sometimes one is on a pinnacle of glory when "made strong" by a powerful chief, but in the next generation it may fall to the dust through ownership by a [195] ● weakling. As the Bella Coola express it: It has become hermaphroditized.

A woman is rarely established in a seat, and usually only [562] when a chief has no sons or other near male descendants. In such a case she receives an ancestral name and has the same status as a male chief. At the present time one important the perils of infancy. During this period, the mother observes various magical taboos to ensure the welfare of her offspring, and endeavours to strengthen herself by rubbing her own body with non-odoriferous oils obtained from dog-fish, geese, or fresh olachen. Soft pounded salmon and water are added to an infant's diet as soon as possible, though nourishment from the breast frequently continues until a child is two, or even three years of age. It is not uncommon to delay weaning until the mother is again pregnant, when the child is deterred by the application of soot to the breasts. Marital relations are recommenced as soon as the mother is strong enough; there is no specified period of abstinence, nor does it matter whether or not the woman is lactative.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Occasionally, an infant is born with teeth; such an one is thought to be the reincarnation of a dead ancestor, though no one knows which. A similar belief is held respecting a child with dimples in the lobes of its ears; these are regarded as remnants of the holes pierced for ear-rings. A child that cries in the womb is said to have great intellect.

In former times infanticide was practised for various reasons. If a woman died in giving birth, it was customary for her mother to kill the child unless one of her relatives was able to suckle the motherless infant who was then given to her. It was not unknown for the mother of a large family to ask the midwife to kill the child in order to avoid an addition to her responsibilities. An unmarried girl who became pregnant often went alone to the forest, delivered herself without assistance, and killed her infant. This was considered to be the kindest act, since an illegitimate child was said to be, "Like a Dog." In some cases the prospective mother requested a friend to cause abortion by kneading the stomach and uterus, a method said to be effective and seldom fatal. How to do so is common knowledge, but to practise it is considered disgraceful, and the term ixwetl, applied to such an one, is among the most foul of Bella Coola opprobriums. It is believed that a woman who has had several children can in some way prevent ning of time. The following speech was made by an elderly Bella Coola chief at the funeral of his great-granddaughter in June, 1922:

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

"Granddaughter![1] Go with your grandmother[2] to the mountain above Tsmsil where my first [patrilineal] ancestor came to earth. Go to the mountain across the river where Qsil[3] descended; go to the north where your ancestor found a copper house with a raven inside; go to the Skeena where another of your early ancestors found a whale; go to all the places where your forefathers experienced the incidents recorded in our myths; go and be happy.[4] I do not want these ever-recurring deaths in my family, but I am helpless. I hope that Sixsixqutsam will cease hunting us."

Turning to the Carrier Indians who were present, the old man continued: "Thank you for coming twice within two days to share our grief."

Turning back towards the grave, he went on:

"I have made ready the road for you.[5] Your grandfather[6] and I are grieved; our families became united when your parents married, and the bond was cemented by your birth. Now it is lost. When you were born, I rejoiced; now I am sorry. You are all right; you cannot fall because you are supported[7] by the names and fame of your father and mother, your grandfather and grandmother, your uncles and aunts, and your other ancestors who have passed away here in Qomqo-ts. You rest with them in your own village where is located your power from the experiences of your forefathers.

[1] The term, ckmis, was used, although the child was really a great-granddaughter.
[2] The grandmother had been buried two days previously.
[3] One of the first people to reach this earth.
[4] The places and people mentioned were all described in the myths of the dead child's ancestral family.
[5] A reference to goods distributed by the speaker at a ceremony held a few days previously when it was certain that the child would soon die.
[6] The child's mother's father.
[7] Supported, kisimamalis, a word having the sense of physical support. The implication is that the deceased relatives are sitting in such a close circle that the pressure of their bodies is enough to prevent any one of them, including the dead child, from falling.

Such an adoption occurs only when the deceased was the owner of a Bella Bella myth and the song in question had been used to mourn a real or fictitious relative. It is contrary to custom to use the tune or words of a song not composed for a member of the deceased's ancestral family.

The actual delivering of invitations by the mourns to the desired guests does not differ from the manner already described, except that they are asked "to come to visit the sick [donor]." The significance is, of course, that the mourner's condition is that of a patient. To indicate the reason of their visit, guests at a memorial potlatch always wear a little dyed cedar-bark around their heads.

On arrival, the first party of foreign guests is conducted to the donor's house, where they make themselves comfortable in the section allotted to them by the hosts. An elderly Bella Coola chief who is a famous orator has been asked by the donor to speak, and he rises to do so as soon as his fellow-villagers have entered and taken their places. No set phrases are used, but the speaker usually begins by reminding all present of the way in which their ancestors were created in Nuxalk a, and how all must return thither. It is an occasion on which eloquence is essential, and the speaker delights in using as many archaic words and rhetorical expressions as possible, with constant reference to religious beliefs and ancient history as recorded in mythology. Then he speaks of the death which is the occasion of the ceremony. If the deceased were an old man, he is referred to by a special term not in common usage, nulkl-ás, which implies wisdom and respect as well as extreme age. The orator states that he has fallen, using the term ferrin, normally applied to the thunderous crash of some mighty tree. He speaks of a young chief as cwi'lkmelcc, short-lived, a person who has been burned down by the supernatural Carpenters. He continues by describing the works of the deceased, the number of potlatches he gave and the manner in which his name was known to many tribes. Finally he tells of the donor's grief, and of how this "sickness" has been allewill now be the turn of the one who has recently died. As soon as all have taken their places, an eloquent chief whom aid has been requested for the purpose stands up and recounts the dead's ancestral myth in some detail, mentioning the source and meaning of the mourners' marks and the designs of the totem-poles. Then he continues to the effect that the chief will "cry" by relating the history of his ancestors, which is also the history of the journey taken by his kinsman, and that this recital will show him up. The word used for this, mutlaskin, is the one commonly employed for raising a heavy burden with the aid of a lever. Then the singers begin to beat out the first of the mourning songs, accompanying it with their voices and assisted by as many of the audience as are familiar with words and tune. Every effort is made to make the singing as impressive as possible to add dignity to the recital of the journey taken by the person who is being commemorated. The guests listen attentively and are actually impressed by the ancestral history of the dead and his family. All the songs that have been prepared are sung in succession in the same manner. The lack of dancing distinguishes this type of ceremony from all others and adds somewhat to its impressiveness.

After the last song is the proper time for validating young relatives of the dead as mourners. One of the miniature totem-poles, which are light enough to be carried in the hands, is brought from the back room and given to the boy on whom this prerogative is being conferred. An eloquent speaker explains the meanings of the designs as displayed and enough of the family's ancestral history to make clear whence, and how, they were obtained. The singers begin to beat time slowly, and the youth endeavours to keep time with his feet, while he continues to hold the pole.

Meanwhile the dead and his immediate relatives have been arranging the piles of presents with the inevitable counting and re-counting. As at a potlatch, a fluent speaker is commissioned to hold up the objects, once whence they have been obtained,

[illegible]

1:McDowell K-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

type of dance differs from all other Bella Coola ones, since no inherited prerogative is required. Years ago such exhibitions were common, although curing shamans were rare.

The usual time for a shaman's performance is at the conclusion of the tsaciut season, though one is sometimes held prior to that period if the would-be performer fears that the food which he has stored up for the coast is likely to be frozen.

When he decides to give a dance, the shaman first summons the singers to his house and teaches them a song of his own composition. Theoretically both word and tune should have been received from his supernatural benefactor, but many performers undoubtedly employ songs used by shamans ancestors which they have chanced to remember. Another device is to describe a supernatural being seen in a dream. In some cases there is deliberate deception, but in most the performer persuades himself that he has received supernatural authorization. The seers are full of obscure allusions, a river, for example, is spoken of as swift running water. Often a man will memorize a song for years, before collecting the wealth necessary to use it publicly, with the social prestige attached. A shaman always obtains a name from his supernatural benefactor, but if a man merely uses a feat observed in a dream, this is impossible, so he adopts the designation of some deceased shaman, soon convincing himself that it was uttered by the apparition. Others will probably remember this name, hence suspicions may easily be aroused concerning the authenticity of the performance, but it is not customary to voice these. The singers repeat the song which they have just heard, and continue doing so until they have mastered it. Sometimes they compose further songs themselves for the performer. During the proceeding, those who are not tsaciut are expelled from the house. A shaman is a person who has come in contact with the supernatural; hence he is akin to the members of the society who, therefore, support him during his rite.* A herald is sent out

*Theoretically, a shaman could not be a tsaciut, but exceptions usually occur only in those of religious and imaginative temperaments, who are in the majority of cases already members of the society.

1:Mc:Dowelth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

*539
*987

on the floor as is done whenever a supernatural visitor is expected. Tsimalkae entered with his copper bride.

Although no one gave him presents, Tsimalkae's goods increased in a miraculous way. He would leave two blankets in his house and on his return there would be ten, and the same with other goods. He was able to give potlatches, thus wiping away his poverty and making himself a chief. In the course of time he learnt who had murdered his parents and determined to avenge their deaths.

One day he said to his grandmother, "I am going to lie down with my wife. No matter what happens you must not disturb us."

The old woman promised to follow his instructions and Tsimalkae disappeared with his copper wife into the bedroom.

Shortly afterwards one of the murderers of his father was drawing water when an immense eagle swooped down and carried him away, to the amazement and consternation of the people. This increased when a second bird dropped like a plummet on another man, leaving him aloft. Eagle after eagle swooped down, each taking one victim, until half the population of the village had been seized. Tsimalkae's grandmother, realizing that he was responsible for the plague of eagles, was greatly worried; she believed that if she called him the attacks would stop, but she feared to break her promise. At last she summoned up the necessary courage to do so, telling him what was happening.

"Didn't I tell you not to disturb us under any circumstances?" he angrily retorted.

The grandmother drew back, fearing that Tsimalkae would strike her as he followed her from the bedroom. He did not do so, but no more eagles appeared as she had broken his power.

THE MAN WHO MARRIED WOLF*

Once a man was walking in the forest when he met the daughter of Wolf. Each felt a mutual attraction for the other so that he accompanied the woman, who was in human form at the time, to her father's house where they were presently married.

"Marvel," said Wolf to his son-in-law, "if you are wise you will take very good care of your wife. Never slight her."

[145]

*Boas, p. 102, has recorded a myth having many points of similarity with this. He said the word Sqaic, which means literally, "to be in smoke," i.e., he told him, "Never allow smoke to drift over her." Considerable smoke often rose from the open fire of a Bella Coola house, hence the literal translation of his command means that the woman must serve to mend when the draught would blow smoke over her. Of course, the real significance was never to allow anything to impinge on the respect due to the wife.

J: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Noakanim]

the affair, and so many differences of opinion are voiced that it is often difficult to understand how the ritual can be carried out as smoothly as it is. The masks are tried on, adjustments in the rope fastenings made, and final selection of the wearers approved. In fact, the summoning of the kukusiut is regarded by them as an invitation to try on the masks and it is said that the herald sometimes calls them with a cryptic:

"Measure your heads, kukusiaot," the significance of which the uninitiated fail to grasp.

At last those who are to wear the masks are chosen. They conceal themselves in one of the two matting shelters, while the other is full of those kukusiut who have prerogatives as Cannibals, Scratchers, or Breakers. It is these who are most feared by the uninitiated, and if a slight accident should take place they rush forthsuddenly, frightening the non-members to such an extent that they fail to notice a mistake which would otherwise expose the mystery of the rites.

Meanwhile Ant'ikwelsaix at intervals sticks her head around the corner of the door to mock the uninitiated.

"You stupid one!" she gibes. "You and you [naming two uninitiated] almost bund my repository. You came so close to me that I put out my stick and tripped you up. [A safe statement since everyone stumbles over half-buried roots some time or another.] You were so blind that you did not see me. Look where you are going, keep your eyes open, and then you will become a kusiu, instead of remaining a nonentity."

The uninitiated, sick at heart over the missed opportunity, resolve to be more alert in future. Difficult though it is for the white man to understand such credulity, yet different elderly informants repeatedly recalled the chagrin with which they had listened to such remarks when young. Childhood impressions of respect and fear are too deeply ingrained for doubt to arise.

At last all is ready and one of the marshals tells a kusiut to open the door and call the non-members. In they rush, to crowd near the door and gaze upon the marvels with which X

[The Cannibal Dance]

X, now almost sane, rushes around the house, shouting xwa·, xwa·, xwa·, while his call sounds loudly, as the whistle is pressed firmly beneath his armpit or against his stomach, tied under a belt. Often the kukusiut slip a rope over his shoulders to prevent him escaping again. Finally, he rushes from the house and all the kukusiut crowd close about him on the sidewalk without. As many as possible press upwards against his body with their hands, while they shout, ye ··, trying to expel the call upwards. On the fourth repetition it is supposed to have been driven forth, and in answer to the tumultuous shout of the kukusiut, there is heard the sound of a whistle from above. The uninitiated do not know that a kusiut has been dispatched with one to a mountain peak for this purpose. 575* 796* 787

The kukusiut now return to X's house for a meal. The first dish of food is placed before X himself, while one of the marshals addresses him and the audience in the following strain: 575* 796* [539]

Yāxmandjinaxt, ōtōxwa-ks! Ālaits di pāxotla!
Greetings, comrades! Hail to the dreaded one [the Cannibal]!*

*Wai, pāxotlas Naxim. Nuqhlaisktdudaqa.
More, dreaded one, *Naxim. Eat to repletion.

There is no ritual significance attached to any particular words; marshals use their own discretion as to what they say, but the above may be considered a fair example of the kind of remarks addressed to a Cannibal at his first meal. After X has started eating, the other kukusiut commence and the marshals deliver their usual admonitions, praising X for what he has done and urging others to emulate his example. Then presents are distributed to those who have been bitten. It is considered that a Cannibal compliments a man by taking a piece of his flesh, and that he is under obligations to the one bitten for the latter having allowed him to exercise his preroga- 575* 796* 431 424

*Pāxotla means "The Dreaded One" or "The Fearless One." X is so called on account of the uncanny cannibalistic incubus that has taken possession of him. [787]

*This is the vocative form of the word.

*Naxim was the name of the performing Cannibal on the occasion that this speech was recorded. [195]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

CHAPTER II

SONGS

533*

Introductory — Sisaok Songs — Xe'tla Songs — A'alk Songs — Nusäxkämg Songs — Marriage Songs — Mourning Songs — Shaman Songs — Kusiut Songs — Non-Ceremonial Songs

INTRODUCTORY

THE singing of songs is an essential part of all Bella Coola rites so that a study of them is important, entirely apart from their musical value. Their texts throw light on the beliefs of the performers, on the aims of the ceremonies, and, above all, give concrete instances of what the uninitiated are led to believe. This is particularly true of those used in kusiut dances, and for this reason all songs have been deferred until this chapter in which they can be grouped together. [790]* [575]*

The texts of songs are difficult to obtain. Snatches of many are remembered, but few individuals are acquainted with the complete version. A phonograph was used to record the music, and it was soon found that very few people were qualified to sing into the machine. Some became confused and forgot the words; some began to laugh; and some lacked the poise to attempt to sing. One elderly Kimsquit man, Jim Pollard, was found to be the best and most reliable singer, and he was used almost exclusively for phonographic work. Hence the records are stamped with his musical technique. Others approached his ability, but he alone preserved an art which had been common in former days. Over one hundred songs were obtained with the assistance of this man. 126 115 533*

The text was always obtained before a song was sung into the machine, thus assuring that the recorded version agreed with the written words. Even with this check, the writing down of songs is extremely difficult. Choral endings are widely employed, consisting of non-essential suffixes inserted for musical effect. It was often impossible to record these in the 126 533* 195

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

126 text, although they are obvious on the phonograph records.
●195 In singing, moreover, sounds, especially vowel sounds, are altered to fit the tune, a factor which accounts for further *533 discrepancies between record and text. A frequent device is reduplication, a word or group of words is repeated in singing when not called for in the spoken version. Finally one sound occurs in singing which is practically unknown in speaking, a velar s (recorded as ʃ) which gives a whistling effect. Most choruses and some whole songs consist of meaningless sounds; in such cases the tune alone is important and no attempt was made to record the syllables.

It was quite as difficult to obtain interpretations as to record texts. Songs which have been handed down for generations abound in archaic expressions which are meaningless even to the older men: some recently composed are full of metaphorical devices to conceal their real significance from the uninitiated. The result is consequently a series of words which, taken one at a time, convey no meaning. In many cases it was impossible to obtain literal translations, even with the willing assistance of younger men familiar with English. Every effort was made to get the general meaning, and it is felt that this object was tolerably achieved, though the transcriptions may not be sufficiently accurate for grammatical analysis.

*533 Singers function at every ceremony; in fact, its success
*796 depends so largely upon their efforts that they are always important members of the community. Some singers are *575 created by the validation of an ancestral prerogative; others [554] by having composed a suitable tune. The young man who has [424] done so, calls one of the established musicians aside and hums it to him; if the hearer is favourably impressed, he may learn [555] and repeat it to his fellows, and if it wins their approval, the composer may be asked to join their ranks for the occasion on which it is to be used. Thus encouraged, the young man is likely to try again, or he may be invited to assist at some ceremony for which a large number of singers is required. If proficient, he is certain to win recognition in course of time,

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533*

ala xalpamiynas	nemenmatas	nestamnatal;
eagle down on his head(i)	ye children	of chiefs.

nánánánánánánwai

[meaningless concluding hum.]

(a) For some unexplained reason this song has been used without change for three generations. It was composed for a certain Itahmp, willed by him to W'ítalas, who transmitted it to the present user. [424] [428]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 22, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(c) All suffixes of dai should probably be dain, but in singing the final n sound is usually indistinguishable and has accordingly been omitted throughout. The d sound is often sung as d but the one spelling has been used consistently. [195]

(d) The wordless chorus of this song consists of a series of grunts which are said to be the voice of a heron, the crest of W'ulkt.

(e) The meaning of this is: What my grandfather brought down.

(f) The grandfather of W'ulkt had willed to him the right to use this crest. [424]

(g) The man from whom this song was obtained did not know what was the crest of W'ulkt. He judged from the text that it must have been the heron, although this is not one of the generally recognized birds. [428]

(h) Meaning: The heron which has failed to job its prey. When this song was used, a masked figure of a heron appeared and stabbed several of the spectators, who were later reimbursed for having permitted a prerogative to be displayed. [431] [424]

(i) An ambiguous expression for presents.

Song of Apalsis of Kimsquit when Initiated into the Sisauk Society(a)

A Yeyailhantimuttymas	aiwanhmapas	Yas ckiciskajiliniyas
Be of good courage	ye of the potlatch(b).	Use up and down(c)
dalcultánthalcinyas	Yaiwatcowainalinas	diwajmalcinindai
your land.	They have met with an accident(d),	the house being flooded (e).

[WOMAN'S CHORUS]

B Ka'ahkpanatin tsauk	ahhkaiyaccaipalli	kapalkadimatinkawanatin
Watch their faces [to see]	whom will become ashamed	when rises to flood cawaiz ahkwanatin	Kiniatsaiz ahkas	dinjanhlhlcapalai
the Kimsquit River(f).	They who use dishes (g)	will prepare their biggest crab.

[WOMAN'S CHORUS]

C The third part has been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 13a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) The wording shows that the song was to be used at a potlatch.

(c) Meaning: Make use of in all directions.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

3

uz: mumalomsimutu you are the prey of misfortune,	ni ewulklmutudja you unmarried mother;	ewuz tkqulkyamdz you are spilt(d), you women	533* 586
ewul'klyc ya lamdz who pretend to be virtuous(e).	Ánana Alas(f)!	Yumtcain I am ashamed,	ramtcain I am Sam(g. 578

[WOMAN'S CHORUS]

B Qawamulz alatkidas Exactly similar	dzakilthtcalatkidzais in the little boy's nose	yas ulkittadzul ts to that of the round-headed aiyayapalatkidai Ephrat(h).	Ánana Alas!	Yumtcain I am ashamed,	ramtcain I am Sam.

[WOMAN'S CHORUS]

C The third part, if it ever existed, has been forgotten.

(a) This differs from most Saiyahaw songs in that Sam was an unmarried mother, not a faithless wife. She was held up to scorn by the men of Kimsquit and his song composed for her by a certain Sis-gwas. [848]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 38a, National Museum of Canada; singer, jim Pollard.

(c) It is said that women, even of slave blood, used to endeavour to increase their importance in the eyes of their children by boasting, falsely, of ancestral history. [554]

(d) A term of opprobrium, difficult to translate. It is said to imply slave ancestry, but is more probably a mere epithet, referring to the female organ. [195]

(e) This is addressed to women in general.

(f) An expression of pain or sorrow, used under all circumstances. [192]

(g) The theme is here changed as if it were Sam herself speaking. This is a common device in all kinds of songs.

(h) Ephrat was supposed to be the father of Sam's child.

Mourning Songs

Mourning songs excel all other Bella Coola compositions in length, complexity, and wealth of detail. Especially those composed for mighty chiefs contain numerous references to he ancestral history of the deceased and mention incidents e- ferred to in origin myths, a source of pride to the survivers and of envy to those who listen. 533* [765] [766]

Song Used for Qoai when Mourning his Son, Epimenlai

A Ámanlas | mamlkidamas | Ilalangwas | ximlaskqai -
Why has my son done so(b)? Come, ye who are residents of foreign lands(c)

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(a) Recorded as song VII D 55, National Museum of Canada; quartet, Reuben Schooner, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and announcer, assisted by Tal ia Charlie and Steamboat Annie. 533*

(b) So many of Yexthin's ancestors had been drowned that he considered such a fate to be an inheritable tendency and mourned accordingly. This song was composed for a memorial potlatch held after the drowning of three of his sons. [761 827 195]

(c) Xem means, literally, the successive rising of the sun from day to day; it has therefore, the significance of: The span of life is shortening.

(d) This wail replaces the usual wordless chorus.

(e) Raven. This is one of his rarely used chief's names.

(f) The reference is to an incident related about Raven in the beginning of time. He made, and gave life to a son who was his chief joy and delight. Alquntam wondered what the creature might be and sent down one of his eagle-like supernatural birds to seize him. Raven, ignorant of the reason for his son's loss and with no idea that he was being carefully guarded, was absolutely disconsolate. The myth is recorded in vol. I, p. 83. [773]

Shaman Songs

In contrast to the carefully prepared and logically worded mourning songs, many of those used by shamans are extremely incoherent. This is natural in view of the belief, already described, that the words and tune are given to a sick person at the time that he is cured. Those who recover from an illness are convinced that they must have received a supernatural visitation, and at once begin to ponder on the song brought to them at that time. A person of imaginative temperament easily persuades himself that the words which begin to form in his mind were actually brought by an agent, and, having thus deluded himself, it is easy for him to convince others. The coherence of the text thus depends upon the ability of the patient, a factor which explains the extreme lack of skill in many compositions. The examples here given are, perhaps, unusually complete. 533* 756 [753]

Song Used by Ninitsamlais(a), a Kimsquit Man(b)

A Warumkwalhumqudu	shānīnitsmlaiqs
In the beginning(c)	the life-giving power(d) was made;
yes dial'aiyaiud	oldānālyinanadai
that is what we have given	within them(e).

[WORDLESS CHORUS] (f)

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*533 756

B Nuyamhmlimilink They(g) sang	disnuslkhkldinilsdai over my wash-basin(h);	dalqāpānm·idals they all watched over yululkwalstmm my shaman's power(i).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Ānuqwiklumilink Became open	wanuslukwalsida the place of shaman's power(j);	amātqamilsais there I saw

Thiteplilan·alsais Thiteplilan·a.

(a) This man received his name and his ability to cure the sick from Thiteplilan·a about 1850. He was very ill, apparently on the point of death, at the time of his visitation.

(b) Recorded as song VII D 45a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(c) The first part is worded as if supernatural beings were speaking.

(d) The reference is to the healing ability granted to shamans who have themselves been cured when seriously ill.

[753] (e) That is: Human beings. It is believed that a person can be cured only if Thiteplilan·a or some other supernatural being implant within the patient's body [776] some of the healing power.

(f) The two choruses of this song have different tunes, an unusual feature.

(g) Referring to supernatural beings; this part of the song is worded as if Niniteamlais were speaking, and describing the time he was made a shaman.

(h) Reference to the wash-basin shows that Niniteamlais had the ability to cure the sick.

(i) The theme is worded as if supernatural beings had tended and brooded over the power which they ultimately sent down.

(j) The reference is to Nusmāt·a which, as the home of supernatural beings, is consequently the place from which comes a shaman's power. When Niniteamlais was at the point of death, it seemed to him that the sky opened above him so that he was able to gaze upon those resident there. He watched the supernatural ones conferring about his own fate, and gazed with joy at the departure of Thiteplilan·a to rescue him.

[551]

Song Used by Sikwalwaks(a), a Bella Coola Woman(b)

[195]

A W'dukstillasmy It waved up and down	alyumaso·ay^wals Sosy^w(c)	disnayāmhmalin when they(d) sang	alytlyāmatmila of salmon(e).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Sosaspanlimlink They(f) placed eagle down	disnuskhkhtedidai within the wash-basin(g)	alymatm·alsandai where I was(h);

disnl'ātkmm·āmpālidai he(i) pulled me forth.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

C Wastl·ıkwainulıs	yas dıslukwalalısudai	dasalıhmnalıslıs 533*
I gazed upon	what gave me power as a shaman(j)	when it stood up 756

sawtsamnm·a·tlıwalı
in the centre of a place of petrified power(k).

(a) This was the woman's kusiut designation; her shaman's name has been forgotten. [551]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 56, National Museum of Canada; quartet, Reuben Schooner, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and announcer, assisted by Tal·io Charlie and Steamboat Annie.

(c) That is: The sky moved up and down. Grandiloquent phrases of this kind are frequent in songs used by shamans. [195]

(d) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(e) Łamsmıla is said to be the word for salmon in the language of the supernatural beings; it is used by mortals in the rites following the taking of the first spring salmon. The shaman has received some of her power from a fish. [198] [226]

(f) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(g) Reference to the wash-basin shows that the shaman had power to heal the sick.

(h) The meaning is obscure. Apparently the shaman had been carried away by Thıxaplıłw·a and treated by immersion in a basin in which eagle down was deposited.

(i) This refers to the supernatural being, Ałnuıtsłxum, who restores to life mortals killed by the receipt of too much power from Thıxaplıłw·a. It is clear that this fate befell the shaman. [776]

(j) The woman is said to have received power from several sources, salmon, ghosts, and Thıxaplıłw·a herself. It is impossible to state which of her supernatural patrons is referred to in this subdivision.

(k) The woman must have been taken to one of the spots where cures could be effected by the power of a supernatural being petrified there. [755]

[551]
[776]

Song Used by Nexnax·malıxsir(a), a Kımsquıt Man(b)

A Ałmıqsıwıqsnamlı	wasıustlıłwamlı	aıakuıaıat
Look at the teeming supernatural beings above(c), not one is my equal(d),		wise one(c)!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Sıwłalpıtsıyamł'wł	sıwıtcyustıwmıłwamlı	aıakuıaıat
You must sometimes waken at night to meditate on what I am bringing your mouth(f),		wise one!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Łamsyıłwıtłıł	sıłwaıłłıtsıwmamlı	aıakuıaıat
You must sometimes use your wash-basin(g),		wise one!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

593*

(a) Recorded as song VII D 11b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. This was incorrectly announced on the record as a shaman's song.
(b) The meaning of this is problematical. Ghost dancers habitually deride the dead and this is certainly a veiled allusion of a derogatory nature.
(c) Referring to ghosts.
(d) That is: Each uses the kind of grandiloquent language employed by chiefs. [195]
(e) More specifically, the two uprights nearest the front-door.

Song Used for Qomcua, a Bella Coola Sun Dancer(a)

A Sewtskamaistlaxsl | nuaiyalilaxstai | stsaalltwatsamalit |
The two | Alikhza(b) | drone in unison when yas dimalinuxmdai

he(c) enters(d).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Ilitsplkamuxsqadai | dipanpanlkmuxmdai | latimalinuxmdai |
All(e) watch as he draws near at the time they called him(f); is waiting(g) |

dis cmamlkanlkadai his salmon blanket(h).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Stamlkamaiualim | yas dilpualc'lmalinuxdai(i) | alilinkanlkmadai
They invite the lofty one to place himself(j) | on his seat;

aiamaaliladai
hail, Sawalala(k).

(a) This song was composed for, and used during the Sacrist season of 1923-4. The patron of the dancer, a woman, is Sawalala, the name of Alpaxtlm as Sun. [176]
(b) Referring to the two Alikhza who drone daily as sun and moon travel.
(c) Referring to Sawalala.
(d) That is: When he enters Nacwax-a at the winter solstice to join the gathering of the supernatural beings. It was impossible to obtain an individual translation for these two subdivisions.
(e) Referring to the supernatural beings.
(f) A reference to the gathering of the supernatural beings before the winter solstice.
(g) It was impossible to obtain an individual translation for these three subdivisions.
(h) That is: His salmon blanket is waiting. The reference is to Alpaxtlm's blanket with salmon on its lining. [176]
(i) When the song was first used, this subdivision consisted of a repetition of the second subsection of the second part. This was considered poor technique and the phrasing was altered for later occasions.
(j) It was impossible to obtain individual translations of these two subdivisions.
(k) The dancer's patron.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7

B C 648 726

The other agreed, so they paddled in and landed at the bottom of the village, heedless of the fact that it was full of Carriers. The Nuxalk people seem to have remained passive, but the angry Carriers came rushing forth and Ojmikmy spoke proudly to them:

"You would be dead as your chief if we had not lost our weapons."

The two brothers walked slowly up the long sidewalk of the village, while the Carriers skulked around, uttering threats, casting stones and shooting arrows. Some of the latter struck in their backs, but long previously both Tsi'kmai and Ojmikmy had eaten part of a xoiaif which had rendered their bodies impervious to such wounds. Arrived at the upper end of the village, they stopped and waited, making no attempt to defend themselves, until they were killed. At intervals throughout the day the Carriers treated the two bodies with ignominy, now thrusting spears into them, now beating them, and all this time not a single Bella Coola dared even to protest, so much were they filled with fear of the Carriers who, when roused as they then were, fight like mad dogs. In the late afternoon one of the women thrust a knife into the eyes of the fallen warriors. Even this insult did not rouse the Nuxalk people themselves, but Winda, one of their slaves, felt called upon to take action. Before being captured, he had been a person of importance in his own home and the Bella Coola had allowed him to become a leading member of the hamiat society; in the course of time he had become entirely reconciled to his fate, and even thought as a Bella Coola which gave him the necessary assurance to address the Carriers.

B C 648 727

B [567]

"Wa, wa," he said. "See the breadth of the sky." I have never seen, nor have I even heard of such a thing as you have done today. Truly you have wiped your feet on all that is sacred and powerful."

This speech for the first time brought the enormity of their offence home to the Carriers. The actual taking of life did not affright them, but in their excitement they had overlooked what was to Winda the most obvious sin: they had passed and repassed on the sidewalk outside a house where a hamiat dance was taking place. Thus reminded of the danger to which they had exposed themselves, the Carriers withdrew.

B [648]

Next day the Nuxalk people buried the four victims. Ojmikmy had been a mighty chief and, being distantly related, they would normally have given him an elaborate funeral, but now they acted as if dazed and unaware of his greatness. A man who owned a powerful medicine put some of it in the eyes of the two who had been mutilated by the Carrier women; as the bodies began to decompose, those who had killed them began to suffer from eye-trouble, and the women became blind. Believing that their sin had caused their misfortune, the Carriers fled home.

B [754]

*To call attention to this way to the breadth of the universe carries with it the implication that it will fall to crush those who have broken a sacred law.

B [714 715]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

nusiha: The visit to every house in the village by a Mystery dancer on receipt of his call.
nusieml, plural, nunusieml: Singer.
nusikuxta: Quiver for carrying arrows. [415] Nusimusta: Mountain near Asäw-äw-i.
nusiutäli or nusiutälsap: Second day of a kusiut dance.
Nusixilaixaikm: Synonym for Tutwai-ai: Supernatural being who shamelessly begs food from his fellows.
nuskäsiutsta: Repository.
nuskoli: Any unusual occurrence, regarded as an omen of death. [763] Nuskolämmsta, "Whence Things Came Down": One of the names of the supreme god's house.
nusfulusta: Wash-basin, especially the supernatural one that remains in the land above.
Nuskiapk: 1—Supernatural being presiding over the Land of Ashes.
2—Locality on the shore of North Bentinck Arm, not far from the head.
Nuskumäta: Daughter of the group of settlers who came to Mount Tsnisi in the beginning of time.
Nuskumidjusta: Axe carried in the beginning of time by the man who was later turned to stone as Mount Nusfalst.
Nuskumäsil: Daughter of the group of settlers who came to Mount Tsnisi in the beginning of time.
Nu-skokkumg: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.
nuskotle: Wasps' nest. [825]
Nuskwulnkäuda: One of the first women to settle at Snaloli in the beginning of time.
nuskwuäätsta: House in which a memorial potlatch is being held.
Nu-läum: Mountain on south side of lower Bella Coola.
Nuslexwgmuxulum, "The Cherished One": Designation applied to one of the sons of Alpuntäm.
nuslumsta: House in which a potlatch is taking place.
nuslump: One who has gone to give potlatches in a new sphere; this rhetorical expression is commonly used when referring to a dead chief. [195]
nusläksta: Wash-basin used by a shaman when curing. [756] Nusläksumidjut, "He Whose Wash-Basin Is in His Own Body": One of Tlinxpläläx-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
nuslumuskta: Enclosure behind fire in which kusiut dancers are secluded.
nuslpuxta: Cleansing rites in connection with death. [764]
Nuslwulump: Tlelyäkum name acquired by a Kimsquit man as a result of a supernatural experience.
Nusmäkowai: 1—Eagle that perched on a post supporting the sky in the beginning of time.
2—Name, derived from that of the eagle, of one of the first men to settle at Ilnuz in the beginning of time.
Nusmä-a: 1—"Place of Stories": One of the names of the supreme god's house.
2—One of the first men to settle at Nusfalst in the beginning of time.
Nusmä-aiw-a, "Woman of Nusmä-a": Probably wife of Alpuntäm.
Nu-mäläix: Mountain on north side of lower Bella Coola.
Nusmäläiwula: Subterranean chamber in which rivers were confined in the beginning of time. [772]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

ntsuhs: Promontory on hunting ground extending into ocean.
Ondzawi: Kimsquit fisherman.
Owik: Calvert Island.
Ondzerm: Synonym for Xemsemalsts, one of the nine supernatural siblings.

P

[415] pai s: Small wooden dish.
Pálaxt: Legless messenger of the dead.
Pa s: Place on mainland opposite north end of Vancouver Island.
[585] [431] pásstum: Synonym for nuplásstel'em: Payments made by the wife's relatives to those of the bridegroom on first arrival outside his house on the wedding day. They are said to be in return for "Food" received from them on many occasions.
Pásstus: Ancestral name of a Nuxpalit man.
[412] pásuls: Bone needle.
pásuls: Anything powerful and dreaded; the word is frequently applied, rhetorically, to Cannibals.
Pe sds: Small stream rising north of the Bella Coola valley and east of the Nuchatsumnay; it flows into the head of South Bentinck Arm between the Nuchatsumnay and the Bella Coola.
Piqmis: Bella Coola man figuring in a story.
pilit: Herring scales.
pnaxts: Dance-apron.
Pnyhlis: One of the first men to settle at Swalit in the beginning of time.
[825] pkaw: Mosquito.
Ponyalutsdimat: Name assumed by Swanas in the beginning of time.
po qmis: Variety of snung.
Pudks: Celebrated Bella Coola chief who died about 1880.
Pu lds: Moustache Nose, the point between Labouchere Channel and North Bentinck Arm.
[824] pusqt: False bellebow.
[411] pulstm: Bow, weapon.
pyuqs, "Fallen Heavily with a Crash," as when a dead tree thunders to earth: The term is used rhetorically when referring to the death of an old and influential chief.
[195] [392] psaxtl: Tree, probably birch, used for torches.
psbum: Meeting of chiefs.
[825] psc: Halibut. psi': Crehaggle.
[824] psuh: Bunchberry.

Q

[525] Qa'ahlis: Rivers Inlet man, living in the last century.
qai: King stick in a gambling game.
qaimsqmalit: Women's drawing cry uttered at the appearance of a masked dancer.
qai mqqs: Uncommon term for the second day of a kwakiut dance, applied to the rites taking place during the day itself only.
Qaiqs: Name conferred on the grandson of Swanas in the beginning of time.
Qal ks: Man mentioned in a story.
Qalmx: 1—One of the first women to settle on the Dean River in the beginning of time.
2—Celebrated Bella Bella chief.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

qwin, "Bed Covering": Term applied to the presents given as such to the party of a bridegroom when they enter the bride's house on a wedding day. [585]

tlemdjat, "A Shaking of the Fingers": Rhetorical allusion to presents regarded as "Dust." [491]

t'paslkinum: To revolve sunwise. [195]

T'paspaslkinmelaic, "The One Who Revolves Sunwise to Give Strength": One of Thlexpldzw-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.

t'sqalus: Place of petrified power near Kwatna. [778]

Tsowme: Village on the Skeena River.

tsuiaut: Supernatural creature resembling a diminutive human being. [825] tsukel: Salmon lives.

tuk: Co-wife in a polygynous household. [575]

tulmi, tuzatin, tulmin: Wife's brother, or sister's husband, man speaking.

tulwaic: Gathering of the supernatural beings for the performance of dances in the land above. [601]

tuma: Unidentified salt water fish, said to be called "Lord-fish" by white men. [825]

Tumpanum al di ds Jsem, "The Unbower of Light": One of Raven's names as chief.

tupsinum: 1—The ability of a chief to sit down ceremonially in virtue of the goods distributed for his seat, the ground over which he walks, and other requirements.

2—The initial establishment of a youth as chief.

tupsinuks: Stone axe.

tuz: Period of engagement. [412]

Tuzkila: Kwagu'ti man.

Tzaut-lilc: 1—One of Raven's names as chief.

3—Kwiat name of a Bella Coola man.

Tzwistumlaic: Sisaa man mentioned in an ancient story.

Tzwiscate-i: Skaman's name of a Sisaa woman.

Tzwiscum, "Beginned": Name of a copper often cast into fire.

ualu: Unidentified (and probably mythical) type of lizard, allegedly about four feet long, found near Dean Channel. [825]

ualum, uzatin, ualim; plural, ulpualim: Eldest brother or sister. [601]

Ual'kum: Name, in the Bella Bella language, given to a wooden woman made by one of the first settlers in the beginning of time.

ualtlil: Gull. [825]

Ual'ual'lus, "Elder": Term of respectful address to Porcupine as senior of all animals.

Ualwaulalim, "The Mover": Name given to their house by one of the first groups of settlers at Tlil'ts in the beginning of time.

Ualus: Term from which the Anglicized "Kwatna" is derived: Generic name for the villages at Kwatna Harbour, Burke Channel. [108]*

Ualumas'ks: Chief living on the upper Tsowme in the beginning of time.

ualul-ulu: Large box used for boiling chicken.

Ualupu: Village south west of the head of South Bentinck Arm. [415]

Ualupual: Place on Schooner Pass.

Ualupualic: Kwaui name of a Bella Coola man.

ualulukus: Marks made to commemorate an event, such as carvings at chiefs' meeting-place, virtually a memorial. [211] ualumum: Figure representing crest.

192

[773] ɣwalwaxw: 1—Tally post, one of the supernatural elements possessed by all human beings.
[777] 2—Invisible supernatural element which constantly moves before the face.

ɣwalwaxw; vocative, ɣwalwaxwa, (rarely, ɣwalwxa): Crest.

[825] ɣwax: Raven.

ɣwax: Big old male mountain goat.

ɣwaxila: Ɣwaxa'a man living in the last century.

ɣwaylakla: Celebrated Kwakiutl chief.

ɣwaxpaxa: woman: Name of a shaman who received his power from Raven.

[601] ɣwaxwaxa: One of the first men to settle at Ɣaxa in the beginning of time.

ɣwaxwaxa: Fourth oldest, or youngest, brother or sister.

ɣwa'wakla: Stellar's jay.

ɣwakdil: Kitamaat woman.

[825] ɣwaxa: Women's pubic hair.

ɣwaxa: Sea-lion cub.

[491] ɣwaxa: Those who are present and receive gifts when an announcement of a marriage is first made.

ɣwaxa: Earlier name of a Bella Coola man.

ɣwaxa'a'xwa: A revelation, such as the sight of a supernatural being or object usually concealed.

[825] ɣwalaxa: Yearling seal.

ɣwaxaqa: Word used in inviting to a marriage announcement.

ɣwaxaxa: Kitamaat man mentioned in an ancient story.

ɣwaxaxaxwa: Kwakiutl supernatural being, said to be identical with Ɣaxaxwa.

ɣwaxbilkla*: Naspaal name of a Kitamaat man.

ɣwaxpa: Bella Bella village west of Namu.

ɣwal: Hot Springs on Labouchere Channel.

ɣwalaya: Professional female marriage dancer who came down to Kitamaat in the beginning of time.

ɣwalaxwa: One of the nine supernatural siblings.

ɣwalaxl, "Place of Herbage": Village in the upper Bella Coola valley.

ɣwaxa: Inspiration, in the sense of the source of a Earlier dancer's power of thought.

[589] ɣwaxalk: Village west of Kwatna, settled in the beginning of time.

ɣwaxbaqlax: Actual goods used for the repurchase of a wife.

[154] ɣwaxqalaxa: Ancestral name of a Kitamaat chief.

ɣwaxal: Cradle.

ɣwa'xal': Earlier name of a Bella Coola woman.

ɣwaxa: Man mentioned in an ancient story.

[581] ɣ'xalla: The noble and rightful sentiments engendered in both families by an elaborate marriage, either real or fictitious. The word embodies the concepts of financial interdependence and of consequent mutual strength.

[195] ɣwaxlla: The transference of activities to a new sphere; the term is used, characteristically, when referring to the death of a skilled craftsman.

Ł

ɬalla: 1—Skeleton.
2—Kitamaat man mentioned in an ancient story.

Łalkaxa-xwa: Earlier name of a Bella Coola man.

ɬal-xix ɬlalla: The constant blinking of the eyes.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

Sqwqwukw: Supernatural children guarded by the hermaphrodite in the land above.
Syuel: Name taken by a Sisaa man in the beginning of time.
sxinqmuel: Place in stream or river where a salmon has just jumped.
sxwunit'a: Name created upon earth.
sxwqmnit: Deer.
sxwai: Water-tight receptacle made from the internal organs of a mountain goat.
Sxwukwqmtn, "What Sweeps Away the Food": First moon after the winter solstice.
sxwumqk, "Tears": Preliminary presents given to guests at a memorial potlatch.
sxw'ilumkin, "Short-lived": Rhetorical term used with reference to the death of a young chief.
sqwawi: An adolescent girl, not yet subject to the full taboos of womanhood.

[825] [415] [805] [431] [195]

T

tahsin: Cave.
tai: 1—Son, in direct address. As a courtesy title this is often used for lads unrelated to the speaker.
2—Masculine suffix.
Taiatsuis: 1—One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Snaik'a in the beginning of time.
taiawumuk: Desertion of husband by his wife.
taix: Dorsal fin of a fish.
taiximq: Heavy kind of copper.
taiyawaa: Tournament between rival villages.
Tal'ax: 1—Village at head of South Bentinck Arm.
2—Generic name applied to all villages on South Bentinck Arm.
Talaxka'a: Nuxpual name embodied in a Snaik'a origin myth.
Tamtimdepaa, "The Breather": One of Tlinxpilitsa'a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Tamukas: Sisaa man mentioned in an ancient story.
tapimamum: The issuing abroad of invitations to a memorial potlatch.
tapin: Forest consisting of dense underbrush between big trees.
tapul: Blanket-sized cedar-bark pad.
ta'a: 1—Bird arrow.
2—Weapon, invisible to mortals, with which a wolf kills its prey.
Tax, taxaiu, Taxu: 1—Designation of supreme god used in prayer.
2—Father, term used by child.
taikaudy: Water-lily.
Ta'pa'ak: Land inhabited by the Kwakiutl.
Taskwaan: Leading chief of Sisaa'ak and reputed founder of the village.
Tayplcum: Bella Coola chief living in the last century.
tekus: Type of sea-going canoe with bow and stern identical.
tendul'a: 1—White-fronted goose.
2—Type of sea-going canoe named from the bird.
temat: Husband (ti tsukumtlu: My husband).
temu': River.
Tenumukin: Chief who came to Cape Mudge in the beginning of time and later moved to Bella Coola.

[601]

[586] [825] [628] [101]

[824]

[601] [824]

[825] [601]

556 which is said to have come as a propagation obtained through [420] marriage with a Kwakiutl woman, were not obtained.

[184] After the distribution of investment presents comes the [424] strengthening of X's seat.

His wife, aided by members of her family, has placed the necessary goods in readiness, though it is presumed they merely happen to be on hand. A herald takes his place near [203] the door, and another behind the fire. Beside the latter stands a chief, attired in a xsaxt head-dress, who represents X. One of the heralds calls on the substitute to come forward, as if he were just entering the house, and chants:

"There is no place for him to sit!"

Then he turns to X's wife, saying:

"See if you have not a few robes in your room to strengthen him."

[192] The word for "strengthen" is ulkhaxn, or ghelulkxn, which means, "shoring up," as if X were wobbling on his chief-like base. The words have the other significance of "clothing." They represent the ceremonial dignity wherewith a chief is garbed.

X's wife goes to her room, or to the place in the house where the goods are stored, and brings forth a large assortment of valuables, which are piled in a convenient spot. The substitute who is representing X then places himself in the latter's seat, which is to be made more solid by these goods. X's wife may call the herald that they have still more goods for him, and in that case he calls out:

"His seat is too hard. Have you no soft cloths for it?"

The wife brings forward more goods to make her husband's seat more comfortable. The herald, who has been chosen for [203] his fluency, uses his originality in what he calls for from the wife; soft cloths for the seat is merely an example. In some cases, many presents are given; at other times, if the wife and her family be poor, these are few and of little worth. It is not essential that foreign guests witness this establishment or strengthening of a seat, though their presence ensures that X's

CHAPTER I

LOCATION AND ENVIRONMENT

Location—Bella Coola Village—Tribal Organization—Neighbouring Tribes

Location

"BELLA COOLA" is the common designation of those Indians who, until a few years ago, inhabited the valley of the Bella Coola River in central British Columbia. Boas has recorded that the name is a mis-pronunciation of Nuxalk,[1] a Kwakiutl word of doubtful origin which white pioneers assumed to be the appellation of the people in question. There is no term in their own language to include the groups treated in this monograph. Linguistically, the Bella Coola form an isolated island of Salish-speaking people, separated from others of the same stock by tribes of Athapascan and Kwakiutl language.[2] Culturally, they belong to the central section of the North Pacific coast area.[3]

The Bella Coola River rises among the mountainous uplands of central British Columbia. Its two main branches fall rapidly, about forty-five miles from the sea, into two deep gorges which unite, some five miles further on, to form the valley of the Bella Coola. Down this the river rushes in serpentine curves (see Plate 3). Too shallow and too rapid for the use of large boats, even if such had been known to the Bella Coola, it serves to bear their dug-out canoes, such boats from some eighty miles. The valley is never wider than two or three miles and is bounded in by lofty snow-capped moun-

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

(4) THE MELA COOLA INDIANS

from Swalik. My informant's grandchildren regard themselves as Swalik boys, and their names are embedded in myths of that village, although their fathers have not lived there for five generations. There is no reason to suppose this was exceptional. Other instances were obtained of movements of people from one village to another at earlier times, and there seems no reason to doubt the general accuracy of dates. Names embedded in the origin myths of different towns are used as prerogatives and have been potent factors in keeping their memory alive. Uncertainties and inconsistencies there must be in the foregoing list, but on the whole it appears to be fairly reliable, since few contradictions were received from different informants.

Accounts obtained of the same ceremonies from the descendants of people of different villages were found to most seem to be identical. There were a few differences in custom between the people of Dean and those of the other upper valley towns on the one hand, and the inhabitants of the lower valley on the other. These will be mentioned when necessary, but on the whole the inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley can be considered as a tribal entity.

Boas (p. 48) gives a list of Bella Coola towns which agrees fairly well with the above. Among his villages are included Pa-ooh (no. 4), Tsilqutenem (no. 7), and Pa-ahkoo (no. 10).* All the older people agreed that these are the names of streams, though settlements located on them may have been known by the same designations. Names of the five villages recorded by Boas, nos. 5, 6, 9, 13, and 14, were not known to several old men questioned on the subject.

The villages of the Bella Coola valley did not form a political unit; each was independent. A common language was spoken throughout and the inhabitants of the different towns recognized that their origin and customs were similar. This was also recognized to be the case with regard to the people living on South Bentinck Arm, and on the head of Dean Channel.

* Spelling is not use the spelling of his monograph.

S.96:Heredik B.O (1902-1943)948
NEA Bella-coola NEA

spread out on to a wooden platform, which served as sidewalk and extended from one end of the settlement to the other. The outer side of this structure was always supported on piles; in fact, in many cases, the house as well as the whole sidewalk were thus raised from the ground. This type of construction was necessitated by the sloping sites of the villages, but had the added advantage of being a protection against attack. The villages differed in size from insignificant settlements of three to four houses, to one with twenty or thirty, each containing several families. Trees with which the red cedar could be split and worked in large planks made possible the construction of these large, rectangular houses which, with their horizontally laid wallband sloping roofs, presented a picture of stability and relative comfort superior to that of most Indian habitations.

Each village was practically an independent political unit. Neighbouring settlements by many common interests which drew them into contact with one another, but there was no organized cohesion between the towns of the Bella Coola valley, as between those of Wuikinuxv and Kimsquit. There was still less to draw them together. There was no supreme chief and no governmental meeting of the tribe as a whole. Not only were the two divisions not bound to support one another in war, thirteen often at loggerheads among themselves. Indeed, bloodshed between towns of the Bella Coola valley itself was not uncommon. Moreover, each group tended to merge with its neighbours. The Tsilhqot'in people frequently married with the Stuie Inlet and the Bella Bella, the Kimsquit with the Alexandria Dean Channel and the Kitlope of Gardner Canal, and the Bella Coola of the upper valley with the Carrier.

In spite of these inconsistencies, the application of the word tribe is justifiable for the following reasons:

A. Linguistic. All spoke the same language. There were dialectical differences among the people of Bella Coola, Tsilhqot'in, and Kimsquit, but each group could understand the other. We could converse, politely, in our own tongue.

542
561
631
628
523
698
619
[197]

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

others. This differentiated them clearly from all neighbouring tribes.

B. Ceremonial. A member of a secret society in any of the above towns was accepted as a member in any other one. A person of another tribe, even if known to belong to a comparable society, was treated as an uninitiated person.

C. Origin and Religion. The people of Bella Coola, Tsi'o, and Kimsquit felt themselves to be akin through acceptance of the fact that their ancestors had been created together in the beginning of time. This marked them off with great clearness from all other tribes, especially from the Carriers of the interior. This belief formed a sentimental and religious bond of great strength.

Neighbouring Tribes

It is desirable to describe, briefly, the tribes with which the Bella Coola came in contact.

The Carriers

East of Bella Coola, amid the mountains of the interior, dwelt the Carriers. In summer they often came down to the river valley to fish or trade for salmon, and in winter they were sometimes forced by cold and starvation again to visit the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, or Rivers Inlet people. There was a good deal of intermarriage between them and the inhabitants of the upper valley, so that the wanderers were able to spend the cold months with relatives. Name the less, the Bella Coola considered these people utterly foreign in habits and beliefs, and to call a man a "Carrier" was, and still is, a deadly insult. The Carriers lacked the rich ceremonial life of the coastal peoples who, therefore, regarded them with scorn and contempt. The presence of a few of the much-despised Carriers was, however, almost necessary to the correct performance of the winter dances since they were uninitiated spectators whom it was necessary to impress and delude.

1:McDowell E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Bellabella NES

THE oówy.[1]

Before the smallpox epidemic, about 1862, there were towns on the fords and villages of Dean Channel between Kimsquit and Bella Bella. The inhabitants were called oówy by the Bella Coola, and ooaity by the Bella Bella. Their settlements were at Elcho Harbour, Green River, Cascade Inlet, and at several unidentified places. Their language is said to have differed slightly from that of the Bella Bella, but the people themselves married freely with both Kimsquit and Bella Bella, thus forming a connecting link between these tribes.

A list of oówy towns was obtained from one old man, who claimed to be a descendant of the people. It was impossible to verify this information, and since he himself was not an ideal informant, the following can be regarded only as approximately correct.

(1) Elko: at Elcho Harbour.

(2) Kilb: on a ford one mile above the last-named.

(3) Ilkit or Tagoo: on a river three miles above the preceding.

(4) Nawaid: on a river two miles above the preceding.

(5) Naquil: on a ford three miles above the preceding.

(6) Outlow: on a ford three miles above the preceding.

(7) Isowalk: on a river two miles above the last-named and thirty miles below Kimsquit.

According to the old man from whom the above list was obtained, Nawaid, at Kimsquit, recorded earlier as village no. 41, was also populated by oówy people. There was so much intermarriage between the two groups that it is now impossible to ascertain whether the inhabitants not only of Nawaid, but of Isowalk as well, were predominantly Kimsquit or oówy.

The open plateau in which the Bella Coola River rises has always made travel possible for long distances, so that not only

1 [Bellacoola, term for the people of inland "Bellabella - Kimsquit stock who inhabited the shores of "Dean Channel" - See R. McDowell, Ref. 10, p.28 - Analyst]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NFN

the neighbouring Carriers, but Chilkotin as well sometimes descended to the valley. On the coast, though the dense underbrush prevented travel along the shore, the long fords, sheltered from the open Pacific, were ideal for the use of canoes.* Comparatively lengthy journeys were neither difficult nor uncommon. The Tal'o people were usually on amicable terms with the inhabitants of Rivers Inlet, and the Kimsquit with the Kitlope. The Bella Coola were accustomed to annual potlatches at Alert Bay and Fort Rupert, Knight's Inlet, and Bute Inlet, receiving their hosts, in turn, at Bella Coola. On the other hand, there was little friendly intercourse with the northern tribes, of which the Kitkatla especially were dreaded by the residents of the central coast. Until recent years the Bella Coola had no direct knowledge of other Salish-speaking peoples, although some of the Chilkotin told them of a tribe living far to the south, in the interior, whom they encountered in some of their wanderings and used to term Nuxalkmc, recognizing the similarity between their language and that of the Bella Coola. A few years ago several Bella Coola attended a boarding-school and were amazed to find that many of their words were understood by fellow-students from Chilliwack.

To sum up: The Bella Coola were in close contact with the neighbouring general tribes, with the members of which they felt themselves to have cultural affinities. They recognize that they have received many ceremonial rites from their neighbours, and must have adopted other elements of culture which they now consider indigenous. It is probable that certain Bella Coola customs must likewise have been transmitted to other tribes, but such lie without the scope of this monograph. The outlying villages were in close contact with foreign neighbours, and tended to assimilate elements of their culture, but, on the whole, the Bella Coola present a tribal unity with distinctive local customs, falling within the general pattern of coastal culture.

---

*The term of canoe, see Appendix A.
The principal Kwakiutl villages.

special type of whistle. Everybodiness remained in this house until he had given four potlatches. Then he removed to Ape'i, near Tal'ai River on South Bentinck Arm. His house still stands there, but it has become an island around which the clouds come whenever a hostile visiting party is approaching, so as to conceal from them their objective.

From their long residence in this house Tal'ai people understand the language of their Bella Bella, Fort Rupert, and other coastal neighbours better than do the Bella Coola.

FOUR GROUPS MOVE ON TAL'AI[a]

Among the first people sent down to earth were four who landed at the river Tal'ai, on the mainland opposite Fort Rupert. Their names were: Wintcumdzis, a man who became the leader of the group; Nyal'a-kis, a woman; Anuhkumdzis, a man; and another woman, Gumumdzis-mis-a. They met a man, which helped them by pointing out the proper road to follow and by killing evil things which barred their path. With the assistance they were able to reach Tal'ai, where they settled and where Wintcumdzis plucked a number of twigs from the branches of a spruce tree near the water. These twigs became the people over whom he was chief.

GROUP MOVES ON NAKIL[b]

In the beginning of time there came down to Mount Saulis, near the mouth of the Dean River, two brothers, Ximsem and Gwagul, their sister Kilkem, and their barrel (kagal). Ximsem came as an eagle, but as soon assumed human form, apparently the others had always been human. They moved down, and formally settled at Nakil, near the mouth of the Dean River. Ximsem had brought with him as a present from Ilgamlem, some chickens, called by their supernatural name, Alpuxtem-a, which he threw into the water. They increased rapidly and became the ancestors of all the chickens at Kimsquit. Thus provided with food, the brothers prospered so that they were able to give many potlatches. In course of time Kilkem was married to Nakilla, a chief who had come to earth on the upper Dean River.

In one of their potlatches Gwagul performed a Sagalem dance, as Ilgamlem had instructed him to do before leaving Nuxalk-a. Valuable

---

[a] Fragmentary version, related by Billy Talbot.

[b] This another version see Boas, p. 65. It was impossible to obtain this myth from any of the descendants of Nakiles; it is unlikely that the above version does so nothing.

PHONETIC KEY*

104

VOWELS	CONSONANTS
a, as in father	p, t, k, f, (ph), h, s, (th), b, d, v (as in English)
ä, as in hat	g, voiced ŋ
e, as in fate	ŋ', ŋ', ŋ', ŋ', aspirated nasals
i, as in pique	ŋ, l, ŋ, ŋ, glottalized stops
o, as in note	ŋ, sonorized palatal ŋ
ö, as in nuts	ŋ, sonorized palatal ŋ
u, as in fur	ŋ, ŋ, intermediate between ŋ and sonant ü, as in out	ŋ, glottalized intermediate i, as in ill	(ŋ), as in pale ü, as in pun	s, as in shall
ŋ, obscure vowel like a in alike	ŋ, sonorized ŋ
¶, sonorant vowels, voiced but slighted in enunciation. The same dieresis is used for consonants slighted in enunciation.	ŋ, ŋ ŋ ŋ, glottalized ŋ
	ŋ, as in Scottish, doll
	ŋ, voiced ŋ, as in German, soll ŋ, sonorized palatal ŋ, as in German, soll ŋ, peculiar r-sound, apparently due, ŋ, for example, ŋ, ŋ ŋ, indicates lengthening of preceding vowel or consonant ŋ, indicates a glottal stop ŋ, indicates aspiration

ŋ, indicates accentuation of the syllable or sentence

*Based on the simpler system described in Phonetic Transcription of Sioux Languages, Smithsonian Miscellaneous Collections, vol. 66, No. 3, Washington (1916), pp. 3-13.

The i sound was used only for one old man and several of his deliberated pronunciations.

[199]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Breaker Dance]

they do not like. No compensation can be claimed, on the theory that supernatural beings do not have to pay for any damage they may do. Although the property of some kukuwat is destroyed, the chief sufferers are the uninitiated; this serves to increase their fear and respect for the society with which such all-powerful beings are in league. After visiting every house in the village, the party returns to X's, where the masks are burnt, the call sent back, and the proceedings conclude in the usual manner.

A certain amount of information concerning the history of the Breaker dance was obtained from Epek, the owner of the prerogative just described. He is a well-informed man, but the writer had no opportunity of comparing his beliefs with those of his associates, so the following must be regarded as unauthenticated evidence. This man stated that the Breaker dance is the most important of all in Bella Bella, and that many Bella Coola prerogatives have been obtained from this source, although some of their first ancestors likewise enjoyed it. He further stated that the term, nakwaxa, by which the Bella Coola always designate a Breaker, is of Bella Bella origin, and that the ancient Bella Coola term was dettia.* Epek also told of an occasion when a number of Bella Bella, present on the potlatch night of a Bella Coola ceremony, were disturbed when seeing by the thud of a stone thrown, from outside, against the wall of the back room. Out rushed a number of kukuwat, incensed at the disrespect shown to their gathering. They caught the offender, but released him when he was found to be a Bella Bella Breaker, foolishly demonstrating his prowess. The marshals decided to retaliate and arranged with two Bella Coola Breakers to exercise their rights and destroy the curtains and food-boxes of their guests. They did so, and later paid for the damage. The Bella Coola were thus able to demon-

*Epek and several of his children are the only Bella Coola known to the writer who habitually use the sound "x." For example, he says "thaxlen," instead of "thaxlit." He says that he is himself unable to distinguish any peculiarity in his own pronunciation, although other Bella Coola are aware of it.

6:Boas E-5 (1886-ca. 1890)1892
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Since the end of the last century they have dwindled down in numbers, and a few only of their once populous villages are still inhabited, namely, Sáxq, at the head of Dean Inlet; Kitl'ó'l, at the mouth of Salmon River; Nuqu'ltn (which embraces five villages, at the mouth of Bella Coola River; Sisi'ut, twenty-eight miles up Bella Coola River; and Ts'ín, at the head of South Bentinck Arm. The dialect of Kitl'ó'l and Sáxq differs slightly from that of the other villages. The following is a list of their ancient villages, most of which are still inhabited at certain seasons, although not regularly:—

1. Sáxq.
2. Kitl'ó'l. The tribe of this place is called Sitalt-ná.
3. Nuqu'ltn, embracing the villages K'nalsi'ten and Sialc'ál on the north side, Ts'ánla and Nelsa'ctaáxnt on the south side of the river.
4. Sisqíl.
5. Tsemt'ál.
6. Sutl'ó'ls.
7. Ts'kaila.
8. Ast'ómt.
9. Sak-s'nqmaín.
10. Tsqamíl-s'ut.
11. Sa'ab-'ólst.
12. Stalítl'aq.
13. Sisi'ut, twenty-eight miles from the sea.
14. Sutl'ólsal. Nos. 9 to 14 are situated along Bella Coola River, and are given as they are met with in ascending the river.
15. Sisi'aqíl, at the confluence of Bella Coola and Dean (?) Rivers.
16. Ts'ín, at the head of South Bentinck Arm, embracing K'ná'ya, Ts'ín, Ts'ík', K'ná'a.
17. K'ná'ten, at the bay of that name in the southern extremity of Bentinck Arm. On the north entrance of Bentinck Arm were the Kitsi'ál, but it is doubtful whether they belonged to the Sitqata or to the Sá'ámsh. The latter call the people of Dean Inlet Ki'ámsq.

Each of these tribes is subdivided into gentes, which appear to be arranged in exogamic groups. I learn the names of the following gentes, which bear the names of their ancestors:—

Gentes of the Nuqu'ltnmt:

1. Tsk-ná'a (extending down on his heels).
2. Sqamqmt'ínmq; Qá'ámsm name: Sisi'ám'ánl (see p. 401).
3. Stalítl'aq.
4. Ka'ámsh-ná.
5. Ts'ínm.

Gentes of the Sisqíl'ámmt:

1. Tlak-ná'ál.
2. K'nqmlá'ál.
3. ?

Gentes of the Tsín'ám:

1. Sáxlmmlt (wearing good fur); Qá'ámsm name: Ts'ín'ám-ná'ál (one now possessing from rank).
2. Sqaíní'ál.
3. Tsqamíl-ám'ám.
4. Sa'ámsh.

I.

The Bella Coola are a small tribe inhabiting the coasts of Dean Inlet and Bentinck Arm, two long and narrow fords situated in about latitude 52° north, in British Columbia. Their habitat extends along Bella Coola River, which empties into North Bentinck Arm. The name "Bella Coola" is a corruption of the word "Bilhula," by which name the tribe is known to the Kwakiutl. There is no word in their own language embracing all the tribes speaking the Bella Coola language. It seems that at a former time the tribe was quite populous; but, owing to various epidemics and the introduction of other diseases, as hereinafter here detailed shows, so that at the present time it has been reduced to only a few hundred souls. The language spoken by the tribe belongs to the Salishan family, more particularly to the group of dialects spoken along the coasts of Oregon, Washington, and British Columbia. The great similarity between the Bella Coola and the other Coast-Salishan dialects leads me to assume that at one time the tribes speaking these dialects inhabited contiguous seats. At the present time the Bella Coola are separated from other tribes speaking Salishan languages by a considerable extent of country, which is inhabited by tribes of Athapascan and Kwakiutl lineage. Vocabulary and grammar have been highly modified, principally by an extensive choice of words. The tribe nearest of their language to the other dialects of the Coast Salish is similar to that of the Tillamook, another language belonging to the Salishan family, which is spoken on the coast of Oregon, to an area separated from the rest of the Salishan territory by the district inhabited by the Chinook.

Physically the Bella Coola have evidence of longcontinued contact with the northern Coast tribes, and also with the Athapascan tribes of the interior. Evidently intermarriages have been quite frequent, so much so that their present physical appearance differs considerably from that of the northern Salishan tribes, of which they form a branch. The same is true in regard to their customs and beliefs, which differ fundamentally from those of the northern Salishan tribes.

In the present paper I shall describe the mythology of the Bella Coola, and discuss its development.

II.

The previous knowledge of the mythology of this tribe is based on earlier work by Adrian Jacobsen, Philip Jacobsen, Tomkins, and the writer. In 1895 I published a few brief notes on their traditions.[1] Tomkins pub-

[1] Anthropology in British Columbia for Anthropology, Geology and Geography, 1895, p. 43.

Libraries E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Deliverable NEB

121 121 If I were to investigate and report on the Bella Coola at the present time, I would undoubtedly be influenced by many years of contact with American anthropologists and their work. I would assume a greater knowledge of North-West coast institutions, less interest in the details of ceremonial rites, and it would be impossible not to avoid comparisons with, and observations upon, the theoretical implications of many of the facts recorded. But though every field investigator is strictly objective as to the facts he collects, yet his interests, and his method of presenting them, are coloured by his background; in my case, by the older school of English anthropology. On the whole, I think this is fortunate. It means that the Bella Coola are portrayed as I saw them when I came fresh to a new field, practically unfamiliar by problems of North-West coast culture, and fully prepared to throw myself into their life. They were "my people," not a group in which I was interested because they had, or had not, certain culture traits with which I was concerned. In the course of my teaching experience, furthermore, I have wished repeatedly to give serious students detailed field monographs in which are recorded the interwoven social, religious, and folk-lore concepts of a people, the non-total of their mental life, collected by one man at one time. This I have tried to do for the Bella Coola.

123 Following the English tradition, I wish to record how this material was collected. Before leaving for British Columbia, I was advised by the late H. I. Smith, who had worked in the area, to talk to Indian Moody (see Plate 1), an elderly Bella Coola Indian with whom Smith had worked. On explaining to Indian that I had come to record in permanence from the traditions and lore of his people, Indian pledged loyalty and promised his help. Unfortunately, he spoke only a few words of English. I tried interpreter after interpreter, Indian and white, with only fair success, and my difficulties increased with the passing of the earlier years and the consequent employment of the younger men and women. I was urged to learn the Chinook jargon, which serves widely as a lingua franca on the coast, and began the study with much misgiving. The results were surprisingly satisfactory.

[124] [125] [126]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

After a few weeks I found that I had sufficient knowledge of Chinook to dispense with interpreters and deal directly with the older people, a tremendous advantage. Pride of ancestry is one of the strongest characteristics of the Bella Coola, and once convinced of my sincere interest in and respect for their history, they were willing to talk. They resent the condescension with which most white men regard them, so that contact with one who was friendly and sympathetic came as a pleasant surprise. There were, of course, difficulties. The canning season had begun and every able-bodied man was working away from the village. The conviction of each person that he was the best source of information, and that conferences with another were useless or unreliable, caused distrust. The desire of each informant to discuss only what interested him; the complexity of Bella Coola life itself; the necessity of checking every statement, and the extreme difficulty of doing so on account of discrepancies in the myths of different families; the fear, almost groundless, of each individual that someone else had infringed on his rights by recounting some legend; and, not least, the need for tact, patience, and a sense of humour under all conditions, were some of the obstacles to be surmounted. Nor was Chinook entirely satisfactory. It has enough words for matters pertaining to fishing, hunting, and trading, but for the realms of sociology or theology it is inadequate. This difficulty could not have been overcome without the patient help of my informants. Animated by the desire to help, they used every expedient in the way of parallel and synonym to explain obscure terms. Sometimes a younger man was called in for some obscure meaning; more often it gradually became clear from different applications. Once the significance of a word was definitely understood, I made a note of it and used it henceforth. A useful vocabulary was thus built up, and conversations were carried on in mixed Bella Coola and Chinook, eked out by whatever English words were known by the person with

1:McDowalth E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

from ghosts, and for four days feeds them lavishly. On the fifth morning they proceed to the grave, accompanied by kinsmen of the deceased, and pound on the ground with sticks, asking the dead person whether or not he had been murdered, and if so, the name of the murderer. It is said that in former times the voice of the deceased could always be plainly heard giving the desired information. This ceremony has not been carried out for many years, and exact details are not known by any of the living Bella Coola. It seems clear that ventriloquism must have been employed, requiring active deception on the part of the shamans. 756 775 787 [198]

It was difficult to ascertain to what extent shamans believed in their own powers to understand the speech of ghosts. There is no doubt that the Bella Coola are easily influenced by suggestion, and if an individual is told that he has received help from a ghost, it is not difficult for him to believe that such has been the case. Further, his fellows are convinced of his powers, a circumstance which does not fail to affect him. It may be stated definitely that in many cases shamans have some confidence in their own powers, although they do not hesitate to use deception to increase their prestige. This point will be considered in greater detail in the following chapter.

ACCOUNTS OF EXPERIENCES WITH GHOSTS

Much of the information concerning ghosts is contained in stories which have been handed down for generations and which are regarded as historical records. Some of these must be deferred to the chapters on folk-lore and shamanism, but the following are sufficient to explain the source of many Bella Coola beliefs on this subject.* 534 779

A Ransom from Ghosts

Long, long ago, there lived a little girl who used to cry incessantly. One evening when she was disturbing the whole household by weeping, her father said angrily to her:

*These stories have been included at this point as specific illustrations of the type of legend upon which generalized beliefs depend.

Schl(Swanton) E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

756 stated, there is a tendency for such ability to be granted to the descendants of shamans, but this is not necessarily the case. A shaman can instruct his child and so increase the latter's chances of a vision, but the parent can do no more. A single exception to this concept was noted but the following incident was regarded as absolutely inexplicable, a thing beyond expectation or comprehension.

756 789 A certain Kimsquit shaman had the supernatural being from whom he had derived his power actually resident in his body. At the time he obtained the gift, his benefactor had spoken to him.

"Henceforth," it said, "I will live in your right arm, my head located near your wrist, my tail near your elbow. When you cure a sick person place your arm against whatever part of his body is affected and I will drew forth the sickness with my mouth."

Thanks to this assistance, the shaman was able to perform marvellous cures, as the being never failed to suck out the disease. Though aware of his supernatural guest, the shaman himself never saw it except when he summoned it to cure a patient; then it came forth from his arm, though no one else could see it. When he had blown away the sickness, in the usual manner of shamans, the supernatural one returned within his arm, out of sight.

When the shaman grew old he called a friend to him and asked him to receive his power, telling him where, and how, it was localized. The man consented. The shaman then began to talk in the language of supernatural beings, as shamans often do, and presently the supernatural one came forth and became visible to the friend as a small lizard-like creature sitting on the palm of the shaman's hand. This frightened the friend and he declined the creature on the ground that he lacked ceremonial purity, hence his body was not a fitting receptacle. The shaman urged him to receive the creature, but when he continued to refuse, allowed it to return to his own arm. When the shaman died a few years later the friend bitterly regretted his own cowardice, for the wonderful cures stopped, whereas, had he accepted the supernatural guest, he would have been able to perform them. 956* 787

1:Mc:Dowalth E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

SHAMANS FROM THE DEAD

There remain to be described shamans from the dead, whose abilities and prerogatives are almost identical with those already described. They obtain their power either from the visitation of a ghost in this world, or by a journey to the land of shades below. The following incident explains why shamans alone can hold converse with ghosts. 956* 775 787

Once, long ago, the lover of a young girl died. She was so heart-broken that in her agony, four days after his burial, she lay down on his grave to weep. The dead man was able to visit her and in due time she gave birth to a child, who, like its father, was a ghost, with drawn face and glaring eyes. The perturbed woman tended it in the forest, her love overcoming a feeling of repulsion, and when she returned to her home she endeavoured to prevent her own mother handling the infant, knowing that she would be horrified. The grandmother insisted, but as soon as she saw the ghastly appearance of the child she dropped it in horror, and the infant vanished. [534]

Since then there has been a barrier, resembling a wall of smoke, between mortals and the dead. If the old woman had not dropped her grandchild, the living would still be able to converse with their deceased friends and relatives.

Nowadays, shamans alone are able to lift the barrier and discourse with the ghosts of those who have departed. These are quite common visitors to the land of the living, but only a shaman can understand their languages, of which one is a series of whistles, and the other resembles the attempts at speech made by a tongueless individual. Shamans can learn what the dead require and so transmit the knowledge to the relatives of the deceased. As, long ago, shamans whose powers were derived from animals were able to teach mortals the proper methods of hunting, and the taboos enjoined, so a [198]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

C Wa'ał-ḱwa'nuxlā | yac dis'ł-ma'ła'łłwałał | dastłłkwałałł: 533*
I gazed upon | what gave me power as a shaman(f) | when it stood up 756

cwała-ałwaw-a-ła-ułł in the centre of a place of petrified power(i).

(a) This was the woman's łacłał designation; her shaman's name has been forgotten. [551]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 56, National Museum of Canada; quartet, Reuben Schooner, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and announcer, assisted by Tal'o Charlie and Steamboat Annie.

(c) That is: The sky moved up and down. Grandiloquent phrases of this kind are frequent in songs used by shamans. [195]

(d) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(e) Ḱwaxwnile is said to be the word for salmon in the language of the supernatural beings; it is used by mortals in the rites following the taking of the first spring salmon. The shaman has received some of her power from a fish. [198] [226]

(f) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(g) Reference to the wash-basin shows that the shaman had power to heal the sick.

(h) The meaning is obscure. Apparently the shaman had been carried away by Thxepłłłw-a and treated by immersion in a basin in which eagle down was deposited.

(i) This refers to the supernatural being, Ła'wałłałłmum, who restores to life mortals killed by the receipt of too much power from Thxepłłłw-a. It is clear that this fear befell the shaman. [776]

(j) The woman is said to have received power from several sources, salmon, ghosts, and Thxepłłłw-a herself. It is impossible to state which of her supernatural patrons is referred to in this subdivision.

(k) The woman must have been taken to one of the spots where cures could be effected by the power of a supernatural being petrified there. [955]

[551]
[776]

Song Used by Nexada-malcoxin(a), a Kimsquit Man(b)

A Łwłqwxwqwnałł | wa'łałłłwałł | ełałaełaał
Look at the turning supernatural beings above(c), not one is | wise one(c)!
my equal(d),

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B Łwałłłłłłwqwa'łałł | ałwałqwałwałwałł | ełałaełaał
You must sometimes wakes at night to meditate on what I am | wise one!
bringing your mouth(f),

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C Łwłqwłłwałłł | ałwałłłłłwałwałłn | ełałaełaał
You must sometimes use your wash-basin(g), | wise one!

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

589

Wamnyelnqu	yulin ñi:	ulñxulñulñu	ainul'a	ainul'a
?	good opinion	her	ainul'a	ainul'a

(a) Recorded as song VII D 66, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) This word has no meaning.
(c) This word has no meaning.

The above is a very popular song, said to be ancient. Unfortunately, it was impossible to obtain a literal translation although the significance is well known. A free interpretation is:

"They say I loved her very dearly? No! The dimple in my left cheek merely smiled at [had a good opinion of] her."

It is often sung when a man is accused of being on unduly friendly terms with a girl.

[198]

Man's Love Song in Chinook Jargon(a)

Klawa:	kwin	naika	nanum
I wonder(b)	what	I	think(c)
kap-a	ahah	tail	klamata
of	that	chief(d)	woman;
kaiyu	naika	nanu	pak-a
a great deal	I	talk	her(e);
kila	cem	naika'
no	shame(f)	I(g).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 48, National Museum of Canada; singer, Reuben Schooner. The singer completed the record with a Bella Coola song of which the text could not be obtained.
(b) Literally: Perhaps. This word is used for many dubitative expressions.
(c) This song follows the usual English pattern as it has been arranged in lines.
(d) In the sense of: Important.
(e) That is: I have been talking a great deal to her.
(f) This is the English word "shame" which has been adopted into Chinook.
(g) That is: I have had no shame in what I have said to her.

Kitsepsir Woman's Love Song(a)

Sinnqulla	waiñiuk:	ñiñiukpilmuñai	alwaqnatñiuñiñiuwmiñiuw
Why is the man talking so much(b)?			I don't like him any more.

2:56:Dewalth. E-5 (1922-1924) 1968
NEA: Bellacoola NEA

Anahlimut: Easter name of a Kimsquit woman.
anahlimut, "This is to Make Straight Your Road": Said when a call is answered, or food thrown upon a fire for the dead.
Anahmlis, "Place of Big Stones in the River": Village on Kwatna.
Anahlahlaic: Women mentioned in a repertory and have become supernatural.
anahlhl'a: Rainbow-coloured nose ring worn by Dzaxis.
Anahlhalaic: Supernatural name of Dzaxis.
anahlhl': Horn used by which the tongue is held during the Sasam dance.
Anahlmiaus: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Anahlmuis, "The One that Fills the River": Supernatural name of long-back salmon.
anahlmt: Nose ring.
anahmuxt: Weaving song composed for a chief and, apparently, the singing of one.
Anahmus: Place on the north-west side of Dean Channel, about nine miles from its head, where curative power is purified.
Anamaxlaus: Supernatural beings who reveal the supreme goal of the hunter dance.
Anamlalaus: Supernatural being who recovers those killed by the escape of one such power from Dzaqulilaus.
anamqan: Wearing of cloth, ermine.
anamsa: Person who catches early chicken in a hand net.
anapachaus: Secret stones such as are found in a lake near the headwaters of the Bella Coola.
Anapanalik: Supernatural being who regulates the height of tides in rivers.
anaplaitum: To wash, especially a supernatural being.
Anaplaulaic: One of the four sachems on Gulle.
Anaplalaic, "What Fills People": Name created by Dzasam in the beginning of time with reference to the source of salmon.
anapnaus: Elders waiting in darkness before a darkness dance.
Anapnaulaus: Supernatural being who gives inspiration.
Anaslaulaic: 1—Supernatural name of aslaik.
2—Method of killing practised by aslaik.
Anaslaulaus ala: Name of a Bella Coola shaman.
Ana-ghaplaus: Name of a Kimsquit woman.
anaslaik shaman: The new perspective of changing from hunter to aslaik when an shaman makes.
Anaslaus, "The Saviour": One of Dzaqulilaus's names and hence a thing-name given to shamans.
Anaslaulaic: One of the four men to settle on Tal'a in the beginning of time.
anaslaunap: Paradise not entered by a hunter-avenger.
Anaqaus ala: Easter name of a Kimsquit man.
Anax: Place on north side of North Bentinck Arm, about one-quarter mile from its head.
anaqalaus, "The Left Side," in the language of ghosts: Identical with aslaunap, q.v.
Anaqalaic: One of the four women to settle on Ahlaid in the beginning of time.
Anaslaulaqaus: One of the names of Great Blue Heron on ahlaid.
anaxus: 1—Excavated house furnished with engaged platforms for guests.
2—Village on Kwatna.

[192]*
[825]
[301]
[533]
[978]
[226]
[823]
[824]
[198]
[342]

[illegible] THE MILLA CIRCLE [illegible]

*102

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] there is such [illegible] of the supernatural powers possessed by members of the [illegible] society that none would dare go there. If an uninitiated [illegible] one should do so, he would formerly have been either killed [illegible] initiated into the society. The meeting-place of the [illegible] is shown to a ledge of rock jutting out over a [illegible] not a quarter of a mile from the village. The [illegible] over a narrow cleft of the mountain side, [illegible] operation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, as [illegible] by cliffs that no sunlight can enter. The ledge is [illegible] above the brink of the falls, one of the most [illegible] there imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages [illegible] rock natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, [illegible] more easily distinguished features. Some of them are [illegible] with rude carvings, pecked into the rocks. The [illegible] of the designs is not known to any of the present [illegible]. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when the [illegible] were composing songs; they pecked out the rock to [illegible] to music forming in their minds. Others were made [illegible] of certain events. If a chief gave an important [illegible] he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps [illegible] of a [illegible], perhaps of some animal connected with the [illegible], to mark [illegible]. No carvings have been made within the [illegible] of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further [illegible], now unknown.

When a chief [illegible] to summon his fellows for a meeting to [illegible] he [illegible] him by a simple pressure of the foot, [illegible] served over by those sitting near. The person [illegible] passed on, unconsciously, to the meeting-place.

The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows became an object [illegible] envy. Their mythology contains many examples of the [illegible] of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and [illegible] of today state that these records are true. One informant [illegible] that his father had

[Kosiot Society Initiation]

WINTER CEREMONIAL DANCES

The following morning the kokwiar alone are invited to X's house. The marshals meanwhile superintend the laying and lashing of planks across two river dug-outs to form a dancing platform. On this the singers take their places, in addition to as many kokwiar as can scramble aboard. The craft is slowly poled either up or downstream, according to the direction of X's repository, and more kokwiar accompany it along the bank, the uninitiated watch with keen interest from the background. X and his companions proceed towards the river and as running the lashed-together canoes are taken aboard. The singers strike up any well known kwiar tune, and in time to it as many kokwiar as possible dance on the platform surrounding the craft. Each man has one style of dancing according to his prerogative, so that the scene is exceedingly varied and animated. X himself crouches in the centre, practically concealed from the uninitiated by the dancers. On reaching the village the whole party hurriedly runs to X's house, from which the uninitiated are rigorously barred for the rest of the day. Those kokwiar who accompanied the party along the bank of the river have preceded them and, as X enters, the dancing cry is raised which always heralds the appearance of one who has been in close contact with supernatural beings.

If X is considered trustworthy, he may be allowed to go alone to his repository, although this is only necessary when he takes a second or third prerogative. If this procedure has been followed, X calls those present who he has seen, otherwise his companions do so. The uninitiated leave eagerly from the adjacent houses, wondering anxiously what is taking place. Several kokwiar then, or one fellow-initiate in increasing the awe of the lawmen. Presently a herald is sent out. He goes first to the lowest house* of the village, then to successive to those above, announcing in each that:

"Something strange has happened to the son of the chief."

X's name is not mentioned. If his father is not a chief the

*That is, in the new fashion downstream. He always going in such house in order from lowest to top of the village the herald avoids any danger of complaints.

[illegible]

[illegible] "[illegible]": [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

and those who are not. Any chili, provided that he has enough food for a meal, can call in his neighbours, but the one who usually does so is a man who has received his name a year or two before the occasion.

A few days before the time selected, the host asks the singers to compose a new song for him. For a mayoral dance particularly, and in some cases for any one of the other three divisions of the society, the new dance not deal with incidents connected with the host's ancestral story, but with humorous or disgraceful incidents of the present time. If a man has caught an alligator and kept them all for himself, his misfortune is commemorated upon in the song. If a wife has deserved her husband for another man, the actions of the two are mercilessly ridiculed. If a chief has failed to display generosity, it is this over recorded, and reference is made to errors in dance steps. To do this is one of the functions of a mayoral, and the singers are always ready to serve him. In the same time they often add a new incident to the tale belonging to some other chief, thereby so that he too will be able to perform. In this way the song is remembered from year to year, which is different from the customary Bella Coola songs.

On the morning of the day chosen, the host asks one of the singers to hold a drum repeatedly but slowly, as a signal that a non-ceremonial dance is about to take place. Young men, beside go from house to house announcing who is to give the dance. In the late afternoon the people gather in the dance's house where men, women, and children are themselves without distinction of rank, the only reserved place being that for the singers behind the fire. They hold out the host's name and he dances to it, while the singers themselves sing the words to the amusement of the audience. Using their own discretion, they then hold out the name of another chief and he also dances, followed in succession by a third, a fourth, and so many as the singers think fit. Sometimes the songs of rivals are used in a similar manner. When many have danced, the host distributes food to all his guests, not forgetting to give the largest lieved that all the Kitkatla chiefs were powerful, but Tsilcis was the greatest of all. It is said that one of his prerogatives was to exercise jus primae noctis whenever a Kitkatla was married. Without question, some of this chief's powers have become exaggerated in enumeration, since the lore they show that the Bella Coola realize the great importance of the northern chiefs. Concerning their nearer neighbours, the Bella Bella, the Bella Coola understand the way in which the members of a family combine to help their chief in the giving of presents. They say that the Bella Bella consider the Bella Coola practice of each one endeavouring to make himself a chief to be foolish in the extreme. Such is also said to be the opinion among the Kwakiutl, who support their contention that in Bella Coola all are chiefs, from the fact that feasting occurs under the aegis of all, whereas in Fort Rupert, their home, such occurs only beneath the aegis of chiefs.

Corresponding to the extreme paucity of functions possessed by Bella Coola chiefs, their prerogatives are likewise scanty. Indeed, they take their subsidiary aegis only during certain rites of the secret society connected with chiefs, at potlatches, and at ceremonial meals. These last occur whenever a deer or seal is killed, the latter is considered a great delicacy.[1] Anyone can kill a seal, but it would be unthinkable for a Bella Coola to share its flesh with its immediate family only. The animal is cleaned, the hide made by boiler or spear carefully plugged, and the carcass boiled whole in a large box. Whereupon a herald (l. p. tsaq) summons the chiefs to the house where the successful hunter lives. If the meal is to consist merely of one small seal, only a few chiefs are invited, those of greatest influence through their possession of "strong" aegis. When several seals have been killed, the number invited is correspondingly larger, but no reason may persuade urbane the cooks

[1] This is not to have been a general prerogative, not shared by all chiefs, and requiring initiation by valuable presents.

[illegible] Only some of the six families in this generale were at the present time, in fact, the conversion of seal aegis to chief's aegis has theoretically occupied the close of the last century.

as a man by the only authentic ownership of a chief's name is lost once right. Formerly a slave was never allowed to eat food, unless he had been the slayer. If many souls are killed, chiefs from adjacent villages are sometimes invited. The chiefs seat themselves according to their proper positions and are first served with the blood-stained grass that floats to the top of the water as the meat is boiling. When cooked, the meat is cut into strips, measured in some of as many finger breadths, according to the number of guests. The men sit down each face flipper, so that each receives a native strip including one of the ears. The head is always given to the heralds.

Wealthy chiefs frequently invite their fellows to ordinary meals even when no and as does has been killed. On these occasions, as at and feasts, the guests are designated by their ancestral names, not by those in general use.

Chiefs are also accustomed to meet for the discussion of matters connected with the social commercial, on such occasions their number may be augmented by men of influence in the social society, though they do not rank as chiefs. Such a meeting is always called when a new member is to be initiated into the Social society. If there is difference of opinion the influence of even a wealth chief is outweighed by a man of importance in the society. The matter is discussed by all present and a decision reached by general agreement. It is difficult for a white man to understand how such is possible without either a vote, or general recognition by all that the views of some individual must be accepted. The writer was present at one such meeting, and was struck by the manner in which, after considerable, and at times heated, discussion, a consensus of opinion was reached, and accepted even by those who had proposed a contrary course.

There every village is a place where the chiefs hold such meetings. All the inhabitants know the general location, but Many often we seek to assess the ancestor of this society but some are here sign to be ancestor of the height of man which has stepped into the ancestral, but earlier not to the world.

[illegible]

Although guests from different tribes are sometimes invited to other communities, it is so polluting that they are essential. Since the validity of such connections as marriages, divorces, or the assumption of professional prerogatives depends on the presence of witnesses, and since the importance of such a rite depends on the number of witnesses, a man is always eager to carry out any public performance or a potlatch when he is sure of the attention of foreigners, and the consequent wider diffusion of knowledge of what he has done. The man who has invited guests is usually willing to allow others to perform at his potlatch, since it increases the complexity and importance of the affair. It follows that no two potlatches are alike, one will contain features entirely lacking in another. Moreover, the wealth of the donor determines how many rites he himself will cause to be performed. The fundamental concept of the potlatch is the inviting of guests from abroad to witness rites in connection with an invented myth, especially the return of a recently deceased relative of the donor to visit the living.

In any important potlatch the following rites are carried out, and in the account of the ritual it will be assumed that these alone are taking place. If the reader bears this summary in mind, he is less likely to be confused by the complication of rites.

(a) The return of a dead ancestor to visit the living.

(b) The initiation of young men or women into the secret society. This includes the collection of a secret name for each, and a period of seclusion in the back room. The initiates may either be relatives of the donor of the potlatch, or young persons whose relatives are taking the opportunity to carry out the rite in the presence of foreigners. Some of the initiates may already be members of the society, undergoing a further period of seclusion in order to increase their status by a further distribution of presents.

(c) The payment by the wife of the donor and her family of goods to "relay" her from her husband. This is a legal fiction, though necessary to maintain the status of the children.

[illegible] ability are always willing to lend goods to those who are plan- [illegible] ning potlatches in other villages, knowing that the investment is [illegible] safe and lucrative.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the guests assemble, those who are could meeting on their hands one or more wound skins as a mark of membership in the society. Each takes the seat to which he is entitled, the chair behind the fire, or on either side of it, the commoners, slaves, and foreigners in the rear corners nearer the door. The hendili seem to and fro between door and fire, their constant exchange of remarks adding to the general interest of the affair. It is the function of a hendili to lend dignity to chiefs for the sake of his observations, but should one fail to live up to his station, the hendili is privileged to constant therein. In some respects his position approximates that of a buffoon, but as a hendili always receives valuable presents, the office is sometimes accepted by ambitious young men, willing to undertake the slightly derogatory duties in return for the substantial gain.

A number of young lads, friends or relatives of Ti, distribute the food. It is placed in boxes, an important chief is not called upon to share with any one, whereas six or seven men of no standing may partake from one box. These receptacles, with whatever food remains in them, are taken home by the guests, otherwise the host would be insulted. Many boxes are lost in this way, a source of considerable irritation. After the first course, a second follows, consisting of a different kind of food in another box, and in some cases there is a third, and even a fourth course. A chief must never appear stingy. The more he gives, the more does his prestige increase. Also, a man who gives freely receives abundantly, so that generosity brings its reward.

Then, the father or other male relative of Ti's wife, or a Kuru friend who speaks for him, stands up and makes a speech, recalling the fame of his own family by describing in general outlines one of the myths of his ancestry, and announcing that Ti's wife is taking to her husband some portion of it. This may be the prerogative of using a spear carved, for example, with the shape of a heron, or a carved box, or a totem pole with carved figures on it, or the right to use a painting of a grizzly bear on the wall of his house, or an embroidered robe.

preservation of an air of mystery by keeping out of sight of 555,* those who are not sacred. Food is brought to them, and mem- 575 bers of the society are free to enter the room at any time.
Some of the older men enlighten T and his fellows with regard to the secret rites, and especially to the human origin of the whistle. Proud of his new status, an initiate never dreams of communicating this information to those who are not members of the society. As a privilege, the neophytes are sometimes allowed to go out of sight, care being taken that no uninitiated person shall see them. The length of the period of confinement varies according to the number of young people to be admitted, and on the actual time of the potlatch; the minimum duration is about two weeks, the maximum, four months. Sometimes the seclusion is lightened by the arrival of carpenters who have chosen this secret place to work at the sacred masks.
After all the initiates have been confined to the back-room, X [555] continues to invite people to his house at frequent intervals to practise their songs. On each occasion food is distributed, so that the meetings are expensive to the host, but no donor grumbles about it, as thereby he establishes his prestige as a chief.

THE CULMINATION OF SACRED SONGS

The next event is the validation of the initiates' sacred 555 songs,* a ceremony termed ts'ondim. X, with the assis- 556 * tance of his family, piles on the floor of his house the goods 575 which he intends to use for this purpose. In the old days these consisted of skins, blankets, food, baskets, bows, slaves (symbolized by stones), canoes (symbolized by sticks), and so on.
Nowadays, money is used. Towards dusk a herald summons [203] ● the people to X's house. For many years it has been customary to invite everyone, but it is said that long ago only the sacred would have been present. When all are seated, [537]

* Validation of the neophytes' songs is essential at the potlatch itself, but chiefs endeavour to display their wealth and generosity to their fellow-villagers as well. Consequently, though donors are eager to perform this rite, it can be omitted entirely without affecting the potlatch.

[illegible]

As the dances proceed, those women who have the prerogative for doing so, utter a peculiar drawing cry. After dancing, the initiates return to the back-room, where they doff their attire. The ceremony concludes with the distribution of food. 595 556* 575 [424]

The initiates are now free to leave their place of concealment, as each has become a legal member of the secret society. Some young men, sons of influential chiefs, are included a number of times, others but once. The shorter a youth is included, the greater is his prestige, because goods must be distributed on each occasion to validate his status. At the present time, there is considerable uncertainty about the exact details of the ceremony, for it has been so many of late years to give potlatches that the simpler rite has fallen into disuse; some informants state that each initiate should emerge alone and dance by himself. This concludes the shorter ceremony, but with a potlatch the dancing is renewed until the coming of the foreign guests. [554]

DELIVERING OF INVITATIONS

Returning now to preparations for the true potlatch, it does not matter whether the ceremonies already described are carried out before or after the departure of messengers to invite guests from abroad. Although X usually consults his relatives and friends as to whom he shall invite, this is entirely optional. In giving his invitations X is actuated, first, by a desire to summon those from whom he has previously received hospitality; having accepted presents from them he must discharge the obligations or sink in social estimation. Considerations of friendship also enter into his selection, and he will likewise invite anyone whom he wishes to put to shame by a lavish display of wealth. It is taken as a matter of course that each guest will be accompanied by a number of followers, members of his family, slaves, or adherents. 556* [203] [553]

Acting on X's instructions, a herald invites the people of his village to X's house. X stands up and announces to them [203] [464] that he wears an anti-an, giving the name of a chief, to go, for instance, to Bella Bella, to invite a certain person, whose name he gives, to the potlatch. X likewise names those whom he wishes to form the escort. As a sound whistle is used, it is essential either that the chief himself be a senior sonai, or that a sibi go with him. It is immaterial whether or not all of the crew are members of the society. Nobody is compelled to go, but as all know it will be a matter of pride to X to recompense them, none declines except for some strong reason. X names those whom he wishes to proceed to other tribes, sending one canoe to each group of towns. He arranges their departure according to the distance each must travel, the aim being to have all the guests arrive at Bella Coola at the same time. X is expected to provide food for his guests as soon as they arrive, and as the potlatch cannot start until all have assembled, X tries to ensure simultaneous arrival, no easy matter since the area from which guests are invited extends from the Nass River to Alert Bay.

The mysterious and sacred nature of the potlatch is impressed on the minds of the uninitiated at the time of departure. While the chief who is to bear the invitation, and the members of the crew are ready in the canoe at the beach, there is heard from X's house the sound of a whistle. The uninitiated, unaware of the method by which the noise is produced, consider it to be the voice of some supernatural being connected with the potlatch. Either the messenger himself, or some assistant with him, blows a whistle. This can be done without exposing the method by putting the whistle to the lips under cover of a large blanket. When this has sounded the canoe is free to proceed.

The messenger-chief carries with him his sonai mask, which he does if he sees another canoe approaching, while eagle down is scattered over the heads of the paddlers. These two signs indicate that the occupants of the craft are on ceremonial business, therefore must not be molested. For a considerable distance up and down the coast the sacred nature of the potlatch is recognized to such an extent that an attack upon envoys is unthinkable, though one or two myths recount how this unwritten law was violated on rare occasions. A canoe meeting potlatch messengers veers over to the other side of the channel to give them the right of way.

1:McDowell E-1 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

On reaching the destination the canoe is brought to close to shore until the inhabitants of the village have gathered on the beach, which they swiftly do on the arrival of strangers. The messenger sounds his whistle, the significance of which is fully understood by members of the nuxalk society. Any chief who wishes to show his wealth and importance will invite them to his house. As they are landing, he sends a herald to summon a number of influential people of his village, who seat themselves in their rightful places. As the messengers enter they are given seats on the bench behind the fire, the spot usually reserved for chiefs. A number of lads are called in to toast smoked salmon, and when this has been done the fish are broken into shreds by young girls and served to the messengers on a mat, in lieu of a table-cloth. The envoys do not deliver their message as soon as they arrive. On the contrary, they spend the rest of the day aimlessly talking with their hosts, and sleep in the house where they have been received.

The following day likewise passes without ceremony, but towards nightfall the host summons all his fellow-villagers to his house. The singers take up their customary places and beat out a tsaxiut tune. Upon hearing his or her air, the owner of it starts to dance. Using their own discretion, the singers beat out the tunes of tsaxiut after tsaxiut, and each dances. In like fashion the singers beat out nuxalk songs, and the owner of each dances. Since the supernatural beings are not present, the dances are merely of a ceremonial, not a sacred, nature. When all have danced, each gives a present to the envoys. These gifts are not returnable. They are merely "eagle down," but it is necessary that something be given to validate the dances. The value is immaterial, so far as the purpose is concerned, though a chief who wishes to exhibit his chief-like

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

203 nature will try to bestow a valuable present. If a man is too 532 poor to give anything, he can avoid the obligation by not [535] dancing when his tune is beaten out. The presents are piled [537] together, and then the host, aided by several important chiefs, distributes them to the messengers, at the same time making laudatory speeches. The chief of the envoys receives more than the members of his crew.

Then the messenger-chief stands up and announces the names of those whom X has invited to his potlatch, using in each case the ancestral designation of the person summoned. Then the envoys, in a body, go to every house in the village. Probably all to be invited are present in the house of the chief, yet the messenger-chief must call out in the doorway of each house:

"Chief So-and-so, prepare your paddles and leave tomorrow."

Early next morning the messengers rouse those whom they have invited and, as a mark of respect, help them to carry their goods to the canoes. There is an attitude of shaming com-[558] bined with that of deference, since those assisted will have been placed under obligations. They also take to their canoes their own recently acquired goods. Envoys and guests set out together in their respective craft, and only separate as they near Bella Coola.

ARRIVAL OF THE GUESTS

556 While the canoes containing the first party of guests remain
575 at anchor to wait for high tide, the envoys proceed at once to X's house, now completely redecorated if not entirely rebuilt. Here a huge fire is blazing, and members of the nuxalk society are passing in and out, making ready for the ceremony. Both [302] men and women beautify themselves by painting their faces in any designs they fancy, and by combing their hair and placing eagle down upon it. The guests at anchor lay planks [535] across their canoes so as to form a dancing platform. Then, as the tide rises, the singers in the house beat out the tune of grease have been placed in readiness. X selects as many youths as the number on whom he intends to confer the names which have already been announced and validated among the Bella Coola, but are now to be made known to the foreign guests. He seats the lads, who are to substitute for the initiates, on the various boxes. Everybody understands that these are merely representatives. X requests two chiefs to act as his announcers, choosing two with good voices and abundant self-confidence. To one of these X whispers the sisaok name of one of the initiates. 556* 575 553

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE4 Bellacoola NE4

"His name is now——" calls out the announcer, pointing to one of the substitutes, and the listeners readily recognize the initiate intended, from the use, in conjunction with his new designation, of his well-known ancestral name. The heralds repeat the new name with the usual badinage, so that it becomes well known to all present. In like manner the sisaok name given to each initiate is publicly announced. The substitutes receive no advantage from their part in the proceedings. [203]

Then the boxes are opened and red elderberries poured into the canoes in front of the guests. Stones are provided with which the visitors pound the fruit into pulp which they proceed to mix with their hands, as olachen grease and cranberries are added. Then X's helpers distribute spoons and the feast commences. All start to eat, but after an interval one of the leading Bella Coola chiefs strikes the side of his canoe with a spoon, as a signal that all must stop. X has several dishes in readiness. If he is wealthy some of these will be carved in the shape of beaver, eagle, or other form in which an ancestor appeared. These dishes are filled with the food which all have been eating and then placed before the principal chiefs, who thus have a second supply. At this point the singers begin to beat out an ancient song of the type known as xe·tla. Each of these has been handed down from the distant past, when some chief, ancestor of X, had it composed for himself at a potlatch. The theme is always about the form or fame of his 556* 264 [252] [415] [532] 533 556* [171]

Jesup North Pacific Expedition (1922-1924) 1948
NRS Bellacoola NRS

533 earliest ancestors, and the text is commonly grandiloquently
#556 phrased.[a] Frequently the singers alter the words slightly to suit the occasion, and sometimes compose entirely new words [171] for an old tune. As they sing, they are aided by some of X's friends who rise and stand between the fire and the front door.
[522] They occasionally wear forehead masks carved with his crest to add dignity to the rite.

203 After the song the chiefs continue their meal, and there is 522 much practical joking with the heralds.

"Don't you want some food?" X calls to one of them.

#356 Without waiting for an answer he throws a box containing the liquid pulp, inclined at such an angle that the mess is spattered over the recipient. Occasionally, a herald will succeed in catching a box without spilling the contents, but usually he is smeared from head to foot, while the spectators shriek with laughter. It is one of the functions of a herald to be a laughing stock for the visitors.

#556 During the afternoon X's wife and the members of her
583 family deliver to him the goods which they have amassed to "re-buy" her from her husband. These are called "washing material," as if they supplied X with wash-basin and toilet necessities. The speaker orates how the wife has lived up to her obligation in making this presentation, and how it will clear the path for her children. These goods will later on be distributed by X. They can be used for:

(1) Repayment of potlatch debts, or

(2) Making potlatch investments, or

(3) Validating names, either sisaek or ancestral, for the children of his relatives.

It would be most disgraceful should any of the goods be applied to validating sisaek names for any of X's own children, because they have come from his wife's people and react to the advantage of her children in any case. These goods are [a] Though not to the same extent as among the Kwakiutl where the words may describe how the sky is supported on a chief's shoulders, or how he has pushed his head into the land above.

[552] which is said to have come as a prerogative obtained through [420] marriage with a Kwakiutl woman, were not obtained.
[184] After the distribution of investment presents comes the [424] strengthening of X's seat.

His wife, aided by members of her family, has placed the necessary goods in readiness, though it is presumed they merely happen to be on hand. A herald takes his place near the door, and another behind the fire. Beside the latter stands a chief, attired in a round head-dress, who represents X. One of the heralds calls on the substitute to come forward, as if he were just entering the house, and shouts:

[203]

"There is no place for him to sit!"

Then he turns to X's wife, saying:

"See if you have not a few trifles in your room to strengthen him."

[192] The word for "strengthen" is ulukuna, or ploluluna, which means, "shoring up," as if X were wobbling on his chief-like base. The words have the other significance of "clothing." They represent the ethereal dignity wherewith a chief is garbed.

X's wife goes to her room, or to the place in the house where the goods are stored, and brings forth a large assortment of valuables, which are piled in a convenient spot. The substitute who is representing X then places himself in the latter's seat, which is to be made more solid by these goods. X's wife may tell the herald that they have still more goods for him, and in that case he calls out:

"His seat is too hard. Have you no soft cloths for it?"

The wife brings forward more goods to make her husband's seat more comfortable. The herald, who has been chosen for his fluency, uses his originality in what he calls for from the wife; soft cloths for the seat is merely an example. In some cases, many presents are given; at other times, if the wife and her family be poor, these are few and of little worth. It is not essential that foreign guests witness this establishment or strengthening of a seat, though their presence means that X's

[203]

CHAPTER 4

FEATURES CONNECTED WITH THE POTLATCH

Heralds — Totem Poles — Coppers — Professional Prerogatives — Bark Dances — Miscellaneous Ceremonies

128 #556

THE ritual of the potlatch is so complicated that, in order to present a coherent account of it, it has been necessary to omit entirely some features that occur at many potlatches, and to refer briefly to others. This chapter is devoted to an elaboration of these points, thus avoiding the use of lengthy footnotes in the preceding chapter.

Heralds

203 #556

The principal functions of heralds have already been described. They go from house to house inviting the people to assemble for the different ceremonies connected with the potlatch, but that is only one of their many duties. They likewise bear invitations to all types of ceremonies, such as marriages, mourning rites, or Bear dances; in fact, they act as town criers. A person holding any public rite requests one or more heralds to deliver the invitation which is repeated in every house of the village in order from bottom to top.[1]

There are variations, of course, according to the rites to be performed. At a potlatch, the first duty of a herald is to seat the guests in their proper places. This requires not only a good memory, but also considerable tact, since errors with foreign guests cause friction and embarrassment, and diminish the prestige of the whole ceremony. During the actual progress of the rites, a herald must constantly add dignity to the cere-

[574 628 576]

[1]Herald, ak', plural, aaak'ak, not to be confused with a'ak, the name of a society (I, p. 370).

[2]This order may once have had a ceremonial significance but it has been considered for a long time merely a matter of convenience. When giving presents also, a way follows the same order in his mind and comes first the occupants of the bottom house, thus minimizing the danger of overlooking a guest.

sion by repeating loudly a few words, or even phrases, from the speeches being delivered, or calling on the audience to notice what has just been said and to listen attentively. A white man would be annoyed at such interruptions, but the Bella Coola consider them evidence of attentiveness.

The making of comments is a duty performed at every sign of economy, but it is indispensable at potlatches, since a chief depends on the heralds to emphasize and explain the points of his family history which are being displayed. One intelligent man likened their functions to a compass, constantly guiding the course of ceremonial life. Without a herald a chief would be as useless as a ship tossed on the ocean with no hand to steer. Although the principal duty of heralds is to avoid the actions of a chief, they can, and are expected to, decide on who fails to carry out the customary requirements. Cases have occurred in which influential men have so far forgotten their function of generosity as to fail to invite their fellows after killing a deer or other large animal; or women have declined to show their abundant leather. Nothing is said at the time, but when next the people have come together for some ceremony, a herald refers to the omission under as slim a disguise that everyone is aware of his meaning. This public ridicule lowers the prestige of a chief to such an extent that he is careful not to offend again. Not many years ago, a certain Kimsquit chief failed to ask others to share some mountain goats which he had killed; at the first opportunity a herald referred to himself as Yaki, Mountain Goat, and all present realized that he was really alluding to the one who had been remiss.

Heralds must exercise care in their criticisms at the expense of chiefs because, unless public opinion is with them, the point of the remark is lost, and they expose themselves to the wrath of the person offended. Nevertheless, heralds always strive to cause merriment, and often take risks with this aim in view. They try to make humorous remarks, and also to cause amusement by their antics. As already described, the donor of a potlatch may throw to one of them a dish containing liquid food [illegible] to such a man that he contents drifts over the recipient; sometimes, though this is to catch the dish, a herald may deliberately allow the sticky pulp to cover him. The humour of this is increased by the fact that guests at potlatches always receive their food in a ceremonious manner.

Though one of a herald's duties is to act as buffoon, his position is only very slightly derogatory. In the beginning of time, Raven himself did not hesitate to act in this capacity on many occasions. Ever since, the post has usually been occupied by relatives of chiefs, especially by those who are unable to give potlatches. In some cases the position is sought by ambitious young men, willing to endure the slight loss of dignity for the emoluments. Since the basic principle of every Bella Coola ceremony is that the donor must recompense those who have assisted him, heralds are always lavishly rewarded. At potlatches especially, chiefs remember their dependence upon the heralds, and shower presents upon them. One who has allowed himself to be spattered with liquid food to amuse the guests, is suitably compensated, but in any case he receives presents for announcing and seating the guests and for interrupting the speeches. The same principle holds good in all other ceremonies. An elderly informant related that once in his younger days he had been dancing a xaxat dance, when two heralds remarked that the ground on which he was dancing was dirty, meaning that it had not been made clean by the distribution of sufficient presents to justify his dance. His mother at once gave the heralds two muskets, valuable articles in those days, to clear her son's path. These belonged to the informant, who knew nothing about the transaction until it had been completed, but he accepted as a matter of course the necessity of giving presents to heralds. If the seat on which a chief is sitting should break, presents must be given to heralds, and if a dollar should fall when a herald is watching, the latter receives gifts. At the marriage of a chief's son, a herald can claim and remove any of the clothing of the bridegroom or his associates. Above all other occasions, when a young chief is first established on his seat, he must reward the heralds lavishly for their services.

As with so many elements of culture, the Bella Coola ascribe the origin of heralds to the wish of Hemaism as expressed to the first people in the beginning of time. Some groups of these early settlers brought with them heralds whose patron had been created by the supreme deity himself in his house in the land above. Such a one was Kiyat'i who was a member of Kimsuo's (I, p. 346) party at Kimsquit, another was Olgdimat who came with sqwaiyat (I, p. 392). These heralds functioned in the manner of their descendants of today; others of the first chiefs appointed certain of their relations to perform this service, and by means of the power with which they were endowed, created names with respect to their functions. Besides his ordinary name every herald must have an ancestral appellation of some kind, as well as the probability of possessing Kaoiat ones in addition to those of a professional nature. Either by bringing with them from above, or by creation on this earth, each group of first settlers became provided with a herald, whose name is embodied in the ancestral myth describing their experiences. As each of the first heralds died, his name was passed to a successor, and this practice has been carried out from generation to generation until the present. The Bella Coola state that no new names for heralds have been created since the time of the first people, and it is certain that none has been made for many years. Consequently, the number of heralds is strictly limited in accordance with mythological beliefs, and every man who owns one of the ancient designations embodied in an origin myth knows the name of the herald associated with his first namesake.

At the death of a herald his name becomes dormant. Since heralds function at all ceremonies, whether or not the donor belongs to the same ancestral family as themselves, the members of the group sustaining the loss are not deprived of their 203 553 556 618 424 [illegible] ceremonies. Since the loss, one of their prized prerogatives, the visible embodiment of an element in their ancestral myth, is no longer present. In such circumstances, no member of an ancestral family would give a potlatch unless able to revive or to the dormant name to a new herald. The intending donor usually consults with the senior members of the ancestral family as to a suitable incumbent, or especially if he is an influential chief, he may simply use his own discretion. In either case, some relatively young member of the ancestral family is offered the post. If he accepts, the matter is settled; if not, another is invited in his stead. The new herald cannot function until his name and appointment have been validated by the distribution of presents at the potlatch. Such gifts are not reciprocable, since they are held to "have become nothing" for the name. Relatively lavish expenditure for this purpose is one of the many ways in which a chief is able to show his prowess and generosity. Thus established, a herald can carry out his duties thereafter. He functions at every ceremonial, but especially at potlatches given by members of his own ancestral family, to whose origin myth his own name is embodied. From [627] [196] constant participation in all kinds of ceremonials, a herald becomes conversant with every type, and is appealed to as adviser in difficult points of ritual, thus adding to his reputation.

203 556 Although acceptance of the post of herald somewhat curtails a man's activities in other respects, instances are known of energetic men using the gifts received to establish themselves as chiefs, passing on their herald names at the same time to other incumbents. More often, a herald uses his wealth for the benefit of a son or other relative, being satisfied with his own status in the community. He takes a prominent part in every ceremony and is a person of some standing, yet is spared the responsibility of actually giving rise himself, a position which offers many attractions to a man lacking great ambition and initiative.

and those who are not. Boy o'alt, provided that he has enough food for a meal, can call in his neighbours, but the one who usually does so is a man who has received his name a year or two before the occasion.

A few days before the time selected, the host asks the singers to compose a new song for him. For a marginal dance particularly, and in some cases for any one of the other three divisions of the society, the new dance not deal with incidents connected with the host's ancestral story, but with humorous or disgraceful incidents of the present time. If a man has caught an animal and kept them all for himself, his misdeeds is commented upon in the song. If a wife has deserted her husband for another man, the actions of the two are mockingly ridiculed. If a chief has failed to display generosity it is likewise recorded, and reference is made to seven in dance ritual. To do this is one of the functions of a marginal, and the singers are always ready to assist him. At the same time they often add a new incident to the song belonging to some other o'alt dances so that he too will be able to perform. In this way the song are remembered from year to year, which is different from the customary Bella Coola songs.

On the morning of the day chosen, the host asks one of the singers to beat a drum repeatedly but slowly, as a signal that a non-ceremonial dance is about to take place. About noon, heralds go from house to house announcing who is to give the dance. In the late afternoon the people gather in the donor's house where men, women, and children seat themselves without distinction of rank, the only reserved place being that for the singers behind the fire. They beat out the host's tune and he dances to it, while the singers themselves sing the words to the amusement of the audience. Using their own discretion, they then beat out the tune of another o'alt and he also dances, followed in succession by a third, a fourth, and as many as the singers think fit. Sometimes the songs of nuxal are used in a similar manner. When many have danced, the host distributes food to all his guests, not forgetting to give the largest of such song dances to it. Persons who has enough food to provide a meal for all is glad to invite his neighbours to such an affair, but the singers and hereditary chiefs force a stingy man to act as host. Everyone knows his neighbour's resources and the singers have no hesitation in going to the house of a man with an ample supply of food and beginning to have our songs there. The heralds are quick to see what is happening and call the people, with the result that the involuntary host is compelled to provide a meal in order not to be thought mean and churlish. Without waiting for the singers to take the initiative, heralds likewise often invite people to the house of a man whom they know to be well provided with food.

During the summer, the necessity of laying in supplies of salmon makes it impossible to hold many dances, although one of the non-sacred type just described takes place whenever there is a lull in the fishing. In the early autumn, when berries, fish, and game are abundant, the thoughts of chiefs turn to potlatches and the lengthy preliminaries are begun. At this season, too, a chief who lacks sufficient wealth to invite foreign guests, calls in his neighbours for a sacred dance and invites some of his young relatives into their society. The ritual, described in the last chapter, resembles that of a potlatch except that no new house is constructed, there is no return of a dead relative, and the ceremonial connected with the coming of foreigners is necessarily omitted. In some cases a chief performs this type of rite a year before he proposes to hold a potlatch, and explains that he is doing so because he will be unable to give presents to the inhabitants of his own village at the later affair. Gifts so distributed are returnable with interest, though it is not obligatory for recipients to do this in time for the donor to make use of their repayment at his potlatch.

Ceremonials of this nature occupy the Bella Coola during the early autumn, while in winter tsaiat dances take place almost nightly. When they are over, it is time for the non-sacred variety of s'alt performances, and for another type of rite, nusāxkźnx.

[illegible]

Y's family decide when the period of engagement shall be terminated. Although it is considered undignified for X or his relatives to hurry them in this matter, there is always a certain amount of urging. Y's father has strong reason for procrastination. A long engagement strengthens the cause of the children whom his daughter may bear, and hence, he frequently receives presents from X's relatives. As Y's relatives will have to bear the heavier part of the expenses of the wedding, it may be necessary for them to delay it for years while saving the requisite goods. The ceremony may take place at any time of the year. Foreign guests are occasionally invited, but usually only the members of X's and Y's village are present. If the marriage should be with the child of a foreign chief his relatives and friends are present to take part. When Y's relatives decide that they are ready, they choose the actual day after consultation with X's family, though the assumption is that Y's father merely informs X's father of the date.

It is incumbent on X's family to proclaim the event on the day preceding the ceremony. In the late afternoon his father sends a herald through the village calling out:

"Qaimap, ye chiefs! Qaimap, ye wives of chiefs! Qaimap, ye commoners!"

The actual meaning of qaimap is unknown, though it is well understood to be an invitation to gather for the announcement of a wedding. In conjunction with the summons, X's secretial name is used, although all in the village are probably well aware of what is about to take place. It is noteworthy that at a marriage the guests, as well as the participants, are called by the secretial names, as opposed to the facies ones by which individuals who own such are generally known. Red colouring is much in evidence at weddings; heralds smear their faces with red paint and the guests similarly tint themselves. They wear collars, wristlets, and anklets of undyed cedar-bark, and cover themselves with eagle down.

585 In the gathering dusk all assemble in X's house; Y's relations attend or not as they wish. X's father would feel insulted if anyone else should stay away without a valid excuse, but in point of fact everyone is eager for an evening's entertainment. The singers take their accustomed places behind the fire and the guests arrange themselves in the house without reference to rank. The musicians strike up the Tsaxiut song of anyone present, and the person so indicated dances. The first tune used is frequently that of X's father, and then that of his mother, but there is no fixed rule about this. The singers [539] tiffone and beat out tune after tune, and guest after guest dances, but, since none of the supernatural beings is present, the affair is of a non-sacred nature. After exhausting the most popular Tsaxiut songs, the musicians beat out the nuxnl songs of many of the guests who, in succession, dance to them; the songs of shamans are used in like fashion. Sometimes the singers continue until everyone present has danced, at other times they curtail the ceremony, as they think fit. When they decide to stop, they intimate this to X's father, who superintends the distribution to the guests of whatever kind of food has been provided.

During the meal, a fluent speaker stands up and expounds
537 on behalf of X's father the ancestral myth in which his son's 585 ancestral name is embodied. Sometimes X's father acts as his [203] own orator, but usually a herald is called upon. Only sufficient details are given to show the importance of X. The myth may either be one of the most ancient type dealing with the first settlement of this earth, or one of later date describing the exploits of X's famous ancestors; but in either case, as shown by the examples given in the last chapter, each contains an account of a marriage. It is always known, although not generally described, that at each of these several dancers performed, their number varying between two and eighteen. The orator, when outlining the myth, stresses this part of it, and always announces how many danced at that time; with the statement that there will be a like number on the morrow. In them, taking as inconspicuous a part as X does in the whole affair. As the singers start the marriage song, some of X's relatives carry into Y's house a part of the goods which X's relatives have amassed for the occasion, deposit them on the floor near the door, and then withdraw. These goods are said, "to sweep the house." Long ago they are said to have been of great value, though nowadays small presents are considered ample. Any member of Y's family can accept one by picking it from the floor, but as he is expected to return the gift with something of greater value, sometimes nothing is taken. Should none of his relatives appear willing to do so, it devolves on Y's father to accept the present.

When the marriage song has ended, X's father gives to some strong youth narrow strips of goat-skin with the wool still attached. Carrying these in one hand the young man runs up and down the sidewalk, waving his arms, and at intervals throwing one of the strips into the air, away from himself. All the younger people of the village pursue him, and a wild scramble takes place for each strip. Sometimes, instead of running up and down, the tossing is done in a clear space near Y's house. Only the sons of important chiefs are prohibited from this sport, since it is thought to be beneath their dignity. It is an animated scene, in which the participants thoroughly enjoy themselves. Heralds have the right to ask any dancer for his clothing, and unless he is willing to lose this, he must give a present to the one who has demanded it. This is a constant source of amusement to the onlookers. Nothing is known of the origin or meaning of the wholesale giving away of strips of goat-skin, nor why the heralds should be able to demand clothing on this occasion.

"It has always been done," the Bella Coola say simply.

When the noise has somewhat subsided, the singers again beat out the time of the marriage song, and again the dancers begin to perform. Y's father then sends out one of his male relatives, with gifts, "to stop the dance." The bearer gives a present to one of the dancers, who ceases his gyrations, then but even if unaware of the fact, they realize that some supernatural, invisible visitor has arrived.

Thereafter go from house to house, and sometimes to adjacent villages as well,[1] inviting the people to pay a farewell visit to the dead man who will soon leave them; in this invitation the nusuk name of the deceased is used. The guests assemble as one, irrespective of their rank or membership in the nusuk society. To mark their grief, female relatives pull out tufts of their hair, and both men and women of the immediate family cut their hair short. The body, either in its coffin or covered with blankets, is placed between the central fire and the back-room, immediately behind the place where the singers take their stations. When all are present, a son or other near relative who is also a fluent speaker, stands up and expounds how the Chief, meaning Mulielele, has come to visit the dead man, and how all should try to understand the song he has brought.[2] A hidden nusuk has been blowing a whistle intermittently, and the singers pretend to be able to understand words of a song in its notes. In reality they have prepared in advance the new one which they now beat out, accompanied by their voices. The theme either describes the coming of the supernatural visitor, or recounts the number of potlatches given by the deceased, and the manner in which these will make smooth the path whither he is going in the same way that distributed goods validate a chief's seat in this world. This song is practised and improved upon amid the beeming of the whistle as if the singers were constantly gaining new ideas and embellishments from the words of the supernatural visitor. Sometimes a few incidents are added from the nusuk myth. After several repetitions, a relative of the dead man asks the singers to beat out the latter's nusuk songs, as many of them as are remembered from the time he was first initiated into the so-

[1] The Bella Bella are said to invite foreign guests to this ceremony.

[2] Sometimes the people are present when the coming of Mulielele, heralded by whistling and a thump on the roof, takes place. There are variations in this, as in all other nusuk rites.

body became angle down and was walled upwards in psychologically of the type which might serve as basis for a rite of this kind. If the descendants of the person to whom this had happened had dramatized the incident or subsequent death, a custom analogous to the one here described would have arisen.

DISPOSAL OF THE DEAD

There is no fixed time for the disposal of a corpse. When possible, it takes place on the day following death, but as many as four days may elapse if delay is necessary for the performance of the rite just described. Another reason for postponement is the absence of near relatives; if they can be summoned within four or five days, the funeral may be delayed until their arrival. There is always endless discussion concerning the exact details; all relatives and members of the uncontrol family take part, though the wishes of a son, brother, or other near kinsman are usually followed. In this, as in so many points of Bella Coola ritual, an influential chief often overrides the desires even of those who are more closely related to the deceased.

Heralds announce the hour chosen,* usually about noon, and the people begin to assemble in the deceased's house, even strangers being welcome. Women wail dolorously, and another indication of the occasion is the bundles containing clothing, cooking utensils, and other articles belonging to the dead person. The lid of the coffin has been left open, but when everything is ready, an elderly man is asked to strike it, once, with a stone; then the lid is closed. Planks have been removed and a hole made in one of the front corners of the house, through which the man throws out the stone. The women redouble their lamentations as an old woman, previously asked to do so, lights a bundle of dyed and undyed cedar-bark and climbs through the opening carrying this. No request has been made for pall-bearers, but any strong men, especially

*This is done at present, even after the carrying away of the "body." In former times it was omitted when the corpse was secretly buried by the camak.

[illegible] the Bella Coola were again led to carry out at a single gathering features which properly belonged to several. To combine the memorial potlatch with the potlatch, being a return to an earlier custom, presented no serious difficulties and was consequently widely adopted. The Kitsegukla people, however, seem never to have adopted the clear Bella Bella differentiation, and as the rapid decrease in population drove them in ever closer contact with the Bella Coola, their influence tended to lessen differences between the two ceremonials.

At the present time, a memorial potlatch is almost identical with an ordinary potlatch in practice. The same rites are often carried out at both; each varies considerably, and when the distinctive elements are omitted the two become indistinguishable. Name the less, they are never confused in the minds of the participants. The house where a potlatch, lim, is taking place is called a wadmoin, that where a memorial potlatch, ulwanit, is occurring, a nadwanitin. In giving invitations and making comments, heralds are careful not to refer to the ritual under the wrong name; in fact, it may be said that the chief difference between the two is in the minds of the donor and his guests. Sociologically, both are considered to be on a par. Equal wealth is required, and each can be performed only by a chief, both on account of the expenditure involved and owing to the difficulties in procedure which are thought to be too great for a lesser man to surmount.

Difference in the donor's motives is usually sufficient to separate a memorial potlatch from an ordinary one. The latter is given by a chief desirous of increasing his prestige by lavish expenditure, for which one of the excuses is the validation of the appearance of a dead relative. Although this is the central feature, so many other rites are performed that it is sometimes obscured or may, indeed, be omitted entirely. On the other hand, a memorial potlatch occurs as soon as possible after the death of a father, mother, or other dearly loved kinsman, and it is clear to all that the donor's reasons for the rite are to commemorate the deceased, and to console himself and his imme-

Bella Coola NES

(see Plate 25). So, too, wooden representations of coppers are often affixed to an upright post. Not only men are commemorated in this way, a father often places over his daughter's grave pictures of the goods used to rebuy her from her husband; wooden plaques representing coppers are customarily used for this purpose.[*] Such symbols are usually cut down after a year owing to a vague feeling that it is not proper for them to remain standing too long. The function of this type of memorial is to mark the social status of the dead person as judged by the riches given away by him, or on his behalf, during his life-time. With the introduction of writing, the Bella Coola have been quick to recognize it as an easy means for recording the wealth distributed by a chief. In consequence, signs are often painted and erected, giving in figures a statement of his financial transactions. Another recent introduction has been the tombstone. One of these is often set up with the name of the deceased carved on it to perpetuate his memory, and a representation of his crest to record his ancestral history. Such a memorial combines the functions of the first and third types.

As the carpenters labour at the memorials, other arrangements for the ceremony proceed apace. As at a potlatch, the fellow-villagers of the donor may be invited repeatedly to his house for the performance of sunsak dances, but this feature is often omitted, especially if there are no neophytes to be initiated. The mask to be worn by the deceased relative must be prepared in secret; or if several are to be commemorated at the single ceremony, one must be made ready for each. As the time draws near, envoys are dispatched to invite foreign guests if it has been decided to have strangers present. This has been customary for many years, but during the period when no features of the potlatch were allowed at a memorial potlatch, the latter was sometimes carried out in the presence of the donor's fellow-villagers alone. The actual departure of the

[*] The National Museum of Canada, at Ottawa, has specimens of these wooden coppers.

such an adoption occurs only when the deceased was the owner of a Bella Bella myth and the song in question had been used to mourn a real or fictitious relative. It is contrary to custom to use the tune or words of a song not composed for a member of the deceased's ancestral family. 556* 769 [333] [177]

The actual delivering of invitations by the envoys to the desired guests does not differ from the manner already described, except that they are asked "to come to visit the sick [donor]." The significance is, of course, that the mourner's condition is that of a patient. To indicate the reason of their visit, guests at a memorial potlatch always wear a little dyed cedar-bark around their heads. [203] [292]

On arrival, the first party of foreign guests is conducted to the donor's house, where they make themselves comfortable in the section allotted to them by the heralds. An elderly Bella Coola chief who is a famous orator has been asked by the donor to speak, and he rises to do so as soon as his fellow-villagers have entered and taken their places. No set phrases are used, but the speaker usually begins by reminding all present of the way in which their ancestors were created in Nasmāt·a, and how all must return thither. It is an occasion on which eloquence is essential, and the speaker delights in using as many archaic words and rhetorical expressions as possible, with constant references to religious beliefs and ancient history as recorded in mythology. Then he speaks of the death which is the occasion of the ceremony. If the deceased were an old man, he is referred to by a special term not in common usage, nudak·ān, which implies wisdom and respect as well as extreme age. The orator states that he has fallen, using the term ḳoyāṣ, normally applied to the thunderous crash of some mighty tree. He speaks of a young chief as sxwᵊllāmkis, short-lived, a person who has been hunted down by the supernatural Carpenters. He continues by sketching the works of the deceased, the number of potlatches he gave and the manner in which his name was known to many tribes. Finally he tells of the donor's grief, and of how this "sickness" has been al-

537 556* 769 [195]

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of Eagle, Raven, and Blackfish, three of her crests of which the masks were available. They agreed that Timothy Snow[10] was the best carpenter available and that he should be commissioned to put them in shape and arrange their use. Reuben wanted to sing a nusaxé mourning song, to which he had a prerogative derived from his Bella Bella mother, and it was also decided that the band[11] should play. Reuben informed his father that he would contribute $60 towards the expenditure.

Meanwhile Jessie had been washed by female friends, clad in her best clothing, and laid in her coffin. This was a rough box, contributed by the manager of the cannery and shaped like a white man's coffin. At intervals, women came near and wailed dolorously without heeding others similarly engaged. The news was carried to all the Bella Coola, those men who owned gasoline launches taking the word to the logging-camps without being requested to do so. A Carrier Indian who happened to be returning from the cannery spread the word through the village, where each woman who received the message hurried off to some friend, with whom she began to wail.

Early on the following morning, Captain Schooner returned home with his wife, Jessie's stepmother. He had been crying and was sad, but seemed willing to talk. He spoke of the proposed memorial potlatch, and expressed the sentiments recorded on vol. I, p. 473. He was grave and dignified, absolutely determined to perform what he considered to be the necessary ritual, oblivious of consequences, and heedless of what he held to be an unjust law. During that summer, Captain Schooner had been a rather heavy drinker, but on this occasion he abstained from wine, and said that he hoped no one would show disrespect to his daughter by appearing in a drunken condition either at the funeral or the subsequent rites. It is [10] He was not closely related to the Schooners.

[11] Most of the younger Bella Coola were members of the band, performing white men's music on white men's instruments. Andy Schooner was bandmaster, but it is unlikely that this influenced the decision, since the performance of the band was customary at funerals when the writer was in Bella Coola.

1;McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

life did not alter the necessity of rebuying her "to make good the path" of her children. For this purpose they decided to give a copper and a sum of money; it was impossible to learn the exact amount. Joe told Captain Schooner of their intention. 764 159 [583]

About noon the body was brought in a canoe from the cannery in its closed coffin and lifted ashore at a convenient spot near the cemetery. Those manning the canoe were young men who happened to be at the cannery, irrespective of whether or not they were related to Jessie. The coffin was laid on a grassy place and Captain Schooner seated himself beside it. People were passing and repassing, some sat down for a time, then moved off to dinner. Occasionally, a woman would sit and wail, the most constant being Reuben's married daughter; Captain Schooner moved around talking to his friends amidst the eerie wailing. About 1.30 P.M. everyone in the village had assembled, including a number of Carrier Indians, anxious to see the sight. Captain Schooner withdrew to his house after asking Bobby Nehby to summon the chiefs to meet him there. The messenger, who thus acted as herald, went around the gathering whispering to each; in addition to those notified at the cannery the preceding evening he called all the older and most influential Bella Coola, Albert King, Samuel King, Joe Williams, Joshua Moody, Alec Davis, Lame Charlie, Judas, and Nebuchadnezzar. Captain Schooner requested the last named, an important chief, to take charge of the ceremony. At this time Samuel King told Nebuchadnezzar, who informed the others, what had been arranged for his daughter and they agreed that it was good. It was tacitly assumed that George Nelson would be delighted; probably he had been on friendly terms with the girl for some time. Joe Williams also told Nebuchadnezzar the two business propositions that he intended to carry out, the return of the money to Captain Schooner, and the rebuying of his daughter. Nebuchadnezzar informed the people concerned. At this meeting it was decided that various chiefs should speak after the Christian service at the grave. [203] [584] [587]

1:bdc:Dwrsth E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

was not carefully observed. Those wishing to dig took turns with the tools; there was no supervision, and no orders given. When the grave was ready, Jim Pollard asked Judas to perform the rite with the spruce bough, which he did with a branch brought by one of the youths. The young men lowered the coffin into the grave while the band continued to play. The missionary then read the Christian burial service, after which he withdrew. Some of the young men brought planks from old houses near-by, sawed them to the size of the grave and laid them over the coffin as a cover. At this juncture Judas, one of the oldest and most conservative of the Bella Coola, rose to speak. First he offered consolation to the mourning relatives by pointing out that all must travel the same road. Then he spoke to Jessie, telling her not to linger, but to travel back the path of her ancestors from generation to generation until she reached the place where they first came down from above, and thence to ascend to Nuxmit-a. It was impossible to obtain a literal translation of the speech, which was punctuated by calls of "Yo-" from the male Bella Coola. The next speaker was Jim Pollard, the most influential Kimsquit and a personal friend, though not a relative, of Captain Schooner's.

"Go," he said to the dead woman, "Go to the localities from which came your first forefathers in the beginning of time. There you will find your most valuable ancestral possessions. Go at once, do not linger and lose yourself on the road from generation to generation."

Turning to George Nelson, he went on, "Do not be downhearted; all of us must travel the same road. It was made by no man, it is the work of Hpuxstim."

Looking back once more to the grave, he said, "In Qemqo-i are buried many illustrious relatives of yours. You will be among friends, whereas we are left to lament your departure."

It was impossible to write down the words at the time and the above record is not literally correct, although it expresses the gist of the speech.

Captain Schooner whispered to Robert Hood, another of the older Bella Coola, asking him to announce that he, Schooner, with Dan and George, was going to hold a memorial potlatch that evening to which all were invited. Robert is not a herald but undertook this duty owing to the absence of qualified heralds. Meanwhile the grave had been filled in and the people began to drift away as it rose to ground level. Their attitude throughout had resembled that of white people at a funeral, and the hilariousness that characterizes so many Bella Coola gatherings was entirely absent except among the playing children. By 4.30 P.M. all had left the scene.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

In view of the large number of guests expected it had been decided to hold the memorial potlatch, not in one of the old-fashioned houses, but in the village hall, built according to the white man's style of architecture and illuminated with swinging gasoline lamps. This is a large, rectangular building, undivided by partitions, with a stage at one end and a door at the other. About 6.30 P.M. the singers, Nebuchadnezzar, Jim Pollard, Billy Pollard, Alec Davis, Kimsquit Alec, and Robert Hood, gathered at the hall and seated themselves below the stage. Billy Pollard had prepared a mourning song during the day, Kimsquit Alec another, and it was decided to use two others that were well known to all. The singers sat and practised these four for some time, while at intervals various Bella Coola strolled in, listened for a few minutes, then walked out again. Anyone was allowed to do so, but few availed themselves of the opportunity. Meanwhile Captain Schooner had brought $10 worth of rice, raisins, and condensed milk which he placed beside a huge iron cauldron outside the front door. Jim To-Morrow, a Bella Coola of no great intelligence, volunteered to act as cook and soon had a fire blazing and the food boiling.

About 8.00 P.M. the people began to assemble, bringing their own plates and other utensils. After considerable delay and chatter, the guests took their places in the hall, seating themselves regardless of rank on benches ranged along the two side walls and massed at the rear. By mutual consent a portion of the single row of benches along the left wall was reserved

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

type of dance differs from all other Bella Coola ones, since no inherited prerogative is required. Years ago such exhibitions were common, although curing shamans were rare. 756* 556

The usual time for a shaman's performance is at the conclusion of the kwiat season, though one is sometimes held prior to that period if the would-be performer fears that the food which he has stored up for the event is likely to be frozen. [796]

When he decides to give a dance, the shaman first summons the singers to his house and teaches them a song of his own composition. Theoretically both text and tune should have been received from his supernatural benefactor, but many performers undoubtedly employ songs used by shaman ancestors which they have chanted to remember. Another device is to describe a supernatural being seen in a dream. In some cases there is deliberate deception, but in most the performer persuades himself that he has received supernatural authorization. The texts are full of obscure allusions, a river, for example, is spoken of as swift running water. Often a man will treasure a song for years, before collecting the wealth necessary to use it publicly, with the social prestige attached. A shaman always obtains a name from his supernatural benefactor, but if a man merely uses a feat observed in a dream, this is impossible, so he adopts the designation of some deceased shaman, soon convincing himself that it was uttered by the apparition. Others will probably remember this name, hence suspicions may easily be aroused concerning the authenticity of the performance, but it is not customary to voice these. The singers repeat the song which they have just heard, and continue doing so until they have mastered it. Sometimes they compose further songs themselves for the performer. During the practising, those who are not kukusiut are expelled from the house. A shaman is a person who has come in contact with the supernatural; hence he is akin to the members of the society who, therefore, support him during his rite.[8] A herald is sent out

533 756* 556 [195] [553] [183] 756* 556 [575] [203]

[8] Theoretically, a shaman need not be a kwiat, but visitations usually come only to those of religious and imaginative temperaments, who are in the majority of cases already members of the society.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 to make known to all that there will be a dance on the following day, using the name of the shaman. After such announce-556 ment, it would be most unusual for anyone to think of leaving [203] a village until after the performance.

Towards dusk on the appointed day the people are summoned to the house of the shaman. Near the door are seated those who are not initiated kukusiut; in the inner part of the house are members of the society, with the singers in their 533 accustomed places behind the fire. The shaman stands alone 535 between the fire and the door and sings one of his songs, the time being marked by the words alone. Then he dances, his
* 756 wrists shaking, his head rolling from side to side, and his feet 556 marking time to the beating of sticks, as the singers accompany the singing of his song. If more than one song has been composed he dances to each, always accompanied by other shamans and by them alone. The shaman's costume consists of [292] the usual blanket, and eagle down is scattered in his hair, with the additional and distinctive mark of intertwined dyed, and undyed, cedar-bark. After every song, the singers beat time very rapidly,[7] too rapidly for the dancer to keep pace with it, so he merely sways backwards and forwards shaking his hands
* 756 violently. Then the shaman, assisted by a few friends whom 556 he has chosen for the purpose, performs a conjuring feat to impress the uninitiated. The kukusiut realize that this may be merely a deception, but since real shamans perform something of the same nature, there is always the possibility that it may be genuine. The shaman may choose some feat which he has seen some old shaman perform, or he may use something which he has seen in a dream; or rely purely on his own inventive ability, aided, as he always is, by carpenters. The method of carrying out each trick is carefully guarded, with the result that it was impossible to obtain information about more than a few. After the conjuring act, the shaman gives food to all, followed by presents. If it is the first time that he has given

[7] This fast beating of time is called ala; it occurs only in shaman and nusuk dances.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

534 one used by some of Triha's ancestors. It was brought to the ocean and 754 thrown in.

TABOOS

784 The Bella Coola regard as taboos those injunctions that are observed in the belief that their neglect would cause automatic punishment. The mechanism of enforcement is frequently not understood; it is enough to know that an unpleasant result would follow disobedience. Some taboos are in force at all times, others only during certain seasons of the year, and still others at critical periods of life. Since the psychology of such [789] beliefs is essentially magical rather than religious, they could justifiably be grouped at this point. Unfortunately, to do so would destroy the continuity of accounts of birth, adolescence, death, ceremonial chastity, and many other aspects of Bella Coola life subject to taboo. The injunctions enforced by the River Guardian, the restrictions observed by a girl after puberty, the continence required after different medicines, all are taboos, disregard of which brings certain punishment. These and many others have already been described in connection with the activities to which they pertain. It is doubtful whether the Bella Coola have a single word to describe taboos [783] in general, though they are all regarded as sxaiăx, that is, as something which is ceremonially unclean.

Scarcely to be distinguished from taboos are ceremonial errors, yun-imut or kăn-imut. Failure to give presents to heralds when a seat breaks beneath a chief or a dancer stumbles, or unnecessary activity during the year's waiting for the fruition of supernatural good fortune are ritual mistakes of this type. Neglect of such regulations brings punishment, though of a lesser kind than the breaking of taboos. If the [688] error has been in connection with a ceremony, the offence can [203] be wiped out by presents to heralds, and the terms yun-imut and kăn-imut are likewise applied to some of their prerogatives such as the ability to claim clothing during the marriage of a chief's child.

Most taboos and errors can best be described with other

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 688 Frequently the marshals and associated kukusiut depute others to act as their executioners. Sometimes a shaman who is also a kusiut is asked to slay the offender, or a kusiut in whose ancestral family a knowledge of means for secret murder has been handed down for generations may be called upon. The executioner is told that if he fails he will himself be killed. Although no Bella Coola would admit that a person so charged had committed murder by other than magical means, it appears highly probable that such was the case. It is believed that long ago the kukusiut were able to kill an offending [761] uninitiated person by drawing forth his spirit, wrapping it in [754] undyed cedar-bark and casting it into the fire. The victim would die within a short time.

*575 ●203 628 The desire to carry out kusiut ceremonials with proper dignity and ritual not only acts as a strong bond of union among members of the society in a single village, but between those in different towns and even in different tribes. When a marshal has struck a kusiut, the ceremony, whatever it may be, is at once stopped. Two kukusiut are sent off to bear the tidings to the nearest village up the valley, and two more to the one below. The messengers go beneath the house in which a dance is taking place and knock on the floor of the back-room. Someone presently hears them and a kusiut goes out to investigate. When the envoys have told their tale he returns, whispers to the singers, and the ceremony concludes for that night. As soon as the uninitiated, if any are present, have been ejected, the messengers enter with blankets almost covering their faces and seat themselves between the fire and the back-room where the senior members crowd around to listen. From this village two more kukusiut are despatched with the news which is thus transmitted with remarkable speed from end to end of the valley. When next the marshals are admonishing the kukusiut of their respective villages, they do not fail to draw attention to the way in which the law has been upheld. Conversely, if a marshal hears indirectly that there has been a flaw in the ritual of a neighbouring village,

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

he beats in the fire with his stick, and expresses the hope that the name of the marshal in the town where the error took place may be blackened unless he does better. 575* 628 209

As an individual kuxiut who errs is punished by a marshal, so is punishment meted out to the members of a village in which any serious accident occurs during a dance. Such disasters are fire, causing concealed kukuxiut to appear among the uninitiated, the breaking of a sidewalk on which a number of the members are dancing, or the capsizing of lashed canoes which are used in some of the performances. The obvious effect of such mishaps is to lower the prestige of the kuxiut society in the eyes of the uninitiated. The news travels from town to town, and to adjacent tribes. This is a casus belli for any village which wishes to attack the one where the disaster took place; in fact, a raid is considered meritorious. Owing to frequent marriages between the members of neighbouring villages, it usually happens that the inhabitants of adjacent settlements are unwilling to attack, but the news spreads until it reaches a town willing to take the lead. The marshals, aided by any other influential kukuxiut, discuss the matter and decide on war; uninitiated are called upon to take part, though they are told only that the foray is connected with the rites of the kuxiut society which increases rather than decreases their awe. The threatened villagers, knowing that an attack is inevitable, send out sentinels and guards, and, if possible, flee at the last moment to neighbouring towns for safety, allowing the raiders to burn their village and carry off loot. If a fight takes place many people may be killed, but slaves are never taken. In the last century Stax attacked Alqāxel; the assailants were aided by a number of Chilkotin to whom they were related but who had not the slightest idea of the cause of the raid. Although an attacked town is usually helped by its neighbours, this is not the case when the assault is caused by error in kuxiut or xoxok ceremonial.

575* 628 688 721 [727] [567]

Nor is punishment for error or disaster in ritual meted out [648]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The first night is kuxtálaia or kuxtámem.[4] This is when the call comes to a prospective dancer. This may be heralded by whistling from above, made by a kuxiat sent with a whistle to a neighbouring mountain for the purpose, by a thud on the roof, likewise produced by an accomplice, or by no intimation whatever. The dancer utters a low call, sometimes begins to walk in circles with bent head, or to act in some other peculiar manner, while a whistle sounds repeatedly. The uninitiated are at once expelled from his house and a herald informs the village that something strange has come upon the dancer. The kuxuziat gather in his house, and four times help him by the frenzied, but regular, beating of sticks. Then the singers sing a song previously prepared, the words describing either his patron or the land above. After listening closely, the kuxuziat join in and rehearse it until it is familiar. The dancer may or may not perform; if he is inadept in the steps, he does so for practice. If the hour is not too late, the singers may choose, purely for practice, to beat out a number of the songs of those kuxuziat who have already performed during the ceremonial season. A meal, provided by the dancer and his family, is then served. The singers next beat out the dancer's song once more and he dances, concluding the evening's performance. Novices and those who have already performed during the season take up their abode in the dancer's house, where they remain for the ensuing four days and nights.

The second day is nuxiustálap.[5] Quite early in the morning a herald calls the kuxuziat to the dancer's house, an invitation accepted by as many as wish to do so. A second song is usually composed and practised in the same manner as on the previous evening. Several kuxuziat are sent to the forest to cut wood for masks, the number of sections required depending upon the number to be used. In the evening all members of the society assemble to practise the songs.[7] The making of the masks

[4] In Kimsquit called Ałxwultmem.

[5] The term qai-uap is occasionally used for the rites occurring on the day itself.

[7] The rehearsal of the second is sometimes postponed until this time.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

perform several ancient rites through a desire to "show off" before someone who was ignorant. In recent years there has been a tendency to concentrate on kusiut ceremonials, and to judge a man's worth by his lavishness in them, but this is only a modern development due to the prohibition of the potlatch. Nevertheless, even in former times some individuals preferred to invite foreign guests to kusiut dances and to give them valuable gifts rather than to save these for potlatches; such a ceremony is called a kukusiutek. Whenever strangers are present at a kusiut dance they receive small pieces of dyed cedar-bark as proof of the friendly intentions of the host. The general consensus of Bella Coola opinion is that it is foolish for a man to concentrate on kusiut performances, particularly if he impoverish himself to the detriment of potlatches.

Although foreign guests are seldom invited to kusiut rites, a dancer frequently calls in his fellows from adjacent villages. But as the ceremonial season is simultaneous in the different settlements, with almost nightly performances, it is often impossible to avoid conflict in dates. Which invitation shall have preference is decided in the following manner:

During the days of qotlum and nebusam the dancer sends a herald of powerful physique to invite guests from as many villages as he wishes. Simultaneously, a messenger may be approaching from the opposite direction with a similar invitation. Each envoy watches carefully around each bend in the path for his rival, and whichever can first call out his message is entitled to continue to give his invitation in the village of the outwitted herald. It is considered exceedingly bad taste to decline a summons, so the ceremony to which the defeated herald was bearing an invitation must be postponed. Sometimes the two messengers sight one another simultaneously, and the relative priority of their messages is then decided by a contest of strength. The rivals stand in the path, shoulder to shoulder, arms close to their sides, and shove with all their strength, the winner being the one who can force his opponent to move his feet. This last means of deciding is used exclu-

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 sively when the villages in which the dances are taking place 203 are adjacent or separated by such a short distance that envoys cannot meet en route.

*575 A word may be said about the attitude of the Bella Coola 177 to the dances of other coastal tribes. They know that the 829 Bella Bella, Rivers Inlet, Kwakiutl, and Kitkatla people have kusiut societies, but until recently their members were con-
[648] sidered to be uninitiated, as Bella Coola were when they visited foreign tribes.[8] A few years ago the Bella Coola, Bella Bella, and Rivers Inlet people decided that their rites were sufficiently akin to permit membership in one tribe to carry with it membership in the others:

"We have now one repository," they say.

This development is due to ease of communication and diminution of population in the three tribes. None the less, the Bella Coola recognize differences between their own rites and those of their neighbours. They say that no other tribe
[171] has repositories; also that in the other tribes the kusiut society is more intimately connected with the chiefs, in fact, that in Bella Bella and Fort Rupert the Cannibals are the chiefs, whereas in Bella Coola even a poor man, uninfluential in every other respect, can be one.

*575 Theorization is out of place in a descriptive monograph such as this, but the writer gives it as his personal opinion that 177 the Bella Coola have adopted much, if not all, of the kusiut
[796] ceremonial from other coastal tribes, though they have profoundly altered it in respect to certain ancient beliefs connected with localized guardian spirits and the patrons of ancestral families. He further believes that it will be found that this Bella Coola technique has in its turn affected the Bella Bella and Rivers Inlet Indians. There seems little doubt that the
[171] Bella Coola are correct in saying that the society is more im-
[796] portant among them than among their neighbours, and the writer feels that dances and rituals of different types have certainly been adapted to the kusiut pattern of the Bella Coola.

[8]Except a few individuals who had inherited foreign prerogatives.

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

The following morning the kukusiut alone are invited to X's house. The marshals meanwhile superintend the laying and lashing of planks across two river dug-outs to form a dancing platform. On this the singers take their places, in addition to as many kukusiut as can scramble aboard. The craft is slowly poled either up- or downstream, according to the direction of X's repository, and more kukusiut accompany it along the bank; the uninitiated watch with keen interest from the background. X and his companions proceed towards the river and on meeting the lashed-together canoes are taken aboard. The singers strike up any well known kusiut tune, and in time to it as many kukusiut as possible dance on the platform surmounting the craft. Each uses his own style of dancing according to his prerogative, so that the scene is strikingly varied and animated. X himself cowers in the centre, practically concealed from the uninitiated by the dancers. On reaching the village the whole party hurriedly runs to X's house, from which the uninitiated are rigorously barred for the rest of the day. Those kukusiut who accompanied the party along the bank of the river have preceded them and, as X enters, the droning cry is raised which always heralds the appearance of one who has been in close contact with supernatural beings.

575* 796 [535] [535] [424] [201]

If X is considered trustworthy, he may be allowed to go alone to his repository, although this is only customary when he takes a second or third prerogative. If this procedure has been followed, X tells those present what he has seen; otherwise his companions do so. The uninitiated listen eagerly from the adjacent houses, wondering anxiously what is taking place. Several kukusiut blow, or use bellow-whistles to increase the awe of the hearers. Presently a herald is sent out. He goes first to the lowest house[18] of the village, then in succession to those above, announcing in each that:

575* 203● 796

"Something strange has happened to the son of the chief."

X's name is not mentioned; if his father is not a chief the [18] That is, to the one farthest downstream. By always going to each house in order from bottom to top of the village the herald avoids any danger of omissions.

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 call is that something strange has happened to the "mortal." At intervals throughout the day he repeats this announcement, ● 203 and towards nightfall goes around calling:

796 Skinap, skinap, kukusiaot, "Cure, cure, ye members of the kusiut society, power has come to the son of the chief [or to the mortal]."

The kukusiut assemble in X's house, taking their places around the fire; the uninitiated crowd near the doorway. X is seated among his relatives and some of the senior members of the society behind the fire. A herald calls out:

"I want a siki to help X."

*575 In every village there are at least two kukusiut who have, embodied with their kusiut names, the professional prerogative 791 of acting as healer to every novice; it is believed that the 796 ancestor of each obtained a name and this right through a [424] revelation from some supernatural healer. Since that time the owner of the name has been able to insert some of his own ever- [773] present power into a neophyte to enable him to sustain the dangers of admission to the society. This is the fiction taught to the uninitiated. The profession of siki can be trans- [425] mitted by willing like any other prerogative and it occasionally happens that the same individual is siki for both kusiut and susook. In answer to the herald's call, the two siki come forward and crouch behind the fire, one on either side of it. [302] Their faces are blackened with soot, and each wears a blanket, decorated with dyed cedar-bark, thrown loosely over his [292] shoulders, leaving the chest and stomach bare except for an [237] apron of deer hooves or puffin beaks. Meanwhile beating sticks are distributed among most of the kukusiut who strike furiously on the floor with them, without any attempt to keep time; the sole object is to produce the greatest din possible.

One of the siki contorts himself in an amazing manner, presses his hands against his stomach as if to force something from it, and rolls from side to side on his haunches, until at length he produces, as if from his body, a rock crystal (see Plate 3).[1] He waves this to and fro in his hands, then goes

[1] [see category 116, p 84(e)- ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

173 he lapsed into silence, knowing that the odds were too great for him.
*575 The Cannibal realized that if this powerful man could be initiated into 578 their society he would be a source of strength, so he said:

"You are now an initiate of mine."

Xmxumlaix understood that this meant he was to be initiated into the kusiut society. He agreed, but asked to be permitted to complete the a'alk dance which he was performing that evening, and to get beating sticks for which he had gone to the forest. The kukusiut were only too willing to grant this dispensation in their joy at having a valuable recruit.

On his return to the village, Xmxumlaix told his fellow a'alk that he was going to be a kusiut and they were greatly grieved at loss of their leader. That night they gave the dance which had been started and composed a song of which the theme was the way in which their rivals had fallen until their heads were upside down. The kukusiut, mocked in this way, feared that this was a prelude to further trouble with the a'alk, but Xmxumlaix duly carried out his promise and was enrolled as a kusiut. Bereft of their leader, many of his disconsolate associates were admitted as kukusiut, and ever since that time there has been relatively little friction between the two societies. In due course the Cannibal gave his dance with a song describing how he had met a strange creature over whom he had prevailed; this was, of course, the uninitiated Xmxumlaix.

[203] To these two is attributed the origin of the practice of *[796] shoving to decide priority of invitation giving. It is said that both Xmxumlaix and the Cannibal once wished to invite the people to a ceremony on the same evening and agreed to shove against each other to decide which should have preference. Xmxumlaix prevailed, and the Cannibal duly postponed his dance and went with his associates to the winner's house.

[178] As before stated, stories of this kind dealing with the alleged history of the society are of slight value. As far as they go, they agree with other evidence pointing to the gradual growth of the kusiut society from a band of elders endowed with supernatural power to a society with enormous prestige, dominating the life of the community and entirely overshadowing the a'alk who seem once to have been their rivals.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*533 B Sāostxtnqwoo | olāsults | ska'ālpsdulsdai | dismāt·umpdjs
Go within | my house, | I am giving food | to my friends.

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

C The third part of this song has been forgotten.

[614] [424] [685] [609]

(a) Recorded as song VII D 28b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. It is said that this song has been handed down for generations in an ancestral family; they now regard it as a family possession and would consider its use by others to be stealing.

(b) Many years ago a solitary Bella Bella used to paddle to Kimsquit almost every year. He was dressed like a chief and had the mien of one, so that his hosts assumed him to be a person of importance. It was later found that he was a poor man. The mocking of foreigners is a common theme of a'alk songs.

am'lel·a Song Used for Xumxumlaix(a)

*533 575 578 A Nuiwultukāxānamqualan | sīkwosmaiktila
He has fallen so that his buttocks are uppermost, | Hail(b)!

Damunmulan·imut | skusiutdas
He has come to hurt, | that kusiut(c).

[WORDLESS CHORUS]

B and C. The second and third parts have been forgotten.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 3c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.

(b) A mockingly deferential salutation used in a'alk songs describing the kukusiut.

(c) Xumxumlaix was an a'alk who is said to have seen a Cannibal kusiut when the latter was supposed to be in the land above. A song was composed about the incident, and the above fragment has been remembered for many years. Xumxumlaix was initiated into the kusiut society; see vol. II, p. 265.

*533 575 796 203 As already described, whenever a dancer is performing, the women utter a peculiar high-pitched drone and the heralds call out remarks suitable to the occasion. A phonograph record[3] was made of the drone, followed by a cry suitable for either sisdok or a'alk dances. The following words are virtually sung:

Yelestāldimut | stālumpalsis
Do not err, | chiefs.

[3]Recorded as song VII D 29c, National Museum of Canada.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

Xemlaix: One of the first men to settle at Ḷemqo·ts in the beginning of time.
Xemtmm: Kusiut name of a Slɨkiul man.
Xemxemálotla: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—Ancestral name of a Bella Coola man.
Xemxemlaix: Sisauk name brought from above in the beginning of time.
Xemxemtmm: 1—Supernatural beings who request the sun to appear.
2—One of the first men to settle at Alqálaul in the beginning of time.
[533] xe·tla: Boastful type of song used by chiefs on war expeditions and at potlatches.
Xedilkas: One of the first men to settle at Ḷatlnalas in the beginning of time.
Xelásu: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit woman. The designation is of Bella Bella origin.
[825] 'ṣqu: Marten.
[412] ṣils: Stone axe.
xlnl: Party of potlatch messengers and the invitation they bear.
[203] Xumpdimut: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xumnmlaix: A'alk man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xummmoslaix: Celebrated female shaman.
[821] ṣunpinás·i, plural, ṣunpinásoksi: Little girl.
[517] Xunpinas: 1—"Little Girls": Group of stars in the Great Bear.
2—Picnic, especially one on which fern root is gathered.
Xuxais: Bella Coola term for the Carriers living near Ootsa Lake. This is said to be their own name for themselves.
Xuximán·a, "Right Foot": Stuax repository named from part of a supernatural creature.
Xuṣis: Mountain in the Carrier country.
xxmánoás: Spirit, one of the supernatural elements in the human body.
xlástmm: Ceremony prior to a potlatch when tasks are allotted and the donor's house destroyed.
xlásl: The entrusting, before death, of a name for the benefit of a relative.
Xlikwals: Mountain in the upper Bella Coola valley.
[586] xlokn·imut: The irrevocable desertion of her husband by a wife.
[825] Xmaxots: Locality below Nuṣḷalst.
ṣmṣmatsl: Minnows.
[601] gwes: Woman, or wife in indirect address (ki gwaslaix: My wife).
[614] gwesásta: Female relatives of same ancestral family, term of indirect address.
[423] gwasdám or nugwasdám: The right by which a husband uses his wife's land, though it is not his own.
Xnutli: Bella Coola sorcerer living in the last century.
xokst: The forcible washing of a Cannibal.
Xolaxwosem: Name acquired by a man mentioned in an ancient story.
[785] xoldjut: Intercourse held during ceremonial chastity; the term has a sacred significance.
[831] Xomtsk: Male professional singer who came down to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
Xomxemqa: Ancestral name of a Stuax man. The designation is said to have come from Smith Inlet.
Xonqotem: Supernatural scoop-net fisherman, servant of the supreme god.
Xoqotli: Bella Coola man mentioned in an ancient story.

2: McIlwraith NE6 Bellacoola NE6

203

/For information on the role of "heralds" in the winter ceremonial dances of the kusiut society see category 116, pp. 41-241./

T:Boas E-5 (1894-ca. 1900)900 NES Bellacoola NES

575 P46 [203]

in this room. Then the host sends messengers to invite the people. They take staffs, and tie red cedar-bark round their heads, and go from house to house, singing, "Nayaxdets wa nsnsp'ntsnt' he!" (=I wish to find some one who understands the winter ceremonial.") This they repeat in every house. Then they return to the host's house, who sends them out again, ordering them to sing, "Qaa'sk'ts hostts wa nsnsp'ntsnt' he!" (=I wish the dancers would wash their hands.") Again they return to his house. They are sent out once more with the message, "Xa'tsak'ustsk'ts wa nsnsp'ntsnt' he!" (=I wish the dancers would make their hands tremble.") They return once more to the chief's house, and are sent out again with the message, "Tapanak'ntts wa nsnsp'ntsnt' he!" (=I want the dancers to look at their hands.") Now the dancers are ready, and come to the house. Then E'xem arises and dresses. He puts on a head-dress of birds' skins, ornamented with red cedar-bark. He is accompanied by women. Another man, who is called Nnx'a'ns., adorns himself with red cedar-bark. He carries in his right hand a small baton covered with red cedar-bark. In his left he carries a larger stick, on which he beats time with the small baton. He sits down, and now all the people enter. First of all, E'xem comes in, accompanied by many women. Nnx'a'ns. begins to sing and to beat time, and E'xem shouts, "Oos!" E'xem walks around the fire, keeping it to his left, and shaking his back. Before he begins the circuit, he gives four jumps near the door. Four times he goes round the fire, and every time he reaches the door he gives four jumps. As soon as he does so, Nnx'a'ns. beats time slowly. When E'xem has finished his dance, the people take him to a place near the door, and a woman sings near him. Nnx'a'ns. and the people join her, then she dances her winter dance. Before she quite finishes, the people make her stop, and another woman begins her dance. Nnx'a'ns. beats time, and the other people join his song. The people make her stop again. Then a great many people perform their dances. Now E'xem appears again, crying, "Oos!" and Nnx'a'ns. beats time. Again he jumps four times to the right and four times to the left when reaching the door. After this, two more men and two more women perform their dances. After this has been done twice, E'xem stands near the door, looking upward, and says, "They are very near now." By this time the whole house is full of people. He goes around the house three times, dancing. Then he stays near the door, looking upward, saying all the time, "They are near by." When he reaches the door the fourth time, he cries, "They have arrived! Now they are here, dancing on the roof." E'xem continues to dance in the house, in order to induce them to come down. The first to come down is Xtsaxtsnalt'ca.ln, who stops at the rear of the house and sits down. E'xem continues to dance, and the others enter in order. E'xem stands near them and says, "Now I have played

Hallowell E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

Coola throw pieces of it and eagle down on the water.

Before leaving the subject of supernatural animals, a word must be said concerning the attitude of the Bella Coola to those in whose forms their first ancestors came to earth. If, for example, a man's first ancestor descended as a raven, this knowledge is a valuable possession of himself and his family. Indeed, the most treasured possessions of a Bella Coola are not the material objects collected by him through life, but the intangible rights wrapped up in his ancestral history. These are referred to under four names:

(1) Smaiuste, "Preserved Story"; the myth describing the coming to earth of a man's first ancestors in the beginning of time.

(2) Kelahe, "What Was Sent Down"; the names and other possessions given by Alqustém to a man's first ancestors in the beginning of time.

(3) Tpémál, "Whence We Came"; the place to which a man's first ancestors came in the beginning of time, and the one from which they have since spread.

(4) Qwathuste.

Various smaiuste are recorded in vol. I, chap. vi, and the second and third terms are really part of the first, although to the Bella Coola they are psychologically distinct. Qwathuste is the word used for both the birds or animals chosen as cloaks by the first settlers, and also for creatures with which the early people came in contact. The nearest interpretation appears to be, "Crest." When a Bella Coola whose first ancestor came to earth as a raven portrays that bird, it serves as a visible mark of his intangible possession. In former days, if a man carved on stone so that his work and his name would never be forgotten, it was a qwathudum, a constant reminder of his greatness to generations then unborn. A qwathuste, therefore, combines the concept of memorial with that of crest, so that Bella Coola speak of the white man's memorials as qwathuste. In brief, a man regards the form assumed by his ancestor when coming to this earth as an emblem of the ancient history and fame of his family. It is a matter connected with the past, a matter of the mind, a source of pride to him to have such a possession, but a matter that does not affect his daily life. 211 424 773

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

So far as could be learnt, the Bella Coola crests consist of the following birds and animals: raven, bald eagle, grizzly bear, black bear, wolf, whale, blackfish, merganser, loon, sâmtsk, possibly deer, and the mythical double-headed snake, nsiatl. To these must be added the sun, because some of the original people came to earth in human form by sliding down his eye-lashes, the sun-beams; and nuhwikta, the posts which stretched from earth to the land above, down which a number of the first ancestors of mankind swarmed in human form. The Bella Coola believe that these posts are particularly common memorials among the tribes of the outer coast. According to some accounts it was these posts which supported the first sky until it fell. 825 [776] * [772] [829] [772]

A crest is connected almost exclusively with the distant past. A Bella Coola whose ancestor came to earth as a raven pays no attention to the ravens of the present time. The matter was approached from every possible angle and not the slightest sign of respect toward living specimens of a man's crest could be noticed. A query as to whether or not a man refrained from eating his crest was regarded as highly humorous. Nor is there any trace of fellowship between unrelated families even if they happen to have the same crest. The subject was broached repeatedly, until at last one informant smiled broadly and said: 424 779 825

"I know now what you want to find out, I can tell you all about it."

He recounted how the Kitkatla are, in his opinion, stupid enough to regard as brothers all those who have the same animal story even if they are members of different tribes. He said that when he was a young man at Victoria, where Indians from all parts of the coast used to meet, a Kitkatla had once asked him what was his animal. He was puzzled, but as the [648]

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

424 nearest answer to the question replied that his crest was the 979 Raven. The Kitkatla was a Raven man, too, and to the 825 narrator's surprise, treated him as a brother for the rest of his stay in Victoria. He shook with laughter as he recalled the experience, and added that though he was quite willing to accept favours of this kind he would never dream of returning them. It can be stated unhesitatingly that the Bella Coola have no totemic beliefs concerning their crests. There is not [582] the slightest trace of respect towards the animal, nor yet of exogamy.

211 Although crests are not objects of religious veneration, yet they have some importance in the realm of social life. The 424 portrayal of one serves to indicate ownership of an ancestral 773 myth describing that particular bird or animal. A wealthy 825 chief is proud to display his crest on a totem-pole, or as a painting on the front wall of his house. Anyone seeing such a [532] design is impressed with the glories of the family history of [556] the owner, to the latter's gratification. A living specimen of the bird or animal is treated with no respect, but its delinea-[304] tion is a memento of family history. For that reason a man is often tattooed* with his crest, that derived from his father's first ancestor on the right breast, that from his mother, on the left; and the owner of a canoe often carves his crest on its bow. After the death of a chief a memorial-post is erected near his grave, decorated with a painting or carving of one or more crests to remind observers not only of the deceased, but of his
000 family history, his most treasured possession. It is said, half

[171] [184] *It is said that tattooing was formerly customary not only among all the coastal tribes but also the Carriers. Both Bella Coola men and women decorated themselves in this way, but the custom was not universal, and is said never to have been common. It is believed that Haida chiefs tattooed themselves in connection with potlatches; in Bella Coola this was not the case although the operation was performed within the back-room of the patient's house. Two methods were employed. The first was by puncturing the skin with a needle smeared with colouring material; the second and less common, by passing a string coated with the substance beneath the skin. The dye was obtained from river stones which were baked for a long time and then ground into a powder. This keeps indefinitely and can be made ready for use by mixing with water. As far as could be learnt, any skilled craftsman might perform the operation.
[386]

Schoolcraft E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

pose should remain continent for several nights to increase his 224 generative powers. He then selects a time for beginning the 785 rite and on the second and fourth nights from that date sleeps with his wife, holding intercourse repeatedly and vigorously until he is utterly exhausted. Before dawn on the third and fifth days he must wash in the river or in some quiet stream. Then follow four nights of restraint, a further intercourse, and washing before dawn. The period is next increased to eight nights, then twelve, and finally sixteen, each with a similar contact and bathing. The nights of abstinence are thus forty [801] in all, a lucky number. An unmarried man can obtain power [836] in the same manner with the assistance of a female friend; it is the act itself that is vital, not the union of husband and wife.

At the present time, only two Bella Coola are said to know [184] this particular type of ceremonial chastity, which they conceal carefully, even refusing offers to buy their knowledge. It is potent at any time, but especially if the periods of continence have been so arranged that they terminate at one of the solstices. Then, indeed, can a hunter set off with every prospect [825] of success, knowing that the human taint disliked by animals [783] has been removed, and been replaced by a ceremonial cleanliness pleasing to them. If the time terminates at the winter solstice, the hunter should set out immediately; if it ends in June, he must remain away from women after his final intercourse. In September or October, when ready to leave for the hunt, he must sleep beside his wife for the last four nights; each night he must place his leg between hers, and each morning the two must wash together. The best fortune of all is obtained by a man who observes this forty-night period for four successive years.

Another, and more common, count[24] is to observe continence for four nights, followed by intercourse. Immediately [824] afterwards, the man should eat as much devil's club[25] as pos- [278]

[24]The record of nights is kept by notches cut in a stick or by knots on a cord. [211]

[25]Or false hellebore. This latter plant is thought to be so poisonous that the eating of even a twig an inch in length is fatal; a very small amount, however, all that is ever taken, acts as a powerful emetic.

Rockefeller E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

342 in dances. In front of most houses rises a short totem-pole,* either pierced for the doorway, or standing on the opposite side of the sidewalk. [211] [778]

The Family

It is probably no exaggeration to say that in every part of the world the most important social unit is the family. It certainly is among the Bella Coola, yet its lack of definite social obligations makes it difficult to define. Reduced to minimum size, the family consists of a man, his wife, or wives, and his children. Such a unit occupies one of the bedrooms of a large house, and it is to such a family that an infant automatically belongs at birth. Disregarding for the moment ceremonial obligations, which are shared by others, it is the father and mother who are responsible largely for the upbringing of the child. Such education as he receives comes from them, with the assistance of members of the ancestral family. This is chiefly imitative; a boy, as he increases in strength, follows his father on hunting expeditions or fishing. The mother teaches her daughters how to make baskets, and they follow her when she gathers berries, or when she cooks and performs household duties. The Bella Coola are fond of children, in many cases to the extent of over-indulging them, and they grow up amid the open life of the large houses, absorbing information of all kinds without being aware of so doing.

594 [851] 594 868 855 861

Only two kinds of functional training need be mentioned. A wise father carefully trains his sons to remember their debts (I, p. 369), and the method of teaching ancient myths has already been described; otherwise there is little direct instruction. On the other hand, parents devote great care to furnishing their children with every possible means of strengthening their supernatural elements on which success depends. These can

594 869

*Since the Bella Coola believe that totem-poles were used by their ancestors in early times, they are included in this description of a village, without reference to their development in post-European times. This account is compiled from descriptions given by elderly informants; it is inevitable, therefore, that changes due to European contact may be included. [177]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

622 there is such dread of the supernatural powers possessed by 623 members of the kusiut society that none would dare go there.
778 If an uninitiated person should do so, he would formerly have been either killed or initiated into the society. The meeting-[575] place of the Ḷomqo·ts chiefs is on a ledge of rock jutting out over a waterfall about a quarter of a mile from the village.
The stream winds down a narrow cleft of the mountain side, screened by dense vegetation, and suddenly falls into a cauldron, so hemmed in by cliffs that no sunlight can enter. The ledge is immediately above the brink of the falls, one of the most awe-inspiring places imaginable. The meeting-places of other villages lack such natural settings, though all are at the bases of cliffs, or near some easily distinguished feature. Some 178 of them are decorated with rude carvings, pecked into the 532 stone. The meaning of the designs is not known to any of 778 the present inhabitants. Some of them were made, long ago, by chiefs when they were composing tunes; they picked out
the rock in time to the music forming in their minds. Others [211] were mere memorials of certain events. If a chief gave an important ceremony, he, or one of his friends, carved a figure, perhaps that of a man, perhaps of some animal connected with the rite, to recall the occasion. No carvings have been made within the life-time of any Bella Coola, so it is probable that they had further significance, now unknown.

622 When a chief wishes to summon his fellows for a meeting 623 he visits each and notifies him by a simple pressure of the foot, in many cases unobserved even by those sitting near. The 201 person so called slips away, unostentatiously, to the meeting-place.

578 The position of chief was not without disadvantages in the old days. The Bella Coola are so jealous that anyone who 622 succeeded in elevating himself to a position above his fellows
682 became an object of envy. Their mythology contains many [152] examples of the murder of some powerful chief by rivals of his own village, and informants of today state that these records are true. One intelligent man asserted that his father had

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

which X has amassed. These have been collected in boxes near the fire where he, aided by members of his family, is constantly poring over the question of their proper distribution. One or two fluent chiefs have been chosen by X to act as speakers, and, as he tells them which gift is to be given to which man, the speaker holds up the article in question and announces the name of the recipient. It is also proclaimed from whom, and for what reason X has received each assortment of goods, thereby making known the names of those who have contributed. In this way a man is glorified who has repaid with large interest a debt owing to X. In the case of skins or rolls of cloth, the goods about to be given out are held outspread by several people at their full length, prior to being torn into strips. Each beneficiary accepts what is coming to him from the hands of the young men who act as deliverers without displaying either gratitude or disgust, whether or not the present comes up to his expectations. The point of view is that the matter concerns X alone; on his generosity depends his status in the community. 556*

The first gifts distributed are actually payments, though never referred to as such. The Bella Coola consider that X is under obligations to those who have helped him prepare for the potlatch and that he is discharging these obligations by presents. The carpenters who have made the new house, the totem-pole, and other objects used in the rites, must be rewarded, likewise the singers who have composed the songs, the messengers, the women wailers, the masked dancers, the announcers who even now are distributing the goods, the boys helping with the cooking, the guests who make speeches—one and all have to be compensated. It is an anxious time for X, as he must not overlook any of these functionaries. Paper and pencil are now used to assist the memory, but long ago the only aids were bundles of sticks. No system of symbolism was evolved, each man merely chose a stick and designated it in his mind as a reminder to pay such or such an individual. The 556* 465 [211]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Totem-Poles

A feature embodied in many ancestral myths is a description of the totem-pole[1] erected by a group of the first people, either according to a design given them by Ālquntäm, or in consequence of their experiences on this earth. It is the privilege of a chief descended from that group to erect such a pole, under the same restrictions as apply to the portrayal and use of other features belonging, not to him individually, but to the ancestral family as a whole. Totem-poles are also frequently erected to depict incidents connected with the ancestors of a chief, even if there is no mention of one in his ancestral myth. In either case, the setting-up is a source of pride to the chief; especially as it emphasizes the importance of his ancestors, and its display must be duly validated. Theoretically, this may be done at a gathering of less importance than a potlatch, but in practice it occurs at no other ceremony, since a chief wealthy enough to erect a pole naturally desires it to be seen by as many persons as possible. 211 556* 778 [773] [614]

Poverty limits the number of totem-poles, but is not sufficient to account for their relative rarity. It is a matter of pride for a chief in whose ancestral myth there is mention of a pole to erect one, but all myths do not include totem-poles. Consequently the absence of one before the door of the chief's house is not proof of the owner's poverty or lack of importance. This matter was investigated with great care, and all the older people reiterated that the number and size of their poles were never as great as among the northern tribes. [171]

When a chief is preparing for a potlatch, he allots, among other carpentry tasks, the construction of a totem-pole, if he is sufficiently wealthy to reward the artisan and to validate the erection in the customary manner. If a special design is embodied in the ancestral myth containing the name which he is about to assume, or to make strong, he indicates that design to the carpenter. In the story of Ālkwi (I, p. 312), for [532]

[1] Ālnalal, "Outside Post."

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 example, there is a description of his totem-pole with a ball
556 at the top, and beneath it an eagle's nest containing two fledg-
778 lings towards which a grizzly bear is endeavouring to climb.
532 This is the only known instance of a pole on which the different figures stand in definite relationship to one another. No explanation is offered beyond the statement that this was the form used by Ālkwi in the beginning of time. Another ancient [773] pole, used by one of the ancestral families of Sunxl, consists of a simple shaft surmounted by a sphere; this represents a mountain which enters into their ancestral myth as supporting the sky.

As with all features embodied in ancestral myths, a chief can use his own discretion in cases where he has a choice of [431] design. A totem-pole with specific figures is a common pre-[622] sent from a chief to his son-in-law, and it is a mark of respect
[606] for the latter to use and validate this at the first opportunity, in preference to one belonging to his own ancestral family. Since the pole erected at a potlatch may have no association with the ancestral name and myth of the donor, the underlying principle in all cases is that the value of the pole depends upon the quantity of gifts distributed to validate its erection. One man mentioned an instance in which he had become confused with regard to the proper design for the totem-pole connected with his ancestral myth, and had used one belonging to a second myth in association with a name from the first. Both were his property, the transaction was duly validated, and the matter passed off without question. It is possible that the [183] decay of custom which has followed the coming of the white man may have been partly responsible for this error, which was regarded as a somewhat stupid, though not improper mistake; yet it is clear that even when designs are remembered as portions of ancestral myths, they can be alienated from them and validated as isolated objects in the same manner as names and all other features of ancestral myths.

More often, the exact details of a pole are not included in the ancestral myth and a chief wishing to have one erected can

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

use his own discretion as to the design. At the top he always 211 places the bird or animal cloak in which his first ancestor, 556 traced patrilineally, came to this earth. Beneath this is the 778 cloak of his mother's first ancestor if it differs from his father's. 532
There are no fixed rules for other representations. Sometimes [773] a man wishes to display the cloaks of the first ancestors of his wife, or wives; more often, the designs are of creatures with which his own ancestors came in contact after reaching this earth.[4] One of the first settlers, Smaoan (I, p. 332), married a Bella Bella woman from whom he obtained a ceremony connected with a whale, an animal which has often been used on the totem-poles of his descendants. The lower figures on totem-poles often represent creatures from which a recent ancestor of the chief obtained supernatural assistance. Consequently, the number of designs which may be used is legion, and the order of portrayal is immaterial. Moreover, Bella Coola art is not sufficiently realistic for designs to be easily recognized, nor is there standard conventionalization of little used animals; so it follows that the designs on totem-poles are often unidentifiable.[5] This is of little consequence, since their value rests neither upon the artistic skill exhibited, nor even upon their significance in connection with the owner's ancestral myth, but upon the goods expended to validate the display.

All Bella Coola totem-poles are carved from the trunks of [824]
huge cedars, with the wood cut away so that the designs stand [184] out in high relief. The carvers are allowed great latitude both in choice of form and colouring, hence there is wide variation

[4]Ainaxamlaix is the term applied to animals with which ancestors came in contact, other than their cloaks. [825]

[5]This statement represents the layman's point of view, that is, of the Bella Coola who was not himself a carpenter-sculptor. It is probable that an expert would have greater facility in recognizing the conventionalized forms used by his [184] associates, although the whole pattern of Bella Coola culture was opposed to extreme standardization. Unfortunately, wood-carving, in fact art work of every [182] kind, had degenerated to such an extent that only one man with any recognized skill in that respect was still living when this study was made. He was both [115] unreliable and uncooperative, so that it was impossible even to collect examples of his work, still less to record his interpretations of the designs of masks or other objects carved by his predecessors.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 in the appearance of the poles. Sometimes one is erected at *556 the front door of the house with an opening at its base through 778 which all must pass to enter the house, or a pole may be solid
532 and stand on the opposite side of the sidewalk; the choice in [184] either case depending upon the usage recorded in the ancestral myth. Instead of a totem-pole, a chief may display his ancestral cloaks by means of paintings on the front wall of his house, or by carved house-posts supporting the longitudinal beams, if such had been used by his ancestors. Moreover, a chief entitled to display a totem-pole may choose to use only paintings. If he validates these by presents, they give him the same dignity and importance as a totem-pole, particularly if he cannot validate its construction by lavish gifts. Most Bella Coola poles are only about fifteen to twenty feet in height, and though
[171] it is possible that a few families had prerogatives entitling them to construct lofty poles, such as used by the Haida, it is unlikely that such were ever common.

When a chief who has erected a totem-pole before his house gives another potlatch, he may wish to put up a second pole beside the first. Occasionally two or three poles stand before the house of a chief, but one is more frequent or even none at [764] all. At death the pole is often taken to the cemetery where it acts as a memorial-post (I, p. 461). Otherwise it remains standing until some other occupant of the house wishes to erect another in its place, when the first is pulled down and neglected.

Coppers

*556 The Bella Coola use coppers for only two purposes: casting [769] on the ground upon which the representation of a deceased relative had trodden, or throwing into the fire when the figure has left the house. In either case, they are said to "make bone for the dead." Although used but rarely, the occasion when a copper is employed is so important that to obtain one and increase its value is a vital consideration for every chief.

[177] Most of the coppers now used by the Bella Coola are made [439]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

435 immediately before, or during the early stages of a potlatch, in *556 order to receive goods immediately, but with the proviso that it shall be returned to him for throwing into the fire. This [432] method has the advantage of providing the chief with goods [426] when required, and doubles the worth of the copper.

Coppers are not always rescued from the ashes and given to poor men. If one is still lying in the fire after several days, [764] the donor of the potlatch removes it and fastens it to the memorial-post over the grave of his deceased relative. It may be left there, or another chief wanting a copper may buy it from the donor and increase its value in the usual manner. Only a small price is paid in such circumstances, since the copper, having served its purpose, is practically valueless.

177 The Bella Coola state that in ancient times coppers were 435 worth less than at present, and that the change in sentiment regarding them is due to Kwakiutl influence. All agree that *556 the value placed upon them at Fort Rupert and Alert Bay is greater than elsewhere on the coast. The Bella Coola believe that the Kwakiutl distribute presents in respect to their coppers and that their values mount to enormous sums when the gifts are returned. It is clear that the importance of coppers, like the potlatch and other elements of culture, has increased in recent years through the influence of the coastal tribes.

*556 It is almost impossible to define coppers in the nomenclature of economic theory. They are not mere articles of barter, since they have no practical use outside the ceremonies of chiefs. Nor are they standardized units of trade or cur-[436] rency, since each differs not only from all other coppers, but also at different periods. In a sense they serve as tokens of [211] what has been expended; representations of them may be [532] carved and painted on totem-poles where they serve as marks of the goods which the chief has given away, but this is only [426] a minor consideration. A copper can perhaps best be described [435] as an investment which can be applied only to one purpose, "the making of bone for a deceased" person. It grows more valuable at every transmission in accordance with the goods ex-

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Bellabella NE5

BC
+539
BB
539

three times, and three mountain goats appeared, dead, on the ground before him. He took the fat from the stomach of a yearling and carried it to his father, who had settled some distance away, as proof that he had had success in his hunting; then returned to the place where he had been abandoned.

Next morning, stick in hand, he went to the edge of the forest where he stood looking away from the site of the settlement, as the supernatural being had instructed him, and prayed to Minakais for houses. After praying he looked around and found four large buildings standing on the spot; on the first sat an eagle, on the second a kingfisher, on the third a gull, and on the fourth an owl. The eagle screamed, as eagles are accustomed to do in the early morning, and at once the house on which it sat was filled with all manner of goods, including boxes containing the large cone-shaped whistles such as are used for sisaok ceremonials. During the day the kingfisher rattled, the gull called, the owl hooted; and as each uttered its cry the house on which it sat was filled with all kinds of goods, foods, skins, blankets, and household utensils. With the articles so acquired Ältkexa gave a potlatch to which he summoned the people from far and near. The whistles sounded, imitating the voices of the four birds which had sat on the dwellings and through the cries of which they had been filled. The Bella Bella chief, Wipitpawakäs, covered his head with his blanket because he had nothing to equal the display, so Ältkexa gave him a whistle with its box. All the guests were witnesses of the transaction, and it was in this way that the sisaok ceremonial reached Bella Bella.

Ältkexa lived to a great age, and during his lifetime moved to several places, in each of which he gave potlatches. His last stopping-place was Saxwlk, where he held his largest rite, erecting for the purpose a new house with six tiers of seats to hold the audience. It was there that he died.

BC
[556]
[211]

Whenever a descendant of Ältkexa gives a potlatch he erects outside his house a totem-pole on which are the four birds that brought good fortune to his ancestor.

AN ORIGIN MYTH OF Q̣wiyai[n]

In the beginning four brothers, Wadäks, Hamcs, Kälästak', 'Oqwolikdamut, and their sister Tlätkwakila, came to earth at Sea-lion Island, Spl'xnunsta, to the west of Namu. They moved to Q̣wiyai, but often returned to their landing-place to hunt sea-lions which they would club [n] Related by Mrs. Webber.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

poverty-stricken," say the elders. "If you do, you will become like them yourself." 867 [735]

As a boy grows older, his father insists that he wash, pray, and practise other ritual acts likely to win approval from supernatural beings. He is frequently beaten to inure him to hardship. By the time a youth is eleven or twelve years of age he has become fully acquainted with the principles of the potlatch system and a wise parent teaches him to remember debts. Taking his son to some quiet spot in the woods, he makes a small bundle of cedar twigs, for example, and tells him: 869 861 211 867

"So-and-so at Bella Bella gave you fifteen beaver skins. When you see this bundle you must think of those skins."

Then he takes another bunch, perhaps of spruce twigs, to represent a present from a Rivers Inlet chief. A bundle of nettle fibre may stand for a Kimsquit debt; one ornamented with a tuft of undyed cedar-bark, a gift from a Täl·io chief; a solid piece of alder stem, a local debt; another section of alder stem with a notch in it, another local debt, and so on. The son is expected to listen attentively, and to repeat after his father what each represents. Then the pupil turns his back and the instructor alters the positions of the bundles. His father tells him to look at them and repeat what each signifies. This is repeated time after time until a boy becomes familiar with remembering debts by means of symbols. In later years, if he becomes a chief, he will use this method for bearing his indebtedness in mind. No system of standardized signs has been evolved, each individual merely designates what he wishes by a mark which he alone can recognize.

A child grows up in the community, absorbing information and lore without conscious effort, learning the activities which he will later practise, fearing the supernatural beings that are dreaded by his parents, marvelling at the power of those endowed with supernatural ability, and generally fitting himself for the struggle of life. If his parents are wealthy, he may be fortunate enough to be given a nuaok name and to partake in 867 [556]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 18

211
764
532

Memorial figure and personal possessions on a grave

[p 442 (B)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 19

211
764
532

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Memorial posts showing crests of the deceased

[p442 (c)]

211
7L1
532

L:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 20

Photograph by H. I. Smith National Museum of Canada

Memorial figures of whale and loon

[P 142 (D)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 21

211
964
532
778

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Totem-pole serving as a memorial post

[p 442 (E)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

211
764
532

PLATE 22

Photograph by H. I. Smith, Federal Museum of Canada

Memorial post with wooden representations of coppers given away by the deceased

[p442(F)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211
764
532
417

PLATE II

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Memaloose point with conical cairns and figures representing slaves

[p 442 (G)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 24

342
532
556
211

Photograph by H. I. Smith, National Museum of Canada

Painted sign showing the wealth distributed at a potlatch. The animal figures above represent mountain goats.

[4 442 (H)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

prerogatives connected with the ceremony. The actual re- 556* counting of the myths may be done by a fluent speaker on 769 behalf of the bereaved man, and when he has finished speaking, [533] it is proper for several of his peers to make complimentary speeches, lauding the future donor for his intentions. Food is [537] then served and the gathering breaks up.

The preliminaries of a memorial potlatch do not differ from those of an ordinary one. There is the same counting and recounting of goods, the same giving and receiving of presents, the same lending and borrowing. When at last the donor is ready, the heralds call his fellow-villagers to his house for announcement of the arrangements and allotment of the work. As at a potlatch, food is provided on a lavish scale, and there is the same sham-fight with a battering-ram ending in the destruction of part of the house. Then the carpenters receive their instructions; some to make different sections of the new structure, some to paint ancestral designs on the front and back walls, and some to make the various objects required.

The first difference between a memorial and an ordinary 211 potlatch is apparent at this allotment of work. Instead of a 556* totem-pole to record the glories of the donor's ancestry,[22] car- 764 penters are requested to make memorial-posts for the dead 769 relative who is being commemorated. These are erected in the cemetery near the grave and are of three kinds, although it is unusual for all three to be set up for a single chief.

The first consists of a wooden post carved with the design of one or more of the deceased's crests (see Plates 19 and 20). [532]
These figures are usually representations of the bird or animal cloaks used by his first ancestors; it is customary to portray the one traced through the father on the right, that traced through the mother on the left. Instead of a cloak, the figure may portray the post down which swarmed his first ancestor in the beginning of time, or Mount Nusqalst in human form, wearing a broad-rimmed hat as he did before he turned to [22] Even the construction of a new house and the painting of new designs is often omitted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

211 stone and served as landing-place for some of the first settlers.
+556 In fact, any of the dead person's crests may be used according 764 to the wishes of the chief giving the memorial potlatch. A 769 figure displayed in this way cannot be used as the guise in which the dead relative returns, but as every individual has several crests, inability to use one does not make it difficult to carry out the rite. According to one well-informed old man, when a design has once been used in a cemetery it cannot again be shown by members of the ancestral family, having itself become "dead." Other informants flatly contradicted this statement, and it seems clear that the above is true only with regard to the use of the figure in connection with the return of the deceased. The erection of the figure serves to remind all beholders, especially foreign guests summoned to the memorial potlatch, of the ancestral myth of the deceased. It is, there-[778] fore, equivalent to a totem-pole erected during a man's lifetime, in fact, one of these is sometimes moved to the cemetery to serve as a memorial-post (see Plate 21). Instead of placing a representation of the crest in the cemetery, one is sometimes painted on broad boards and placed on some conspicuous promontory where all who pass by will see it and think of the person commemorated.

The second type of memorial consists of plain poles set upright in the cemetery, one for each major ceremony given by the deceased. Potlatches, memorial potlatches, and kukusiutek [609] (II, p. 29) are alone indicated in this way, these being the only ones to which foreign guests are invited. These poles suggest, in a general way, the greatness of the deceased.

The third type of memorial-post comprises representations of the goods given away by the deceased. These are usually [532] painted on boards attached to a post set up near the grave. On this are pictures of canoes, coppers, slaves, and other valuables distributed at potlatches or memorial potlatches (see Plate 22). Alternatively, there may be a series of small poles, each surmounted by a model canoe manned by miniature human figures, symbolic of a canoe and slaves given away

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(see Plate 23). So, too, wooden representations of coppers are often affixed to an upright post. Not only men are commemorated in this way, a father often places over his daughter's grave pictures of the goods used to rebuy her from her husband; wooden plaques representing coppers are commonly used for this purpose.[24] Such symbols are usually cut down after a year owing to a vague feeling that it is not proper for them to remain standing too long. The function of this type of memorial is to mark the social status of the dead person as judged by the riches given away by him, or on his behalf, during his life-time. With the introduction of writing, the Bella Coola have been quick to recognize it as an easy means for recording the wealth distributed by a chief. In consequence, signs are often painted and erected, giving in figures a statement of his financial transactions. Another recent introduction has been the tombstone. One of these is often set up with the name of the deceased carved on it to perpetuate his memory, and a representation of his crest to record his ancestral history. Such a memorial combines the functions of the first and third types.

As the carpenters labour at the memorials, other arrangements for the ceremony proceed apace. As at a potlatch, the fellow-villagers of the donor may be invited repeatedly to his house for the performance of susaok dances, but this feature is often omitted, especially if there are no neophytes to be initiated. The mask to be worn by the deceased relative must be prepared in secret; or if several are to be commemorated at the single ceremony, one must be made ready for each. As the time draws near, envoys are dispatched to invite foreign guests if it has been decided to have strangers present. This has been customary for many years, but during the period when no features of the potlatch were allowed at a memorial potlatch, the latter was sometimes carried out in the presence of the donor's fellow-villagers alone. The actual departure of the [24]The National Museum of Canada, at Ottawa, has specimens of these wooden coppers.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 556 departed. A few days later the same ritual was carried out 769 again, with a similar lavish distribution of food. This was often done at intervals of two or three days for several weeks, depending on how much food the donor was prepared to use. The amount required was so great that the rite was considered, in some ways, more difficult than a potlatch.

[178] As already mentioned, however, it became customary in the last century to incorporate features of the ordinary potlatch into one of a memorial nature. In such cases the first [533] singing of the mourning songs with display of marks by the professional mourners is as just recorded, but there is no recalling of the guests merely to listen once more to the songs. Instead, the ritual differs but slightly from that of an ordinary potlatch as already described (I, p. 182). An occasion is found to conduct the guests to the memorial-posts erected, and to in-
[178] form them of the significance of the designs depicted. This same practice has been continued since the introduction of tombstones, and the meaning of the writing upon them is interpreted. The entry of the deceased in the form of his crest, and the subsequent use of a copper, is the same as already recorded. This is frequently followed by the singing of a susaok mourning [533] song if one of the near relatives owns this prerogative of foreign origin. If so, he walks slowly around the fire in a wide circle, shaking his rattle, and singing, unaccompanied. Most, if not all [177] of these songs, are in the Bella Bella language and the right to [425] use one has in every case been obtained through intermarriage with a member of that tribe. At intervals, heralds call out:

"Listen to the chief's lament."[27]

When presents are distributed to validate the whole ceremony, mention is always made of the different features for which they are given. As at a potlatch, the most important is the return of the dead, but at a memorial potlatch another [211] essential is the display of the memorial-posts. These have been [764] carved, painted, and set up, but are worthless unless validated

[27] There is no reason why this should not take place at a potlatch, but no instance of its performance was noted.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 *
769
[211]
[764]

by presents, and the greater the number of these, the greater the value of the memorial. Nothing need be added concerning this point, or other rites, to the detailed description given in vol. I, chap. IV.

Psychologically, the memorial potlatch is of tremendous importance. There may be a vague feeling that the ritual is of actual assistance to the deceased since grease burnt at it reaches him, and is of service to him, but such a belief is no more than an intangible sentiment of no weight in the lives of the people. Quite otherwise is its effect on the survivors, especially on the donor. A memorial potlatch is considered the fitting tribute of respect to a chief, and if none of his near relatives should hold one, they would brand themselves as unmindful of the fame of their dead kinsman. In recent years the white man's law has prohibited the potlatch, but chiefs have often preferred to go to jail rather than to forgo this form of memorial. The reason for this cannot be explained better than in the words of an old man whose only daughter, a "Chieftainess," died in 1922. He determined to hold a memorial potlatch and expressed himself to the writer, as follows: [648]

"If I should fail to do what is right under the circumstances, to do what my ancestors would have done, my heart would be dead, dead as my daughter. But if I call the people, if we sing mourning songs for my child, I will be able to bear my grief. I shall have done what is right, and will be able to hold up my head with anyone, knowing that the rites have been performed for my child which are due her as a chief. If I allow her to be neglected, I would be ashamed and miserable. Jim [another "chief"] warned me when I first told him of my intention that the law forbade such ceremonies. I cannot help that. If I am sent to jail, to jail shall I go. I would rather have that happen than that my daughter should not receive fitting treatment as a chief."

In this case, though only abbreviated rites were carried out, their performance unquestionably lessened the father's grief, a fact observed on several occasions. Not only does it comfort

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Stomach-Cutting Dance]

be slaughtered before one is found with skin to match.[47] The marshals carefully supervise all these arrangements, but of course on this night the work alone is allotted. The entrails of several dogs are kept and worn by X between his false stomach and the wooden frame. 575* 796* [281]

After the allotment of tasks in connection with the mechanical work required, the marshals ask four women to come forward. Those selected are usually old people with good voices who, from long experience at the dances, have mastered the two[48] songs used at each kusiotem dance. The theme of these never varies and is believed to have been handed down from the distant past. No prerogative is attached; the marshals and singers merely choose four women whom they think will be good performers. The songs resemble those sung at mourning ceremonies; in fact, they are used with that significance when X has been "killed" by disembowelling. The singers, the women chosen, the marshals, and any other kukusiut who feel competent to do so, discuss in an animated manner the exact wording and tunes of the songs. Then the musicians beat out the time and the women sing one after another, while the audience drones. In view of the solemnity of the occasion, it often happens that senior singers from adjacent villages are invited to be present to render assistance. The necessity for practising X's songs, apportioning the carpentry, and rehearsing the mourning songs has taken up more time than is usual on a nusiutälsap night, and it is late before all is completed. Then, after the usual meal and admonishments, the people disperse. 575* 796* 533

Early the following morning the carpenters and those to whom work has been allotted gather early in X's house. A band, about two feet long, composed of alternate strands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark is prepared and placed on the 575* 796* 211●

[47] Informants offered no explanation as to why this wholesale slaughter of dogs failed to arouse curiosity and suspicion in the uninitiated. [781]

[48] Or four; there was difference of opinion among Bella Coola informants on this point.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 outside of the house above the central doorway. The middle *796 of the strip is pressed together so that it forms a projecting point, some four inches in length. This sign is a warning to [217] the uninitiated that the kukusiut are working within, and none but a member of the society must enter or even pass on the sidewalk outside the door.[69] The central fire is moved forward to leave a larger space than usual between it and the back-room, and two mattings are raised to form two enclosures, one in each of the rear corners.

All day the carpenters work feverishly, and in the evening the kukusiut are once again summoned. When last performed, the rite on qothm was curtailed, and informants could give only an outline of the proper procedure. It appears that X's two [533] songs are practised, as well as the two mourning songs sung by the chosen women. Then all sit silent as if in grief, while the women occasionally utter mournful ejaculations, dreading the danger to which X will be exposed. At this juncture the uninitiated are summoned; they are impressed by the gravity and obvious fears shown even by the members of the powerful kusiut society. In the tense silence, one of the änuyex suddenly bursts forth:

"I will get my puppet-patron and bring him near so that he will be available tomorrow."

He reaches up his arms and makes the motions of drawing something towards him from above, while the kukusiut women drone and the singers and others provided with sticks keep up a clamorous beating on the floor. Presently another änuyex does likewise, and so on until as many as wish to do so have drawn down their puppet-patrons. The heralds maintain a running fire of comments to aid in impressing non-members. The customary lengthy dancing of qothm is omitted, and the uninitiated are expelled at once. The kukusiut have the usual [532] [69] If it is necessary to make numerous puppets this band may be placed in position the previous evening and the carpenters start work a day earlier on the more important tasks.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

mixmixɬulp: Leaf of salalberry.
mla·wadjut: 1—Omen of misfortune, such as preceded the outbreak of smallpox, hence, [824]
2—Smallpox. [787]
mlka: Type of sea-going canoe with raised prow and small stern.
mna, vocative, mnao: Child. [601]
Mnakais: Supreme god when addressed in prayer.
mnk': Excreta.
mnmnts, vocative, mnmnicăn·i: Ancestral family, practically equivalent to children when used by an old person. [614]
mnskănmaxta: The commemoration of a chief's potlatches and other major ceremonies by means of plain posts erected near his grave. [211]
Mntlato·smm, Tide-Measurer: A supernatural being. [764]
Mstulos: Man mentioned in a song.
Mtlakila: Supernatural being who gives potency to sisaok rites.
mthtsta: Grandiloquent expression used by the kukusiut with reference to the way in which supernatural beings govern the length of human lives. [776]* mtlăhsăm: 1—The condition of being within range of speech and vision. The term is used to describe relations formerly existing between the dead and the living. [775]
2—To visit, term used with reference to the coming of a masked representation of a dead person; the significance is similar to that expressed in the first meaning.
mok': Pounded, dyed cedar-bark used to decorate ceremonial objects.
mokwuks: Head-ring of cedar-bark worn by kusiut initiates in the upper Bella Coola valley.
moqla: Lice.
moqwila: Adolescent youth. [825]
moxmoxk': Blue grouse.
moxmoxliokkănda: Dentalium-shell ear-rings worn by adolescent girls during seclusion. [301] mu: Hand net for catching olachen. [227] mudcămkuksta: Yellow cedar stave decorated with swan feathers such as is carried by a Mystery dancer.
mustmux: Wrestling.
Mutan·a: Rivers Inlet man living in the last century.

N

Nain'akwas: One of the first men to settle at Smith Inlet in the beginning of time.
Nă'mu: Bella Bella village; the Anglicized form is Namu.
năn·: Grizzly bear. [825]
Nănăntlis: Name received from Grizzly Bear by a Kimsquit man in the beginning of time.
Nănăll: Kusiut name of a Nuxɬalst man.
Nănătskwi: One of the first men to settle at Stmx in the beginning of time.
Nănalskwitl: One of the names of Mount Nuxɬalst as chief.
năn·imnt: Non-ceremonial weeping, usually individual, and always with real feeling. [827]
Naos: Indeterminate locality in the distant east. [15.2]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

qanta, "Bed Covering": Term applied to the presents given as such to the party of a bridegroom when they enter the bride's house on a wedding day. [525] qhamdjut, "A Shaking of the Fingers": Rhetorical allusion to presents regarded as "Dust." [431] qpaulitmum: To revolve sunwise. [195]
Qpaqpaulitmamlaix, "The One Who Revolves Sunwise to Give Strength": One of Thitsplitsu-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Qhufulx: Place of petrified power near Kwatna. [778] Qsmon: Village on the Skeena River. qoiout: Supernatural creature resembling a diminutive human being. [825] qubat: Salmon liver.
quks: Co-wife in a polygynous household. [595] quluus, vocative, qulusis: Wife's brother, or sister's husband, man speaking.
qulxmaix: Gathering of the supernatural beings for the performance of dances in the land above. [601] qume: Unidentified salt water fish, said to be called "Lard-fish" by white men. [825] Qunqumum ul di dä Sqem, "The Unlooser of Light": One of Raven's names as chief.
qupstämm: 1—The ability of a chief to sit down ceremonially in virtue of the goods distributed for his seat, the ground over which he walks, and other requirements.
2—The initial establishment of a youth as chief.
quputsälets: Stone axe. [412]
qus: Period of engagement.
Qushila: Qunqo-ts man.
Qusi-lilx: 1—One of Raven's names as chief.
2—Kastut name of a Bella Coola man.
Qusiutsamlaix: Stuax man mentioned in an ancient story.
Qusiwastu-i: Shaman's name of a Stuax woman.
Qusiwus, "Begrimed": Name of a copper often cast into fire.
qualts: Unidentified (and probably mythical) type of lizard, allegedly about four feet long, found near Dean Channel. [825] qualsm, vocative, qualsu; plural, älqualsu: Eldest brother or sister. [601] Qus'hums: Name, in the Bella Bella language, given to a wooden woman made by one of the first settlers in the beginning of time.
qualilx: Gull. [825]
qual'mu'hs, "Eldest": Term of respectful address to Porcupine as senior of all animals.
Qualmalelin, "The Mover": Name given to their house by one of the first groups of settlers at Tälio in the beginning of time.
Qualna: Term from which the Anglicized "Kwatna" is derived: Generic name for the villages at Kwatna Harbour, Burke Channel. [103]*
Qualnaus'hs: Chief living on the upper Tsowat in the beginning of time.
quanä-uxta: Large box used for boiling olachen. [415]
Quaqa: Village south-west of the head of South Bentinck Arm.
Quaqmaii: Place on Schooner Pass.
Quaqmaxilla: Stuax name of a Bella Coola man.
quathachum: Marks made to commemorate an event, such as carvings at chiefs' meeting-place, virtually a memorial. [211]● quathuxum: Figure representing crest.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

sluxqaliku': Goods collected by the relatives of a man when working on his commission as carpenter or other artisan in preparation for a potlatch.
Stē·tsxom: A short-legged person who tries to cross a river; name of a string figure.
stcuq": That part of a house on either side of the central fire.
Stcitoma: 1—Sleep, a supernatural being. [573]
2—Sleep, intangible kusiut prerogative.
stciusnăm: Presents given to the one who leads a bride to her husband during a wedding. [585] Stcqwastlustkwi, "Dark-Shade": A supernatural being. [431] ste·ptl: Shadow.
stetqwmas: Hammer, archaic. [412]
stekas: Brother-in-law or sister-in-law.
sliatmalqs: Shaman's stick with power of life at one end and death at the other. [601] stilwu: Bloody grease that rises to the surface of the water when a seal is cooked.
stip: That on which a chief sits, that is, his ceremonial prestige gained by the distribution of much wealth. [283] shlkx: 1—Caribou hide.
2—Thong made of caribou hide. [825] shxom: Chequer-work cedar-bark matting. [285] sitaxkt: Caribou.
sihms: Love charm consisting of hair of the one desired mixed with other ingredients. [832] Sihmsila: Supernatural being who causes nightmares. [828] sihmstā or sihmstānalos: Mortals, in contradistinction to supernatural beings.
sihmstaliktsta: Body.
sihmstanalosăm: Assumption of human characteristics by mankind in the beginning of time.
Stixwaxwakniman·a: Professional name of a female berry-picker.
Stixwaxwakanam: Professional female berry-picker. [825] siska: Mountain goat grease. [824] siskalaya: Castor.
Siskiut, "What Has Been Divided": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
Slakla: Son of the first settlers at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
sismas: Octopus. [825]
Sloaklas: One of Raven's female Crow relatives.
sloquasma: Red rock paint. [386]
slsla: Singer's baton. slsulk: Text.
slla·qaxs: Part of a river where there are rapids and projecting stones. [823] stuin: 1—Memorial-post, decorated with crest, erected near grave. [211]
2—Plain posts erected near grave to indicate major ceremonies performed by the deceased. [764]
Stuxs: 1—Village in the upper Bella Coola valley.
2—Famous hunter mentioned in an ancient story. [262] stutum: Dried dog salmon soaked in water.
stutusaiks: Masked representation of a dead person in crest form.
Sly', "Rainwater-Dripping-through-the-Roof": A supernatural being.
sukwalt: Black raspberry. [824] sulstu: Ocean.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

not returnable by X to his wife's family. A question on this point was regarded as highly amusing. If used for investment-gifts, the presents received in return are given to X, not to his wife's relations. 556* 583

A speaker, acting on instructions from the brother or other member of X's wife's family, also announces what names, portions of myth-prerogatives, or other privileges she is bestowing on her husband. After that the people disperse, although they are free to re-enter the house, where, during the afternoon, arrangements are being made for the elaborate ceremonial which takes place that night. 556*

Towards dusk the guests reassemble and take their places as before. Part of the goods which X proposes to give away has been brought in, and, aided by members of his family, he busies himself recounting and making final plans for its distribution. As the Bella Coola have no system of writing, accurate division of goods at a potlatch causes considerable difficulty and worry to the donor. A slighted guest will feel aggrieved, and the sacred nature of the rite will have been subjected to insult if arrangements are not satisfactory. The first business is the settlement of debts by X to the members of his own village. He may perhaps have borrowed fifty blankets ten years previously from a certain individual whom he now intends to repay, with foreign guests as witnesses to the transaction. X always endeavours to reimburse with as large a premium as possible, because by so doing he displays his nobility of mind to the assemblage; but if he can restore only the amount borrowed, or the same with a small increase, there will be no trouble such as might occur should he fail to return at least the principal. When the debt has been settled with interest the matter is at an end, for there is no compulsion upon the man who receives the additional sum to repay this with interest in his turn. The amount previously lent, and the occasion, are always publicly announced, so that all are made aware of his generosity with regard to interest. [212] [578] 426 556*

In Kimsquit it was customary at this stage of the proceed- 556* 184

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

(see Plate 23). So, too, wooden representations of coppers are often affixed to an upright post. Not only men are commemorated in this way, a father often places over his daughter's grave pictures of the goods used to rebuy her from her husband; wooden plaques representing coppers are commonly used for this purpose.[24] Such symbols are usually cut down after a year owing to a vague feeling that it is not proper for them to remain standing too long. The function of this type of memorial is to mark the social status of the dead person as judged by the riches given away by him, or on his behalf, during his life-time. With the introduction of writing, the Bella Coola have been quick to recognize it as an easy means for recording the wealth distributed by a chief. In consequence, signs are often painted and erected, giving in figures a statement of his financial transactions. Another recent introduction has been the tombstone. One of these is often set up with the name of the deceased carved on it to perpetuate his memory, and a representation of his crest to record his ancestral history. Such a memorial combines the functions of the first and third types.

211 556 * 764 769 [532] [177] [212] [532]

As the carpenters labour at the memorials, other arrangements for the ceremony proceed apace. As at a potlatch, the fellow-villagers of the donor may be invited repeatedly to his house for the performance of sisaok dances, but this feature is often omitted, especially if there are no neophytes to be initiated. The mask to be worn by the deceased relative must be prepared in secret; or if several are to be commemorated at the single ceremony, one must be made ready for each. As the time draws near, envoys are dispatched to invite foreign guests if it has been decided to have strangers present. This has been customary for many years, but during the period when no features of the potlatch were allowed at a memorial potlatch, the latter was sometimes carried out in the presence of the donor's fellow-villagers alone. The actual departure of the 556 * 769 [575] [203] [609]

[24]The National Museum of Canada, at Ottawa, has specimens of these wooden coppers.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to the aesthetic, their skill in dancing and dramatics is note- 105 worthy: no one who has witnessed a native dance can fail to [535] have been impressed by the performance of the participants and the stage-craft of the carpenters. The fact that no system [538] of writing had ever been devised has prevented the establish- [212]
ment of a native literature, but the practice of passing down [153] an extensive folklore by word of mouth shows their narrative powers as well as their faculty for remembering details. At present it is difficult to appreciate what must have been their energy in earlier times when they faced the struggle for existence, armed with stone tools. Abundant salmon gave them [226] adequate food, but only when weirs had been built with great labour. Though game was plentiful, the hunter was equipped [224] with nothing more formidable than a bow and arrow. The simplest task required patience and skill undreamed of by the average white man. If the reader will allow his imagination to carry him backwards two hundred years, he will realize that the mere provision of food and clothing necessitated constant effort and ceaseless exertion.

Hand in hand with many admirable characteristics, the 356
Bella Coola display others which strike the white man as unprepossessing. A first impression is the untidiness of their houses. Exteriorly, they are often fairly neat, but confusion reigns within. Clothing, instead of being hung up, is left lying on the floor; bed-coverings are piled carelessly; dirty dishes cover the tables; dogs and children swarm over the floor; flies abound; all is dirty and slovenly. The house itself may be uncompleted; a window lacks glass and has been boarded up;
the roof leaks, or the steps are falling down. Nor are the surroundings more attractive. There is one struggling flower- [247] bed in the village, but elsewhere the houses are surrounded by [351] wastes of mud where horses and cattle wander, dogs prowl, and [231] children play. In the distance the mountain peaks rise in splendour, but near at hand all is squalid and unkempt.

They are only slightly more particular about their personal 515 appearance. Dirt does not distress them. They wash occa-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Indians from both of these areas were interviewed and it was found that, except for minor details in certain beliefs, their customs were identical with those of the Bella Coola proper. Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bella Coola" will be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of that valley, but of South Bentinck Arm and the head of Dean Channel. Those living on South Bentinck Arm will be referred to as Tāl·io people, the Bella Coola term for them; those of Dean Channel as Kimsquit, the name by which they are generally known. It is an anglicized form of the word Kimgkwit, meaning "Canyon," by which the Bella Bella designate the people of Dean River. 101 619

VILLAGES ON SOUTH BENTINCK ARM

(28) Sātlia: on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junction with North Bentinck Arm. Food was obtained from an ocean fish-trap.[11] Long deserted except as a summer camp. 361 [226]

(29) Qankilst, "Island": east side of South Bentinck Arm, slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Springs on the west side of the fiord. The town took its name from this island. In summer the numerous inhabitants lived immediately opposite it, at a place where they had an ocean salmon-trap; in winter they moved to a fortified spot at the base of a mountain slightly farther to the north. This village was blotted out by a landslide one spring long ago, and the few survivors were unable to re-establish it. [133] [226] [221] [731]

*(30)[12] Tsaoltmem: on the east side of the fiord about four miles above the last-named. A small town, whose inhabitants lived on the catch from their ocean fish-trap; it was recently deserted. [226]

[11]Ocean fish-traps work as follows:—A pen is made by a series of stakes, into which the salmon enter at high tide. It is then closed and, as the falling tide lays bare the mud, the imprisoned fish can be scooped out by hand or in hand-nets.

[12]Mackenzie did not visit either South Bentinck Arm, or Kimsquit, but it will be convenient to continue the use of asterisks to mark those towns which are said to have been inhabited at that time. [175]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

533 of each song dances to it. Anyone who has enough food to 535 provide a meal for all is glad to invite his neighbours to such 574 an affair, but the singers and heralds can force a stingy man to act as host. Everyone knows his neighbour's resources and the singers have no hesitation in going to the house of a man with an ample supply of food and beginning to beat out songs [203] there. The heralds are quick to see what is happening and [626] call the people, with the result that the involuntary host is compelled to provide a meal in order not to be thought mean and churlish. Without waiting for the singers to take the [203] initiative, heralds likewise often invite people to the house of a man whom they know to be well provided with food.

During the summer, the necessity of living in camps of 221 salmon makes it impossible to hold many dances, although one 796 of the non-sacred type just described takes place whenever there is a lull in the fishing. In the early autumn, when ber-
556 ries, fish, and game are abundant, the thoughts of chiefs turn 796 to potlatches and the lengthy preliminaries are begun. At this season, too, a chief who lacks sufficient wealth to invite foreign [221] guests, calls in his neighbours for a nuxnt dance and initiates
[575] some of his young relatives into that society. The ritual, [535] described in the last chapter, resembles that of a potlatch except that no new house is constructed, there is no return of a dead relative, and the ceremonial connected with the coming of foreigners is necessarily omitted. In some cases a chief performs this type of rite a year before he proposes to hold a potlatch, and explains that he is doing so because he will be unable to give presents to the inhabitants of his own village [426] at the later affair. Gifts so distributed are returnable with interest, though it is not obligatory for recipients to do this in time for the donor to make use of their repayment at his potlatch.

Ceremonials of this nature occupy the Bella Coola during the early autumn, while in winter kwist dances take place [575] almost nightly. When they are over, it is time for the non-[535] sacred variety of a'alt performances, and for another type of rite, nusāxkāmx.

APPENDIX A

MECHANICAL PROCESSES

NO attempt was made to study either the material culture of the Bella Coola, or their methods of manufacturing, but information on some points was obtained incidentally. All sociological and religious features connected therewith have already been described. 121

THE TAKING AND PREPARATION OF OLACHEN

The run of olachen, eulachon, comes about the end of April, and as many as possible are caught. In preparation, nets, ale'x^u, are brought out from the house where they have been stored during the winter, examined and repaired. If necessary, new ones must be manufactured out of nettle (lone) fibre laid away by the women for this purpose. By rolling [illegible] are then interwoven, making a finished cord capable of resisting great strain. The nets are constructed by the men. The type used at the present time, which is said not to differ from that formerly employed, consists of a purse-like sack, oval in cross-section, open at the wider end and tapering very gradually to the other, which is closed. The total length is about thirty feet, the diameter at the open end about eight feet, and at the closed end about three feet. A new net is dipped in a mixture of boiled hemlock-bark to darken it, and then boiled in a solution of willow-bark to prevent the knots from slipping. 227 226 221 [illegible] 462 286 386

The setting out of a net is not an easy task, as two or three men agree to work as partners. In the present depressed days, property rights are not respected and each group selects a suitable spot. The best location is where the water is about three feet deep and runs rapidly, but without ripples, over a smooth piece of the bottom; such a place is called a ckilip. When the fish begin to run plentifully, the partners paddle out to set their net, taking with them four poles, each about ten feet in length. The weight of a full net is tremendous, so the poles have to be driven down at least six feet, a difficult task on account of the stony bottom. Selecting the exact spot, one of four posts, ckilpiles, is set upright and held in position by being tied to a cross-piece, ewdiqwm, fastened to the canoe for the purpose. While his two partners hold the craft steady, the third man begins to pound down the stake, metal mauls are now commonly used, but in former times this work was always done with an unhafted stone maul, lowama. The fishermen relieve one another intermittently until the top of the pole has been driven down to within 224 496 429 178 412

Z: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

301 of the older people remember seeing in their youth another type, ikun, with a high raised prow; this may have been identical with the mika which others describe as having an elevated bow and a low stern. An entirely different craft was the tsuhnu'i, named from one of the geese, [125] probably the white-fronted goose. A strip of maple fastened along each side caught the water in moving, with a sound like that of the peculiar cooing flight of the bird. The bow was often carved in the form of a [532] bird's head and the stern in that of a tail to further the resemblance. No living Bella Coola claims to have seen one of these canoes, though some had heard of them from their grandparents. The large, open type of canoe made by the Haida was known to the Bella Coola, but not constructed by them. Sails were used on all ocean-going canoes; they were usually of matting, though skins sewn together were occasionally employed.

501 Canoes are occasionally lashed together. In several kwiat dances a [illegible] 535 planks crossing over two canoes, near the bow and stern, thus fastening them together. Planking is laid on the two supports and a platform so constructed. Careful inquiries showed that this fastening was merely a temporary arrangement; the booms were not bound in any particular manner, nor was there any fixed distance between the craft. Sometimes 501 the same expedient was used for transport when the load was too heavy [171] for two canoes separately, a device which is said to have been used more commonly by the tribes of the outer coast than the Bella Coola. Canoes lashed together are termed ts'awnia.

Rafts, tsuhnu'a, consisting of rough logs fastened together with cross-pieces, were commonly used on the lakes of the interior, and occasionally for river work when canoes were unavailable and there was no time to make them. Another expedient in similar emergencies was to [177] make bark canoes, such as are still constructed by the Carriers. The Bella Coola regard the construction of these as definite copying, and do not profess to have as much skill as their teachers whose canoes, it is said, can be folded for portaging. There is a tradition that, many generations ago, a few clever Bella Coola knew how to make skin canoes.

THE PREPARATION OF CEDAR-BARK

314 Early spring is the time to cuculmuh, that is, to gather the inner bark [221] of the cedar. Men occasionally assist in the task, though this is really [462] woman's work. The worker selects a small cedar, choosing one about [412] six inches in diameter, with smooth trunk and relatively free from knots. With a knife she makes a horizontal incision in the bark, two or three feet from the ground, sometimes girdling the sapling. Then she inserts her

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

sion by repeating loudly a few words, or even phrases, from the speeches being delivered, or calling on the audience to notice what has just been said and to listen attentively. A white man would be annoyed at such interruptions, but the Bella Coola consider them evidences of attentiveness. 203 556*

The making of comments is a duty performed at every type of ceremony, but it is indispensable at potlatches; since a chief depends on the heralds to emphasize and explain the points of his family history which are being displayed. One intelligent man likened their functions to a compass, constantly guiding the course of ceremonial life. Without a herald a chief would be as useless as a ship tossed on the ocean with no hand to steer. Although the principal duty of heralds is to extol the actions of a chief, they can, and are expected to, deride one who fails to carry out the customary requirements. Cases have occurred in which influential men have so far forgotten their function of generosity as to fail to invite their fellows after killing a deer or other large animal; or women have declined to share their abundant berries. Nothing is said at the time, but when next the people have come together for some ceremony, a herald refers to the omission under so slim a disguise that everyone is aware of his meaning. This public ridicule lowers the prestige of a chief to such an extent that he is careful not to offend again. Not many years ago, a certain Kimsquit chief failed to ask others to share some mountain goats which he had killed; at the first opportunity a herald referred to himself as Yaki, Mountain Goat, and all present realized that he was really alluding to the one who had been remiss. 203 556* 558 626 [224] [222]

Heralds must exercise care in their witticisms at the expense of chiefs because, unless public opinion is with them, the point of the remark is lost, and they expose themselves to the wrath of the person offended. Nevertheless, heralds always strive to cause merriment, and often take risks with this aim in view. They try to make humorous remarks, and also to cause amusement by their antics. As already described, the donor of a potlatch may throw to one of them a dish containing liquid food 203 522 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

quit. Details of this prerogative were not obtainable, but it seems to follow the general type. 424 767 463

THE PROFESSION OF FIRST BERRY PICKER

All women can pick berries, but in every village there is at least one who has the prerogative of picking the first of every kind. The origin of this right is lost in dim antiquity, but, like all others, each first berry picker has a special professional name embodied in her ancestral myth which must be duly validated before she can function. One of these is Stlxwaxwak-nimdn-a, another is Ło'yə. Though normally reserved for women, one of these names is occasionally given to a male child, in which case it is said to have been hermaphroditized. No one would dare to pick berries until the legal picker has paraded up and down the sidewalk carrying on her back her picking basket decorated with a representation of the sun, an act which is believed to ripen the berries. 222 424 [463] [551] [562] [532] [789]

"Get ready to pick red elderberries [or whatever species is ripe] tomorrow," she keeps calling out.

The berries may then be picked by anyone. This is repeated for every variety. As far as could be learnt, there was no social mechanism to punish a woman who picked berries before the announcement of the official picker; obedience seems to have been so universal that infractions are said to have been unknown though formerly there may have been some penalty of which even the memory has disappeared. [688] [183]

THE PROFESSION OF WARRIOR

The profession of warrior is another prerogative handed down from the distant past and requiring validation before it can be used. As with other rights of this type, magical means are in many cases employed to make any young man brave and successful, but there are a number of warriors confirmed as such by the distribution of presents at the time of bestowal on them of professional names. At the present time, it is 701 [424] [463] [431] [551]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the front-door facing the river, but has to leave the house 784 through the trap beneath the enclosure where she sleeps. The 881 Bella Coola consider it unthinkable for a girl to disregard these prohibitions, but if this should happen, she would be chased home by her parents, by the Guardian of the River, or, in fact, by any elderly member of the community. The strongest [761] reason for respecting these regulations is the belief that disobedience brings death; no one knows how it is inflicted, but a careless girl soon dies. During this period she cannot eat [262] fresh salmon, though she is allowed them if they have been smoked for four or five days. Her scanty meals are brought to her in the enclosure where she is virtually a prisoner. It is true [783] that she can leave it and wander in the woods, but her comrades avoid her as being in an unclean condition of which they are afraid, and she is barred from taking part in all activities by the river which constitute so large a part of the life of the Bella Coola. A girl cannot pick berries during this time, as no [222] more would grow in the valley which she had thus defiled; she must not touch anyone, nor allow anyone to touch her; she [573] must not pass in front of a man; she must go to bed before everyone else in the house, and be the last to arise. The danger [867] of breaking some taboo is so great that it is safer for a girl to remain within her enclosure where her mother, and other old women, gather to tell her the many things which it is fitting for an adult woman to know. This seclusion is not pleasant, but it unquestionably serves to emphasize the importance of married life to which it is a prelude. The writer remembers an occasion when a Bella Coola family was eating tasty fresh salmon while one of the daughters, who had recently reached adolescence, watched enviously. Her grandfather rose and gave the child an orange, remarking that in his youth little girls did not receive such dainties to ameliorate their lot.

Adolescent girls wear certain distinctive articles of clothing 881 and ornaments. The most noticeable is a skull-cap bound [292] with grass; this is the only time in a woman's life that a hat is [301] worn. She also wears ear-rings, each consisting of a neat [439]
1 [ie - one year after puberty - ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*192

[824] kak'telp: Tree, probably birch.
Kalasdak': One of the first men to settle at Q̓wiyai in the beginning of time.
Kaliaks: One of the first men to settle at Snulsli in the beginning of time.
Kalkum: Bella Bella woman mentioned in an ancient story.
Kalotl: Kimsquit man.
[222] Kalqam: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
[262] kalqam: The gathering of fern root for food.
Kalqsmakmm: Name conferred on their sister by the first settlers at Stuix in the beginning of time.
Ka'lan·a: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
[585] kalumbilumsta: Public oration, previous to marriage, of the bride's ancestral myths in order to cause children to be born.
[842] kalqwem: Ritual on the day before a marriage, including the oration of myths by the bride's relatives, the choosing of assistants, and the singing of songs of all kinds.
[576] Kamai·ts: 1—Mysterious supernatural woman.
2—"Please," or "Thank You," a word implying benison.
*Kamalsong*w*:* 1—One of the first men to settle at Nulkax in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Nuxalst in the beginning of time.
3—Name of the first sky that fell in the beginning of time.
Kamalalkl: Lazy supernatural beings who accompanied Nodkymm.
Kamalqwax: Man mentioned in an origin myth of Alqalaxl.
Kamatslaks: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man.
*Kamatsong*w*:* House brought to earth by first settlers at Nuxalst in the beginning of time.
[824] kamk': Kelp.
[227] kamola: Cod hook.
kamut: Termination.
[824] kanan·i: 1—Shelf fungus.
2—Kusiut dance in which a shelf fungus is used.
Kanilkas: One of the first women to settle at Stuix in the beginning of time.
kan·imut: Ceremonial error.
Kanxia: Herald of a Tal·ia chief in the beginning of time.
kankos: Trap.
Kannslaliam: 1—Daughter of the first settlers at Satlia in the beginning of time.
2—Daughter of Ojs[illegible] one of the first settlers in the upper Bella Coola valley in the [illegible]eginning of time.
[264] kaolikta: Assemblage of the people for a meal of any kind.
Kaospoklamm: One of the first men to settle at Rivers Inlet in the beginning of time.
Kaowikudjan·a: Supernatural berry-picker resident in the land of ghosts.
[825] kapai: 1—Hump-back salmon.
2—Convex transverse beam near front and rear of house.
3—Mountain on the Dean River.
Kaqeix: Suaok name of a Kimsquit man.
Kasana: Man mentioned in an ancient story of Raven.
[756] kasiut: The seeking for shaman's power by a lad.
[825] kasmia: Golden eagle.
kathm: Top, toy.
[524]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 tains. From each pocket between these mountains an ice-cold affluent comes swirling down to the main river. The 137 predominant tree in the river valleys is the cedar[4] which in many cases attains great girth and height. Cottonwoods flourish in places, and everywhere there is an almost impenetrable undergrowth of devil's club, berry bushes, and other shrubbery of almost tropical density. On the lower slopes of the mountains, moss-festooned pines and spruces are the most common trees, gradually becoming smaller and fewer until the 133 barren peaks are reached. The mountains rise so precipitously that their snowcaps and glaciers seem to overhang the valley, a narrow ribbon of green winding far below. The range of vision from the bank of the river is limited by the all-encircling mountains. Here and there a distant vista opens up to expose peak after peak, but on the whole there is a feeling of confinement, in contrast with the open wastes of the upper country where the Bella Coola rises. Mountains, forests, flowing water, these are the three dominant impressions of the country (see Plate 6).

136 The mammals of central British Columbia, although comparatively common, have never been of primary importance.
[291] The marten, the wolverine, the lynx, and bears, both black and grizzly, were formerly hunted for their skins to serve as [262] cloaks. Deer were killed whenever possible, but formed a negligible item of diet. The beaver also was prized for its [439] flesh. The skins of moose and caribou were traded from the Carrier Indians, but neither of these animals was found in the [286] Bella Coola area. The mammal of greatest economic importance was the mountain goat, the wool of which was woven into [237] blankets. Smoked goat meat was formerly found in every [251] house and was almost the only flesh available during the winter. Small game was abundant, but seals were a luxury.
[262] Neither were birds of great importance to the Bella Coola.
[223] Members of the tribe resident near the sea-coast used to kill

[4]Appendix C contains a glossary of the scientific names of the flora and fauna mentioned in this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild-fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet The same is true of grouse. Always plentiful, these birds vere commonly killed, but never in large numbers.

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, hump-back, dog, and cohoe salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steelhead could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the olachen, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,[8] allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to eat berries without olachen grease. Trout and bull-heads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance.

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the corner-stone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed

[8] See Appendix A for a description of olachen fishing.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

THE PROFESSION OF HUNTER

224 424 [463] Another profession which is entered by means of an ancestral prerogative is that of hunting. Many Bella Coola have validated their right to this vocation, some by confirming names created by their early ancestors, others by legalizing those brought down from above in the beginning of time. [551] One of the latter is Lelaimkila, "The Brusher Off," so-called because the owner is such a successful hunter that he can sweep mountain goats from the mountains as easily as an ordinary person can brush insects from a wall. Unlike the professions of carpenter and singer, it is believed that legalization of a hunter's name always brings success to the holder; [555] perhaps because everyone is more or less successful, it follows that whatever good fortune is achieved by a professional hunter [556] can be attributed to the validation of his prerogative. Others, lacking this assistance, may be proficient, but their success never carries with it the social prestige gained by a man who has distributed goods to substantiate the prerogative.

224 424 184 [177] There is a difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as to whether or not certain hunting methods are inheritable prerogatives. With the introduction of rifles, these have long been discontinued, and no definite information was obtained regarding the social position of their users. Several of the older men believed that the contrivances depended upon ancestral prerogatives, whereas others stated that they were merely individual discoveries which could have been, and in many cases were, imitated by anyone. It seems probable that most of the following practices are prerogatives, although it may be that they are no more than special hunting devices suitable only in certain areas and, therefore, limited to the members of the ancestral family owning that particular locality.

223 424 The method about which the most definite information was obtained, was one formerly employed by a certain Nusxalxiq to catch geese at Tāl·io. According to one elderly Bella Coola,

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

this practice had been handed down with the name from the 223 beginning of time; another man stated that it was no pre- [424] rogative and could be used by anyone. The best time for hunting was at the equinoxes, and Nusɣalɣiq always observed [785] ceremonial chastity in such a way that it terminated at that date. Before setting out, the hunter prepared a net of the shape shown in the accompanying sketch (Fig. 1). The net was stretched over a wooden framework, about ten feet long and four feet wide; counterbalanced by a long and heavy handle. The whole affair was called, "The House-like Thing." Choosing a still night, the hunter used to set out in his canoe paddled by a number of assistants. Nusɣalɣiq would place himself in the bow with his net, and in the middle of the craft a small fire was kept burning with [372] resinous sticks piled beside it so that it could be kindled into bright flames at a moment's notice. As the canoe was slowly paddled along the shore, the geese were half attracted, half repelled by the light. Unwilling to take to flight, they used to swim around at the edge of the illumination and so were guided into some narrow opening of the shore. Then Nusɣalɣiq would throw his net so that the end farthest from the handle first touched the water and as the latter came crashing down it imprisoned a number of birds. Others, bewildered by the light and the falling net, tried to fly outwards and were knocked down by the paddlers. These were retrieved at once and the necks of those caught in the net were wrung at leisure. It is said that this method of hunting was almost always successful.

FIG. 1
Goose Net

Another Tāl·io hunting device which, however, was not 225 transmitted and may have been merely an individual stroke of genius, not an inherited prerogative, was employed to kill [424] seals. The last to use this method was the father's father of an elderly Bella Coola. This man used to go out at night in a

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

* 756 of these demi-gods of antiquity are favourite themes for stories.
538 The powers of the later shamans have been far less than those of their forefathers, and their exploits have been of a somewhat [173] different character. Hence it is possible to divide the subject into three sections:

(1) Shamanism in the distant past.
(2) Modern shamanism.
(3) Shamans from the dead.

SHAMANISM IN THE DISTANT PAST

Information on this phase is contained in stories and a few anecdotes which describe the achievements of ancient demi-gods, endowed with miraculous powers of various kinds. The tales are similar in type to those dealing with the granting of supernatural aid to the unfortunate, so that it is in many cases difficult to differentiate them. As might be expected these narratives are not exact. Frequently the teller does not know from what being the ancient shaman received his power, nor can he explain the abilities described, which are different from, and superior to, those with which he is familiar. In fact it is customary to describe any mythical hero as a shaman.

[424] Tales of this kind can be related by any one; they are not the personal property of a specific family. Many of them, that of Waowal·is, for example, are well known and are told and retold constantly.

In addition to information obtained from stories, a few isolated facts are remembered regarding ancient shamans. It
* 756 is thought that various taboos connected with hunting were
● 223 learnt by them in the distant past. Such restrictions and in-[224] junctions were firmly believed in and strictly adhered to until a few years ago, and many of them are still observed. The usual method of hunting harlequin ducks is, or was until recently, from a canoe, with a sapling set up in the bow to hide the hunter, crouched with bow and arrow in readiness; several shamans, however, were able to kill the birds by merely [262] waving the butt-end of a paddle towards them. Such power

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

would be of enormous value, since the Bella Coola consider these ducks a great delicacy, and say that their flesh resembles that of seals. In fact, when an invitation to a seal feast is given the words used mean, "come to eat harlequin ducks."

756* 262 223

No attempt was made to collect all the shaman stories current in Bella Coola, but the subject is amply illustrated by those gathered, of which the following is representative.

756* 539

The Adventures of Waowal·is Long, long ago, there dwelt among the people who lived on the shore of Dean Channel and were partly Kimsquit, partly Bella Bella, a mighty shaman, Waowal·is. He was a married man with a son just learning to walk, and an adopted one about twelve years old. One day Waowal·is told the latter to fetch water, but the lad was lazy and made no motion to obey, so his foster father kicked him angrily. Whereat the boy cried out:

"What are you hurting me for? Why don't you kick your wife or your partner? They are always sleeping together when you are away."

Waowal·is apparently paid no attention to this, merely saying:

"Stop crying. I am sorry I kicked you so hard. Run along and get the water."

Waowal·is, who was a great hunter, began to get his canoe ready for a seal hunting trip, and told his adopted son to accompany him. The two set off within a few hours. Waowal·is owned a stick of which one end contained the power of causing death, and the other of restoring life; he had only to make the motions of throwing this stick at a living creature, death-dealing end foremost, and the one at which it was pointed fell dead. Many seals had been killed by this means when Waowal·is asked the boy:

"What was it you said when I kicked you?"

By this time the lad had regained his temper and was sorry he had disclosed what he knew.

"I said nothing," he answered, "but gave a shout of pain."

"You liar," Waowal·is calmly replied. "You said that my wife was sleeping with my partner."

The boy, realizing that all was known, answered truthfully:

"Yes, I did say that. I have often seen her doing so when you were absent."

It was late afternoon by this time and Waowal·is at once headed back to the village, which they reached soon after dark. No one saw their approach, so Waowal·is told the boy to stay with the canoe and the seals

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

The religious concepts of the Bella Coola are not limited to explanations of strange apparitions, nor to knowledge of a wide range of supernatural beings, anthropomorphic or zoomorphic. Many in whom they believe are invisible and intangible, though none the less potent. Almost every incident of life is attributed to the help or hindrance of a supernatural agency. If a fisherman constructs a salmon-weir, with a considerable amount of work, the Bella Coola ascribe his success to the assistance of some supernatural being or supernormal power; mere labour would never have sufficed. If a man has phenomenal success in hunting, it is because the supernatural has helped him in some way. It is not necessary that an anthropomorphic being should appear; they seldom do, but none deny that in some form or another supernatural ones have aided the enterprise.

This attitude is clearly evident in Bella Coola beliefs concerning the construction of canoes. Many professions depend upon prerogatives without which a person cannot hope to succeed. This is not true of canoe-makers, although it is a great advantage to one of them if Yulätimut, the Master Carpenter, appeared to his ancestors in the beginning of time. Even without this in many cases a man can succeed in making a canoe if he is aided by a supernatural teacher, or Model Maker. No one knows much about this being, nor even whether there is more than one of them, but it is through his kindly intervention that a man is able to complete his complicated task. If carpenters who have left a half-finished canoe in the woods, hear adze beats, as they are returning to it, they remain away from the spot, knowing that their work is being done with superhuman efficiency by a supernatural artisan. Under such circumstances even a solitary man can construct one of the large, ocean-going canoes. About 1880 an expert carpenter, named Yelxhn, was making stated definitely that his mother had told him Mackenzie came down the Dean River when her uncle was a young man. As if to confirm this statement he added the inconsequential detail that Mackenzie, in dire straits for food, killed and ate a dog, and that he was given a marmot-skin blanket.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

human wearer belongs to a sphere differing from that of super- 776* natural animals and is dangerous to them. Consequently, if 789 worn clothing be thrown on a fire it repels unpleasant visitors.
Other powerful protections are false hellebore, and smoked [824] salmon roe. A wise hunter always carries these and if he sees a dangerous creature such as a sninq, he chews the two together and spits them towards the peril. Needless to say, if a kindly animal is seen, the hunter does not drive it away by these methods. Why false hellebore should be so effective is a [824] matter of wonder to the Bella Coola themselves, for as a rule it is the human essence attached to objects which gives them their strength over the supernatural. Thus the most powerful of all charms are pads that have been used by women during [841] their menses. If a woman travels on the ocean she is careful to carry some of them with her ready to repel any danger from the supernatural water beings.[27]

The manner in which the Bella Coola regard mythical 776* animals and other evidences of the supernatural is illustrated 789 by the following practice. Hunters always want to know the direction of the wind, and when the breeze is too slight to be 821 discernible they blow upwards a small amount of eagle down, [224] which is so light that the faintest breath of air will bear it down wind. What the logical white man considers a natural phenomenon, appears to the Bella Coola as miraculous; eagle down, stripped from the dead bird by human hands and stored for some time within a house, has become so humanized that it can conquer supernatural powers to indicate the direction of the wind.

The mythical monsters already described are not the only 776* animals regarded as supernatural by the Bella Coola. They 825 believe that in the beginning Ālquntām created men and beasts at the same time and in the same place, giving the former the 773 greater share of power, but not exiling the latter to a different plane of existence. In those early days, the semi-supernatural [27] This matter will be described more fully in connection with Magic; see vol. I, chap. xi.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

men to see these transformed beings habitually, but even now, or at any rate until a few years ago, shamans were able to lift the intervening veil. From accounts given by those who have had such experience, the Bella Coola believe that Alquntăm gave to birds and animals, as well as to humans, the boon of fire, and it is only the unworthiness of men that makes them unable to see the smoke rising from the houses of different creatures. In former times, fortunate hunters were able to do so, and consequently had phenomenal success. The smoke that ascends from the fires of different animals corresponds in colour to that of its owner; a mountain goat's is white, a beaver's, black, a squirrel's, red, a wolf's, gray, and so on. When a goat stamps the earth on a mountain, it rings hollow, as indeed it is to those animals, for their home is within; and when a hunter loses his quarry entirely, it is because the latter has entered its house. Shamans are sometimes able to hear the gatherings of animals under the peaks. Like human beings, they dance to the accompaniment of music, and in all respects behave like them. They have their times of joy and sorrow, of success and failure. When ill they are cured by their own shamans, grizzly bear, sminq, and wolverine; these three also dance to welcome the dead. All animals and birds are like brothers, able to converse with each other and living harmoniously together in that other part of their life which only shamans have seen. Porcupine is the oldest, and a hunter always tries to kill one before passing to more important prey. The animals know about the actions of human beings and show their aversion to certain habits by refusing to allow themselves to be seen by anyone practising them. For example, they do not like people to drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked, and no hunter would dream of partaking of that food. Bella Coola mythology is full of accounts of human beings who, with supernatural aid, were able to penetrate to the homes of animals. Tales of this type would be unintelligible without understanding the attitude of the people to the animal and bird kingdoms.

776* 825 [756] [773] [823] [756] [224] [784] [224] [773] [538]

1:McIlwraith E-S (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*776 825 [774] and leapt away apparently uninjured. The Bella Coola say that yearling goats have very strong spirits (I, p. 94) which make possible such actions.

Though generally callous with regard to the sufferings of animals, the Bella Coola are usually careful not to kill more than they need; and knowledge of the supernatural power [224] possessed by animals sometimes leads men to treat them with [226] great consideration. For example, if a bull-head is caught in an olachen net in the river, the fisherman throws it back into the water, saying:

"I have saved you; please do the same for me."

The following incident, believed without question by the Bella Coola, shows the manner in which bull-heads help those who have often befriended them. About 1880 a Kimsquit fisherman, Ăltakăn·i, fell into a rapids where he was in great danger of drowning. A bull-head, seeing his plight and mindful of former help, increased his size and shoved Ăltakăn·i ashore with its nose.

"I have saved you, mortal," said the bull-head, as he did so.

The ability to increase in size is not restricted to fish, but is shared by small mammals and reptiles. Lizards, for instance, four feet in length, are said to live permanently in a pond about seven miles below Kimsquit; they are termed çualăs.

Toads, too, çan aid mortals. If a man see a snake devouring one of them he will, if he is wise, kill the snake and say to the toad:

"Please help me when I am in difficulties."

A toad never forgets its obligations and if that man should fall into a river when the toad is near, the latter will grow large enough to drag him forth.

539 *776 825 755 [753] Snakes are regarded with aversion and disgust. This may be in part due to the belief that they cook for Ăllăt·iaist (I, p. 49), but more because these reptiles enter the stomachs of human beings. The Bella Coola believe that snakes are the offspring of a supernatural Mother of Snakes, a mythical being of dread powers. The following story illustrates their beliefs

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

concerning the danger of near approach to this creature: 539

Ḱwilais was a man of mixed lineage, Kimsquit and Pes, near Newitte. With several companions he was gathering berries when he stepped into a hole and felt numerous tiny creatures crawling over his legs. Looking down, he saw that they were small snakes, that had just been hatched from a Mother of Snakes. He fled, terrified, pursued by the reptiles, which he managed to keep off to some extent by brushing behind him a branch of spiny swamp gooseberry, a known deterrent. When he had out-distanced the snakes he called his companions, told them of his adventure, and returned home. There he repeated the tale. Though Ḱwilais did not know it, many of the snakes had succeeded in entering his stomach. Presently he began to swell; his body became larger and larger until he was in danger of bursting. The reptiles within were breeding rapidly. Luckily, one of his fellow villagers knew the proper remedy. A raised bed was made for the sufferer about five feet from the ground where Ḱwilais stretched himself on a number of thorny branches, while his friends built a fire of devil's club and swamp goose-berry twigs so that he was fumigated in the smoke. Moreover, to give greater potency, they cast on the flames soiled clothing and pounded cedar-bark pads stained with menstrual blood; even this was of no avail, so finally a woman squeezed out into a vessel some of her menstrual blood which Ḱwilais drank. This killed the snakes. The patient began to vomit, emitting a mass of wriggling serpents, and at once began to grow thinner, soon regaining his normal condition. Had he not been able to eject the reptiles, he would have died.

776 * 825 755 [789] [753] [841]

Ḱwilais was not the only one to have this unpleasant experience. Many others have suffered in the same way, but in no case has anyone been able to feel the snakes at the actual place or time of entry.

The beliefs of the Bella Coola concerning the power possessed by animals are clearly shown by their attitude with regard to killing them. Man is immortal, so are animals. Ālqantām decreed that beasts and birds should serve as food for mankind, but it is only their clothing, their worthless "blanket of flesh," as the Bella Coola express it, which they give to hunters. In the autumn leaves appear to die, but every spring they are reborn. Similarly, when an animal is slain, it merely discards its visible self while its spirit[a] ascends

825 775 224 [774]

[a] Xemdzedz, see vol. I, p. 94.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

825

[775] [774] to the land above whence, in course of time, it comes down to earth again to reanimate a new body.* Consequently, the success of a hunter does not indicate his mastery over an

[785] animal so much as the latter's good-will in allowing itself to be slain by one who has pleased him by ceremonial chastity (I, p. 110), or by one who has been endowed with skill by some other supernatural being. Men are accordingly careful to obey the wishes of their quarry. Long ago, a mountain goat told a shaman that he and his friends liked coat, so a hunter who has killed one always smears two bands of ashes across its face from the right eye to the left side of the mouth. Another shaman was told by a bear never to use

[411] owl-feathered arrows since none of his fellows killed with such would return. Plumes of other birds have since been used, preferably those of mallard ducks. Sometimes the wishes of an animal require considerable ritual. For example, when a bear is killed, the carcass is stretched upon neatly arranged evergreen boughs and skinned. The hunter reverses the pelt so that the tail lies near the neck, with the whole hanging loosely over the body. He pats it four times, as if pressing the skin back into place, and says:

[789] "Please don't linger. Go home and return," or,

"Please come to me tomorrow. Tell your brothers, your sisters, your uncles, your aunts and your other relations to come to me."

Should this be omitted, the animal is likely to stand up, skinless, shake itself, causing the pelt to return to its place, and run away. Yearling mountain goats are especially prone to do this, as already mentioned. Even if an animal does not show its resentment by escaping in this way, it often refuses to return to earth unless the proper rites have been performed over its carcass.

[262] Bears have another aversion: they do not like to be eaten by men. So the hunter leaves the skinned body for wolves

[185] *There are doubters in Bella Coola as in every other community, and several of the older men express disbelief in the immortality of animals.

5:96:Swanton E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

and eagles whom he invites to dinner it. In so doing, he does not address them by their usual names, but calls Wolf, Ilkwa-i-gawm, "The Devourer of Meat Which He Does Not Kill," that is, "The Biting Scavenger"; and Eagle, Ancikiyawmamum, "The Constant Eater," that is, "The One Who Eats before He Is Hungry." Next morning the fish has been devoured and the hunter believes his guests have eaten it. Animals and birds, being supernatural, can hear the words of mortals and read their thoughts. The significance of these actions is that animals have the power to conceal themselves, so a hunter must gain their favour before he can hope to succeed. Belief in the efficacy of such customs as these is rapidly falling into decay and bear meat is now often eaten, but the skull is carefully placed in an evergreen tree near where the animal is slain, so that it may come back to life.

Fish, likewise, are immortal. In autumn the streams are choked with dead and dying salmon, but the Bella Coola know that they are not really dead, they have merely shed their worthless blankets in accordance with Alquntin's decrees. At that season of the year he causes the rivers to rise so that they will sweep away these useless and outworn cloaks.

Although the salmon, from the kindness of their hearts, allow human beings to feast on their blankets, yet they have certain likes and dislikes which are carefully observed. From the time the first spring salmon appear (I, pp. 770-771) until the rising of the July moon, women are not allowed to eat them or to go near the river. Men may eat the fish, but instead of throwing the bones to dogs, they carefully return them to the river saying:

"Please come back tomorrow."

If this is inconvenient, bones can be thrown into the woods with impunity.

Salmon, like men and animals, live a human-like existence in their homes far beneath the surface of the ocean. They lack and desire earthly objects, especially pounded cedar-bark (see Appendix A) to use as sponges for their children, so the Bella Coola throw pieces of it and eagle down on the water.

Lib. Congress E-5 (522-1524)948
NEA Reference NEA

place where he is not likely to be disturbed, and addresses the supreme god in a loud tone of voice, requesting his assistance. 782

Although prayers can be said at any time of the day, or at any season of the year, there are occasions when they are more potent than at other times. At dawn, for example, a wise young man is accustomed to go alone to the river to wash and pray. He enters the icy water, blows mucus over his hands, and rubs his body vigorously* either with a smooth pebble, or, if it can be obtained, with a stone taken from the stomach of a sea-lion.* As he scours himself, he asks Mouhaic to grant him long life, power, success, and strength. On coming from the water, he repeats his request, and then washes himself again. This process is repeated four times, making eight prayers in all. A young man who does this habitually, and in other ways placates the supreme deity, is likely to have success, and may even be given supernatural assistance by one of the many anthropomorphic or zoomorphic creatures. The underlying belief is that Hyoxitin actually hears the words spoken and, pleased thereby, aids the petitioner either directly, or by strengthening the supernatural elements in his body. [783]

Mouhaic has power over both rain and dry weather, and is petitioned for whichever is desired. When the sun is obscured by rain clouds, the Bella Coola pray: [821]

"Please clear your face, Mouhaic," or,

"Please show us your face, we need you."

Before a man starts on a journey, either by canoe or on foot, he always asks help for his undertaking. [484]

"Mouhaic," he prays, "Be with me," or "Go before me," or, "Give me what I want."

Corresponding to the importance of the occasion, prayers are always made before the departure of a hunting or war [824] [825] [826] [515] [296] [825] [825]

*Urine was formerly used for washing both the body and clothing. It was believed to the application of these waste, and undoubtedly had a religious significance. Indeed, washing purely for cleanliness was not believed until recently.

The Bella Coola were that stones are often found in the stomachs of sea-lions. The specimens, considered of great value, were scarce. It was indistinguishable from a semi-mineralized river pebble.

1:36:Howatt K-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

party. Canoes always start soon after dawn, and each member of the expedition is careful to pray before leaving, and also to avoid eating in case food should in any way interfere with the success of the venture. Before reaching their destination, a chief in each canoe draws from a pouch some eagle down brought for the purpose, holds it before his mouth, and blows a little towards each of the four cardinal points, at the same time asking Mouskais to smile on the enterprise and grant a safe return. This does not guarantee success, but it is felt that any disaster which may occur would have been more serious if assistance had not been thus requested.

Although Alquntam, under the name of Mouskais, is the one to whom prayers are most often addressed, petitions are sometimes made to other beings. In the beginning of time, when Raven had superabundant power, mortals frequently sought his assistance. At the present time, he is sometimes asked for aid, in the belief that he may still have some shreds of his former power, or he is a better position than man to intercede with Mouskais. If ravens croak when it is raining, people may ask them to request the supreme being to stop the rain; in such cases, a petitioner is careful to address a raven as Nemakila, his title as chief, rather than as Qoas. In cold winter weather, a raven is sometimes caught alive, its head smeared with grease, and as it is released, the captor says:

"Please end the cold wind, Nemakila."

Prayers are also said half humorously, half seriously, on many occasions. When, for example, clothing has become too ragged for further use, it is thrown on a fire with the remark:

"Please come to me again, now."

The thrower does not actually believe that in so doing he is asking help from his clothing, but it gives him a certain sense of satisfaction thus to have expressed his desires.

The prayers above described can be said by anyone, at any time; they are means of propitiation known to the whole community. In addition, information was obtained about two prayers, each of which is the jealously guarded prerogative

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NES Bellacoola NES

the point between Labouchere Channel and Bentinck Arm, 782 there is danger from treacherous currents, so, when a shaman [193] passes either of these places, he lays some food on the water [502] and puffs eagle down into the air as he asks for help. If no [756] shaman is in the canoe, this is done by the captain.

The being to whom offerings are most commonly made is [796] Thitdplilde-a, the supernatural woman who cures the sick and gives power to shamans. Whenever a hunter kills an edible [224] animal in the forest, he cuts off four pieces of flesh and throws them into his fire to gain her goodwill. Long, long ago, [773] Thitdplilde-a appeared to a hunter, seized some of his quarry, and told him of her wishes with regard to presents; these have since been obeyed by wise people. Similarly, the relatives of a man absent in the mountains or at sea throw scraps of food on the fire and ask the protection of Thitdplilde-a for the one in danger. In this case, it is clear that objects thrown into flames are received and appreciated by Thitdplilde-a.

Mowakaic, although usually propitiated by prayer, is also [796] given presents. Frequently, when a man is praying, he accompanies his words by blowing up into the air small particles of eagle down. Prayers in connection with the departure of war or hunting expeditions have already been mentioned, but [484] before starting on any journey by canoe, the captain is careful [824] to pray and to throw upon the water four pieces of red, and [825] four of yellow cedar-bark. The blowing upwards of eagle down is a common accompaniment to all kinds of prayers, but, if none is available, cedar-bark can be used equally satisfactorily. If possible, this is cast on the surface of water, otherwise into a fire, as a request is being made. The Bella Coola do not believe that such presents are actually used and considered valuable by Mowakaic, but they emphasize and accompany the vocal prayer, and demonstrate the petitioner's sincerity.

Ghosts, on the other hand, depend almost entirely on pre- 795 sents given them by mortals, since food is not abundant in the 782 land below. The relatives of a dead person always throw

I: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

who, in turn, would pass on the request so that it might reach each member of the party. Not only is it contrary to custom for a commoner to hold intercourse with a chief's wife, but it is unknown for a man to ask another to sleep with his wife, so the youth was surprised and rather frightened. However, he acceded to the request, passed on the instructions, and washed. As he was bathing, a seal appeared in the surf beside him, and he was able to kill it easily. Each in turn behaved in the same manner, washed, and then killed a seal. Next morning, when the chief returned he was delighted that all had turned out in accordance with his hopes. At the same time the wind dropped so that the party was able to return home.

The power which had brought the seals within reach of the men had been engendered in their own bodies by these ritual acts after a rather lengthy period of continence. The Bella Coola believe that such a procedure always increases their strength and ability, therefore giving them a better chance to gain favour from supernatural beings, and to take advantage of opportunities offered. Hunters in particular are careful with regard to their marital life since animals know their acts and thoughts, and hide from one who has not made himself "clean" by continence, its termination, and bathing. Sxetsta consists of these three elements, but since continence is the most prominent feature, the term may be translated as "ceremonial chastity."

In its simplest form this comprises merely the three elements already mentioned. The longer the continence, the greater the power engendered by its termination. A man who has practised abstinence for a year has such strength within himself that almost any good fortune may occur, and cases are known in which it has been carried out for even longer periods. More often, an individual practises ceremonial chastity in accordance with a family tradition. One old man gave the following recipe and was most emphatic that it always brought success in hunting and fishing; he added that on the two occasions he had tried it, he had brought back a phenomenal number of skins.

A person planning to set out on an expedition for any purpose should remain continent for several nights to increase his generative powers. He then selects a time for beginning the rite and on the second and fourth nights from that date sleeps with his wife, holding intercourse repeatedly and vigorously until he is utterly exhausted. Before dawn on the third and fifth days he must wash in the river or in some quiet stream. Then follow four nights of restraint, a further intercourse, and washing before dawn. The period is next increased to eight nights, then twelve, and finally sixteen, each with a similar contact and bathing. The nights of abstinence are thus forty in all, a lucky number. An unmarried man can obtain power in the same manner with the assistance of a female friend; it is the act itself that is vital, not the union of husband and wife.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

At the present time, only two Bella Coola are said to know this particular type of ceremonial chastity, which they conceal carefully, even refusing offers to buy their knowledge. It is potent at any time, but especially if the periods of continence have been so arranged that they terminate at one of the solstices. Then, indeed, can a hunter set off with every prospect of success, knowing that the human taint disliked by animals has been removed, and been replaced by a ceremonial cleanliness pleasing to them. If the time terminates at the winter solstice, the hunter should set out immediately; if it ends in June, he must remain away from women after his final intercourse. In September or October, when ready to leave for the hunt, he must sleep beside his wife for the last four nights; each night he must place his leg between hers, and each morning the two must wash together. The best fortune of all is obtained by a man who observes this forty-night period for four successive years.

Another, and more common, count[24] is to observe continence for four nights, followed by intercourse. Immediately afterwards, the man should eat as much devil's club[25] as poi-

[24]The record of nights is kept by notches cut in a stick or by knots on a cord.
[25]Or false hellebore. This latter plant is thought to be so poisonous that the eating of even a twig an inch in length is fatal; a very small amount, however, all that is ever taken, acts as a powerful emetic.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

224 785 sible, selecting small twigs from which the bark and spines have been rubbed off. This acts as an emetic, so that before washing in the morning he has vomited from his stomach all [824] polluting matter, especially any human hair which animals [278] consider particularly unclean. Before dawn he goes to the [783] river and remains beneath the surface as long as possible, irrespective of the coldness of the water. Then he returns slowly to his house. Four nights later the same acts are repeated. These eight nights of continence are followed by two further periods, each of four nights, making a total of sixteen. Thus fortified, a hunter anticipates great success.

785 A person practising ceremonial chastity is in a condition peculiarly susceptible to disaster, and must observe certain restrictions. If, for example, anyone sees him as he returns from washing in the morning, the power which he has been accumulating so laboriously is lost. Owing to this belief, it is customary for a man to wash long before dawn and to come creeping into his house through a hole in the floor. He must always be the last to retire at night, the first to rise in the morning; and he must say nothing about what he is doing. Intercourse is, of course, absolutely forbidden except on the proper nights, and at other times he must not even put his arm around his wife. Failure to obey these restrictions destroys any advantage from [837] ceremonial chastity, while actual disaster follows should a man's wife misconduct herself with anyone else when he is using her for this purpose. If she is unfaithful, her husband is certain to be slain by an animal when hunting, or to slip and be killed on a mountain trail. Animals know all that human beings do [825] or think, and they punish anyone who is unable to perform ceremonial chastity fittingly. Behind these restrictions there 831 is undoubtedly the sentiment that intercourse, held duly and 785 properly at the right time, is not a mere desire of the flesh, but a ceremonial act. Indeed, when the Bella Coola speak of it in [833] connection with ceremonial chastity, they do not use the [195] common term, e-m, which has a coarse implication, but xeldjat which has a polite and almost sacred implication.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

Ceremonial chastity is considered almost a necessity to hunters, and in former years a man would rarely, if ever, set out to seek game without fortifying himself by at least several days of continence followed by washing. In the few cases known of a female assuming the clothing and activities of a male, she has been forced to hire a man to sleep with her on the proper nights before starting to hunt. But hunters are by no means the only ones to observe ceremonial chastity. If a man wants to build a salmon-weir, it is by this means that he makes himself strong enough to succeed; if he plays cards, good fortune is sought in the same fashion. The guests at a potlatch observe ceremonial chastity so that their host may not forget them in his distribution of presents, the host, that his guests may arrive on time. The kusiut dancer thus fortifies himself for the performance of a dangerous ritual. In this way a man experiences dreams foretelling the future. In every desire or activity of life, ceremonial chastity is a potent means of success, not infallible, usually combined with prayer and in many cases with sacrifice, but a background and accompaniment to every means of propitiation. If a man has conspicuous ill-luck, it is because he has failed to observe ceremonial chastity; if he succeeds, it is because he has done so. At the present time there is living in the Bella Coola valley an old white man who for years has ranged the mountains in search of gold; he has been unsuccessful, and the Bella Coola believe that he will never succeed until he observes ceremonial chastity.

The strength which a man may acquire through the practice of this rite is almost limitless. A man may be ailing on account of the leaning of his tally post, but, if he energetically and faithfully observes chastity, it will become straightened, whether automatically or through the agency of Alqantây is uncertain. After the termination of a long period of continence, a man's spirit is so strong that his friends place their hands on the back of his neck in order to absorb some of the power radiating from his spirit. Ancient myths record how the mere force engendered in a man's body by lengthy abstin-

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

tions on this subject always excited them, but every effort was made to verify the following statements.

As with names, the easiest way to understand the rights of the ancestral family in land is by first considering the mythological explanation, which mirrors conditions as they existed at the coming of white men. On reaching this earth the first people are believed to have prospected for suitable settlement sites, places where salmon and olachen could be caught, and if possible, near side valleys where berries were abundant. Here they released the animals and plants which they had brought with them, on which they thenceforth subsisted, in accordance with the supreme deity's instructions. The members of the group pre-empted these areas for themselves. Waste land, far from any village was, and still is, free to anyone. A few years after the first settlements had been made, according to the myths, the supreme god sent down to Kimsquit a certain Alqantăm who allotted and marked the territory which was the property of each community; at that time a village consisted merely of a group of the first settlers. No similar myth was recounted for either Bella Coola or Tăl-io, although their concepts with regard to land are identical with those of the Kimsquit. This really gave a sacred sanction to the possession of land, an important matter to a people so religiously inclined as the Bella Coola.

The system of land tenure follows the same somewhat abstruse principles that govern the possession of names in an ancestral family. Hunting and collecting grounds appropriated by the first people, or by their immediate descendants, are the property of their offspring, the ancestral family. The Bella Coola term for such an area is sal'lcam, also called, nxumuta, which means "Food Supply."

It will thus be seen that a hunting-area is not the property of any single individual, but belongs to a group of persons, most of whom live in a single town. The relatives of a man who intends to give a potlatch usually give him, temporarily, exclusive rights to the hunting-ground. As with names, there

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

He is especially rich in caribou-skins, used for foot covering, and goat-skins, so treasured for their wool.[7] He and his wife have laid up abundant food, and, most important of all, his wife's family is wealthy. Rumours have spread that X will soon give a potlatch and perhaps one or more foreign chiefs has given him a large cone-shaped whistle, such as is used in nuaek ritual (see Plate 12). These whistles, called qomo·ts, are often referred to as the "breath" or "voice" of a chief; they are also called slopsta, the "heart" or "wind" of a chief; a third designation is nalwinuts. X carefully conceals a whistle in one of his boxes. Such a present expresses the kindly feeling existing between those akin to one another in that they have risen to a position of eminence above the common crowd. Its receipt spurs a man to greater efforts to amass the wealth necessary for giving a potlatch by keeping before his eyes the realization of what another has done. A rival chief never gives such a present. X returns each whistle secretly at the time of his potlatch.

Early in the autumn X decides that he has almost enough wealth. To complete the essential amount he will not hesitate to borrow from his friends. It is most unusual to be refused, for it is incumbent on X, unless he wishes to lose the esteem of the community, to repay his borrowings with heavy interest, and when X distributes his goods at his potlatch it will be announced how he has obtained them, and the lender is proclaimed as a person of sufficient wealth to be able to spare some of it. Goods so loaned are termed "belt goods," a reference to the manner in which a man fastens up his cape with a belt before setting to work. The assumption is that X will have to labour to repay his indebtedness. Failure to repay is a serious matter, and the lender would be justified in seizing a canoe or other valuable article as surety for his debt; in fact, feuds are commonly caused by unpaid debts. Men of business

[7] Formerly, when goat-skin blankets were highly valued, goats were never shot for fear of the blood staining the wool. Instead, they were cornered by dogs, and choked to death in nooses. For preparation, each skin was laid out on the floor and then cut into longitudinal strips, two, three, or four fingers wide.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

sion by repeating loudly a few words, or even phrases, from the speeches being delivered, or calling on the audience to notice what has just been said and to listen attentively. A white man would be annoyed at such interruptions, but the Bella Coola consider them evidences of attentiveness. 203 556*

The making of comments is a duty performed at every type of ceremony, but it is indispensable at potlatches; since a chief depends on the heralds to emphasize and explain the points of his family history which are being displayed. One intelligent man likened their functions to a compass, constantly guiding the course of ceremonial life. Without a herald a chief would be as useless as a ship tossed on the ocean with no hand to steer. Although the principal duty of heralds is to extol the actions of a chief, they can, and are expected to, deride one who fails to carry out the customary requirements. Cases have occurred in which influential men have so far forgotten their function of generosity as to fail to invite their fellows after killing a deer or other large animal; or women have declined to share their abundant berries. Nothing is said at the time, but when next the people have come together for some ceremony, a herald refers to the omission under so slim a disguise that everyone is aware of his meaning. This public ridicule lowers the prestige of a chief to such an extent that he is careful not to offend again. Not many years ago, a certain Kimsquit chief failed to ask others to share some mountain goats which he had killed; at the first opportunity a herald referred to himself as Yaki, Mountain Goat, and all present realized that he was really alluding to the one who had been remiss. 203 556* 558 626 [224] [222]

Heralds must exercise care in their witticisms at the expense of chiefs because, unless public opinion is with them, the point of the remark is lost, and they expose themselves to the wrath of the person offended. Nevertheless, heralds always strive to cause merriment, and often take risks with this aim in view. They try to make humorous remarks, and also to cause amusement by their antics. As already described, the donor of a potlatch may throw to one of them a dish containing liquid food 203 522 556*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

THE PROFESSION OF HUNTER

224 424 [463] Another profession which is entered by means of an ancestral prerogative is that of hunting. Many Bella Coola have validated their right to this vocation, some by confirming names created by their early ancestors, others by legalizing [551] those brought down from above in the beginning of time. One of the latter is Lelaimkila, "The Brusher Off," so-called because the owner is such a successful hunter that he can sweep mountain goats from the mountains as easily as an ordinary person can brush insects from a wall. Unlike the professions of carpenter and singer, it is believed that legalization of a hunter's name always brings success to the holder; [555] perhaps because everyone is more or less successful, it follows that whatever good fortune is achieved by a professional hunter [556] can be attributed to the validation of his prerogative. Others, lacking this assistance, may be proficient, but their success never carries with it the social prestige gained by a man who has distributed goods to substantiate the prerogative.

224 424 184 [177] There is a difference of opinion among the Bella Coola as to whether or not certain hunting methods are inheritable prerogatives. With the introduction of rifles, these have long been discontinued, and no definite information was obtained regarding the social position of their users. Several of the older men believed that the contrivances depended upon ancestral prerogatives, whereas others stated that they were merely individual discoveries which could have been, and in many cases were, imitated by anyone. It seems probable that most of the following practices are prerogatives, although it may be that they are no more than special hunting devices suitable only in certain areas and, therefore, limited to the members of the ancestral family owning that particular locality.

223 424 The method about which the most definite information was obtained, was one formerly employed by a certain Nuxalqiq to catch geese at Tál-io. According to one elderly Bella Coola,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

225 small ocean-going canoe, with an assistant who passed his paddle through the water in such a way that a slight phosphorescent streak resulted. This resembled the course of a salmon. In a short time a seal would rise in pursuit of the "fish," and the watchful hunter would harpoon it. The seal would rush off with the head of the weapon, which was attached by a long line to the shaft remaining in the hunter's hand He would play it like a huge fish, until the exhausted animal was drawn to the side of the canoe and clubbed. Several seals were often obtained by this means in the course of a single night.

224 424 The two usual methods of killing mountain goats are by cornering them with dogs and then choking them to death, or by shooting with rifle or bow. There was formerly a special method of snaring which had been handed down as a prerogative from the time of the first people. The hunter used to set his snares on a precipitous path commonly used by goats and had remarkable success. Others might know how to make snares and where the hunter set them, but no one would ever attempt this method of hunting without the proper prerogative. Another right, enjoyed by another hunter, was the catching of bears in a similar way in nooses.

424 556 182 Little need be said in conclusion about these particular privileges, except to emphasize that they are merely an aspect of the principle of validated prerogatives which permeates every phase of Bella Coola life. It is as natural for a man to be made a singer or a hunter by the distribution of presents as it is for him to acquire a dance by the same means. Each is contained in an ancestral myth, and the validation of the prerogative enables the incumbent either to function actively, or at least to enjoy the social prestige attached to the craftsman who has been duly confirmed in his vocation. The necessity of bestowing gifts to validate a prerogative introduces an economic element to the concept, but this is lessened by the fact that a poor man can acquire a name by a relatively small

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

556 performance of rites of this kind. But sociological and ethical [182] concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year, or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly [577] displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a 576 major sin. Anyone who happens to pass a house in which a meal is taking place must be invited to share it; to do other-574 wise would be considered rude. The person summoned must take at least a trifle to show that he is not churlish and too proud to eat with his host, while if he is hungry, he shares [177] whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of [273] the family should be the first to taste any wine[14] as proof that [342] it is not poisoned, but otherwise he fares little, if any, better [414] than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse through the construction of individual family houses with doors and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suit-476 able place for netting olachen or salmon must give some of his [226] catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, the first solicitor is given one, later comers, none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing is allowed to raise it and take some of the contents; if there are two fish, he may remove one, if many, three or four. To take all would be a [685] despicable theft, sufficient to brand the transgressor as greedy;
[626] hence public opinion prevents the system from being carried to excess. A hunter who brings back several mountain goats [224] or other large game is expected to invite his neighbours to a feast, which virtually means that he must share his takings.

556 Presents of this kind increase the prestige of the donor who has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are 431 advantageous investments since others must reciprocate. The system is carried to such lengths that, until recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavours to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift returns as much as [14] This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of home-brew.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

though they may be to the white man. It is hoped that the preceding illustrations, drawn from recent times, will explain the mental attitude of the Bella Coola better than incidents from folk-lore of the distant past. 787 *

Disregarding thoughts which, since they are caused by the spiritual elements of the human body, are ever present, relations with the supernatural may be divided into the following categories: [828] [774]

(1) Appearance of supernatural beings from which neither good nor bad results follow. Strictly speaking, every fleeting sight of a supernatural being belongs to this category, but it will be convenient to describe only experiences of a peculiar kind, such as the Bella Coola call qun-ahilawadjulsix. Usually manifestations of the supernatural have certain effects; consequently, there are relatively few incidents of this kind recorded.

(2) Supernatural aid vouchsafed to a man or a woman in distress. There are many tales illustrating this, which are told and retold to the children. In most cases the assistance is given to one who has undeservedly, according to Bella Coola concepts, fallen into misfortune.

(3) Supernatural good luck. This may be obtained by anyone, and consists of the acquisition of a supernatural object to attract, not only fish and animals, as if it were a potent bait, but money and goods as well. [777] [224] [226]

(4) Acquisition of shamanistic power, with or without the ability to cure the sick. This may be received from one of two sources: [756]

(a) Thindpilin-a or some other supernatural being.

(b) Ghosts, which are likewise supernatural. [775]

(5) Obtaining prophetic powers direct from the supreme god. There are few instances of this, and none that is ascribed to a remote period. It is possible that all examples of this kind can be attributed to indirect Christian influence. [177]

(6) Obtaining power from a supernatural being localized in a particular spot. This usually takes the form of succour when [756]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

539 * 787 She assumed it to be a forest fire, but, when she idly went near to investigate, her amazement was past all bounds at seeing a fine house filled with valuables. Nor was her surprise lessened when she discovered that 'Yeāxdji was lord of it all. He welcomed her gladly, gave her a hearty meal, and sent back with her some seal meat for her child, only adding that it was to be eaten secretly as he did not wish his father to know of his good fortune.

"But," he added, "I don't mind if you send me any of the people except my father, especially any who were good to me long ago."

The slave woman thankfully carried the meat home to her child. But he, long deprived of proper food, ate so ravenously that night that a lump stuck in his throat and his coughing awoke Qomo'sala. The chief pounded the youngster's back until he vomited what was obviously a piece of seal. The slave woman, remembering 'Yeāxdji's order, tried to evade her master's questions as to where her son had obtained it, but at last she blurted out the truth, how the abandoned youth had become prosperous.

The slave woman and her friends moved to Qwiyai, where 'Yeāxdji used his power of thought to obtain for them houses filled with everything they could desire. But Qomo'sala and those left with him were starving, so that they too were driven to seek his aid, gladly marrying their daughters to him in return for his protection. He rapidly rose to a position of importance, being the husband of both real and fictitious wives, and was even able to provide his elder brothers with mates. Some of the women married to him became almost his slaves, as their families were unable to rebuy them.

Supernatural Good Luck

777 * 787 A third manner in which the Bella Coola can come into contact with powers of another plane is through supernatural good luck. This consists in obtaining something from a supernatural being, usually a portion of its slain body, which acts [224] [226] as a bait to fish, mammals, and even to such inanimate articles as blankets or skins. Even a tiny morsel placed on a weir will attract numerous salmon, or if set on a trap will prove an infallible lure to animals. When put in the owner's box, valuables will be attracted to it as steel to a magnet. Thus the fortunate possessor will be able to give many potlatches and to reach a [432] high position in the community. Since this good fortune is quently not until the fourth appearance that a person obtains supernatural good luck, he is still hoping for two more visitations, the second of which he expects to be fruitful. 777 787.*

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

One day as he was poling up the Kimsquit River he heard a sound resembling thunder proceeding from a log-jam. From descriptions given him by his father, he knew that this must be the voice of a mätsqus, but, not having observed ceremonial chastity, he was afraid to investigate, although the sound seemed to follow his canoe for a considerable distance; it only stopped when another canoe approached. From the fact that he alone heard the voice, he knew that it was for him that the creature had come and only the arrival of other people had deterred it from appearing.

On another occasion the same man was close to the nest of a mätsqus. He and another hunter were together in the forest above the Dean River and both saw the stone nest behind a waterfall, but for some time each refrained from pointing it out to the other. Towards dusk the first man's attention was called to it by his companion, and they debated on a course of action. Each was desirous of obtaining the benefits to be derived from a successful use of the nest, but each was afraid of the evil consequences should he fail. The friend had observed continence for some time so it was decided that in the morning he should be the one to make the approach; the other man, well versed in these matters, instructed him very carefully what to do. That night both men were too excited to sleep.

Next morning the nest was still in the same place, but the friend hesitated about going up to it, and as they delayed, talking, it vanished in the twinkling of an eye and the opportunity passed.

The nest itself is sufficiently potent to bring good fortune without the mätsqus. Not many years ago a man saw one containing a large green egg which he touched with one end of his musket. Then he carefully hid his weapon for one year in a cleft of the rocks where no water could reach it, nor did he mention what he had seen to anyone. When the time had 777 224●

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

777 elapsed, he fetched his musket from its hiding-place and again
224 began to use it. Thenceforth he never missed his aim; every shot brought down an animal.

Before the days of muskets good fortune could likewise be obtained by the discoverer of the nest of a mätqnx. Each contains small particles of the skin of all animals, including human beings, plucked from them in their sleep by humming birds and toads. The finder must touch the nest with his stick, such as is always carried by hunters, then break it and throw it away, saying as he does so:

"May I see you at . . . tomorrow." This means next year.

He names his favourite hunting-ground. The finder must not say anything to anyone about his discovery, and for one [785] year he must observe continence. If he then goes to the locality mentioned, he will there find his stick, the one which he broke when he touched the nest, though it will be invisible to anyone else. Adhering to its end will be four hairs of the mätqnx. These he must hide for a year, wrapped in some of his own clothing, taking care that it is an article which he has long worn and which is accordingly saturated with his essence. [785] During this period, too, he must observe continence. Two years after finding the nest, he will be able to hunt with phenomenal success. The knowledge of this proper procedure has [424] been handed down in an ancestral family for many generations.

On the occasion when the two men had seen the nest they 777 continued their journey, each chiding the other for his failure * 787 to take advantage of the opportunity put in his path. Before long they saw a footprint where no man had been and knew [776] that it must be that of Tsalälit, the supernatural hunter of mountain goats. In spite of remonstrances, the comrade scraped up a little dirt from the track into his handkerchief. In this he did wrong, especially as he had failed to take advantage of the opportunity presented to him by the nest of the monster toad. That night as the two were encamped a slide came thundering down beside them, and they barely escaped [761] with their lives. Not long afterwards the erring man died,

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

These become lilies (of the species known as lilkāndp or malilkwāt'ālāt'ālāt, "The most potent of the pond") from the roots of which a tonic can be brewed. They can be collected by anyone, and the places where they grow are well known, but certain rules must be followed. Before reaching the pond the gatherer must find four spruce saplings, cut from each a bough projecting eastward, and lay these two by two, beside the water, with a space between. After plucking the lily roots he must place them on the ground between the spruce branches and tie the whole into a bundle with strips of dyed and undyed cedar-bark. He must be careful to wind these wrappings clockwise. On arriving at the house where the tonic is to be prepared, the bundle must be thrown in through the smoke-vent, never carried through the door. After these precautions the medicine can be prepared with safety. The roots are cut into thin slices and boiled for four days; a sick person then drinks several cupsful of the brew, which is particularly good for the blood. This remedy is especially effective if the patient is observing ceremonial chastity. The person administering the potion sees to it that the one being treated conforms to certain regulations for forty days. He must not eat fresh meat, fresh salmon, or any food prepared by a widow or a catamenial woman; he must not approach too closely a girl who is secluded following puberty, and he must observe absolute continence, not even sleeping with his wife. Death follows the breaking of any of these taboos.

Although supernatural good fortune is most frequently obtained from either a mātqaz or a nuiatl, it can be derived from other supernatural beings. In such cases the acquisition is seldom dangerous. The following tale describes the qokāe-i.

Long before the coming of the white man, but very long after the first people came to this earth, a certain Kimsquit man, Wīlmanat, who was also called O'mātl, was searing mountain goats on Mount Tsqinātl when he heard on the upper slopes a peculiar cry which he recognized, from descriptions given him by the old people, as the note of a qokāe-i.

I:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

224
539
797 787
[976]

This is a supernatural bird about the size of a crow, with a broad hooked beak and blue-black iridescent plumage. Its note resembles that of a swan. The peculiarity of the bird is that its flesh and bones are of mountain goat grease; even its droppings are of this valuable substance, and it is these which are specially prized. Long ago qokūn-i were comparatively common, but all have now fled beyond the range of the white man's rifle.

Wikwanul knew what to do, so he crept stealthily up the mountain armed only with his hunting stick. Presently he saw a qokūn-i feeding on a mountain goat which had been caught in one of his snares. It answered to the descriptions Wikwanul had heard, and he could see that its droppings were like solidified mountain goat grease. The hunter crawled near, and took advantage of the instant when the bird was within the goat's stomach to leap forward and club it as it looked up. Wikwanul twisted the neck until the head separated from the body and flung the former behind him, to the right, without noting where it went. This enables the bird to return since, like all other living creatures, when it seems to die it does no more than shed its cloak of flesh. Then the hunter cut the body into halves, threw the right portion in the same direction as the head, and carefully tied the left half in his cape of cedar-bark. Next he collected the droppings and wrapped them in evergreen boughs. Carefully carrying his treasures, he went down the mountain, and hid them in a niche cut in the trunk of a cedar tree, before he went home.

Next day, Wikwanul did not hunt but returned to the place, drew out the piece of the bird's body, and dried it over a fire, as if he were toasting salmon for winter use. At night he went home, still refraining from telling anyone what he had done. For four days he cured the meat, then carefully closed the niche and went away.

For one year Wikwanul did not hunt. Then he reopened the recess and saw that the meat was fresh and juicy, as if newly prepared. He left it in place, but drew forth the droppings and carried them off in a small bag. Fortune followed him. By using a small piece of the solidified grease on his traps he had wonderful success. At length Wikwanul told his fellow-villagers what he had obtained and they were envious of his good luck. He continued to prosper, and at last sold the droppings for a large amount of goods, though he carefully preserved the section of the body itself. When an old man, he showed his son where it was concealed and the latter likewise prospered throughout his life, owing to this possession. When he became old, he in turn told his son about it, so that the young man had the same good fortune as his father and grandfather. But the great-grandson was too lazy to take the trouble of going with his father to the place where the section of the bird was hidden, so the treasure was lost.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

A fourth giver of supernatural good fortune is one of the mythical creatures termed snaxg. This variety lives in the ocean, or rarely in rivers, and can occasionally be seen resting on the surface with its long, golden tresses floating on the water. The hair appears always to be flecked with eagle down, but in reality it is a mass of barnacles, the equivalent of this substance to this under-sea dweller. If the observer is brave, he will paddle cautiously near until he can twist a lock of the hair around his paddle and break it off. He must not touch it with his hands, but must dangle it outside the canoe, still wrapped about his paddle, until he reaches the shore, when he must conceal it in some lonely place for one year. After that period he can use a single hair, or piece of one, as bait; it will be enough to attract animals to his traps or salmon to his weir, exactly as with the mountain goat grease ornament of a qakin-i or a stick that has come in contact with a giant toad. If the person who has jerked off the hair with his paddle should be foolish or ignorant enough to bring his spoil into his canoe, he, and all with him, are rendered incapable of movement and the craft with its occupants sinks beneath the sea.

The father's cousin of an informant once saw one of these animals when paddling in company with several companions to Kimsquit. The sea was smooth as glass when their attention was attracted by a number of small ripples, spreading in a half-moon shape from what they realized was the head of a snaxg. The hair crossed the ripples, but did not rise or fall with them. The back of the animal's head was nearest the canoe so the opportunity seemed favourable for obtaining some of its hair. Cautiously the men paddled nearer, but at the last moment the steersman feared to drive the canoe in among the golden tresses, so veered off and the craft passed along one side of the mass of hair. The animal had shown no sign of being aware of their presence, but it now began to turn away,

[illegible] B-9 [illegible]
NEX Bellacoola NEX

"It seems as if you attracted the salmon like a magnet," said the father to his son.

The latter did not answer immediately, but later he said:

"You were right," and he told him what had happened.

"You have obtained supernatural good luck," the old man replied simply.

Following his son's instructions the father prepared canoe and house to bring back the flesh of the Mother of Salmon. They collected every scrap of it, which they preserved very carefully, and used small portions as bait to attract salmon to their weir with such success that they became wealthy.

Another supernatural being from whom supernatural good fortune may be obtained is Nowaxdi-ox, "The Female Monster." When a chief dies she comes to wail, wandering through the woods near the village, where sometimes she can be seen in the form of a weeping woman. As she cries, she ejects mucus from her nose, which solidifies into a glass-like substance about a foot in length. Anyone who sees her should take the transformed mucus, and wrap it in some article of his own clothing; it will bring him good fortune. About midnight of June 11, 1910, the infant daughter of a Bella Coola died, and about seven o'clock on the following morning the wailing was heard in the woods behind the missionary's house. The brother of the dead child's father ranked off to try to find the weeping one. Luckily he did not succeed, because he did not know about collecting the mucus, and trouble would have come to him had he seen the supernatural being without knowing how to deal with it; in fact, even to hear Nowaxdi-ox is considered as cause of death.

It will be seen from the foregoing specific instances that supernatural good luck is usually obtained by the slaying of some powerful creature. But, since every living creature is endowed with superhuman power, it follows that any object obtained from a bird or an animal that has acted in a peculiar way may be the cause of supernatural good fortune if it be kept for one year in the manner previously described. Some-

When the Bella Coola believe that it was heard, the incident is recorded as a fact.

777 stone a man finds a piece of the thick bark of the fir in one of
* 777 his traps. If he throw it away nothing happens, but if he conceal
● [223] it in a hidden enemy for one year and then use it for bait he will have supernatural good luck. Another bringer of good fortune is a green rock, about two feet in diameter, sometimes found far in the forest. There is no danger attached to the appearance of either of these manifestations of the supernatural, which have merely the potential ability to bestow good fortune if the person seeing them knows and practises the proper ritual.

777 Sometimes, long ago, when a number of seals were seen
* 777 approaching the shore a man would notice that they were peculiar. One would disappear beneath the surface, to emerge 223 as a beaver, the beaver would vanish beneath the waves only to come up as a bear, a mountain goat, a deer, or some other animal. If a hunter wished to have phenomenal success at goat hunting, for example, he would wait until one of the seals appeared as a goat and then kill it. The carcass would drift ashore, as a seal, but on being cut open a stone shaped like a mountain goat would always be found in the stomach. To obtain success the hunter would wrap this in a piece of worn clothing, and hide it away beneath an overhanging ledge in some lonely spot in the woods. If left there for one year the stone became a magnet, and its owner, carrying it with him on his hunting expeditions, had amazing success. He had obtained supernatural good fortune, for one particular object. If, after carving upon the seal-mountain goat, the hunter failed to wrap up the stone in some of his clothing it vanished of its own accord.

The last Bella Coola to have supernatural good luck from this source was Ulnis, who died about 1900. His extraordinary success as a hunter was derived from a number of stones which his father had obtained from the stomachs of seals in the form of land animals. His prosperity ended when he sold his collection of stones to a Bella Bella man who still uses them with great effect.

of these demi-gods of antiquity are favourite themes for stories. The powers of the lower shamans have been far less than those of their forefathers, and their exploits have been of a somewhat different character. Hence it is possible to divide the subject into three sections:

(a) Shamanism in the distant past.
(b) Modern shamanism.
(c) Shamans from the dead.

SHAMANISM IN THE DISTANT PAST

Information on this phase is contained in stories and a few traditions which describe the achievements of ancient demi-gods, endowed with miraculous powers of various kinds. The rules are similar in type to those dealing with the granting of supernatural aid to the unfortunate, so that it is in many cases difficult to differentiate them. As might be expected these narratives are not exact. Frequently the teller does not know from what being the ancient shaman received his power, nor can he explain the abilities described, which are different from, and superior to, those with which he is familiar. In fact it is necessary to describe any mythical hero as a shaman.

Tales of this kind can be related by any man; they are not the personal property of a specific family. Many of them, that of Wanuk'a, for example, are well known and are told and retold constantly.

In addition to information obtained from stories, a few isolated facts are remembered regarding ancient shamans. It is thought that various taboos connected with hunting were imposed by them in the distant past. Such restrictions not infrequently were firmly believed in and strictly adhered to until a few years ago, and many of them are still observed. The usual method of hunting harbopsin ducks is, or was until recently, from a canoe, with a angling net up in the bow to hide the hunter, attached with bow and arrow in readiness; several shamans, however, were able to kill the birds by merely waving the butt-end of a paddle towards them. Such power

[illegible] THE [illegible] CHOLA [illegible]

539
* 754
775

As he sang, smoke could be seen rising from behind the house; the youth could see that it came from Parvatam's fire, but the song explained that it was sent down for their mental guest. The singer repeated his song; more smoke ascended from another place, which the lad saw was Mountain Goat's fire. The song was sung again and again, and at each repetition new smoke could be seen, from the fires of Deer, Black Bear, Wildcat, Marten, Beaver, Wolverine, in fact from all animals except Grizzly Bear. The chief explained to his guest that whenever he wanted meat he could go hunting and would be able to see the smoke rising from the fires of various animals.[1]

"Tomorrow you will return home," he continued. "Your brothers (meaning the four wolves that had saved him) will go with you to carry some presents."

Next morning (it was really a year later) the wolves tied up gifts of smoked meat in blankets woven of goat wool and sewn blankets of wildcat, black bear, and marten. The meat, though a large quantity, was reduced to a small compass that the four animals carried it without difficulty. The five travelled back to the spot where the two brothers had sat down to make their ceremony, and at that point the wolves returned to their home.

Now for the first time the lad remembered his brother, and began to weep bitterly, thinking that he must be dead. But presently he heard the sound of footsteps inside the cave through which the porcupine had guided him, they grew nearer, until the younger boy emerged. The elder was overjoyed, but his delight was turned to dismay when he saw that his brother's face was green and haggard, with a strange expression, that he had lost all the fluid from his body, and that his clothes, the same that he had worn when they parted company, were now in tatters. His brother's appearance affected him so much that he fell down dead. The younger lad, however, had been made a shaman by the dead, so he quickly restored his brother. Then exchanged experiences, the younger saying that the dead had given him the name Kipuka. His appearance was really improved when he clad himself in a black bear blanket and new moccasins sewn together by the other from the village of the wolves. The two returned home, entering the house secretly and lying down as over [1] "It is believed that the souls of animals are reincarnated in the human body. Souls which have lived in animals are known different forms. To the ordinary person they appear as beasts, but to souls that have been reincarnating there is harmony living beasts, living shadows and other souls. An individual who is able to see the souls of dead then will have no difficulty in finding the bodies of the animals and hence will have great success in hunting. The spirit was also had one to avoid one Grizzly Bear, the one in form that passing the souls to dangerous.

Dominion Archaeologist E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

in his sleep, and hopes that it will grant him specific supernatural power. He realizes that he could increase the probability of obtaining this by ceremonial chastity, and believes that it would come to him if he went alone to the woods and fasting for some time. Another means would be to concentrate his thoughts upon the desired end, but X is too good a Christian to do so; he is in the unhappy position of knowing one such of two religions to be able to practise either unnaturally. Such experiences are not likely to occur to any but a man of high-strung, imaginative temperament, to whom dreams and mental excitements appear especially vivid. X is intensely religious, so that it is easy for him to interpret every phenomenon in terms of the supernatural. It will be noted that most of the dreams just described took place when he was sick, precisely the time when hallucinations are to be expected. They were more coherent than those of most Bella Coola, though the difference is one of degree rather than of kind.

Most dreams are comparatively simple, and the information received in them is intelligible. They come to all, irrespective of rank or prerogative. Nevertheless, it is believed that an inheritable tendency runs in some families; this does not mean that all members of such a group dream constantly, but they are more likely to do so than others. Those occurring at the winter solstice are more carefully observed than at other times, since it is then that the supernatural beings decide events for the coming year and a man's spirit may be able to inform him of what has been decided. Consequently, as soon as Hamatsa enters Nawadi'a, wise men separate from their wives and concentrate on dreaming, hoping to learn what is in store for them. For instance, if a man sees himself seated before a large pile of goods, he knows that he will have the good fortune to do this during the coming year; on the other hand, if he foresees ill luck, it means that he will be unfortunate. Another time when dreams are especially desired is before the summer solstice when hunters in particular observe ceremonial chastity. This purification not only increases the likelihood of such experiences, but adds to the reliability of their prognostications. At that season, if a hunter dreams that he will not be successful, he remains at home knowing that it will be useless for him to seek game. 787* [785] [224]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

Though dreams are considered and remembered most carefully at the solstices, it must not be imagined that they are disregarded at other seasons. Often there is neither mental picture nor apparition, merely a voice, the sound of which indicates that the hearer will be fortunate the following day. Instead of a voice without body, a dream may consist of a speechless apparition which indicates by gestures the fate in store for the dreamer. One elderly Bella Coola who keeps a small shop states that he can usually tell in this way whether or not he will sell much goods during the coming day. Many years ago, after frequent visits from a being of this kind, the man became the leading fisherman for one of the canneries; he attributed his success to his nameless benefactor, for whose benefit he threw a number of small pieces of food into the fire. Occasionally, specific information or advice is received. On one occasion, when this same man was ill, he dreamt that a supernatural being appeared and told him to wash in the river, that it was breath to all human beings; he did so regularly, and was soon restored to health. Sometimes the information is with regard to the future. On the night of January 15, 1914, he dreamt that two naked Carriers were standing beside his bed. He asked them what they wanted, and why they were without clothing. 159 787*

"We always appear as an omen of trouble in the land," they answered.

Next day there was a heavy fall of snow which he regarded as fulfilling the prophecy. The dreamer was X, the man of imaginative temperament who had beheld the white and black supernatural beings. These instances illustrate the manner in which the same individual has repeated experiences of similar type. X claims that he began to dream when a small child, 787 and that his mother stated that all her ancestors had done likewise.

[59]

Another instance of advice conveyed in this manner was told by a Kimsquit man who related that a number of years ago a pregnant woman had dreamed that Alquntów appeared to her and told her not to destroy what she would presently bear. In due course she was delivered, but the infant was a repulsive cripple, blind and deformed. Remembering the admonition, the mother refused to slay her child as many of her friends advised. Soon it was apparent that he was supernaturally endowed; as proof of this he repeated comments which had been made to his mother within a few minutes of his birth. As he grew older he developed shamanistic powers so that he was able to converse with the dead, the only instance known of this ability being granted from birth. He also had wonderful talent as a singer and, though he must have died about 1850, the Bella Coola still recount his skill in this respect. He would unquestionably have been killed but for his mother's warning.

[847]

787

Instead of imparting verbal information, dreams frequently foretell the future by means of images of events about to happen. For example, if a man dreams of owning large numbers of pelts, it signifies that he will have success in hunting, and he starts for his trap-line without delay. So, too, warnings are conveyed. A number of years ago a slave woman of Sawl, who was not a member of the Sawlw society, dreamt that she saw herself hewn in many pieces and lying covered with blood. Within a few days she met a Cannibal dancer (II, p. 70), who was supposed to have vanished into the land above; he killed her and lacerated her body, as she had seen. A Kimsquit man told of a similar instance that happened to a member of the party with which he had been hunting a number of years previously. One night he was wakened by one of his companions, Tsilin, calling out that he was afraid because he had dreamt that one side of their canoe was charred. The hunters were impressed, because they knew he had long ob-

* 787 If a woman dreams that she has caught two salmon, two 843 small birds, or is holding two infants, the birth of twins is foretold. This type of explanation is obvious; in fact, these examples lie on the border-line between direct and symbolic interpretations.

* 787 Another indication of approaching pregnancy is for a 843 woman to dream of a dead relative; this means that the latter
775 will soon be re-born. An elderly Kimsquit man mentioned that some fifty years earlier his mother dreamt that her dead mother came to her, saying that she was lonesome and wished to return. Soon afterwards she conceived, and the daughter [35] born was considered to be the reincarnation of her own grandmother whose names she was promptly given. At the present time, this informant addresses his sister as sister, though he states that as a child he was taught to call her grandmother. As already mentioned, if a new-born infant is a reincarnation, the fact can often be recognized by holes or dimples in the ears, relics of previous boxings for rings. Unless such a birth has been foretold in a dream, it is impossible to know whom the child re-embodies.

* 787 A dream of frequent occurrence in Bella Coola is the return [76] of the sleeper to the scenes and activities of his childhood. This always signifies a long life. Strangely enough, to dream of being sealed in one's coffin and carried to the grave is translated conversely, and likewise indicates a long life. It is remembered that there were many dreams of fire before the [731] outbreak of the smallpox epidemic, so it has since been assumed that such presage an outbreak of this disease.

* 787 The only dreams of which the interpretations are wholly
● 224 symbolic are those experienced by hunters. The Bella Coola [785] explain this by saying that hunters always observe ceremonial chastity and their spirits are, therefore, in a receptive condition to supernatural impressions. When a man has set his traps, he is able to tell from his dreams whether or not any animals have been caught.

To dream that a canoe has been upset in the river and that

1:McIlwraith E-3 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NES

a lad has been drowned in spite of efforts to rescue him, means that a beaver has been caught.

To dream of seeing a Bacchus dancer in full costume means that a fisher, lynx, wolverine, mountain goat, wolf, or black bear has been caught.

To dream of fighting people, especially if arrows are used, means that a grizzly bear has been caught.

To dream of playing children means that deer will be seen the following day.

To dream of swimming means that an otter has been caught.

To dream of fondling a woman and playing with her breasts means that a marten has been caught.

Obscene dreams mean that squirrels or pack-rats have been caught.

To dream of a woman with whom the hunter has held illicit intercourse means that absolutely nothing has been caught.

Until recent years these interpretations were believed without question and no hunter bothered to exercise his ingenuity when he had received such indications of success. A hunter's wife likewise obtains information of her husband's fortune in dreams.

All dreams cannot be translated. One man, for example, stated that in his sleep he had often seen a supernatural being enter his house, turn to the left, pick up one of the heavy floor boards and carry it around the fire as if it had been a tray. The apparition always told him to do likewise, but though he has tried repeatedly in his dreams, he has always found it too heavy. Such an image might serve a shaman as theme for a dramatic performance, though, of course, the element of curing the sick would be lacking. Another dream experienced several times by the same man when ill is that of being carried with the speed of light to a flat land somewhat similar to this, but located on the top of a range of lofty mountains. It contains numerous grassy meadows studded with trees of which the mother, "The Eldest," and her spoken of him as the oldest of all animals. He gave guide said:

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[534] [787] [725]

"I am going to help you a account of your woes. Henceforth you will be able to see the smoke rising from the houses of the different animals."[1]

Thanks to the assistance vas vouchsafed to him, the lad was able to save his family from starvation.

THE FORTUNATE GLUTTON[2]

About four generations ago there was living in Bella Coola a young man who had a prodigious appetite. He used to eat everything, including even quantities of rotten salmon eggs and other putrid foods until arms, face, and stomach all becomefat, oily, and flabby, and he gave off an offensive smell. He was a chief and had married a chief's daughter, but she left him because of his grease and stench. Then he took another girl, who in turn deserted him. Its parents arranged for him one marriage after another until he had became the husband of every available chief's daughter, but no one would lay with him because of his objectionable odour. Finally he married a poor girl who alone remained faithful and bore him a child. The glutto determined to improve his appearance. Accordingly, he obtained a big quantity of mountain goat grease and eagle feathers; then, taking one with him, he left the village and his family without saying whythe was going, in fact, he did not know himself.

He went up the west bar of the Nechetazeeney River until it became a mere brook, then crossed over and returned down the east bank, covering his path with eagle feathers. Then he went up the north bank of the Bella Coola River, protecting every affluent coming from the north; in each case he went onto the west bank, crossed the stream where it had become a rivulet and descended on the east side, all the time leaving behind him a trail of eagle feathers, and all the time eating nothing but the goat grease which he carried with him. When he had penetrated far into the upper reaches of Bella Coola River, he crossed it and descended to south bank, retraversing all tributaries as before. Near the Whitewater he heard a number of young girls singing happily, and a little below this place he comes his own village.

---

[1] In every Bella Coola tradition, animals appear to human form to mortals only. They really have their own lodges, dances, and other forms of activity in which they partake in human shape. If one who is fortunate enough to obtain supernatural aid enabling him to see dwellings from their houses can really hear them, and then have phenomenal psychic hearing.

[2] For another version of this story see Boas, p. 108.

[724]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

#539 #787 his identity until, last of all, came his faithful wife with their child. He returned to her and in the course of time became wealthy.

THE GOOD FORTUNE OF Tsoiolid

Long, long ago, there lived at Kimsquit a very successful hunter whose name was Tsoiolid. One day, during a great famine, he went into the mountains carrying, like all hunters, a walking-stick about eight feet long.* Tsoiolid met Tsoaltlit, the supernatural hunter, who like himself was carrying a stick and was accompanied by a dog. Tsoaltlit greeted him: [224]

"I hereby give you good fortune. Let us exchange sticks. Do not hunt until tomorrow, then make the motion of hurling my staff at mountain goats and they will fall dead."

"I am delighted," Tsoiolid replied. Tsoaltlit continued:

"I must give you some instructions. When you leave this spot do not go either up or down; keep on the same level around the mountain. When you hunt tomorrow, first kill a porcupine, because he is the oldest of all animals. If you fail to do so, you will lose your power."

Then Tsoaltlit vanished, and Tsoiolid moved on, taking care neither to go up or down. Presently the spot on which he had been standing fell away in a landslide, such as is caused only by Tsoaltlit or a sasud. Famous hunters have sometimes seen Tsoaltlit's stick moving, or the impressions of it on the ground, and from these visions have gained extraordinary ability to see game; but Tsoiolid alone obtained supernatural good fortune from this hunter, owing to the stick given to him. The exchange was of equal value to Tsoaltlit, since the staff which he obtained was as potent among supernatural beings as his among mortals. Tsoiolid was especially lucky, obtaining, as he did, supernatural good fortune on two separate occasions. [224]

When he returned home he concealed the stick in a tree, though there was really no need for doing so, because, as a supernatural possession, it was invisible to ordinary mortals. He did not tell his wife what had happened to him, and she was very angry at him when, for a whole year, he did not hunt to provide his family with food; this was because he remembered that to the supernatural man "tomorrow" means "next year." It was a time of famine, and the family of Tsoiolid was saved from starvation only by the food which he had stored up previously. When a year had elapsed he went hunting, spending four days in procuring a porcupine before pursuing other game. His success was prodigious, in fact but for his efforts the whole village would have been

*Whole of hemlock, spruce, or fir, minus of nature.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NES Bellacoola NES

blotted out by starvation.* His fame was so great that many people brought their infant daughters to him as wives.

Tsuiskit had a brother and a sister. The former, whose name was Sisoc, was driven by famine to Kisiquat in the country of the cutang people below Kimsquit. Here he, too, obtained supernatural good fortune from Tsuiskit, in exactly the same way as his brother, and like him saved the whole population from starvation. The sister had been married to a Bella Coola, by whom she had two daughters. When one of them, a girl about fifteen years old, had starved to death, the people determined to abandon their village and seek refuge with Sisoc among the cutang. On the way there, they camped on the shore of Lekouchore Channel, where the remaining daughter was bitten on the arm by a pack-rat, as she lay sleeping beside her mother in a cave. Weakened by lack of food the mother died, and her husband abandoned her corpse and his injured daughter. Some time later a party of Bella Coola chanced to land at the same spot, found the deserted girl still alive, and carried her to her mother's brother, who looked after her. Though angry at his sister's husband, he did not wish to start a feud; to have done so would have grieved his sister, as well as have shown disrespect for the man his dead sister had loved.

During the four years that the famine lasted no berries ripened and there was a universal lack of food of every kind. Soon after it had ended, Tsuiskit went to the Bella Coola town of Algaiskut to obtain a second wife. He married a young woman, but for almost a year neither slept with her nor went hunting, omissions which so angered her mother that she chided him one day for his failure to carry on his previous occupation. Annoyed by her criticism, Tsuiskit left the house. Several of those who had heard her upbraided the old woman for speaking harshly to the famous hunter and her daughter joined in the chorus of disapproval. Although it was winter, Tsuiskit caught four geese which he carried home, using his blanket as a pack, and dumped them on the floor before his mother-in-law without saying a word. She fell dead instantly; the sudden news had caused the spirit to leave her body. Tsuiskit might have used the stick obtained from Tsuiskilit, which had in it the power of life and death, but inasmuch he had merely used the accumulated power which was his through long continuance. In fact he never disclosed the power of his stick.

*The method of hunting introduced by Tsuiskit has since been employed by all who hunters. Whenever a porcupine is seen the observer calls it, saying:

"Poosa, may your younger brothers and sisters come."

A man always tries to kill a porcupine when he starts on a hunting trip, and if one should appear when he is stalking bigger game he will stop to kill it, knowing that the chase on spot will not be wanted.

[224]

1:McIlwraith E-9 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

[534] [787] [356] sons, of whom the eldest was about sixteen, though old enough to appreciate the slights put upon their father, could do nothing to defend him.

On a winter day one of these lads felt impelled to follow a trail down the north side of the Bella Coola valley along the edge of salt water. The weather had been cold for some time, but on this day it was so warm that he lay down to doze on the warm rocks. Near his head was a small opening which connected with a long passage to the ocean, and through this he presently heard the heavy breathing of sleeping seals. His burning desires aroused, he went to the edge of the steep crag overlooking the sea and dived in. He bravely penetrated into a narrow passage which led him under the rocks, until with his last gasp he emerged into a cave where there were countless seals. Waiting only a moment, and without disturbing the animals, he dived back through the passage safely.

[411] When he reached home the lad said nothing about what he had seen, but that evening he began to make a seal-spear of the usual type with a wooden handle and a bone point. He asked his father to help him with the carpentry work, and his mother to make a rope for the harpoon head. Though surprised at their son's energy, the parents did as he requested, but the fellow-villagers mocked at his efforts, for the lad was no hunter.

Next morning he asked his father to accompany him, and the two set off in a canoe, carrying the spear which had been made the previous evening. Before starting, the lad requested one of his brothers to have a fire ready for cooking the seal that night. Father and son paddled to the entrance of the subterranean passage, though the old man was, of course, ignorant of its existence. The elder told him to wait, and dived overboard, armed only with a club, for the seal-spear had really been unnecessary. He penetrated through the passage and at once killed a seal pup, less than year, with which he returned to the canoe. The lad explained nothing to his father, so that it seemed to the latter as if his son had dived down into the depths and there slain a seal, after remaining below for an amazingly long time.

When the two returned to the village they were greeted with a shower of laughter at the small size of their quarry. In derision, the villagers took the pup from them and threw it from hand to hand, as if it were a ball.

[224] [225] [574] [554] As already described, it is customary whenever a man kills a deer, a mountain goat, several seals, or any other large game, for him to invite his fellows to a feast. The number of guests depends on the size of the quarry, but in all cases the chiefs are the first to be invited and anyone who fails to do so is laughed at for his stinginess. On this occasion the seal-pup was obviously so small that any general invitation to partake of it was ludicrous. Nevertheless, the lad felt a humiliation in invite not only

1:Mc:Dwrath E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA DeLacosta NEA

534
756
787
[284]

brother the proper methods of hunting, and how to find bears when strengthened by chastity, without which no hunter can have success. He alone of her brothers was worthy to learn this, because he was still celibate. Among other things she taught him never to hunt bears with arrows fashioned with owl feathers, because she had been told by her husband that one of his fellows shot with such a missile would remain dead, whereas one shot with an arrow tipped with feathers from any other bird would be robust.

The women and her youngest brother hunted constantly, and always returned with skins which they shared with everyone. The other three brothers were very jealous, though their own lack of success was due to their laziness, and failure to observe ceremonial chastity. At intervals the bear used to visit his human wife, and after a year or more she went away with him, never to return.

THE WOMAN WHO MARRIED A BEAR

(Second Version)

Long, long ago, a Cowichan Indian girl was walking along a path on the back of the village when she saw some black bear's dung. She looked to to one side saying aloud:

"Who is so dirty as to defecate here?"

Then she wiped her feet on the grass and went on. Presently, she met a handsome, well-dressed man, a stranger, who asked her if she had recently met anyone.

"No," she replied.

He invited the girl to come and visit him in his house, and she agreed to do so. The trail was long, but in her it caused alarm, owing to his power. Arrived at his house, the stranger asked her to marry him and she consented. When it was bed-time the girl collected soft hemlock boughs to sleep upon.

"I never use such stuff," said her same magnify, as she went out again and brought back devil's club, and gooseberry bushes, saying to him:

"I consent to my choice."

"I always do," he replied.

Then, the man bade her collect fire wood, and she brought some dry sticks from a shed, but he said:

"That does not hold the heat," and he sent her out again.

This time she brought back cedar and he was pleased.

"That is good," he said, "I always use them. Now let us have a meal."

"I don't see anything to eat," she replied, but her husband pulled out

McQuesten E-5 (1922-1924)948
NES Bellacoola NEI

It is said that one man accidentally swallowed when spitting on a toad, and swallowed the creature. It lived within his stomach for fifty years, causing no discomfort though its master could feel it moving, and its singing could be heard at intervals. This brought him no supernatural power, although he was enabled by it to live to a great age. When at last he died, the toad came hopping out of his throat and was escorted respectfully to the river by his friends who covered the creature with eagle down and dyed and undyed cedar-bark.

Some of the cures already described with regard to animals and fish are similar in nature to this medicine.

789
825
886

To Cause Obesity

A medicine was formerly used by chiefs to make themselves fat and important-looking, but details of it have been forgotten.

789
826
622

To Cause Ability in Singing

Catch an amoxi (varied thrush?) alive and put it in your canoe against the throat of the woman to whom it is desired to impart the art, saying:

"May she be a singer like you."

Release the bird and the woman will become a good singer.

This bird is considered by the Bella Coola to be the best singer among British Columbia birds, and they say that many animals and fish, including even the halibut, grew to hear its singing.

533
789
825

To Cause Ability in Hunting

There is a poisonous plant which, when eaten, almost kills the eater. If he recovers, he is henceforth endowed with great ability as a hunter. The species could not be ascertained.

224
789
824

To Cause Change in Weather

If a mild wind is desired: Place the penis of a mouse, goat or beaver on a fire.

If rain is desired: Wash the penis of a large bird and throw it into the ocean or a river, saying:

789
821
825

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

that the proximity of such intensely human articles is enough to counteract and render powerless anything of a superhuman nature. Likewise, when a certain woman came in contact with the War-Party of the Tides and began to exhibit symptoms of insanity, she was cured by drinking water in which other women had squeezed out their menstrual pads. Another defence is the burning of dried salmon, fumigation from which is particularly effective for one who suffers from nightmares. Other remedies already mentioned are to cut the right leg and smear a bullet with the resultant blood in order to kill a cuna, and to lacerate the inside of the mouth and spit to withstand a capsizing mountain.

The medicine most commonly taken is false hellebore, the use of which was learnt by some ancient shaman. At dusk a hunter should eat a small twig of it, raw; it draws from his stomach everything injurious, particularly women's hairs, which are abhorred by animals, and ensures him success on the morrow. If he takes too much of it, he becomes ill and must swallow the antidote, mountain goat grease or marrow. He should also carry twigs of the plant with him, ready either to swallow or throw in the direction of any dreaded supernatural being whom he may encounter. Eagle down and dried salmon roe are sometimes similarly used.

The powers of a person who has obtained supernatural ability, whether or not he is a shaman, can be destroyed by similar means. For example, a lad treated so that he understands the speech of ravens, will lose his ability if he eats food cooked or prepared by a menstruating woman, by one who has lost her husband within the last year, or if he passes through the hole in the floor used by an adolescent girl. The last Bella Coola with this skill was deadened to the meaning of the birds' croaking by lying near his sister one night for warmth, since her mere proximity was enough to nullify his power. This aspect of medicine merges with taboos. So, too, the power of an object can be destroyed by washing; an instance of this is

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

phases of activity, leaving here only certain rules about diet and a number of prohibitions which hunters must observe. 784

FOOD TABOOS OBSERVED BY WOMEN 212

Women must not eat bear meat. To do so would derange the catamenia and cause profuse growth of hair. 562

Women of child-bearing age must not eat beaver. To do so would cause a difficult delivery. [841] [826]

A woman of child-bearing age must not eat roasted salmon until the sticks have been removed which hold it in front of the fire. She will bear twins if this injunction is disregarded. [844] [845]

TABOOS OBSERVED BY HUNTERS

No hunter or fisherman may leave the village in the morning if he has been foolish enough to break the night's fast. It is customary to depart at dawn and take a small meal when nearing the hunting or fishing-ground. 224 [226] [264]

No hunter may drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked. Animals dislike this liquid and avoid a man with it in his stomach.

When traps have been set, and a party of hunters is sitting around the camp-fire in the evening, no one must pass between it and one of his fellows. If this should be done, heedlessly, animals would disregard the bait that has been set out.

When mountain goat hunters are travelling, the most expert must lead the party. When he sits down, so must the others, and no one can change places with him. This is said to be a custom of the Carriers as well as of the Bella Coola. [171]

When a hunter is cutting up a bear, he must be careful not to cut a vein which is said to run across the chest and down each fore-paw. To do so causes sickness. [825] [753]

When a hunter kills a bear, he must place either the skull or the whole head in a tree near the scene of the kill, otherwise he will become blind. In some families, the man removes only an eye, place it in a notched stick and set this under an over- [753]

Ishkulwatth E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NES

224 hanging rock where no rain can penetrate. Long ago, some [182] hunter failed to do this and became blind in consequence, hence the rite has since been carried out.

When a hunter is in the field, his wife must not swing. To do this causes him to go up into lofty and dangerous places as she rises on the swing, and also destroys the power laboriously accumulated by ceremonial chastity.

Ritual Acts

196 Ceremonialism is an extremely important aspect of Bella
226 Coola life, but most of their rites are social or religious rather 189 than magical, so that descriptions of them belong to other chapters. In connection with the taking of the first olachen and salmon, however, a number of ritual acts are performed to bring about desired ends; the element of propitiation is not entirely absent, but on the whole they may be considered as magical.

Rites connected with the first olachen

226 At the height of the olachen run, the fish are so abundant
196 that they can be taken profitably in large purse-nets. They 574 do not, however, come simultaneously, and eager fishermen keep watching for their arrival and catching the struggling fore-runners in hand dip-nets. These fish must not be eaten immediately. Each fisherman arranges a box in the front part of his house in which he deposits them as taken; if several men are doing this in a single dwelling, one box for each will be arranged near the front door. Whenever a dance is held, eagle down is blown over the receptacle to placate the olachen and prevent them from being disturbed by the noise. As soon as a man has caught enough for a feast, he invites all his fellows to his house and the fish are distributed. It is taboo for any woman to share this meal, and it is most improper for a man to summon his neighbours until he has enough olachen to allow each guest to carry home a plentiful supply for his family. In former times, there used to be a number of meals of this kind,

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

#534 "I suppose you have been misbehaving with the lad," he continued. "That is the meaning of your anger."

"Yes," replied his wife. "What are you going to do about it?"

Tsuklilit said no more, nor did he show any resentment; instead he hospitably prepared a comfortable bed for the youth.

"Don't go to sleep," Ainsmamdm whispered to him. "If he gets a chance, Tsuklilit always kills my lovers, and unless you keep awake he will murder you. When he yawns, you do the same."

As darkness settled down Tsuklilit yawned noisily, saying:

"When I have been out on the mountains all day it makes me yawn, but I cannot go to sleep."

"It affects me the same way," answered the young man, as he too yawned noisily.

This continued for hours; whenever Tsuklilit yawned the youth imitated him, and neither went to sleep.

It was dawn before Tsuklilit fell asleep and began to snore. Ainsmamdm had warned the lad what to do if this happened, so he rose silently, took Tsuklilit's stick,* which was planted upright beside the sleeper, and pointed it at him. Tsuklilit died instantly, as this was the weapon with which he was wont to kill mountain goats by merely pointing.

Up to this time Tsuklilit had always slain his wife's lovers by causing the planks beneath the bed to turn over so that the occupant was precipitated down a chasm, at the bottom of which there was a pile of bones of those he had murdered in this way. It was because Ainsmamdm loved the lad that she not only saved him but showed him how to kill her husband.

The young man did not return to his home, but continued to live with Ainsmamdm, who made him immortal. He assumed the name and occupation of Tsuklilit and it is he who has been seen by fortunate hunters even within recent years. If the evil old Tsuklilit had not been destroyed there would still be many casualties, but his successor, himself once a hunter, is of a kindly disposition and often gives aid to mortals in their pursuit of game. The old people used to say that unless Tsuklilit helped a hunter he would be unable to kill mountain goats at all.

THE MURDER OF Tsuklilit
(Second Version)

Long ago hunters venturing into the mountains in pursuit of goats

[481] [324]

*A straight stick about seven feet long such as is carried by all hunters when they go into the mountains to assist them in climbing. Tsuklilit always carries one.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

F 539
682

ment was intense. One of the chiefs told two boys who were excellent shots to fire, but another interrupted, saying:

"This is too weighty a matter for mere lads."

He himself covered Sukukmdu·a and made ready to press the trigger. The murderer, seeing his fellow-tribesmen in the vicinity, tried to stall for time.

"Please do not shoot me," he called out. "I have always been terrified to die that way, please use a knife."

"Some of those you slew were probably terrified of muskets too," the self-appointed executioner grimly replied.

"Wait just a moment," Sukukmdu·a pleaded. "I want to speak to my kinsmen."

"So probably did several of those you shot," came the terse answer.

Then the chief fired and Sukukmdu·a fell dead. The Chilkotin were armed and seemed on the point of rushing forward to revenge their relative, but the chief took another musket, brandished it in their direction, and said:

"All right. The dogs will eat you too."

A Chilkotin chief pointed out that the Bella Coola were armed and in overwhelming numbers, so advised his angry followers to withdraw. Thus the incident closed without further bloodshed. Some state that Sukukmdu·a's corpse was given to his relatives, others that it was buried by the kukuxiur alone in a large grave, beneath the body of Nusmlsta.

F 539
224

A SUCCESSFUL HUNT

One September, between 1840 and 1850, a certain Sāuxumdxots was preparing for a potlatch. Taking twenty men with him as packers, he set out for mountain goats up the valley of the Sāxlyenuts, which flows into the main Bella Coola from the north, nearly opposite Mount Nusqalst. They camped at a suitable spot, and for several days Sāuxumdxots hunted with fair success. On one occasion, when out with his son, he happened to notice a number of female goats on a narrow point of rock, beneath which there was a sheer drop to a jagged pile of boulders. Quickly realizing that there was only one approach to the point where the animals were standing, Sāuxumdxots told his son to remain below while he climbed up to stalk his quarry. With extreme caution, he succeeded in getting between the goats and the only line of escape; then he knew they were his, and stood up boldly. He shot two or three, and stampeded the rest into plunging over the precipice where they were crushed to death on the rocks far beneath. The successful hunter climbed down to where his son had remained and the two carried one of the carcasses out to the trail where the packers were to meet them. They were not due to arrive for several hours, so Sûnaxmûnaxs cooked the goat and had a plentiful meal ready for his followers. They asked whether he had had any luck, and he answered casually that his son had killed one, but when they expressed regret at his lack of fortune, Sûnaxmûnaxs pointed to the pile of dead goats, visible in the distance, and said: 539* 224

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

"See what my son killed."

Never before had there been such a slaughter of goats at one time, and it was obvious that no time could be lost if the meat was to be smoked before winter. Fortunately, there was a large cave in the vicinity where they established their headquarters. The packers were divided into two parties; some brought in the carcasses, while others kept a fire smouldering, tended the drying meat, and boiled out the grease. It was a slow process and there was a heavy snowfall before it was finished. The snow drifted into the narrow valley to such a depth that it was impossible to think of leaving. The beleaguered hunters were well provided with food; melted snow gave them water, and the cave was sufficient shelter, so their confinement was more irksome than dangerous. Nor did it prove profitless. The smell of food attracted two martens which were so unafraid that they were killed with sticks. All the hunters began to make traps which soon provided them with enough skins to make several of the much-prized blankets. 539* [251] [257]

So the winter dragged away. The wife of one of the packers had a reputation for faithlessness and her husband's companions used to tease him by saying that his wife would have remarried before he got home. This wore on his nerves until he determined to try to reach the village in spite of the snow. He constructed a pair of snow-shoes and set out, carrying with him enough marten-skins for four blankets, packed in a sack made from the stomach of one of the goats. The journey was less difficult than he had feared; he camped for one night, and reached his own village soon after dusk of the next day. Looking through the doorway, he saw his father throwing food into the fire and realized that someone must have died. He called out anxiously, but his parents, who had long since abandoned hope for his son's safety, could not believe that his voice was real, and was not convinced until he actually stood before him. The long-absent one asked for whom the food was being thrown on the fire, and his father replied: [481]

"For you. We thought you must be dead and have burnt almost all your personal possessions."

"That does not matter," replied the son. "We have plenty of meat, grease, and furs."

*536 [237] As soon as the weather moderated, the men of the party returned, each carrying enough marten skins for at least one blanket. Some had as many than three or four cloaks could be made, in addition to the large supplies of cooked game meat and grease.

THE HUNTING OF A LAND OTTER

*539 ● 224 [177] [411] [434] In the early days, when the visit of a trading vessel to Bella Coola was a rare event, it is remembered that an Alexandria chief bought a musket from the captain of the Boston. He paid for it a pile of beaver skins which, when stacked up, was equal in height to the length of the weapon. This was one of the first muskets owned by a Bella Coola and the chief took great care of it, never cleaning it roughly, and hanging it with ropes from the roof of his house whenever he was not actually using it. One day a certain Indian asked the owner to lend him the musket to hunt game. This was an slight request, and it was surprising, since Indian was not a hunter, but merely pushed in most killed by others. At first the chief was unwilling to allow his prized weapon out of his sight, but at last consented when Indian promised to give him half the game that he might kill.

Indian probably thought that even temporary possession of the marvelous musket would make it possible for him to kill game, but when he had climbed up into the mountains, and waited for hours, he had not succeeded even in approaching one. He knew that if he returned home, unsuccessful and without some plausible excuse, he would be laughed at scorn, so he determined to cover his failure. Prior to loss the musket on a boulder until it was bent and battered, then he took a sharp rock and pounded himself until he was covered with blood from head to foot, as if he had been caught in a land slide. When near the village, he lay down on the ground and called lustily for help, so that the people could not hear the sound, but after a short search someone found the would-be hunter, apparently in the last stages of exhaustion. Help was called, and Indian carried home, moaning feebly and saying that he would die. He could just whisper that he had been caught in a slide on the other side of the mountain, this explanation being necessary since no one had heard one in the near vicinity. As the apparent sufferer was lying in his house, one man noticed that the patient's wounds were from gashes, not from bruises, and loudly proposed that Indian must have mutilated himself to conceal his lack of success. Everyone came crowding around and agreed that this must be the case; Indian finally admitted the deception and congratulated his discoverer on his powers of observation. After a few days, he was as well as ever, but the chief had lost his precious musket.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

[

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

as the authors, their skill in dancing and dramatics is noteworthy: no one who has witnessed a native dance can fail to have been impressed by the performance of the participants and the stage craft of the carpenters. The fact that no system of writing had ever been devised has prevented the establishment of a native literature, but the practice of passing down an extensive tradition by word of mouth shows their memorizing powers as well as their facility for remembering details. At present it is difficult to appreciate what must have been their energy in earlier times when they faced the struggle for existence, armed with stone tools. Blunderbuss muskets gave them adequate food, but only after extra food had been built with great labour. Though game was plentiful, the hunter was equipped with nothing more formidable than a bow and arrow. This simplest tool required patience and skill unknown to by the average white man. If the reader will allow his imagination to carry him backwards two hundred years, he will realize that the mere provision of food and clothing necessitated constant effort and ceaseless exertion.

Hand in hand with many admirable characteristics, the Bulla Creek display others which strike the white man as unsympathetic. A first impression is the untidiness of their houses. Essentially, they are often fairly neat, but confusion reigns within. Clothing, instead of being hung up, is left lying on the floor, bed-coverings are piled carelessly, dirty dishes cover the tables, dogs and children swarm over the floor. Bits abound, all is dirty and disorderly. The house itself may be uncomplicated, a window lacks glass and has been boarded up, the roof leaks, or the steps are falling down. Not are the surroundings more attractive. There is one struggling flower bed in the village, but elsewhere the houses are surrounded by masses of mud where hens and cattle wander, dogs prowl, and children play. In the distance the mountains peaks rise majestically, but near at hand all is squalid and unhappy.

They are only slightly more particular about their personal appearance. The men are diverse dress. They wear over[illegible]: Proper name of a Thunder man.

[illegible]: Proper name of a Bella Coola man.
[illegible]: Sun lack of water.
[illegible], "A Dropping Off": The giving, on demand, by a marriage dancer of [illegible] to a bride.
[illegible]: Supernatural name of Raven.
[illegible], "Frenzied": Term applied to Cannibals and other destructive behavior due to a state of madness.
[illegible]: Frenzied exclusion of all but the singers from a house where a dance is [illegible].
[illegible]: Kwakiutl man mentioned in an ancient story.
[illegible]: Proper name, probably of Kwakiutl origin.

[illegible]

[illegible]: Female dancer mentioned in a Raven story.
[illegible]: Proper name of a Kwakiutl man.
[illegible], [illegible], woman: Mother, term used by children.
[illegible]: Cultivated Fruit Hunter.
[illegible]: Butterfly.
[illegible]: Shimmering waves.
[illegible]: Fly, insect.
[illegible]: Twenty grandfathers.
[illegible]: 1=Father, common term in indirect address.
2=Ceremonial designation for the supreme deity.
[illegible]: Stepfather.
[illegible]: Elderly male relatives of same unrelated family.
[illegible]: 1=One of the four men to arrive on Dallas in the beginning of time.
2=Name of the name [illegible] when used by a male child.
[illegible]: Name of the name [illegible] when used by a female child.
[illegible]: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
[illegible]: One of the supernatural Carpenters.
[illegible]: Measure of distance equal to the breadth of one thumb plus one finger.
[illegible]: Crack.
[illegible]: Supernatural giant crack.
[illegible]: Bottom ages.
[illegible]: Old male mother.
[illegible]: Water crack.
[illegible]: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
[illegible], "Long Dick": One of the supernatural women of Great Blue Heron.
[illegible]: Cultivated in a pitcrabbitroot household.
[illegible]: One of the gambler.
[illegible]: Dark in colour.
[illegible]: Generic term for the four supernatural Carpenters.
[illegible]: Spirit.
[illegible]: One of the four men to arrive on Dallas in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Land of salmon.
[illegible]: Settlements in the upper Bella Coola valley.
[illegible]: Rock carried by hunters when passing into the mountains.
[illegible]: Bad hunters.

[illegible] lieved that all the Kitkatla chiefs were powerful, but Tsakis was the greatest of all. It is said that one of his prerogatives[1] was to exercise jus primae noctis whenever a Kitkatla was married. Without question, some of this chief's powers have become exaggerated in tradition, since the law they show that the Bella Coola realize the great importance of the northern chiefs. Concerning their nearer neighbours, the Bella Bella, the Bella Coola understand the way in which the members of a family combine to help their chief in the giving of presents. They say that the Bella Bella consider the Bella Coola practice of each one endeavouring to make himself a chief to be foolish in the extreme. Such is also said to be the opinion among the Kwakiutl, who support their contention that in Bella Coola all are chiefs, from the fact that flowing crests under the mere of all, whereas in Fort Rupert, their home, such crests only beneath the mere of chiefs.

Corresponding to the extreme paucity of functions possessed by Bella Coola chiefs, their prerogatives are likewise scanty. Indeed, they take their ceremonial seats only during certain rites of the secret society connected with chiefs, at potlatches, and at ceremonial meals. Thus last occur whenever a deer or seal is killed, the large is considered a great delicacy.[2] Anyone can kill a seal, but it would be unbecoming for a Bella Coola to share in feast with his immediate family only. The animal is cleaned, the hide made by boiling or spear carefully plugged, and the carcass boiled whole in a large box. Meanwhile a herald (k.p. tsq) summons the chiefs to the house where the successful hunter lives. If the meal is to consist merely of one small seal, only a few chiefs are invited, those of greatest influence through their possession of "strong" seats. When several seals have been killed, the number invited is correspondingly larger, but no scramble may prevade unless the carcass

[1] This is said to have been a personal prerogative, not shared by all chiefs, and requiring relatives to submit present.

[2] Dall, some of the rite described in this paragraph seem to the present time. In fact, the consumption of seal meat by chiefs alone has disappeared, namely the close of the last century.

this practice had been handed down with the name from the beginning of time; another was stated that it was so productive and could be used by anyone. The best time for hunting was at the equinoxes, and Waxpaddy always observed ceremonial chastity in such a way that it continued to [illegible] date. Before setting out, the hunter prepared a net of the shape shown in the accompanying sketch (Fig. 1). The net was stretched over a wooden framework, about ten feet long and four feet wide, connected second by a long and heavy handle. The whole affair was called, "The Moon-like Thing." Choosing a still night, the hunter used to set out in his canoe paddled by a number of assistants. Waxpaddy would place himself in the bow with his net, and in the middle of the craft a small fire was kept burning with [illegible] pitch handle in so that it could be kindled into bright flames at a moment's notice. As the canoe was slowly paddled along the shore, the geese were half stunned, half repelled by the light. Unwilling to take to flight, they used to swim around at the edge of the illumination and so were guided into some convenient opening of the shore. Then Waxpaddy would throw his net so that the end farthest from the handle first reached the water and as the latter came crashing down it imprisoned a number of birds. Others, bewildered by the light and the falling net, tried to fly outwards and were knocked down by the paddles. These were secured at once and the necks of those caught in the net were wrung at leisure. It is said that this method of hunting was almost always successful.

Fig. 1

Another Yaiva hunting device which, however, was not commonly used and may have been merely an individual product of genius, not an inherited prerogative, was employed to kill seals. The last to use this method was the father's father of an elderly Bella Coola. This man used to go out at night in a [illegible] small scattering canoe, with an assistant who passed his paddle through the water in such a way that a slight phosphorescent streak resulted. This resembled the course of a salmon. To a short time a seal would rise in pursuit of the "fish," and the manifold horror would happen it. The seal would sink off with the head of the weapon, which was attached by a long line to the shaft remaining in the hunter's hand. He would play it like a huge fish, until the exhausted animal was drawn to the side of the canoe and clubbed. Sea and sealskin were often obtained by this means in the course of a single night.

[illegible] The two usual methods of killing mountain goats are by cornering them with dogs and then clubbing them to death, or by shooting with rifle or bow. There was formerly a special method of snaring which had been handed down as a prerogative from the time of the first people. The hunter used to sit his snares on a precipitous path commonly used by goats and had remarkable success. Others might know how to make snares and where the hunter set them, but no one would ever attempt this method of hunting without the proper prerogative. Another right, enjoyed by another hunter, was the catching of bears in a similar way to snares.

[illegible] Little need be said in conclusion about these particular privileges, except to emphasize that they are merely an aspect of the principle of ceremonial prerogatives which permeates every phase of Bella Coola life. It is as natural for a man to be made a singer or a hunter by the distribution of prerogatives as it is for him to acquire a dance by the same means. Each is conceived to an unwanted myth, and the validation of the prerogative enables the incumbent either to function actively, or at least to enjoy the social prestige attached to the craftsman who has been duly confirmed in his vocation. The necessity of bestowing gifts to validate a prerogative introduces an economic element in the concept, but this is lessened by the fact that a poor man can acquire a name by a relatively small [illegible] of whom the father was one woman, though old enough to appreciate the slights put upon his father, could do nothing to defend him.

On a winter day one of the lads felt impelled to follow a trail down the north side of the Bella Coola valley along the edge of salt water. The weather had been cold some time, but on this day it was so warm that he felt there is rain or a warm rain. Near his head was a small opening which connected with long passage to the cave, and through this he presently heard the low breathing of sleeping souls. He burning desire urged he was to hedge of the away way overlooking the sea and dived in. He barely squeezed into a narrow passage which led downwards the rocks, and which has gray to emerged into a cave where there were numbers souls. Lying only a moment, and without disturbing his sleeping, he slithered through the passage safely.

When he reached home that and nothing about what he had seen, he did, creeping to bed, to be a sea-spear of the usual type with a wooden handle and a bone pin. He asked his father to help him with the sea-spear and, with his father to make a rope for the harpoon head. Though surprised at that not enough, the parents did as he requested, for the Bella Coola villages neither his efforts, for the lad was no hunter.

Then running to other brother to accompany him, and the two set off to a cave, carrying the sea which had been made the previous evening. Before leaving he requested one of his brothers to have a fire ready for cooking his another night. Father and son paddled to the entrance of the subterranean passage, though the old man was, of course, ignorant of its existence. The son told him to wait, and dived cleverly under the rock shelf, for the sea-spear had really been unnecessary. He passed through the passage and at once killed a sea-cow, then the cave, and took he returned to the cave. The lad explained nothing to his father than to account to the latter as if he on that dived down into the pool and there slew a seal, after remaining below for so moments to cave.

When the two returned to village they were greeted with a shriek of laughter at the small sea-cow their quarry. To derision, the villagers took the cow from them and the it from hand to hand, as if it had been a ball.

He should describe, it is customary whenever a man kills a deer, a mountain goat, a seal, sea-cow, any other large game, for him to invite his fellows to a feast. The order of guests depends on the size of the quarry, but in all ways the first are the first to be invited and anyone who fails to do so is laughed out his acquaintance. On this occasion the [illegible] was obviously, as neither any general invitation to partake of his hospitality. Nevertheless, the lad felt a feasts to invite not only quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet. The same is true of geese. Always plentiful, these birds were commonly killed, but never in large numbers.

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, humpback, dog, and coho salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steelhead could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the eulachon, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,[7] allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to use herring without eulachon grease. Trout and bullheads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance.

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the cornerstone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed was probably deserted not many years ago. Probably a large town since it was a good fishing place.

[7] See Appendix A for a description of eulachon fishing.

(vii) Tsuki, "Bald Eagle": also on the north shore of the river, a little above the last-named. Probably washed away by a flood long ago, although traces of the salmon-weir were still visible recently.

(viii) Pegikwada, "The Place of Much gikwada" (the fern Aspidium spinulosum): on the north side of the river about one mile above the preceding. This large town is believed to have been deserted long ago, though, in apparent contradiction, traces of it are said to be still visible.

"(ix) Swakiu, "The Place of Dog Salmon": on the south bank, above the last-named, at a place where a small stream enters the Bella Coola River; this divided the town into two sections. It was long deserted and the river has carried away that part of the village below the creek. The name is derived from an enormous dog salmon which is believed to have been seen at long intervals in a waterfall near this spot, always with a water-weed perched on its back.

(x) Ogwilkuna: on the lower end of the island near Bagwhong post office, about miles from the ocean. Although long deserted, traces of this village are still to seen. The meaning of the name is unknown.

"(xi) Nuskis, "The Place of the Whirlpool": on the south side of the river, about and a quarter miles from the sea. It was a village of medium size, recently abandoned. The last occupant was said to have been Ulumkila, which means, "The Place of Ink."

"(xii) Kulo-ko-i, "The Concave Town," so called because it spread around the shore of a bay occupied not by the Bella Coola: south side, slightly above the inlet of the Nuskum River, thirteen and a quarter miles from the sea. It was deserted about 1880.

"(xiii) Nuqlulu, "The Place of Ilpilmel": on the north side of the river, opposite the mountain of the same name. It also was deserted about 1880. Ilpilmel is a kind of stone axe.

[illegible] side for [illegible], which occurs in the valley of a small stream on the slope of the mountain.

"(c) Tsalkum, "The Place Where There Are No Falls": an affluent from the north enters the main Bella Coola about thirty-one miles from the sea and the town was located on this south about two hundred yards above its junction with the Bella Coola. The ruins of this moderately large town were still standing when [illegible] reached the Bella Coola Indians on this place. At the time of his arrival the population was larger than usual, because the salmon-runs had withstood some heavy freshets which had destroyed several runs on the Bella Coola, and drawn the inhabitants of other villages to Tsalkum.

It is said that the affluent at Tsalkum, the stream Tsalpi, is the only one in the whole Bella Coola valley that does not drop precipitously into a narrow bending to the main river. It enters in a spring on the end of a pocket-like valley, at the base of steep cliffs, but it does not fall down them. The town is named from this circumstance. The area around the spring is called Nuxalkuqalp, and it is said that some families living on the Dawson ship of it in the spot where their first ancestors came to earth, although their descendants do not know where it is located.

"(d) Tsaxa: on the point between the Lelaxik (Dowdes) and the Ai (Whitesaw) rivers which join to form the Bella Coola. This, the most populous of the upper river towns, was deserted not long ago. The meaning of the name unknown.

(e) Xaxlaxi, "The Place of Outcrops": on the north side of the Atnarko River, a few hundred yards above the falls. This small town was deserted many years ago. The name was given on account of the hill behind the village being covered with a rank growth of plants and small bushes, but no trees.

(f) Snaxa-ai, "The Place of Falls," so called from the strong rapids of the Atnarko at this point: on the north side of the river about ten miles from the falls. This large town was long ago deserted when a large rock in the midst of the Indians from both of these areas were interviewed so found that, except for minor details in certain bath customs were identical with those of the Bulu Cook Accordingly, in this monograph, the term "Bulu Co be taken to include the inhabitants, not only of the [illegible] of South Bureuch Iron and the land of Dum [illegible] Those living on South Bureuch Iron will be refer [illegible] people, the Bulu Coola were for them, Dum Channel as Kwaqwa, the name by which they are known. It is an anglicised form of the word Kwaqiu [illegible] "Canoes," by which the Bulu Bulu designate [illegible] of Dum River.

[illegible]

(vii) Ibibio, on the east side of South Bureuch Ir a quarter of a mile from the point that marks its junc South Bureuch Iron. Food was obtained from an [illegible] Long deserted except as a summer camp.

(viii) Bonkolo, "island": east side of South Bureu slightly north of the island opposite the Hot Spring east side of the fiord. The town built to move from th To summer the respective inhabitants lived immediate site is, as a place where they had an open salmon where they moved to a fortified spot on the land of a slightly further to the north. This village was burned a landslide was spring long ago, and the few survi [illegible] to re-establish it.

"(ix)" Bonkwem, on the east side of the fiord at [illegible] where the fish [illegible]. A small town, whose inh lived on the south from their winter fish-trap, it was deserted.

[illegible]

[illegible]

361 (31) Kadic, "Ocean Fish-Trap": on the east side of South Bentinck Arm, about a quarter of a mile from the Nuxl' River. It is doubtful whether this was a town, or merely a camping place of the people of Nuxl' when using their salmon-trap.

[224]

"(32) Nuxl': on a raised mound at the south side of the mouth of the Nuxl' River, which enters the head of South Bentinck Arm from the east. The meaning is unknown. This was a populous town until the inhabitants were decimated by an epidemic of smallpox.

[231] [264]

"(33) Tal-ic: on the west side of the mouth of the river of the same name which flows into South Bentinck Arm from the south. The location of this village was commonly changed, owing to destructive variations in the course of the river. It was formerly a large town, and has been deserted only since 1900. This village had another name, Tpewelic, "Facing," so called because its houses faced those of the town of Nuxl'.

[199]

"(34) Ar-ut, "At the Head": at the head of South Bentinck Arm there is a bay running south-west, into the upper end of which a small stream empties. The trail leading to the lake at the head of Rivers Inlet follows this valley. Ar-ut was located on this creek, at some little distance from the ocean; the name was derived from the geographical location of the town. It has not long been deserted and must have been a populous place to judge from the numerous repositories (II, p. 6).

[488]

(35) Kwapc: on the east side of the mouth of a creek flowing into the bay at the head of South Bentinck Arm, from the south. This town was of moderate size. The meaning of the name is unknown. It is thought to be in the Rivers Inlet language.

VILLAGES AT KIMSQUIT

[193] Two rivers, the Dean from the east, and the Kimsquit from the north, flow into the head of Dean Channel, and the villages of this area can be grouped according to the two rivers.

The religious concepts of the Bella Coola are not limited to explanations of strange apparitions, nor to knowledge of a wide range of supernatural beings, anthropomorphic or zoomorphic. Many in whom they believe are invisible and intangible, though none the less potent. Almost every incident of life is attributed to the help or hindrance of a supernatural agency. If a fisherman constructs a salmon-weir, with a considerable amount of work, the Bella Coola ascribe his success to the assistance of some supernatural being or supernatural power; mere labour would never have sufficed. If a man has phenomenal success in hunting, it is because the supernatural has helped him in some way. It is not necessary that an anthropomorphic being should appear; they seldom do, but none deny that in some form or another supernatural aids have aided the enterprise.

This attitude is clearly evident in Bella Coola beliefs concerning the construction of canoes. Many professions depend upon prerogatives without which a person cannot hope to succeed. This is not true of canoe-makers, although it is a great advantage to one of them if Tsilaiwat, the Master Carpenter, appeared to his ancestors in the beginning of time. Even without this in many cases a man can succeed in making a canoe if he is aided by a supernatural teacher, or Model Maker. No one knows much about this being, nor even whether there is more than one of them, but it is through his kindly intervention that a man is able to complete his complicated task. If carpenters who have left a half-finished canoe in the woods, hear adze blows, as they are returning to it, they remain away from the spot, knowing that their work is being done with superhuman efficiency by a supernatural artisan. Under such circumstances even a solitary man can construct one of the large, ocean-going canoes. About 1880 an expert carpenter, named Talelu, was making [illegible] Mathews said definitely that his mother had told him Mathews came down the Dean River when he such was a young man. As if to confirm this statement he added the incongruential detail that Mathews, in this avatar he had, killed and ate a dog, and that he was given a supernatural skin blanket.

---

Lib. Canada E-1 (1912-1924) 1948 and leaps away apparently uninjured. The Bella Coola say that yearling goats have very strong spirits (I, p. 94) which make possible such actions.
NEB Bellacoola NEB

Though generally callous with regard to the sufferings of animals, the Bella Coola are usually careful not to kill more than they need; and knowledge of the supernatural power possessed by animals sometimes leads men to treat them with great consideration. For example, if a bull-head is caught in an eulachon net in the river, the fisherman throws it back into the water, saying:

"I have saved you; please do the same for me."

The following incident, believed without question by the Bella Coola, shows the manner in which bull-heads help those who have often befriended them. About 1880 a Kimsquit fisherman, Ałxałkw-i, fell into a rapids where he was in great danger of drowning. A bull-head, seeing his plight and mindful of former help, increased his size and shoved Ałxałkw-i ashore with its nose.

"I have saved you, mortal," said the bull-head, as he did so.

The ability to increase in size is not restricted to fish, but is shared by small mammals and reptiles. Lizards, for instance, four feet in length, are said to live permanently in a pond about seven miles below Kimsquit; they are termed qwalk.

Toads, too, can aid mortals. If a man see a snake devouring one of them he will, if he is wise, kill the snake and say to the toad:

"Please help me when I am in difficulties."

A toad never forgets its obligations and if that man should fall into a river when the toad is near, the latter will grow large enough to drag him forth.

Snakes are regarded with aversion and disgust. This may be in part due to the belief that they cook for Ałłk'ałał (I, p. 40), but more because these reptiles enter the stomachs of human beings. The Bella Coola believe that snakes are the offspring of a supernatural Mother of Snakes, a mythical being of dread powers. The following story illustrates their beliefs ago the tide came further up the rivers than at present and did not recede so far. This statement was made by an intelligent old man who said that the change had taken place during his own life-time.

1:34:Swanton E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES

One of Raven's most important alterations to Ẽqwatim's intentions was with regard to the sexual act.

> In the beginning of time, the organs of women were on the forehead, those of men on the palm of the hand, and intercourse was effected by a man rubbing his hand across a woman's brow. Raven feared that children would not result from this practice and accordingly altered the organs of both sexes to their present positions. In order to teach mankind the sexual act he then chose a woman and held intercourse with her, telling her that if the practice were carried out secretly and vigorously a child would be born. And nine months later the woman gave birth to an infant. Raven told the first inhabitants of the world that he wished them to have issue; they consequently held intercourse frequently and begat many children until their descendants filled the Bella Coola valley.

The attitude of the Bella Coola towards this story is identical with their beliefs concerning Raven as the cause of death.

"Yes," they say, as they repeat the above story in answer to a question, "Raven taught our ancestors how to have children."

One side of their nature implicitly believes any story handed down from the distant past, but few today are sufficiently naive actually to credit it. The more sophisticated frankly disbelieve, or pretend to do so. Doubt also exists with regard to Raven as originator of linguistic differences. The Bella Coola state that Ẽqwatim intended only one language for the whole world, but Raven thought that this would lead to trouble and used his power to teach the ancestors of every tribe their special speech.

Many inventions and beliefs are attributed to Raven without any accompanying myth. It is said that almost all geographical names are those bestowed by him on places reached in his travels. It was Raven who taught men how to bait hooks on long lines to catch black cod; it was Raven who first

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

773 829 have been many changes. Raven, the culture hero, taught the early settlers many useful arts, and they were themselves so powerful that they were able to create ceremonial and other prerogatives in a manner impossible to their descendants. Moreover, the people realize that they have been influenced by neighbouring tribes since that time, but in spite of these additions, they believe that their life is patterned on that of their earliest forbears.

[181] As a group, the Bella Coola are philosophers. They demand a reason for everything, though once a reason has been given, and accepted, they think no more about the matter. The elaboration of Bella Coola mythology may be due in part to their desire to explain their social organization; but without question these myths, now accepted as facts, have had a great influence on the lives of the people. In fact the social structure of the tribe has tended to conform to the myths.

621 773 It is believed that each group of first people formed a village community, and pre-empted hunting-grounds in the vicinity. These usually consisted of small valleys opening from the main [361] Bella Coola River, tracts which could thus be easily defined. [226] Each group also took possession of a suitable part of the river for a salmon-weir, or, if located on the coast, a convenient place for an ocean fish-trap. In course of time the first people married, of necessity with members of other villages. According [591] to mythology, and equally according to modern practice, the women usually moved to the villages of their husbands. When 773 a child was born, it naturally grew up to share in the hunting-grounds of its father's village. Moreover, the father was able to bestow on his child various ceremonial dances; the concepts of some he had brought with him from above, others he had formulated on this earth. It is assumed that all the first people were mighty chiefs, able to initiate rites in a way that few modern men have been able to equal. But the mothers of these children, the first born on this earth, did not surrender the privileges of their own villages at marriage. Consequently, their children were of almost as much interest to the brothers

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5
Bella bella NE5

BB
BC
423
[622]

exactly what right the Bella Bella chief had to dispose of the land. The informant assumed that he must have been powerful enough to dictate to his followers, an unknown possibility in Bella Coola. However, the informant regards the case as typical of what would likely happen should a Bella Coola try to give away land. Out of generosity or gratitude old men have sometimes done so, but always they have forgotten someone, perhaps a mere infant, who on growing up lays claim to the sol'olum.

BC
423
614
[226]
[773]

Hunting-grounds are not the only valuable parts of the country. Even more important are stretches of river suitable for salmon-weirs. Of the same type are good places for olachen-nets, and rocks from which these fish can be caught with scoop-nets. Like hunting-grounds, these are said to have been pre-empted by the first people[1] and have passed into the ownership of the ancestral families descended from them. It is needless to repeat the gradual lapsing of rights to property of this kind in distant areas, since the principle is the same as that already described for land.

[773]
[226]

In one respect, salmon-weirs differ from hunting-areas, since the latter can be used by any number of individuals, whereas the number of salmon-traps possible at any one weir is limited. Again the mythological origin must be given to explain the customary usage. If, for example, a salmon-weir supposedly built by one of the first groups of people was fully manned in the third generation by ten individuals, it is as-

[1]Several Bella Coola myths describe how the first-comers brought with them from above stone hammers for the construction of fish-dams, and how others were provided with miniature dams which grew larger when placed in position. Mr. H. I. Smith kindly gave the writer the following account, received from an elderly Bella Coola:

Long, long ago a certain Tamakse lived with his father, the Sun, who decided to send his child to earth. He came down to Stuxx, carrying a stone beneath his arm-pit, and accompanied by a Wolf. Tamakse made the stone into a pile-driver with a face sculptured upon it, and with this tool drove piles to make a fish-weir. After a while a number of human beings came paddling up the Bella Coola River. In course of time the Wolf returned above, but Tamakse remained on earth catching salmon, and teaching the people the method which was in use until the last few years.

NEB Bellacoola NEB

423 sumed that ten is the largest number of traps possible at that 614 weir. Those who have the right to that weir are the members of the ancestral family with the names of those first cases. At [773] this point the logic of the Bella Coola fails to uphold the mythological pattern. No salmon-weir has remained in existence
[226] since the beginning of time; when one broke, owners were sometimes infants, and those who repaired the break became regarded as the rightful possessors. The system of ownership prevailing at the time of abandoning the weirs, was that individuals, not groups, had rights to certain sections of the weir [428] which were willable like other personal property. In most [431] cases this right was transmitted with a name, marking the section of weir, which had to be duly validated by presents.
[428] In other cases, the intangible ownership was willed without any mark whatever.* Unless bequeathed in this way, disputes were frequent. Rights of this kind were never sold although [427] an owner often leased his section for a night, or longer period, [431] receiving goods in return, and not forfeiting his ownership thereby. This was particularly common when the renter was planning to give a potlatch. No case was heard of in which the right to a certain section of salmon-weir was given to a non-member of the ancestral family. Theoretically, this was possible, but practically it would be so inconvenient that it is most unlikely ever to have occurred, since the Bella Coola is [671] never such a slave to legal privileges that he fails to be guided by common sense.

226 Although individual ownership is thus recognized with [423] regard to sections of salmon-weirs and suitable places for olachen-nets, the owner is bound to share his haul. When he [577] catches a large number of fish, anyone, whether related to him
[626] or not, can demand some. He cannot refuse, since to do so would brand him as selfish. The effective check on this system

[128] *Great difficulty was experienced in learning about the distribution of rights to sections of salmon-weirs. The evidence is conflicting, and though every effort was made to verify and check the above, there may be further regulations which were not learnt.

line is public opinion which expresses contempt for a lazy man who is constantly begging.

To anyone familiar with the definite social groupings of a tribe divided into clans or land-owning families, the ancestral family of the Bella Coola must appear as a vague and unreal unit, only distinguished by its intangibility. So it was found when investigating in the field. When information began to accumulate, it seemed as if there must be some definite obligations incumbent upon all members of the ancestral family, but none could be found. Without asking a direct question, the point was raised whether, if a man were killed, the members of his ancestral family would unite to avenge him. Conversely, were they liable for the deeds of any member? In each case the reply was in the negative; these matters concern only the immediate family. In regulating marriage the ancestral family is important, since it is wise for a man or woman to seek his mate within the members of that group, though it is not compulsory. Theoretically, the terms of kinship applied to members of the immediate family may be extended to members of the ancestral family, but in practice this is rarely the case, and, if so, is functionless. It might be argued that this somewhat wide application of kinship terms, verging on the classificatory usage, is a relic of an earlier, and now broken-down, clan system. It is impossible to prove or to deny such a contention. When trying to discover whether the members of an ancestral family ever contributed to a potlatch whereby one of their fellows established himself as a chief, the following interesting comment was received. The previous winter the informant had been in Bella Bella, and there the point was raised by a Bella Bella chief whom he quoted as follows:

"We laugh at you Bella Coola because each of you is always trying to be chief. Our system is much better; we all help our chiefs."

The man agreed with the Bella Bella man that there was an important difference between the practices of the two tribes.

a man, or inspector, with the prerogative of enforcing obedience to river rulings. Even since, the owner of his canoe, when it has been duly legalized, has had the right to perform this function. In some cases, such as carpenters and singers, the validation of a prerogative has not brought with it the necessary ability, so that the incumbent remains a properly certified, but non-functioning, craftsman. No mechanical skill is required by a River Guardian, hence the owner of the canoe or weirs has always been able to perform his duties.

Even since immemorial certain restrictions have been enforced concerning the river. No refuse may be thrown in, otherwise the ulachan would remain in the ocean. For the same reason, women at certain periods are not allowed to bathe lest a speck of blood should blind the fish and prevent them from seeing the nets. Occasionally an ulachan with red eyes is caught; this is caused by some heedless woman. When the fish are running in the river, women are not allowed on the bank, nor to repair the nets. At high tide, it is forbidden to drive stakes for ulachan nets.

The number of prohibitions increases during the critical period of the salmon run. Then no freshly hewn planks can be set afloat, and even a canoe which has just been completed must be kept for ten days before launching. No one whose husband or wife has died within the last year can anchor at the village, but must proceed to a landing-place at the head of the fiord. Most important of all, refuse of salmon must be deposited in the woods; if thrown into the river, the fish would smell it and avoid the stream. Even accidents such as the upsetting of a canoe, or the spilling of ulachan grease, are considered to be offences.

Disregard of any of these injunctions is displeasing to the salmon and it is the duty of the River Guardian to punish the offender, irrespective of his rank. In case of slight infringements, he beats the guilty person or throws him into the river. The guilty person usually scrambles out, but should he be swept away and drowned, no recompense can be claimed by [illegible] performance of rites of this kind. But sociological and ritual concepts, shown at their highest development in the potlatch, are not limited to a few weeks of the year, or to any class of the community. Generosity on a large scale can be publicly displayed by chiefs alone, but to a lesser degree this virtue must be practised by everyone, since avarice is considered a major sin. Anyone who happens to pass a house in which a meal is taking place must be invited to share it; to do otherwise would be considered rude. The person summoned must take or leave a bite to show that he is not churlish and too proud to eat with his host, while if he is hungry, he shows whatever is being served as a matter of course. The head of the family should be the first to taste any wine* as proof that it is not poisoned, but otherwise he farns little, if any, better than his guests. This custom is now rapidly falling into disuse through the construction of individual family houses with doors and locks. The fisherman who has exclusive rights to a suitable place for catching eulachon or salmon must give some of his catch to anyone who asks him. If he has landed four salmon, the first collector is given one, later comers, none at all. When a net is set in the river, anyone passing is allowed to swim in and take some of the contents; if there are two fish, he may remove one, if many, three or four. To take all would be a despicable theft, sufficient to brand the transgressor as greedy; hence public opinion prevents the system from being carried to excess. A hunter who brings back several mountain goats or other large game is expected to invite his neighbours to a feast, which virtually means that he must share his takings.

Presents of this kind increase the prestige of the donor who has thus acted in accordance with Bella Coola ethics, and are advantageous investments since others must reciprocate. The system is carried to such lengths that, until recent years, it was more profitable to give away goods than to sell them. In the case of a sale, the purchaser endeavours to give as little as possible, whereas the recipient of a gift returns as much as

*This is a modern practice, dating from the introduction of home-brew.

9/86/Swalth R-5 (952-952A) 1948
NES Bellacoola NES
Bellabella NES

95
139
BC
* 139

gut, gum, and tail. After a week the lashing was removed and the hooks retained the desired shape. By January all was ready, and the necessary ceremony of fastening them to the line had been completed.

Ts'ēmēl set out from his home with a number of companions to Lakmaxlem Channel, where they caught for bait a large quantity of the small fish known as sardines, Stakaldaal.[1] It was then evening and next morning the fishermen threw out the cod line before eating. Ts'ēmēl had great success, catching over a hundred fish at a single time, owing to the manner of hooks on his line. During the winter he lowered his line only once a day, but he fished steadily, drying his spoil at intervals, and when April came and he could make those hooks daily, he had caught an enormous quantity. All who saw his success were amazed, and many copied his method, since that time the use of hook and line for cod has been a common practice.

BC
[136]

When Raven taught Ts'ēmēl how to catch cod he also instructed his wife how to clean and prepare them in a certain manner and added that she must throw the entrails back into the ocean. The woman remembered the latter injunction, and her daughter regularly disposed of the entrails in this way, but they were careless in the manner of cutting the fish. Ēmoqwa, chief of the supernatural beings dwelling beneath the ocean, heard of this and was angry at the insult offered to Black Cod. The underwater beings hunt on behalf of their master, so the latter sent the blackfish with instructions to seize Ts'ēmēl's daughter, a pretty girl named Ailamka. This is a Bella Bella word, which probably means "Very Good." The blackfish watched her come to the edge of the sea, waited until she had gone a short distance into the water, and then carried her off. Since she was below the age of puberty the supernatural fish had no fears in approaching her. To those on shore it appeared as if she had been drowned; in reality the blackfish bore her away to Ēmoqwa's house in their canoe, which, like that of the salmon, is invisible to mortal eyes. She found herself among many strange fish, and in the presence of the mighty Ēmoqwa, who wore his usual broad-brimmed hat.

When those who had seen the kidnapping of Ailamka told Ts'ēmēl and his wife, they grieved for their daughter as for one dead. In mourning, they stopped fishing and tore their hair. From afar Raven saw their grief and came to ask its cause.

"For some unknown reason I have lost my daughter," Ts'ēmēl answered.

"I think it must be due to your having cut up Black Cod in some manner other than that in which I directed you," said Raven. "If you

BC
[136]

[1] These are commonly used as bait; in fact, Ahaal means "bait."

a person has been in contact with supernatural beings to enable him to swim.

Alkunda told them everything, that her mother had failed to teach her how to cut up black cod, "so Sxnaqme sent blackfish to teach me so that I could be taught," she said. "You must be very careful to cut them up properly or trouble will come upon you."

The correct method, as taught by Raven, is to split the fish cleanly without severing the bones. Sk paxel's daughter had erred by cutting the one which is equivalent to a fish to the human other-bone. The old dame of the fish that descended to Sxnaqme's house, of the red-fish, which disclosed their mother by playing outside the house so that their stomachs were often forced out from their mouths* and they floated up to the surface, of Sxnaqme himself and his large hat, and of the other denizens of the under-world. The people listened attentively and ever after cut up black cod in the prescribed fashion, though if Alkunda had not been carried off to Sxnaqme's house Raven's teaching would undoubtedly have been forgotten.

Not long after his daughter's safe return Sk paxel gave a potlatch. He took for himself the name Sxnaqme, and at the same time reproduced in his own house as much as possible of what his daughter had described. Thus there were imitation fishes, especially the halibut, around the house, while the red-fish were shown as wooden models that could be drawn up to the roof by hidden strings representing the manner in which the fish float up to the surface of the ocean. Sxnaqme, himself, was shown wearing his large bell capped hat, of the type known as Sqpel.*

While Alkunda was under the water Sxnaqme had shown her sacred whistles, and at this potlatch they were used while the girl was concealed within the back-room as a sacred initiate.

This was the* origin of the sacred ceremonial, which spread in time from the ocean people to the Bella Coola. The name Sxnaqme passed to one of Sk paxel's descendants who, when he gave a potlatch, arranged

*The red-fish is an unidentified deep-sea fish which dies in shallow water through lack of pressure.

*This style was always worn by Sxnaqme and Sqaxnim and, as many of the first people obtained their power from one or other of these beings, the prerogative of using such hats at potlatches is quite common. They are made of cedar roots, are waterproof, and are usually painted with one of the wearer's ancestral crests. When either Sxnaqme or Sqaxnim is shown on a totem-pole he is displayed with one of these hats.

*It will be noted that the narrator tacitly assumes any origin recorded in his myth to be the sole, or authentic one.

though they may be to the white man. It is hoped that the preceding illustrations, drawn from minor cases, will explain the mental attitude of the Bulu Cards better than incidents from folk-lore of the distant past. [787]*

Disregarding thoughts which, since they are caused by the spiritual elements of the human body, are ever present, relations with the supernatural may be divided into the following categories: [828] [774]

(1) Appearance of supernatural beings from which neither good nor bad results follow. Strictly speaking, every fleeting sight of a supernatural being belongs to this category, but it will be convenient to describe only experiences of a peculiar kind, such as the Bulu Cards call ayo ebiliwandjelebi. Usually manifestations of the supernatural have certain effects; consequently, there are relatively few incidents of this kind recorded.

(2) Supernatural aid vouchsafed to a man or a woman in distress. There are many tales illustrating this, which are told and retold to the children. In most cases the assistance is given to one who has undeservedly, according to Bulu Cards concepts, fallen into misfortune.

(3) Supernatural good luck. This may be obtained by anyone, and consists of the acquisition of a supernatural object to attract, not only fish and animals, as if it were a potent bait, but money and goods as well. [777] [224] [222]

(4) Acquisition of shamanistic power, with or without the ability to cure the sick. This may be received from one of two sources: [756]

(a) Tindjilibi-a or some other supernatural being.

(b) Ghosts, which are likewise supernatural.

(5) Obtaining prophetic powers direct from the supreme god. There are few instances of this, and none that is ascribed to a remote period. It is possible that all examples of this kind can be attributed to indirect Christian influence. [775] [777]

(6) Obtaining power from a supernatural being localized in a particular spot. This usually takes the form of succour when [756]

[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

father. But the great-grandson was too lazy to take the trouble of going with his father to the place where the secret of the find was hidden, so the treasure was lost.

A fourth giver of supernatural good fortune is one of the mythical creatures termed swap. This variety lives in the ocean, or rarely in rivers, and can occasionally be seen moving on the surface with its long, golden tresses floating on the water. The hair appears always to be flecked with angle down, but in reality it is a mass of harmless, the equivalent of this substance to the under-sea dweller. If the observer is brave, he will paddle cautiously near until he can cover a lock of the hair around his paddle and break it off. He must not touch it with his hands, but must dangle it outside the canoe, still wrapped about his paddle, until he reaches the shore, where he must conceal it in some lonely place for one year. After that period he can use a single hair, or piece of one, as bait; it will be enough to attract animals to his traps or salmon to his weir, exactly as with the numerous great grease concretions of a gadoid or a cod that has come in contact with a giant squid. If the person who has jerked off the hair with his paddle should be foolish or ignorant enough to bring his spoil into his canoe, he, and all with him, are rendered incapable of movement and the craft with its occupants sinks beneath the sea.

The father's cousin of an informant once saw one of these animals when paddling in company with several companions to Kitsaquit. The sea was smooth as glass when their attention was attracted by a number of small ripples, spreading in a half-moon shape from what they realized was the head of a swap. The hair crossed the ripples, but did not rise or fall with them. The back of the animal's head was nearest the canoe so the opportunity seemed favourable for obtaining some of its hair. Cautiously the men paddled nearer, but at the last moment the steersman feared to drive the canoe in among the golden tresses, so veered off and the craft passed along one side of the mass of hair. The animal had shown no sign of being aware of their presence, but it now began to turn away, as that to floating locks remained between them and its head. As it turned, the hair moved with it, so that, although the impression remained of a floating mat, there must have been some motive power to cause it to remain streaming out straight behind. Each strand moved through the ripples without being affected. Though the paddles strained to the utmost to see the animal's face it thwarted their efforts by this continuous slow turning, until at last the want on their way, disappointed.

Yet another creature from which supernatural good fortune has been obtained is the Mother of Snakes, a creature described in the following story.

A family living at Shalton was reduced to the point of starvation through the failure of their salmon-weir. It seemed as if the fish avoided it. One day a son of one of the women, who had been in trouble with a woman in the lower valley, was off into the woods out far from his village, where he saw what he thought was a black bear. When it came nearer he realized that its chest was tipped with silver and that its tongue kept shooting far beyond its jaw; hence that it must be the Mother of Snakes. This creature combines the qualities of bear and snake; it is always the son of the former, and it appears to have a serpent wrapped around its chest. It always pursues mortals and slays them, unless they know the proper means of escape. Luckily, the youth's father had long ago warned him what to do if chased by one, so he at once dashed off. First he ran downhill, but the animal gained on him; then he ran uphill, but still the monster drew nearer. The only way the fugitive could increase his lead was by ascending or descending in zigzags, since the brute's heavy legs then kept slipping. All day the pursuit continued, until towards dusk, when the youth was almost exhausted, he saw at last what he was looking for, a stump with splinters, projecting upwards. Pushing these apart with his hands, he leapt through the opening thus made, then circled the tree once sunwise, and pulled away one of the jagged spikes. Now the Mother of Snakes must always follow directly in the tracks of its quarry, and as it jumped through the passage the youth struck it across the back with the splinter which he had pulled out. Down fell the monster dead.

With his knife the lad cut off some of the animal's meat which he carried home, saying nothing to his father. Early the next morning the old man went to look at his salmon-weir, but as usual it was empty. As soon, however, as his son drew near, the river became packed with salmon, all heading towards the trap which was soon filled.

[illegible]

"It seems as if you attracted the salmon like a magnet," said the father to his son.

The latter did not answer immediately, but later he said:

"You were right," and he told him what had happened.

"You have obtained supernatural good luck," the old man replied simply.

Following his son's instructions the father prepared canoes and boats to bring back the flesh of the Mother of Salmon. They collected every scrap of it, which they preserved very carefully, and used small portions as bait to attract salmon to their weir with such success that they became wealthy.

Another supernatural being from whom supernatural good fortune may be obtained is Skwandi-ka, "The Female Mourner." When a chief dies she comes to wail, wandering through the woods near the village, where sometimes she can be seen in the form of a weeping woman. As she cries, she ejects mucus from her nose, which solidifies into a glass-like substance about a foot in length. Anyone who sees her should take the transformed mucus, and wrap it in some article of his own clothing; it will bring him good fortune. About midnight of June 21, 1922, the infant daughter of a Bella Coola died, and about seven o'clock on the following morning the wailing was heard[1] in the woods behind the missionary's house. The brother of the dead child's father rushed off to try to find the weeping one. Luckily he did not succeed, because he did not know about collecting the mucus, and trouble would have come to him had he seen the supernatural being without knowing how to deal with it; in fact, even to hear Skwandi-ka is considered an omen of death.

It will be seen from the foregoing specific instances that supernatural good luck is usually obtained by the slaying of some powerful creature. But, since every living creature is endowed with superhuman power, it follows that any object obtained from a bird or an animal that has acted in a peculiar way may be the cause of supernatural good fortune if it be kept for one year in the manner previously described. Some-over, and concluded that he had acquired the vigour which she had vowed to impart to him. So she told him simply to come in and swim with them, and again dived back to resume her play with her cubs. After watching the four throwing the stones to and fro, Qwinas dived in, joined their sport, and throw the boulders over so far as they were able for he had acquired the power of a bear. The four left the pool together and when the animals had resumed their form they gave Qwinas a bear blanket. On donning this he, too, became a grizzly bear.

[1] Since the Bella Coola believe that it was heard, the incident is recorded as a fact.

"Now," said the mother bear, "you can go home and take revenge on the murderers of your father. Only remember, you must not do so, or show your strength, for one year. Your name is now Nimmelle [a word derived from nim, a grizzly bear]. Henceforth I and my cubs will be your friends and will be at hand to help you if you ever need us."

The four bears accompanied Qwinas towards his home, all travelling rapidly in bear form. Near his aunt's house he took off his blanket and carefully hung it up in a secure place; this restored him to human form and he went home, while his bear friends went off into the woods. Qwinas thought that he had been absent only a single day, but when he came to the village he found that it was autumn, although the olachen had been running when he went away. This was because he had been in the land of supernatural beings where one day is the equivalent of a year among mortals. He went to his aunt's door in the twilight. The old woman, who had concluded that her nephew was long dead, was delighted at seeing him return not only alive but appearing strong and well. She had very little food but she gave him the best available.

Obedient to the instructions given him by the mother bear, Qwinas did not immediately take his revenge. All winter he remained almost secluded in his aunt's house, but when spring came and the olachen were running, he paddled down in a river canoe to his father's fishing-ground where the four murderers had built four olachen-traps with firm interwoven branches, capable of resisting any flood. In the canoe with Qwinas was a mere child to whom he had given the nominal place as captain in the stern, while he himself paled in the bow. He guided his canoe against one of the weirs which broke before the impact as if it had been made of twigs, then, in succession he destroyed the three others in like fashion. Next Qwinas began to make four olachen-weirs for himself. Under normal circumstances the construction of one is a long and laborious task, requiring the pounding in of heavy stakes with mallets, but Qwinas, endowed as he was with the strength of a grizzly bear, merely shoved in the posts without effort. As he was working, the four murderers came up, very angry at the destruction of their weirs. One of them struck a savage blow at the destroyer with a stake, but Qwinas merely caught it with one phases of activity, leaving here only certain rules about diet and a number of prohibitions which hunters must observe.

[226]

TABOO TABOOS OBSERVED BY WOMEN

Women must not eat bear meat. To do so would disorganize the ceremonia and cause profuse growth of hair.

Women of child-bearing age must not eat beaver. To do so would cause a difficult delivery.

A woman of child-bearing age must not eat roasted salmon until the sticks have been removed which hold it in front of the fire. She will bear twins if this injunction is disregarded.

TABOOS OBSERVED BY HUNTERS

No hunter or fisherman may leave the village in the morning if he has been foolish enough to break the night's fast. It is customary to depart at dawn and take a small meal when nearing the hunting or fishing-ground.

No hunter may drink water in which dog salmon have been soaked. Animals dislike this liquid and avoid a man with it in his stomach.

When traps have been set, and a party of hunters is sitting around the camp-fire in the evening, no one must pass between it and one of his fellows. If this should be done, heedlessly, animals would disregard the bait that has been set out.

When mountain goat hunters are travelling, the most expert must lead the party. When he sits down, so must the others, and no one can change places with him. This is said to be a custom of the Carriers as well as of the Bella Coola.

When a hunter is cutting up a bear, he must be careful not to cut a vein which is said to run across the chest and down each fore-paw. To do so causes sickness.

When a hunter kills a bear, he must place either the skull or the whole head in a tree near the scene of the kill, otherwise he will become blind. In some families, the men remove only an eye, place it in a notched stick and set this under an over-

226 hanging rock where no rain can penetrate. Long ago, some [illegible] hunter failed to do this and became blind in consequence, hence the rite has since been carried out.

When a hunter is in the field, his wife must not swing. To do this causes him to go up into lofty and dangerous places as she rises on the swing, and also destroys the power laboriously accumulated by ceremonial chastity.

Ritual Acts

796 Communitalism is an extremely important aspect of Bella
● 226 Coola life, but most of their rites are social or religious rather than magical, so that descriptions of them belong to other 789 chapters. In connection with the taking of the first olachen and salmon, however, a number of ritual acts are performed to bring about desired ends; the element of propitiation is not entirely absent, but on the whole they may be considered as magical.

RITES CONNECTED WITH THE FIRST OLACHEN

226 At the height of the olachen run, the fish are so abundant
796 that they can be taken profitably in large purse-nets. They 574 do not, however, come simultaneously, and eager fishermen keep watching for their arrival and catching the straggling forerunners in hand dip-nets. These fish must not be eaten immediately. Each fisherman arranges a box in the front part of his house in which he deposits them as taken; if several men are doing this in a single dwelling, one box for each will be arranged near the front-door. Whenever a dance is held, eagle down is blown over the receptacle to placate the olachen and prevent them from being disturbed by the noise. As soon as a man has caught enough for a feast, he invites all his fellows to his house and the fish are distributed. It is taboo for any woman to share this meal, and it is most improper for a man to summon his neighbours until he has enough olachen to allow each guest to carry home a plentiful supply for his family. In former times, there used to be a number of meals of this kind,

[illegible] each fisherman provided one who his bow was fitted. 226

No one is allowed to drink water immediately after eating 796 the first eulachon of the spring, since to do so would be a 574 fraud. It is considered most improper for a child to eat [865] after partaking of this food; if he does so, he is punished having nettles stuffed into his mouth. As already [illegible], if a person dies before the first fish have passed through his bowels, a shaman must wipe his lips with cedar-bark.

After the first meal of eulachon, snares for the sun are 226 driven, and the restrictions become less exacting. Women are [562] not allowed to assist in fishing, but the men devote their all time to the task, working with zest and energy.[1] An abundant supply of eulachon is a source of joy, and all listen eagerly for [825] the singing of the thrush, omnomonth, which signifies that the nets are full to burning. Half jocularly, people invite the bird to come and eat, but his modesty is compared so:

"I shall eat when the river is full."

RITES CONNECTED WITH THE FIRST SPRING SALMON

Salmon is the most important article of Bella Coola diet 226 and the rites which accompany the earliest taking of this fish 796 are relatively complicated. [262]

When the first spring salmon have been caught, they are laid in the canoe with their heads all pointing rearward upstream. The fisherman poles to shore, but instead of landing his catch, he fastens the salmon to a stake driven at the edge of the bank so that they remain in the water. A number of posts are usually placed in readiness, each decorated with alternate spirals of dyed and undyed cedar-bark and crowned with an eagle's tail. Each day one or two more fish may be caught, but all are left in the water until the first have become soft, thus giving sufficient time for the necessary preparations on shore. It is the duty of every owner of a salmon-weir to build near its end a so-called Spring Salmon House, a shake [343]

[1] For a description of eulachon fishing, see Appendix A.
[2] Cf. Boas, p. 78.

Schl.Dwenth. E.-1 (1922-1924) 1948
NEB Bellacoola NEB

226
796
[349]

structure with a roof but without side walls. To this the successful fisherman brings long strings of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, eagle down, and spoons made of maple-bark; in this task he is assisted by his relatives as well as by anyone else willing to help.

When all has been prepared, the fisherman asks the men of the village to gather on the bank to assist him. No one is compelled to do so, but in actual fact everyone is glad to be present unless prevented by some valid reason. A friend takes a canoe pole and points at the head of the first salmon, while all call in unison, xak'loi, a word for which no meaning is known, and which is said to have been used unintelligibly for many generations. If he is standing on the south bank of the stream, the fisherman passes his left hand outside his right, seizes the fish behind the neck with the former, and by the tail with the latter; then he turns around sunwise, uncrossing his arms, so that his catch is still pointing upstream. If the village is on the north side of the river, the position of the hands is reversed. He carries the salmon to the Spring Salmon House and places it on a layer of fresh cottonwood and willow leaves spread over the ground. A young assistant, who is decorated with bands of dyed and undyed cedar-bark, lifts from his left arm one of a number of two-foot strips of the same material carried there and lays it over the salmon's head so that part of the string is within its mouth. As he does this he says:

Ipäxellai, qämxämilao,[9] "Accept, O Salmon."

Qämxämila is not the usual word for salmon, but signifies rather, "Food"; it is the designation used by supernatural beings for these fish and is hence applied by smnq to their prey, human beings.

After this has been done, eagle down is blown over the fish. A second salmon is likewise taken from the river, with the same cry of xak'loi, laid with its head on its predecessor's tail, and the same rite carried out. This is repeated till all are arranged in line, with their heads pointing upstream. The [9] The vocative form of the word.

b:McDowell E-5 (922-1924)948
NEA Bellacoola NEA

women listening from the village are able to tell how many have been caught from the number of times the cry sul'lui is raised. 226 796

Then the salmon are cut up (only shell knives may be used for the purpose) and cooked. Everything must be used, heads, bones, and entrails, the only refuse being the blood which is scraped from the leaves and carried into the woods. The leaves themselves, and the strings of dyed and undyed cedar-bark are thrown into the river in accordance with a desire expressed by Nsáksum long ago. When everything is ready for a meal, the men take their places in two rows, facing each other across a coarse bark mat. Bark spoons have been provided, and when the heralds call for food, the fisherman brings the heads of the salmon and the guests make the motions of eating, though in reality these parts are dried and kept for winter. Boxes containing a liberal portion of the choice meat are next served and all eat freely. Each guest puts on one side what he has not consumed as if to carry it away, as is the custom at an ordinary feast, though his share is really left in the shelter until the following day. Finally, a third course is provided, the back of the fish cooked with the bone in position. Like the last, the guests eat as much as they desire and pack up the residue as if to take away. Then they leave the Spring Salmon House. [412] 226 796 574 [251]

All the fish are not cooked on the one occasion. The following day the fisherman again calls back the men of his village. The same type of meal is served, but this time the guests carry away what they do not eat for the benefit of their families. This portion may be eaten by the women without affronting the salmon. [562]

This rite has not been performed in full detail in Bella Coola for many years, and it was impossible to collect information on some points. It is uncertain, for example, whether this ceremony was carried out by every fisherman or whether there used to be certain individuals with the prerogative of dealing with the first catch. The latter appears to be the most logical 226 796 424 manner, and was definitely stated to be the case by one well-informed old man. It is clear, however, that every spring salmon was landed with the cry of xaẽ'lai·, taken to the Spring Salmon House, and cut up by the men until the time when women were allowed near the river. Another old man stated that the feast took place at night and that only the heads and refuse of the first catch were eaten, the remainder being dried for the winter. Women of child-bearing age were not allowed on the river bank, and were rigorously excluded from the Spring Salmon House until the time when the sun's shadow reached a diagonal scar on the slope of one of the mountains on the north side of North Bentinck Arm. This occurs about August. From that time onwards, there was no calling of xaẽ'lai·, and women, except those who were taboo, could cut salmon freely on the bank. It was even stated that refuse of salmon could be thrown into the river after that time. No one knows the origin of this seasonal prohibition, or why it should end when the sun reaches a certain point, but it was faithfully observed in former times.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

In Kimsquit similar rites were carried out, the chief variation being that the bodies of four swans were placed in the Spring Salmon House and the fish laid with these at intervals in the line. Moreover, the youth used to bite the back of each salmon as he presented it with the cedar-bark streamer. The same regulations with regard to drinking water, and crying after eating, were enforced for spring salmon as for olachen.

Miscellaneous Beliefs

The following miscellaneous beliefs and customs cannot be assigned to any special aspect of Bella Coola life:

If a spark from a fire jumps out and lights on a person's hand, it is said:

"The fire wants to give you [the person on whom the brand has fallen] food."

If a man sneezes repeatedly, it is said:

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*575 natural, any of them can act in this capacity, though it is *796 usually added that the animal in question is the one resident 776 in the land above. One patron of this type is the ordinary 825 river bull-head. It is said that long ago this fish wanted to [773] follow his friends, the salmon, to the ocean, but was persuaded to remain in the river to act as nurse to their children in his house, the river bottom. Early in the world's history he objected to people exposing his dwelling, that is, pulling up the [821] stones from the river-bed where he was wont to lie, and showed [224] his resentment by sending a very cold wind. Ever since that time boys are not allowed to fish for bull-heads in winter. As far as could be learnt, this dance has no special features.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL HERRING-HEAD

One of the supernatural beings living in the land above who is patron for a certain kusiut is the head of a female herring. Little is known of this being, even her appearance is subject to [532] doubt. For the nekusam of her protégé, a number of masks representing herring, as well as human-like beings, are prepared. When the uninitiated are present, one of the disguised figures calls to his fellows to bring their nets and capture the fish.

THE DANCE OF THE SUPERNATURAL DOG SALMON

Another fish dwelling in the land above is Dakdakānas, the supernatural dog salmon. He is patron of some kusiut but the ritual of the dance, known as ernāsmanaix, was not obtained. The similarity between Dakdakānas and Dakdakānmem, those who await Nakāpnim, appears merely to be an accidental re-[192] semblance in terminology, dependent upon a stem meaning "to come," or "coming." The significance of this in connection with the supernatural dog salmon could not be ascertained.

*575
*796 776
184
[755]

THE DANCE OF Almophaiktila

In Kimsquit it is believed that Ana'lākwulaix has a husband, Almophaiktila, who is patron for several kusiut dancers. His function is to restore to life any uninitiated who chance to

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

C Wastl-ts-ma-ts-ulh | yaa Xislwalhlaulai | Xislhlaulhlulh 599*
I gazed upon | what gave me power as a shaman(f) | when it stood up 756

tsaxlx-amaxa-a-ts-ulh in the centre of a place of petrified power(g).

(a) This was the woman's hamat designation; her shaman's name has been forgotten. [551]

(b) Recorded as song VII D 16, National Museum of Canada; quarter, Reuben Schooner, leader, Jim Pollard, prompter and announcer, assisted by Tal'a Charlie and Steamboat Annie.

(c) That is: The sky moved up and down. Grandiloquent phrases of this kind are frequent in songs used by shamans. [195]

(d) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(e) Sisaxmulx is said to be the word for salmon in the language of the supernatural beings; it is used by mortals in the rites following the taking of the first spring salmon. The shaman has received some of her power from a fish. [198] [226]

(f) Refers to the supernatural beings.

(g) Reference to the wash-basin shows that the shaman had power to heal the sick.

(h) The meaning is obscure. Apparently the shaman had been carried away by Tlitxpilitw-a and treated by immersion in a basin in which eagle down was deposited.

(i) This refers to the supernatural being, Ásaxmiktum, who causes to life mortals killed by the receipt of too much power from Tlitxpilitw-a. It is clear that this fact befell the shaman. [776]

(j) The woman is said to have received power from several sources, salmon, ghosts, and Tlitxpilitw-a herself. It is impossible to state which of her supernatural patrons is referred to in this subdivision.

(k) The woman must have been taken to one of the spots where cures could be effected by the power of a supernatural being petrified there. [955]

Song Used by Nuxalk-malxsait(a), a Kimsquit Man(b) [551] [776]

A Ásaxpaxipaxmulx | nax-tatlilxwaulx | aiahaiaiai
Look at the teeming supernatural beings above(c), not one is | wiac ana(c)!
my equal(d),

[wooden cover]

B Ásaxhlilxilaxyaa'xulá | ataxyaxtamulxaulx | aiahaiaiai
You must sometimes wake at night to meditate on what I am | wiac ana!
bringing your mouth(f),

[wooden cover]

C Ásaxyaxhaulá | ataxalhlaxamulx | aiahaiaiai
You must sometimes use your wash-basin(g), | wiac ana!

[wooden cover]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE5 Bellacoola NE5

$533

Ha	tsijiwi!	ulilaiam
Come(c),	let us lie down together	not far away.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 33b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard. This is the type of song sung by a group of women on a picnic.
(b) It was impossible to obtain individual translations for these three subdivisions.
(c) This is addressed to another man.

Women's Love Song(a)

Kiwutilidijim	diyajkutmiyutulai	yau ulilawis	siyapulut
I do not want him	to lie down with me	that slave	똘ulut(b).

dyiucytilpiuwuwu	gituyum ilaw u,	tsijkituwuiu[c]
Don't go too far down(c)	or you will be unable to stop delaying(d).

Hiwuuiwuulilip	siyudjiwulijiwu	ilu wapuiyuwu!
I want to sleep,	I dream of you(e),	how disconsolate I am!

(a) Recorded as song VII D 38c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b)똘ulut was a man who specialized in composing songs that mocked women, hence the singer used his name in this derogatory manner in retaliation.
(c) The implication is that her lover had been fondling her face, and that she did not wish him to touch her body. The three parts of this song have no apparent relationship to one another.
(d) It was impossible to obtain individual translations for these two subdivisions. The introduction of the obscene expression is unexplained.
(e) Referring to her lover.

[578]

$533
226

ANIMAL SONGS

Fishing Song(a)

This song is sung by boys as they cast for trout.

Wituiuyuiu ai	wuiuwulwuiu	wuiuwulwuiu
Come sliding, trout(b),	I want to triumph,	I want to triumph, yau tilpuulituuu	ilituiyuiu!

over you biggest	trout.

Ilituiyuiu!	ulituiyuiu!
I fish for trout,	I fish for trout.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

533*
226

Nuhlhlḵwaqotsmkx Swallow right down(c),	oldisztcntcnki to your very tail,	oldisztcntcnki to your very tail;

dmqstmwakalulan islaix
why you cannot even break one of our hairs(d).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 9a, National Museum of Canada; singer, Louie Hall.
(b) The vocative form is used.
(c) That is: Swallow the bait.
(d) A reference to the use of human hairs for fishlines. The lad is, of course, trying to "dare" the fish.

Fishing Song(a)

This is a song sung by lads as they splash in the water after minnows, trying to drive them ashore.

Waksdimān·u Who is your father?	Waksdimān·u Who is your father?

qualaiyulānk "Rotten stomach"(b)	dimān·u is your father;	qualaiyulānk "Rotten stomach"	dimān·u is your father.

(a) Recorded as song VII D 26b, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) It is uncertain whether this refers to any particular kind of fish, or is merely a general term of opprobrium.

Song Sung to a Cormorant(a)

533*
825

When a cormorant is seen near a canoe, the paddlers often sing the following song. The bird, delighted, is said to come near and dance around the craft.

Qānāxomāks Dance,	dallopān·idax cormorant,	qānāxomāks dance,	dalsitaowidax cormorant(b).

Nustsaik
Take the breast(c).

(a) Recorded as song VII D 34c, National Museum of Canada; singer, Jim Pollard.
(b) This is the Bella Bella word for cormorant.
(c) The singer insisted on inserting this refrain after the song. It is really a lullaby and it is doubtful whether it normally accompanies the cormorant song.

[192]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*539 a large cave in the vicinity where the hunters smoked the meat and boiled
[224] down the grease and marrow, but they had killed so many that it was January before their task was completed. Meanwhile the smell of flesh had attracted a number of martens which were caught in snares; in fact, they captured enough for two blanket-robes. When ready to leave for home, they prepared snow-shoes and on these safely negotiated the deep drifts and reached the village where all hope of their safety had long been abandoned. Sānuxmāxots arrived at dusk and heard his parents weeping and wailing; he asked who had died and found that they were mourning for him. His safe return turned their lamentations into rejoicings and a herald was sent out to call in the villagers to share the good news. When finally packed in, there was enough goat meat for an elaborate potlatch.[n]

[226] A year or two later, four men prepared to set out one afternoon to fish for trout. As they were leaving, Sānuxmāxots's young son begged to be taken along and cried so piteously that they at last consented. So they wrapped him carefully in a goat-skin blanket, and placed him in the bottom of the canoe which they paddled about six miles upstream. They landed on the bank, cooked a meal, and dried black spruce branches over [226] the fire to serve as torches to lure the fish within range of their spears. When night had fallen, they began to drift downstream, one man holding aloft a brand while the others speared. They had fair success, but nothing noteworthy occurred until, as they neared Nuxalst, they saw white on the water, and paddled slowly forward, thinking it must be a huge flock of swans. As they drew nearer they saw that it was snow; a huge slide had swept over the village and blocked the channel of the river. The water, no longer able to flow westward, was swirling back to the east, and the fishermen drifted with it until they found a place to camp for the night with their young companion.

As soon as it was light, they returned to the scene of the disaster and found a deep bed of snow over the site of the village. They landed to investigate, and called repeatedly, hoping that some at least had escaped. At last they heard an answer and began to dig, imagining that it must be Sānuxmāxots himself. After excavating a deep hole, they unburied the sole survivor, a slave who had escaped by covering with a copper the

---

[n] It will be noticed that there are many points of similarity between this story
[538] and the one in vol. II, p. 512. It is possible that they are versions of the same account, but it seems more likely that they refer to different incidents of which the principal [551] character of one has been forgotten. In such cases the Bella Coola, believing that individuals with the same name often have the same characteristics, frequently give to the hero of an earlier incident the name of a person who has figured in a similar one within recent years.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to the aesthetic, their skill in dancing and dramatics is noteworthy: no one who has witnessed a native dance can fail to have been impressed by the performance of the participants and the stage-craft of the carpenters. The fact that no system of writing had ever been devised has prevented the establishment of a native literature, but the practice of passing down an extensive folklore by word of mouth shows their narrative powers as well as their faculty for remembering details. At present it is difficult to appreciate what must have been their energy in earlier times when they faced the struggle for existence, armed with stone tools. Abundant salmon gave them adequate food, but only when weirs had been built with great labour. Though game was plentiful, the hunter was equipped with nothing more formidable than a bow and arrow. The simplest task required patience and skill undreamed of by the average white man. If the reader will allow his imagination to carry him backwards two hundred years, he will realize that the mere provision of food and clothing necessitated constant effort and ceaseless exertion.

Hand in hand with many admirable characteristics, the Bella Coola display others which strike the white man as unprepossessing. A first impression is the untidiness of their houses. Exteriorly, they are often fairly neat, but confusion reigns within. Clothing, instead of being hung up, is left lying on the floor; bed-coverings are piled carelessly; dirty dishes cover the tables; dogs and children swarm over the floor; flies abound; all is dirty and slovenly. The house itself may be uncompleted; a window lacks glass and has been boarded up; the roof leaks, or the steps are falling down. Nor are the surroundings more attractive. There is one struggling flower-bed in the village, but elsewhere the houses are surrounded by wastes of mud where horses and cattle wander, dogs prowl, and children play. In the distance the mountain peaks rise in splendour, but near at hand all is squalid and unkempt.

They are only slightly more particular about their personal appearance. Dirt does not distress them. They wash occa-

APPENDIX A

MECHANICAL PROCESSES

NO attempt was made to study either the material culture of the Bella Coola, or their methods of manufacturing, but information on some points was obtained incidentally. All sociological and religious features connected therewith have already been described. 121

THE TAKING AND PREPARATION OF OLACHEN

227 The run of olachen, spaty, comes about the end of April, and as many as possible are caught. In preparation, nets, ätv'x, are brought out from the boxes where they have been stored during the winter, examined, and repaired. If necessary, new ones must be manufactured out of nettle-(lxna-) fibre laid away by the women for this purpose. By rolling the material on their legs, they produce a thin twine; five strands of this are then interwoven, making a finished cord capable of resisting great strain. The nets are constructed by the men. The type used at the present time, which is said not to differ from that formerly employed, consists of a purse-like sack, oval in cross-section, open at the wider end and tapering very gradually to the other, which is closed. The total length is about thirty feet, the diameter at the open end about eight feet, and at the closed end about three feet. A new net is dipped in a mixture of boiled hemlock-bark to darken it, and then boiled in a solution of willow-bark to prevent the knots from slipping. [226] [221] [283] [462] [286] [386]

The setting out of a net is not an easy task, so two or three men agree to work as partners. In the present degenerate days, property rights are not respected and each group selects a suitable spot. The best location is where the water is about three feet deep and runs rapidly, but without ripples, over a smooth piece of the bottom; such a place is called a sklläq. When the fish begin to run plentifully, the partners paddle out to set their net, taking with them four stakes, each about ten feet in length. The weight of a full net is tremendous, so the poles have to be driven down at least six feet, a difficult task on account of the stony bottom. Selecting the exact spot, one of four posts, älkäjälos, is set upright and held in position by being tied to a cross-piece, nudjiqosta, fastened to the canoe for the purpose. While his two partners hold the craft steady, the third man begins to pound down the stake; metal mauls are now commonly used, but in former times this work was always done with an unhafted stone maul, lixwoma. The fishermen relieve one another intermittently until the top of the pole has been driven down to within 226 [476] [423] [178] [412]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

226 about a foot of the surface. In the same slow manner a second stake is driven in, about ten feet from the first, and in such a position that the main force of the current would strike at right angles a line drawn between the two. Then two more stakes are placed in position, slightly below the first pair, and nearer together, as shown in the diagram (Figure 3). The posts are often driven before the main run of the fish, and the fixing of the net delayed until that time. It is fastened to the four stakes, with its open end, which faces upstream, forming a rough oval, ten feet wide, of which the lower side rests on the bottom and the upper is at the surface. The outer stakes hold the upper edge, the inner ones secure the lower brim. The olachen are slow-swimming fish which work their way upstream with the rising tide, and, when it turns, drift back into the net. Once within the opening, they lack strength to drive forward against current and tide, and are forced into the closed bottom, floating downstream, in thousands. At the peak of the season, a net is often extended to its full dimensions with a solid mass of fish, throwing a tremendous strain on supports and mesh-work alike. During the day, the mouth is closed with a cross-piece, nastnastia, to prevent floating objects from drifting within and damaging it, and opened during the night at whatever hour the tide turns.

FIG. 3. Diagram showing position of the stakes supporting an olachen net.

Early in the morning begins the landing of the fish. The partners paddle out to the bottom of their net and, with considerable exertion, lift it into the canoe. A cord is tied around the bellied mass, cutting off a section, and the end is opened so that the fish from it fall into the bottom of the craft. Another part is dealt with in the same manner, then a third, and so in succession until the gleaming olachen are piled so deeply that no more can be loaded with safety. Sometimes two or three loads, each of many thousands, are taken from a single net. The partners slowly pole to shore where, at the present time, their wives and children wait to unload the canoe. The fish are packed into baskets, carried on the back [482] with the aid of a tump-line, and taken to pits which have been prepared 226 ten to fifteen feet from the bank. These are three or four feet deep, lined 251 with planks, and with their bottoms covered with evergreen boughs. The olachen are emptied into these holes, which are covered with more planks when full. If more fish are landed than can be handled conveniently in this manner, they are laid on branches spread on the ground, and a low wall of planks built up around them. Although the main run lasts for only three or four days, the olachen are so numerous that each group of partners is able to fill several of these storage pits.

252 Though most of the catch is thus disposed of, there is always enough

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

#192 [illegible], "Left Foot": Stnix repository named from part of a supernatural creature.

[illegible]: Kimsquit hunter living in the last century.

[825] [illegible]: Dentalium-shell.

[illegible], "Not Finished": Said concerning a kusiut who dies between initiation and his first complete dance.

[292] [881] [illegible]: Skull cap of grass and dentalium-shells worn by adolescent girls during seclusion.

[illegible]: Guest, especially from afar, to a kusiut dance.

[illegible]:
1—Supernatural herald.
2—Assemblage of the people for ceremonies of different kinds, especially shamans' dances and guessing competitions in connection with the Mystery dance.
3—Kimsquit term for the first night of a kusiut dance.

[illegible], "A Surpassing": Said of cases where a wife's relatives have given more presents to the husband's than they have received in return.

[576] [601] [illegible]: Place of concealment of a Mystery dancer's power.

[illegible]: Old people, especially parents; this is a polite term for indirect address.

[415] [illegible]: Rightful location, especially the validated position of a chief in a house.

[illegible]: Dishes carved with ancestral crest.

[illegible]:
1—Mouse.
2—Daughter of the first settlers at Sátlia.

[825] [illegible]: Spring salmon.

[illegible]: Spring salmon house.

[illegible]: Professional name of a kusiut marshal.

[illegible]: Supernatural being resident at the mouth of the Bella Coola River.

[illegible]:
1—The allotment of work to kukusiut in the manufacture of masks and other requirements.
2—Hence, the time when such tasks are assigned, the second evening of a kusiut dance.

[illegible], "The Resident Maker": Name given to the daughter of the first settlers at Snuisli.

[575] [illegible] or [illegible]: That which serves as pattern, picture, or model for a kusiut ritual.

[illegible]: Second night of a potlatch.

[226] [illegible]: Artificial, pier-like structure built into a river for use in hand-net fishing.

[illegible], "Where People Go": A reflecting pool created by Raven at Kimsquit.

[illegible]: Cave near Dean Channel.

[illegible], "The Dancer Whose Only Noise-Making Instrument Is His Body": One of Ttitcaplilán-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.

[illegible]: Supernatural woman who guards repositories.

[illegible]:
1—"The Open-Mouthed" (in the sense of open to suck forth sickness): One of Ttitcaplilán-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
2—Name of a shaman whose powers are said to have been derived from ghosts.

[756] [823] [illegible]: Swift running water.

[illegible]:
1—Ranks of ordinary inidviduals; this term is used to distinguish those who are being initiated into the nasok society.
2—Something supernatural seen when awake.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Ănudakănuts: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit woman.
ănukăldimut, "This Is to Make Straight Your Road": Said when a call is returned, or food thrown upon a fire for the dead.
Ănukae-lst, "Place of Big Stones in the River": Village at Kwatna.
Ănukelulslaix: Woman immolated in a repository and hence become supernatural.
ănukilult'a: Rainbow-coloured nose-ring worn by Death.
Ănukiqaksaix: Supernatural name of Hawk. [825] ănukitnk': Short cord by which the fungus is held during the kănăn-i dance.
Ănukkalnum: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Ănukpănaix, "The One that Fills the Rivers": Supernatural name of hump-back salmon.
ănulkstl: Nose-ring. [301]
ănultnănk: Mourning song composed for a chief and, apparently, the singing of one. [533]
Ănulxwum: Place on the north-west side of Dean Channel, about nine miles from its head, where curative power is petrified. [778] Ănumnitskmm: Supernatural beings who remind the supreme god of his kusiut duties.
Ănunilsktmm: Supernatural being who restores those killed by the receipt of too much power from Ťlitcăplilăn-a. ănunuqwn: Meeting of chiefs, archaic.
ănuonai: Person who catches early olachen in a hand-net. [226] ănupospum: Buoyant stones such as are found in a lake near the headwaters of the Bella Coola. [823] Ănuputsdilk: Supernatural being who regulates the height of tides in rivers.
ănupatlwam: To await, especially a supernatural being.
Ănupămlaix: Son of the first settlers at Sălia.
Ănupălalix, "What Fills People": Name created by Smaoan in the beginning of time with reference to his stores of salmon.
ănupănusam: Silent waiting in darkness before a kusiotem dance.
Ănupănntnikmm: Supernatural being who gives inspiration.
Ănusaikaiutslaix: 1—Supernatural name of sisiutl.
2—Method of killing practised by sisiutl.
Ănusaiksaixsaix-als: Name of a Bella Coola shaman.
Ănu-shuxălnm: Name of a Kimsquit woman.
ănunka'alxăkmus: The rare prerogative of changing from kusiut to susook rites on alternate nights. [424]
Ănuskiekmm, "The Saviour": One of Ťlitcăplilăn-a's names and hence a designation given to shamans.
Ănuskumuthm: One of the first men to settle at Tăl-io in the beginning of time.
ănuskămnuy: Peculiar cry uttered by a kusiut scratcher.
Ănuspunm-aix: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit man.
Ănusy: Place on north side of North Bentinck Arm, about one-quarter mile from its head.
ănuspaxutsaix, "The Left Side," in the language of ghosts: Identical with sxlanuk, q.v. [198] Ănuxyelaix: One of the first women to settle at Sliskiul in the beginning of time.
Ănuxkămdimut: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.
ănutxa: 1—Excavated house furnished with stepped platforms for guests.
2—Village at Kwatna. [342]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

E

ełqsa or ełqsał·i: Medicine; generic term for all remedies of a magical or medicinal nature. [278]
e·m: Coitus, term in common usage.
emis: Nephew or niece. [601]

'

ełłmals: Ancestral name of a Snuiłe·il man.
'ełłaław·a: Daughter of the first settlers at Green Bay in the beginning of time.
ełłłałaikila: Moon, semi-anthropomorphized.

H hai·shkila: 1—Bella Bella term, commonly used in Bella Coola, for ssaak official 2—Kasiut name of a Bella Coola man.

haidał: Type of sea-going canoe used by the Haida; the word may be a corruption from English.
Hai·h·kela: Man who descended to the upper Bella Coola in the beginning of time.
Hau·o: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
haohao: Mythical, supernatural bird. [825]
Hamest: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nuxwałt in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Qwiyai in the beginning of time.
hali: Penis.
haiḥ: Call used by members of the kasiut society to strengthen their fellow-members.

I

ikw': Pounded cedar-bark, undyed. [824]
ilaix: Zigzag course up or down a mountain slope.
Ilaiyał: Twałałił's dog.
Iłhmai·s: One of the first women sent down west of Kwatna in the beginning of time.
ildustas dia sxim: Bandage of undyed cedar-bark placed around an infant's head to produce cranial deformation. [856] ildutsam, Bandages: Term applied to presents distributed as validation for the bitings of a self-Cannibal. [431] ilk: One of the fritillariae.
imałłundjutqułsan: Abbreviated rite of Neakymm dance.
imanta: Nest.
I'mastłak: Ssaak name of a Kimsquit man.
Imimałnaix, "The Moover": Male supernatural child who fastens Neakymm's craft.
ipamap, "Hold Him Down": Cry used in Cannibal dances.
ipanełłai, "Accept": Said to spring salmon during the ritual connected with the first taking of these fish. [226] ipłxastmam: Alleged singing of a ssaak initiate's song by the supernatural being, Mitłakila.
ipo'lo·smm: Reduction of the value of an investment-present by immediate return of part of it. [426]
i·płs: Moss. [824] iraałnastamłdim: Polyandry.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

hulhtmut: Generic term for presents given to a future bridegroom by the father of the future bride. [431] Kululhtmidjut: Supernatural being whose stomach is cut in the land above. [584]
humai-t: Good-bye. [576] Kumhumlhutas, "What Brings Our Food": Synonym for the supernatural being Wiwuine.
huxistem: Designation for a series of difficult and spectacular huxiut dances.
huxie-tem: Said to be identical with sisiutaltz, the visible object obtained by a shaman from his supernatural benefactor. [756] huxiut: plural, hukuxiut; vocative, huxiaut; vocative plural, hukuxiaut:
1—Society comprising those entitled to perform dramatic dances during the winter ceremonial season. [575]
2—Member of the society.
3—"The Learned One": Designation occasionally applied to a supernatural being, especially a petrified one, or to a person having power to cure the sick. [756] Kuziyut: Kimsquit female shaman living in the last century.
huzjun: Beloved one, especially a child; this is the vocative form of the word.
huzjiyum: Orphan.
Kuu'hile'yulus: Woman dwelling at Fort Rupert in the beginning of time.
Kuu-ula: Smith Inlet.
Kualuutl'ts: Supernatural name of Cormorant.
kuu-kuu-s: Merganser. [825] Kualuumulut: Merganser canoe acquired by the first settlers at Stuu. [763] kualuus: Unidentified bird of which the note is an omen of death.
Kualuis: Kuxiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Kualtlum: Kuxiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Kuale-tamut: Kuxiut name of a male Green Bay Cannibal.
kual-ie-l: Smooth greenstone, "jadeite," such as is found on the Queen Charlotte Islands. [823]
kuah: Evergreen bough. [824] Kualatul: Famous Bella Coola warrior.
kuqmui: One of the sculpins.
Kuasta: Kuxiut name of a Kimsquit man.
Kuat-iual-a, "The Big One": Lustful male supernatural being.
Kualtuulus: Man who came to earth near Stuu in the beginning of time.
Kua-tuus: Kimsquit woman.
Kuilsis: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
Kuilsus: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
Kuinas: Kitkatla chief living in the last century.
Kuiltalsis, "One Who Sits without Right": Name taken by a wife in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.
Kuula: Influential Kwakiutl woman captured in the beginning of time by a Nuxalk chief; the word is a synonym for Wiituus-elmula.
Kulilas Nuxhtuqta: One of the nine supernatural siblings.
kulumhlhta-ain: Lullaby. [533]
kual-yale: Archaic expression used in a string figure.
kulla: 1—Pen or trap in the ocean for salmon. [226]
2—Village on east side of South Bentinck Arm, not far from its head.

 192*

numas, nematin, numastas: Member of same sex and same ancestral family as speaker. [601]

Numatlum: Supernatural being who comes with Nuskymm to bring a call to the latter's protégé. [614]

Numelshmut: One of the names of Great Blue Heron as chief.

numit: 1—A passage, especially the digestive tract. [826]
2—Laudatory adjective applied to chiefs, referring to goods distributed.

numismuhtiz: Toilet-hole.

numlutsum: Recompense, virtually pay, given to carpenters and other craftsmen at a mourning ceremony. [465] numnlmmmas: Exchange marriage. [583] numpalutmm: Passenger.

Nu-mtz: Place near Nulkas.

Nunsemlaix: Kusiut name created by ʌʌʌʌʌʌʌ at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

nunnasi di manas: Half-brother or sister with different mother from speaker. [601] nunnasi ti atanas: Half-brother or sister with different father from speaker.

Nunsoo'as, "The Inhospitable One": Name taken by a wife in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.

Nunsumunk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunudjimm: Supernatural being who created repositories in the beginning of time.

Nunulunk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunulpsum: House occupied by the first settlers at Nutsymult in the beginning of time.

nunu-l'atimut: The use of potent medicines after seeing a giant toad.

nunulwoottum or nunulwoottimut: 1—The giving of hemlock-bark and dyed cedar-bark to Thlaxpilitw-a. [782]
2—The making of offerings to ghosts by the casting of food on a fire. [775]

Nunumunk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nununiziklimut: Male supernatural being who travels with Nuskymm, takes charge of the singers who also accompany him, and sometimes dances happily.

Nunusiks: Mother Nature.

nunupp: Fisherman with inherited right to use of a salmon-weir or of a place for catching olachen. [424] nunupemarmly, "A Calling Back", or "A Seizing": Term applied to the death of a chief in the belief that it is due to the supernatural artisans having come down to carry him off. The word is often added to their designation. [226] [761]

Nunujmals, "Where Water Entered": House of one of the first groups of settlers at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.

Nunupulelets: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunupulelaiyu-a: Professional name of a female droner.

Nunupulstmm: Supernatural being; this is probably a synonym for one of the Carpenters.

Nunuhmai: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.

Nunumunk: One of the four supernatural eagle-like creatures.

Nunuumulek: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.

Nunutlhantmm, "The One that Penetrates to the Head of the Rivers": Supernatural name of sockeye salmon. [825]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

 192*

ooktoolem: Goods obtained by a man's own exertions and forming the nucleus of his wealth for a potlatch. [556] oomatuts, plural, qlomatuts: Kusiut patron.
O'mistl: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
O'mistlhs: One of the first women to settle at Stuie in the beginning of time.
O'mistlmas: Son of Raven in the beginning of time.
Omqomkikka: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle at Sisiaut in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle on the Kimsquit River in the beginning of time.
4—Tsemsit woman who died about 1915.
'Omilem: ooteny village.
Omqut: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola hamatsa dancer.
Onikut: 1—Ancestral name of a Sisiaut man.
2—Celebrated Kimsquit hunter.
'onikmut: Any non-sacred rite, especially an o'alt dance held subsequent to the kusiut season.
Onisualtsa: Kusiut name of a Kimsquit hamatsa dancer.
Onqmuk: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
onostlqumm: The taking of food to another tribe for ceremonious bestowal.
Onstiome: Supernatural being who sleeps perpetually, literally, "The Sleepy One."
Opmikmy: 1—Village in the middle Bella Coola valley.
2—Celebrated Bella Coola warrior.
o'qoi: Skunk cabbage. [824]
Oqlelsts: Supernatural being, herald of Alquatem.
oqlo: The steeping of nuset novices in smoke, this being the final rite of initiation.
Oqlmai: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nuxalst in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Sisiaut in the beginning of time.
oqla: Temporary fish-dam of interlocked branches. [226]
Oqnaw-i: Small mountain on south side of the Bella Coola valley behind Lomqo-ts.
O-qui-: Place near Stuie.
'Oqmokkhmut: One of the first men to settle at Kwiyai in the beginning of time.
oqoskmut': The leading across of a bride to a groom during a wedding. [585] ostlustem: Hereditary tendency.
ostlstin: One made sick by salmon, especially a woman who suffers from this cause through disregard of adolescence taboos. [827] ostpas: Variety of dog salmon found at Bella Bella. [784]
o-smistlqumsis: Conferring of ancestral names at a potlatch. [825] ostsemsmsis: The performance of a kusiut dance with supernatural dog salmon as patron.
Ostqlqmq, "Tragism Place": Village in the lower Bella Coola valley.
ostqlem: Distribution of strips of mountain goat skin at marriage. [585] ostsmuks: "Where are you going!"
Ostsiklq', "Lake-Swallower": A mythical monster.
ostwalleis: First night of a potlatch.
ottit: Third eldest brother or sister. [601]
Ottuqs: Name of Mink as chief.
O-lhit di-Stalhmq: One of the names of the supreme god.
Ottem: Celebrated Wanyal-a warrior.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

sa·qwa·t: String figure.
Saskwanuts: Harbour on east side of King Island.
[227] sdjidji'is: Movable box-like container which can be raised at a salmon-weir.
Sekakmân·a: 1—Supernatural herring woman, or perhaps herring head.
2—Carrier murderer living in the last century.
[823] sekilâxt: Rock crystal used in kusiut initiation rites.
[822] sekima siâlamkek: River net for salmon.
Setsalânl: Echo.
Sexsexkâlaix: Supernatural being who advises the supreme god.
Sexsexkwalxelaoslaix, "The Strengthener of the Breathing": One of Tlitcâplilân·a's names, and hence a designation given to shamans.
[805] Siâlxelâx: Ancestral name created on earth by a Lomqo·ts man.
[825] Siaqam, "When Herrings Spawn": Third moon after the winter solstice.
[805] sidâxsu: One of the river sculpins, the so-called cat-fish.
Sidakaos di Ano°likwalsaix, "The Coming of Ano°likwalsaix": Fourth moon after the summer solstice.
siestla: Servants; the term is used to describe the relationship of the supernatural beings to the supreme god.
[805] Si'islalitl, "The Time for Eating Dog Salmon": Second moon after the summer solstice.
Si'iswâi·itl, "The Time for Eating Cohoe Salmon": Third moon after the summer solstice.
[584] si'itlliukek: Presents, given unostentatiously, at the time when a proposal of marriage is broached.
[431] si'igikum, "The Ability to Walk": Strength or stability as obtained for children by the repurchase of their mother from their father.
[583] Siumt, "Sits Down": Moon of the winter solstice.
[805] Sisâml, "Time for Eating Spring Salmon": Moon of the summer solstice.
Sikâlamtak, "Time When Sockeye Salmon Ascend the Rivers": First moon after the summer solstice.
[104] siki, "One who Cures": Functionary who protects novices at kusiut and ssaok rites.
Sikiliktmm: Evil supernatural being who acts as executioner for his fellows in the land above.
[805] Sipulq, "Time for Making Salmon-Weirs": Fourth moon after the winter solstice.
Sikwalxwlekx: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Sikwldjut: Ancestral name of a Stuix man.
Siknm: Chief of mythical house in the sky.
[226] Silias: Celebrated composer.
siltmaq: Salmon-weir.
[827] sinaxyme'ax: Ssaok head-dress.
sininits: Breath, or power of being alive, an element in the human body.
[761] si·nipodjoxstmax: Hide-and-seek as played by two boys.
Simptcus: Man led astray by a supernatural being in the beginning of time.
[805] Sinomwak, "Time for the Use of Olachen Hand-Nets": Fifth moon after the winter solstice.
[726] Sinulkemitl, "Where It Spoke": Outpost near mouth of the Kwatna River, occupied to give warning in times of danger.
Sinunukâlâlum: Benign supernatural being who causes Cannibals to return from the land above.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Wat·a: Xuxais woman living in the beginning of time.
wals: Dog. [825]
wawuts: Dog, archaic.
wa·xsia: Cape of yellow cedar-bark. [291]
waxwaxtsia: Brother or sister of grandparent.
Wiakai: One of the first women to settle at Swaloll in the beginning of time. [601]
Wiaqaii: 1—One of the first men to settle at Tāl·io in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Stuax in the beginning of time.
Wikwan-skwala: Synonym for Kwala: Influential Kwakiutl woman captured in the beginning of time by a Nuxalkt chief.
Wikwanutl: Kimsquit hunter mentioned in an ancient story.
wina, wocatior, winao: War-party.
Winās: Slave living at Nuxalkt several generations ago.
winās di qalx, "War-Party of the Ocean," or winās di sa·ildja·ts, "War-Party of the Tides": Supernatural being.
Winwina: Supernatural being who captured birds and fish for the benefit of mankind.
Winwinhmak: Supernatural being, perhaps identified with one of the warm winds.
winxta: Assistance rendered by the inhabitants of a town to a neighbouring settlement being attacked. [628]
Wipitpawakts: Bella Bella chief living in the beginning of time. [726] Winmkilak: Smoaux's daughter-in-law in the beginning of time.
Wi'stlas: Ancestral name of a Kimsquit man.
Wilnlkt: Sisaok name of a Kimsquit man.
Wixat: Man who travelled to the Skeena River in the beginning of time.
Wixon: One of the first men to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
wi·a: Kusiut dance in which the nine supernatural siblings are summoned to earth.
Wily: One of the first women to settle at Schooner Pass in the beginning of time.
Wilx: One of Raven's female Crow relatives. wily: Cripple.

X

Xaiāqakutl: Ancestral name of a Tāl·io man.
Xaiqts: Stream entering the Bella Coola from the north near Nuhwa. [821] Xai·utl: Continuous North Wind, anthropomorphized.
xak'loi·: Cry raised as each of the first spring salmon is brought ashore. [226] Xālaiya: Step-daughter of Raven in the beginning of time.
xaqants: Great blue heron. [825]
Xāt: Designation of a tribe, probably a branch of the Carriers, dwelling far to the south-east of the Bella Coola.
xāxaf: Canada goose.
xal·a: Root of qāymāts, an unidentified plant.
Xelalus: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola Cannibal.
Xelwostaw·a: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Xelimai: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola woman.
xem: The successive rising of the sun from day to day. This word, which is common in derivatives, appears usually to be pronounced yem after i. [821]
Xemena: 1—One of the nine supernatural siblings.
2—One of the first men to settle on the Dean River in the beginning of time.
3—One of the first men to settle at Swaloli in the beginning of time.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

a friend. Raven determined to supply this want for the benefit of the Kimsquit people. Accordingly he used a natural stone depression near the village as his chamber-pot, and the liquid reflected faces clearly. Ever since, any liquid, even rain-water, placed in that depression acts as a reflector. The place is called Anilxsaix, "Where People Go," and it has been used as a mirror by the Kimsquit people and their guests for many generations. In this way, the renown of Raven spread to foreigners visiting Kimsquit. Another survival of this construction is the name Nusqalît-a, "Chamber-Pot," commonly applied as a nickname to the small daughters of Kimsquit chiefs. 773 778 823 [551]

One of Raven's inventions was the making of nettle-fibre olachen nets, an art which he taught spiders as well as men. In the beginning of time, Raven told two men to make a net according to a pattern which he showed them, and gave them some fibre. It was not sufficient, and when the workers asked for more, Raven told them to draw it from their own intestines. This they did, and ever since spiders have had the same ability. Another story describes how Raven saw an olachen net being made in one of the distant villages which he visited during his travels, learnt the details of its manufacture, and taught the Bella Coola on his return home. 773 [227] [825]

Many of Raven's exploits are well known, although not embodied in elaborate myths. For example, it is believed that in the beginning of time the ocean was to the east of Bella Coola and the land to the west. Drownings were frequent, so Raven altered the relative positions of land and sea. Most ocean dwellers followed the sea to its new home, but a number of mussels remained near their human friends. They are still to be found in the upper valley of Bella Coola River. These shell-fish, which are probably freshwater mussels, are said to be identical with those of the ocean, and are called by the same name. This is always mentioned as proof of the former presence of salt water in the upper Bella Coola valley. The occurrence of the shell-fish may be the origin of this theory. It might also be mentioned that the Bella Coola believe that a few years 773 823 [825]

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

APPENDIX A

MECHANICAL PROCESSES

NO attempt was made to study either the material culture of the Bella Coola, or their methods of manufacturing, but information on some points was obtained incidentally. All sociological and religious features connected therewith have already been described. 121

THE TAKING AND PREPARATION OF OLACHEN

227

The run of olachen, xpaty, comes about the end of April, and as many as possible are caught. In preparation, nets, dův'x", are brought out from the boxes where they have been stored during the winter, examined, and repaired. If necessary, new ones must be manufactured out of nettle (lxwa) fibre laid away by the women for this purpose. By rolling the material on their legs, they produce a thin twine; five strands of this are then interwoven, making a finished cord capable of resisting great strain. The nets are constructed by the men. The type used at the present time, which is said not to differ from that formerly employed, consists of a purse-like sack, oval in cross-section, open at the wider end and tapering very gradually to the other, which is closed. The total length is about thirty feet, the diameter at the open end about eight feet, and at the closed end about three feet. A new net is dipped in a mixture of boiled hemlock-bark to darken it, and then boiled in a solution of willow-bark to prevent the knots from slipping. 226 221 283 462 286 386

The setting out of a net is not an easy task, so two or three men agree to work as partners. In the present degenerate days, property rights are not respected and each group selects a suitable spot. The best location is where the water is about three feet deep and runs rapidly, but without ripples, over a smooth piece of the bottom; such a place is called a xlitsy. When the fish begin to run plentifully, the partners paddle out to set their net, taking with them four stakes, each about ten feet in length. The weight of a full net is tremendous, so the poles have to be driven down at least six feet, a difficult task on account of the stony bottom. Selecting the exact spot, one of four posts, álkdjalos, is set upright and held in position by being tied to a cross-piece, nudjiqosta, fastened to the canoe for the purpose. While his two partners hold the craft steady, the third man begins to pound down the stake; metal mauls are now commonly used, but in former times this work was always done with an unhafted stone maul, lxwema. The fishermen relieve one another intermittently until the top of the pole has been driven down to within 226 476 423 178 412

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

Ashka: Village at Salmon House, on the upper Dean River.
ashma: Position between two fires.
ashut: 1—[illegible]d bed behind the fire used by a person seeking power, or by one who has been in contact with the supernatural.
2—Waterfall.[1] [823]
as-maisa: To teach.
as-maisasmit': Hereditary lore handed down secretly in a family. [424] Asqemks: One of Raven's Crow sisters.
asqwma: Sasek song in slow time. [583]
asskin: 1—Box, archaic; hence, seat.
2—One of the nights of a potlatch, probably that on which a representation of the deceased appears.
asta: Rocky Mountain jay. [825] astawmit: Carved house post.
Astaluxalt: Wife of Smoky; both were changed to stone in the beginning of time.
asuxtanut: That part of a house between fire and doorway.
Asuiwinaists: Expedition of the supernatural being Wiwaina against berries and fish.
At-gamam: Smaaux's fish-dam in the beginning of time; the name has since been used by his descendants.
atgmasata: Only sister in a family of several brothers. [601]
atq': Seals. [825]
atsmalum: Steeping in medicinal smoke as a curative measure.
atsqulp: Fir. [755]
Atlat-intit: Evil male supernatural being. [824] a-ima: 1—Death, not anthropomorphised.
2—Dead. [825]
atmit': Kingfisher.
atsi: Fish-hook. [227]
Atskam, "They of the Huge Jaws": Supernatural beings resident in the land above.
atskma: Kuxiut spy.
atsqait: plural, atsqaiut; neutre plural, atsqiaut:
1—Person who has not given a potlatch, a commoner.
2—Ancestral name of a Kimsquit woman.
Aiikk: atsmq village.
Apa: Smaa man mentioned in an ancient story.
apa-hendjat, "He Urinates Over Himself." The implication is that this is an indication of misfortune, hence the word really means omen. It is the Kimsquit variant of a-sendjat. [787] a-sendjat: Omen of death.
Apa-i, "Occupied Mound": 1—Village at Kwatna.
2—Artificial mound at Tal-ia.
3—Village on the Kimsquit River.
4—Island near Ocean Falls.
Apa-i nas Wamalnuks, "Place of Dogs": Locality near Ocean Falls where the dogs came to earth in the beginning of time.
apaxa-i: Varied thrush. [825]

[1] The latter is a favourite place for obtaining power, the probable reason for the identity of the two terms.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

#192
[824] ka'nik: Tree, probably birch.
Kaiaxaiâ': One of the first men to settle at Ewinai in the beginning of time.
Kaitcha: One of the first men to settle at Snaitli in the beginning of time.
Kalkm: Bella Bella woman mentioned in an ancient story.
Kalad: Kimsquit man.
Kalpam: Kasiat name of a Bella Coola man.
[222] kalpam: The gathering of fern root for food.
[262] Kalpomtkmm: Name conferred on their sister by the first settlers at Jinsa in the beginning of time.
Ka'lin-a: Kimsquit man mentioned in an ancient story.
[585] kalumkhlmmin: Public orations, previous to marriage, of the bride's ancestral myths in order to cause children to be born.
[842] kalpam: Ritual on the day before a marriage, including the oration of myths by the bride's relatives, the choosing of assistants, and the singing of songs of all kinds.
Kamai-o: 1—Mysterious supernatural woman.
[576] 2—"Please," or "Thank You," a word implying benison.
*Kamalmy: 1—One of the first men to settle at Nalimo in the beginning of time.
2—One of the first men to settle at Nuxalxi in the beginning of time.
3—Name of the first sky that fell in the beginning of time.
Kamalelkl: Lazy supernatural beings who accompanied Nuxlpmm.
Kamalpmm: Man mentioned in an origin myth of Alqulaal.
Kamimlulu: Kasiat name of a Kimsquit man.
*Kampimy: House brought to earth by first settlers at Nuxlxi in the beginning of time.
[824] kamil': Kelp.
[227] kamulu: Cod hook.
kamut: Termination.
[824] kanaa-i: 1—Shelf fungus.
2—Kasiat dance in which a shelf fungus is used.
Kanilku: One of the first women to settle at Jinsa in the beginning of time.
kan imut: Ceremonial crow.
Kanuin: Herald of a Tal'is chief in the beginning of time.
kanlas: Trap.
Kanuhlilum: 1—Daughter of the first settlers at Sitlin in the beginning of time.
2—Daughter of Ojemai, one of the first settlers in the upper Bella Coola valley in the beginning of time.
[264] kanlitin: Assemblage of the people for a meal of any kind.
Kanpuhlmm: One of the first men to settle at Rivers Inlet in the beginning of time.
Kanwinajin-a: Supernatural berry-picker resident in the land of ghosts.
[825] kapai: 1—Hump-back salmon.
2—Convex transverse beam near front and rear of house.
3—Mountain on the Dean River.
Kapsin: Sisaal name of a Kimsquit man.
Kasina: Man mentioned in an ancient story of Raven.
[752] kasiat: The seeking for shaman's power by a lad.
[825] kasmin: Golden eagle.
[524] katlan: Top, toy.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

mimmiqulq: Leaf of sâlalberry.

mis-mqlqa: 1—Omen of misfortune, such as preceded the outbreak of smallpox, horses. [824]

2—Smallpox. [787]

mîlka: Type of sea-going canoe with raised prow and small stern.

mna, mentin, mnan: Child. [601]

Mnaîmîn: Supreme god when addressed in prayer.

mnî': Excreta.

mnmnî, mentin, mnmntnîn-i: Ancestral family, practically equivalent to children when used by an old person. [614]

mnîhîmnata: The commemoration of a chief's potlatches and other major ceremonies by means of plain posts erected near his grave. [211]

Mnîmîn-mm, Tide-Measurer: A supernatural being. [764]

Mîmîn: Man mentioned in a song.

Mnîmîkîn: Supernatural being who gives potency to nuxnî rites.

mnîmîm: Grandiloquent expression used by the hamatsa with reference to the way in which supernatural beings govern the length of human lives. [776] mnîhîmm: 1—The condition of being within range of speech and vision. The term is used to describe relations formerly existing between the dead and the living. [775]

2—To visit, term used with reference to the coming of a masked representation of a dead person; the significance is similar to that expressed in the first meaning.

mnî': Pounded, dyed cedar-bark used to decorate ceremonial objects.

mnîwnk: Head-ring of cedar-bark worn by hamatsa initiates in the upper Bella Coola valley.

mqnîn: Lice. [825]

mqnîn: Adolescent youth.

mnmnnî': Blue grouse.

mnmnnîhîhnnîn: Dentalium-shell ear-rings worn by adolescent girls during seclusion. [301]

mn: Hand net for catching eulachon. [227] mnîymîhîmîn: Yellow cedar staves decorated with swan feathers such as is carried by a Mystery dancer.

mnîymm: Wrestling.

Mnîmm-n: Rivers Inlet man living in the last century.

N

Nnîn'nîmm: One of the first men to settle at Smith Inlet in the beginning of time.

Nî'mm: Bella Bella village; the Anglicized form is Nemo.

nîm: Grizzly bear. [825]

Nnnnîn: Name received from Grizzly Bear by a Kimsquit man in the beginning of time.

Nnnnî: Kwîmî name of a Nuxalk man.

Nnnnîmm: One of the first men to settle at Bîmm in the beginning of time.

Nnnîmîmî: One of the names of Mount Nuxalk as chief.

nîm-mnî: Non-ceremonial weeping, usually individual, and always with real feeling. [827]

Nnm: Indeterminate locality in the distant east. [152]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

[192] nuhinuis: Synonym for gamo-is, the large cone-shaped nusuk whistle.
[534] Nulya-kut: Side valley of the Kimsquit River.
Nulpa-kut: Side valley of the Kimsquit River.
Nulpstsuaw-e, "Nearest River": River flowing from the north into the northern corner of the head of North Bentinck Arm. The Anglicized form is Nocletscumay.
[103]
[823] nu'nqulsis: Stone supernaturally born from another at sea level.
Numsin-a: Lusamq village.
Nundrak, "The Mother of Dogs": Name given to a Bella Bella woman in an ancient story.
Nupalk: Bella Coola valley.
[101] Nupalkmq: Inhabitants of the Bella Coola valley.
Nuqum: Kusiut name of a Stuax man.
Nuxum: Name of a female composer.
Nupakmalsais, "The Light Giver": One of the names of the supreme god.
nupsx: Light.
Nusim: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola Cannibal.
Nusimatlais: Q'aqa name of a Kimsquit man.
Nupmalmmaw-a, "Stick-Breaker": Name taken by daughter of the first settlers at Stuax in the beginning of time.
[825] nuxsárank: Mountain goat with long hair on its chest.
nuxsimut, "The Silent Night": The hushed assemblage of kukusiut after departure of a Cannibal.
[227] nuxtuxtin: Cross-piece which holds open mouth of olachen net.
Nuxulat: Village on Dean Channel below Kimsquit.
[585] nuxulatkum: Public promise by the parents of bride and bridegroom on the wedding night that names will be provided for resultant children. This is [425] combined with an oration of origin myths. The term is also used for a similar promise of rights to hunting grounds, although the granting of this is automatic.
[828] Nuya: Mountain near Stuax.
nuyálsikdmut: Person who wanders away from home in despondency.
Nuyal-alais: One of the first women to settle at Tal-is in the beginning of time.
Nu'yus-isim: Land of salmon.

O

o'alyum: Kimsquit term for a'alk, archaic.
'O-ß': Kwatna lad mentioned in an ancient story.
[824] okal: Grass with edible roots growing on tide-flats.
[262] Olqumay: Valley pre-empted by one of the first settlers at Kimsquit in the beginning of time.
Olqdimut: Herald who came down to the Dean River in the beginning of time.
oly: 1—The kusiut prerogative of scratching.
2—Bad, adjective.
Olstw-i: Kusiut name of a Sisal man.
Olil'yaiya, "The Worthless One": Name assumed by a woman in consequence of slights received from her husband's relatives.
[825] Olualdmut, "The One that Changes Itself": Supernatural name of spring salmon.
[264] 'omstalil': Assemblage of the people for food of any kind.

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NEb Bellacoola NEb

sa qwa: String figure.
Saskwouts: Harbour on east side of King Island.
[227] sdzidzi'ts: Movable box-like container which can be raised at a salmon-weir.
Sekakmawa: 1—Supernatural herring woman, or perhaps herring head.
2—Carrier murderer living in the last century.
[823] sekilast: Rock crystal used in kusiut initiation rites.
sekima siskwtek: River net for salmon.
[822] Setsalout: Echo.
Sexnxhlaix: Supernatural being who advises the supreme god.
Sexnxqualyslosslaix, "The Strengthener of the Breathing": One of Ttlexphlax-a's names, and hence a designation given to shamans.
[805] Sislurlax: Ancestral name created on earth by a Lomqots man.
Siqlam, "When Herrings Spawn": Third moon after the winter solstice.
[825] sidzazu: One of the river sculpins, the so-called cat-fish.
[805] Sidzkas di Anq'likwalsaix, "The Coming of Anq'likwalsaix": Fourth moon after the summer solstice.
siwala: Servants; the term is used to describe the relationship of the supernatural beings to the supreme god.
[805] Si'sialil, "The Time for Eating Dog Salmon": Second moon after the summer solstice.
Si'tswai-ul, "The Time for Eating Cohoe Salmon": Third moon after the summer solstice.
[584] si'illiukek: Presents, given unostentatiously, at the time when a proposal of marriage is broached.
[431] si'ipikm, "The Ability to Walk": Strength or stability as obtained for children by the repurchase of their mother from their father.
[583] Skamt, "Sits Down": Moon of the winter solstice.
[805] Skatml, "Time for Eating Spring Salmon": Moon of the summer solstice.
Sikskmuk, "Time When Sockeye Salmon Ascend the Rivers": First moon after the summer solstice.
[104] siki, "One who Cures": Functionary who protects novices at kusiut and nsaak rites.
Sikiliktmm: Evil supernatural being who acts as executioner for his fellows in the land above.
[805] Sipuly, "Time for Making Salmon-Weirs": Fourth moon after the winter solstice.
Sikwalxwlelax: Kusiut name of a Bella Coola man.
Sikwldjut: Ancestral name of a Stuix man.
Siknm: Chief of mythical house in the sky.
[226] Silias: Celebrated composer.
silmaq: Salmon-weir.
[827] sinaxymu'ax: Sasaak head-dress.
sininits: Breath, or power of being alive, an element in the human body.
[761] si-nipodjaxtmax: Hide-and-seek as played by two boys.
Simptcu: Man led astray by a supernatural being in the beginning of time.
[805] Sinomwak, "Time for the Use of Olachen Hand-Nets": Fifth moon after the winter solstice.
[726] Sinulkemitl, "Where It Spoke": Outpost near mouth of the Kwatna River, occupied to give warning in times of danger.
Sinuwklalam: Benign supernatural being who causes Cannibals to return from the land above.

McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

192*

[illegible]: Kwakiutl term for presents distributed as "Eagle down."
[illegible]: Scoop-net for catching salmon in rivers. [227]
[illegible]: Head-dress of eagles' tails worn by kusiut dancers.
[illegible]: Spring water. [292]
Xwaxila: Settlement in the Carrier country.
[illegible]: Cow parsnip. [824]
Xwalkun: Name obtained in the beginning of time from the Skeena people in whose language it is said to mean whale.
Xwixwitakmlaix: Shaman who obtained his power from Thunder.
Xwixwhila: Daughter of a Kitlobe chief living in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Wrestling.
Xwulju-i, "The Crash": Name taken by one of the first settlers at Nuhlax in the beginning of time but long since changed to a kusiut designation.
[illegible]: 1—Hummingbird. [825]
2—One of the first men to settle at Äłqälaxl in the beginning of time.
[illegible]: Puppet-patron in the form of a hummingbird.
[illegible]: The concluding ritual of the kusiut season.
[illegible]: Gambling game played with crabapple sticks. [525]
Xwulxwis, "The One Whose Work Has Failed": Professional name of a kusiut marshal.
[illegible]: The desertion of her husband by a wife. [586]

Y

Yähuhs: Ancestral name of a Stuix man.
Ya-ä"axwaxwa: Kimsquit man mentioned in an allegedly historical account. [576] yae: "Hello!" "Hail!" or "Greetings!"
ye-: Exclamation having the significance of, "May you have a safe passage," said when a corpse is drawn through the roof.
Yeäks: One of the first men to settle at Nuliqwalt in the beginning of time.
'Yeändji: Bella Bella man mentioned in an ancient story.
yeaxwax: 1—Prerogative, tangible or intangible, which some kukusiut possess in addition to a dance.
2—Similar prerogative formerly displayed in xsook rites.
yex: 1—Call, that is, that which impels a kusiut to dance.
2—Kusiut whistle.
Ye'mäjalaus: Man sent down west of Kwatna in the beginning of time.
yexila: Term, implying both wealth and good fortune, applied to a man able to give a memorial potlatch soon after the death of a relative.
yeyä'nimut: Presents given by a prospective bridegroom to his future father-in-law. [431] ye: Good, adjective. [584] yeki: Mountain goat.
Yel-äxleix: Goose Island. [825]
yeleh: "All Right," cry used in a kusiut dance.
Yellal-a: Man mentioned in an ancient story.
Yelyelhuxleix: One of the first men to settle at Äłqälaxl in the beginning of time.
yelhuhmem: Bringing down of a call by means of the rite of sawadjut.
yellelaxl: Presents given by the bride's relatives to the groom's when they enter her house on the wedding day. [431] [585]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

554 it to the digestive tract. After a man has given four potlatches
* 556 he feels superior to those who have been unable to do likewise.
622 His name is "bright," "clean," "heavy," "firm," or "upright"
[578] in Bella Coola terms, and so, likewise, his seat. He feels independent and proud. Such a chief will fearlessly enter the back-room where ceremonial rites are taking place, even if not entitled to do so.

"He is so strong, he can go where he will," say the Bella Coola.

The advice of such a man is taken because of his ability and prestige, especially by the members of his own family. A few years ago, for example, when a certain Bella Coola died, his brother wished a kusiut name-prerogative of the deceased to pass to the dead man's daughter. The girl's mother's father, a numitl chief, objected, and his desires were followed, although the name in question was not connected in any way with his family. In small matters, too, people gladly carry out the [592] wishes of a chief. Work around the house is done for him without thought of disobedience. An old man was asked whether, when he was young, chiefs gave many orders and acted as masters in their households.

"You bet," the old man answered emphatically with a dry chuckle.

• 231 It is difficult now to form an accurate estimate, from obser-552 vation, of the influence of chiefs solely through virtue of the 622 goods they have expended. But the following is a concrete example. In November, 1923, the writer, while walking through the Bella Coola village, was bitten by a dog. He was told that the animal belonged to a certain old woman. When next he saw the owner he asked her whether she knew that her dog attacked passers-by.

"Yes," she answered, in a matter-of-fact tone, "He is a chief and can do what he likes."

Further questioning elicited the information that the old [766] woman and her husband, the childless last survivors of an ancestral family, had transmitted some of their ancestral

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

names to their dog, and had distributed presents to validate the bestowal. Consequently, the animal is a chief (see Plate 11)[1] and can do as he likes. When it dies it will be mourned as a chief. Moreover, a number of people have returned the presents which they received at the time the dog was made a chief, and this money is kept by the woman and her husband, to be used when they perform the rite of mourning for the dog at death. 231 552 622 766

When this is possible, in the present degenerate days, it is not difficult to understand how, formerly, a great chief felt himself above the restraints that hindered lesser men. The last great Bella Coola chief was Potles, who died between 1870 and 1880. His influence and power were so great that he was a virtual ruler, daring anything. If he requested a young man to take his food box home and the youth was slow to obey, Potles had no hesitation in killing him on the spot. Such great power, though unusual, is intelligible to the Bella Coola, since Potles gave far more potlatches than any of his contemporaries. Other chiefs have been known to attempt a similar arbitrary use of power, but have failed, since their prestige was not great enough to justify it. The fame of a mighty chief spreads up and down the coast, and protects him and the members of his family from being ambushed and slain in any sporadic foray. During an actual fight, however, a chief had to take his chances with the rest, but the comparative immunity was a great advantage. 556* 622 [156] [628] [726]

The Bella Coola recognize the fundamental differences between their own concepts about chieftainship and those of other coastal tribes with whom they come in contact. This point was mentioned in the course of conversation by several men. The most powerful chief known to them was Tcubisa, who, they say, was virtual monarch of the Kitkatla. None of his subjects could go hunting without his permission, and he had rights to a certain share of their booty. At any ceremony presents had first to be given to him, and if he were slighted in this respect, he would kill the offender. It is be- 171 556* 622 829

[1] [See cut. 116, P 186 (c) - ANALYST]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

PLATE 11

142
231
291
516
622

Photograph by the author

A Bella Coola couple with their dogs; the one on the left is a chief.

[p 186 (c)]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

789 morning to whip his son. It is clear, however, that such was 856 regarded as proper by anyone practising this medicine, even though few did so regularly.

MEDICINES APPLIED TO YOUNG DOGS

789 To Cause Ability in Hunting

231 When a bear has been killed and the first incision made for skinning it, take a puppy, force its head inside the opening, and rub it to and fro. Throw the animal into the river and when it has swum ashore, repeat the rite. If this act is repeated four times, the dog will grow up to be a good hunter.

To Cause Ability in Hunting Beaver

Wrap the puppy in the freshly removed skin of a beaver and throw it into the river to the accompaniment of hand-clapping from as many as happen to be present. After submersion for a few moments, remove the bundle and throw it in again. Repeat this twice more. This makes the dog grow up unafraid of water and, accordingly, useful in hunting beaver.

To Cause Disregard of Musket Shots

Lay some black powder at the nose of a sleeping puppy and ignite it. The dog will grow up without fear of musket shots.

To Cause Keen Scent

Slit any kind of salmon so that the liver is exposed and hold the puppy with its nose immediately over this. Make an incision in the tip so that the blood flows freely on to the organ of the salmon. Hold the animal until flies have gathered from all directions to feast upon the fish and fresh blood.

The dog will grow up with the ability to locate game in any direction, just as flies gather wherever there is blood. He will also have their ability to travel without requiring a path. One [424] old man stated that this medicine was the property of an ancestral family, and should be used when a puppy is one month old.

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

To Cause Ability in Hunting Mountain Goats 789

Steep the freshly removed head of a fisher, wolf, or wolverine in smoke for four days. Break a hole in the top of the skull and hold the puppy's head over this; then slit its nose so that the blood drips down into the interior of the cranium. Release the dog, take the head to the mountains and bury it in the ground beneath a spot where mountain goats have been sleeping. Dig it up four days later and conceal it under a shelving rock where it is protected from the rain. 231

This medicine causes the dog to grow up with knowledge of the haunts of mountain goats as well as with the bravery of whichever animal was used. This means can be practised only by members of the ancestral families to which it belongs. [424]

To Cause Ability in Hunting Otters or Seals

Obtain the head of whichever is desired, and proceed as described for mountain goats. Instead of burying, place the skull under shelter near a creek much frequented by land otters, or near the ocean where seals are plentiful. It need not be taken up after four days.

To Cause General Ability

This medicine can be applied only by a successful hunter, who expects compensation for his assistance. It is employed when a puppy is about one month old.

Early in the morning the hunter seats himself on a box within the house of the dog's master, his legs stretched out before him. He seizes the puppy firmly and passes it, sunwise, around and under his legs four times, frequently spitting on its nose and kneading it with his hands to make that organ slender. This causes the animal to grow up with good tracking ability, while the passing makes it faithful to its master. Next the hunter seizes the dog by the hind legs and swings it four times, sunwise, over and through the smoke of the fire. This prevents it from being dizzy and afraid of precipitous mountains, but if it yelps as it travels through the air, it will be a poor dog. Finally, the hunter carries it to the river and throws

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

789 it in. He seizes as it swims ashore and throws it back once more. This is repeated four times and causes the animal to
● 231 have no fear of water.

In former times great attention was paid to the training of young dogs.

MEDICINES PERTAINING TO LOVE, MARRIAGE, AND CHILDBIRTH

832 To Cause Love

This medicine is applied by women to men, and by men to women.

Obtain a hair of the person whose love is sought, place with it one of the wooer's, and tie the two in a strip of birch-bark together with a morsel of octopus skin. This causes intense desire between the two. This medicine is usually personally applied by amorous youths.

A similar usage is to wear the two hairs next the stomach, hidden by a belt. Men, especially, do this to cause love on the part of girls whom they admire. An old Bella Coola mentioned that he had once had occasion to investigate the box of a Kimsquit man within which he found the tip of a land otter's tail, split, and containing two small tufts of hair, one the owner's, the other, his wife's. This ensured lasting devotion between the two.

To Cause Love for Oneself

A few years ago a certain Kälotl of Kimsquit used the following medicine to attract two sisters:

He made two figures, one representing a male, and the other a female. To each he tied birch-bark, octopus-skin, a few of his own hairs, and some obtained from the girls. Each figure was provided with sexual organs, and he placed them in position for sexual intercourse. This caused the two girls to desire Kälotl so madly that they almost became demented in their infatuation. Their mother, Kwa·tsua, suspected that Kälotl had been using something of the kind and searched his

[The Breaker Dance]

*575 *796 above; of sitting in one of the back corners and receiving the first food at ritual meals; of paying those on whom they [424] exercise their prerogative, and of liability to frenzy on arrival [533] of strangers. This last prerogative, if it may be so termed, [264] lasts for the ceremonial season, and in the case of a novice, for the following summer as well. Moreover, Breakers do not destroy the goods of fellow-Breakers, Scratchers, or Cannibals.

*575 *796 424 539 In view of the similarity of this rite to those already described, no effort was made to collect full details. Different Breakers have minor variations in ritual, similar to those already illustrated. The following is an account of the manner in which the Breaker, Sxek of Snuləli, performed the rite a number of years ago. As on previous occasions, it will be convenient to use the present tense, and to refer to the dancer as X. Sxek gave the following account of the origin of his prerogative.

> Long, long ago, soon after the first people had come to this earth, a marriage was about to take place in the village of Snulł-atl. At that distant period the people were so powerful that they could themselves initiate kusiut dances, and the bridegroom determined to do so in honour of the event. He chose to imitate the actions of Sänoltxmulełts Älquntäm, one of Älquntäm's sons, whom he remembered having seen throwing stones in his father's house before he, the bridegroom, was sent down to this world.[62] When goods were piled up ready for distribution as marriage presents, the man began to hurl stones around; one of them ricochetted from a box, struck his bride and killed her. This unforeseen accident solved the question of his name, as by universal consent it was decided that he should be called, Sxek, "He of the Faulty Aim."
>
> Since that time a law has been enforced that no Breaker may throw a rock except ceremonially during his dance, and the marshals punish one who disobeys this injunction. If a Breaker is in the forest with a number [231] of kukusiut, it does not matter if he fails to uphold this tradition; the essential is that the uninitiated do not see him cast a stone, even at a yelping dog, the usual reason for doing so in Bella Coola.

*575 *796 When X wishes to dance he must first obtain the consent of the marshals in the usual manner. He also arranges with kukusiut to have boxes and other wooden objects placed within [776] [62] This being is also called Nustxwamxwitam, "The Cherished One."

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

857 better than hunting birds and small animals with miniature bows and arrows, or snaring them in nooses of grass or string. Little girls make playhouses in which they cook wonderful meals of berries, with perhaps the addition of a wooden fish. On the whole, however, the children do not enter into play as boisterously as white boys and girls, nor do they seem to derive as much pleasure from it. In former times, when clothing was [152] scanty, small lads used to delight in picking nettles and beating [291] one another with the stinging branches; this must have caused considerable pain, but it was a point of honour not to cry out, and anyone, perhaps caught unaware, who showed discomfort, [526] was laughed at as a coward. Both boys and girls are fond of swinging, and even adult women sometimes find time to enjoy themselves by swaying to and fro at the end of a rope.

Young Bella Coola do not have as many toys as white children, and none of them is complex. Some girls have crude [575] wooden dolls, though elaborate figurines are reserved for use in kusiut dances. Perhaps the most cherished plaything is a [231] small puppy or, in recent years, a kitten, though the unfortunate animal is handled and mauled without consideration. A good carpenter may make for his son a wooden top or a bull-roarer, to the envy of his less fortunate friends. Both types of toys are said to be used in [575] Nusmät-a and at some kusiut dances the masked figures carry them to play with.

Fig. 2. "Toy spear."

526 There is one game, sleli, which the salmon are [825] said to delight to watch, and which is accordingly played by boys as soon as the first spring salmon have been disposed of with fitting rites. Each makes for himself, or is given by his father, a wooden spear with a projecting barb, fastened as shown in the accompanying sketch (see Fig. 2). A loop of branches is made and thrown into a pool of stagnant, or slow-moving water, on each side of which stands a rival group of competitors. At a signal, all throw their spears simultaneously, with the intention of passing them through the ring, so that the barb of each will

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

to the aesthetic, their skill in dancing and dramatics is note- 105 worthy: no one who has witnessed a native dance can fail to [535]
have been impressed by the performance of the participants and the stage-craft of the carpenters. The fact that no system [538] of writing had ever been devised has prevented the establish- [212]
ment of a native literature, but the practice of passing down [153]
an extensive folklore by word of mouth shows their narrative powers as well as their faculty for remembering details. At present it is difficult to appreciate what must have been their energy in earlier times when they faced the struggle for existence, armed with stone tools. Abundant salmon gave them [226] adequate food, but only when weirs had been built with great labour. Though game was plentiful, the hunter was equipped [224] with nothing more formidable than a bow and arrow. The simplest task required patience and skill undreamed of by the average white man. If the reader will allow his imagination to carry him backwards two hundred years, he will realize that the mere provision of food and clothing necessitated constant effort and ceaseless exertion.

Hand in hand with many admirable characteristics, the 356
Bella Coola display others which strike the white man as unprepossessing. A first impression is the untidiness of their houses. Exteriorly, they are often fairly neat, but confusion reigns within. Clothing, instead of being hung up, is left lying on the floor; bed-coverings are piled carelessly; dirty dishes cover the tables; dogs and children swarm over the floor; flies abound; all is dirty and slovenly. The house itself may be uncompleted; a window lacks glass and has been boarded up;
the roof leaks, or the steps are falling down. Nor are the surroundings more attractive. There is one struggling flower- [247] bed in the village, but elsewhere the houses are surrounded by [351] wastes of mud where horses and cattle wander, dogs prowl, and [231] children play. In the distance the mountain peaks rise in splendour, but near at hand all is squalid and unkempt.

They are only slightly more particular about their personal 515 appearance. Dirt does not distress them. They wash occa-

515 sionally, in a half-hearted manner, but it is not unusual for a man to allow the basin of water in which he makes his ablutions to remain standing for two or three weeks. Not many [177] years ago the Carriers taught their neighbours to make a kind [296] of soap from the ashes of burnt cottonwood sticks thrown into [388] water; with this clothes are washed irregularly and in most cases from sheer necessity only. In former times bathing was [783] a semi-sacred rite, but this fell into disuse with the passing of [177] the old religion, and the use of soap and water merely for the sake of cleanliness has not become a daily habit. The women [291] have more vanity; the younger girls especially like to have new clothes, though they wear them carelessly, heedless of fit. [796] An effort is often made to clean up for ceremonial dances, but it entails little more than the removal of the more obvious dirt and the putting on, over unchanged undergarments, of a sweater. Pride in personal appearance, love of tidiness, delight in a clean house, are all quite foreign to the Bella Coola.

356 Probably the reason for lack of comforts in the houses is simply that the people do not feel the need for them. They [264] consider it no hardship to sit on a rickety chair, scoop up food [231] from a common dish and, if they think of it, throw morsels down to the dog or the cat. The smell, the flies, the dirt, the [152] chaos do not concern them. Capable of undergoing privations, hardships, and even sufferings, they think neither of the com-
231 fort of themselves nor of others. Their domestic animals are often treated abominably, not through lack of affection or cruelty, but from callousness. More than once the writer has seen a favourite dog steal a piece of food from the table. Its master, after a furious blow or kick at it, would suddenly, as if by inspiration, throw a choice bit to the animal, saying:

"Why, he must have been hungry!"

Though the Bella Coola feel a kinship with animals unknown to the white man, it is not combined with any recognition of their feelings as living creatures. There are, of course, [577] many exceptions, but on the whole public opinion demands generosity and kindness only towards human members of the group. The moral code is not concerned with animals.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

133 tains. From each pocket between these mountains an ice-cold affluent comes swirling down to the main river. The 137 predominant tree in the river valleys is the cedar[4] which in many cases attains great girth and height. Cottonwoods flourish in places, and everywhere there is an almost impenetrable undergrowth of devil's club, berry bushes, and other shrubbery of almost tropical density. On the lower slopes of the mountains, moss-festooned pines and spruces are the most common trees, gradually becoming smaller and fewer until the 133 barren peaks are reached. The mountains rise so precipitously that their snowcaps and glaciers seem to overhang the valley, a narrow ribbon of green winding far below. The range of vision from the bank of the river is limited by the all-encircling mountains. Here and there a distant vista opens up to expose peak after peak, but on the whole there is a feeling of confinement, in contrast with the open wastes of the upper country where the Bella Coola rises. Mountains, forests, flowing water, these are the three dominant impressions of the country (see Plate 6).

136 The mammals of central British Columbia, although comparatively common, have never been of primary importance.
[291] The marten, the wolverine, the lynx, and bears, both black and grizzly, were formerly hunted for their skins to serve as [262] cloaks. Deer were killed whenever possible, but formed a negligible item of diet. The beaver also was prized for its [439] flesh. The skins of moose and caribou were traded from the Carrier Indians, but neither of these animals was found in the [286] Bella Coola area. The mammal of greatest economic importance was the mountain goat, the wool of which was woven into [237] blankets. Smoked goat meat was formerly found in every [251] house and was almost the only flesh available during the winter. Small game was abundant, but seals were a luxury.
[262] Neither were birds of great importance to the Bella Coola.
[223] Members of the tribe resident near the sea-coast used to kill

[4]Appendix C contains a glossary of the scientific names of the flora and fauna mentioned in this monograph.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

quantities of ducks and geese, and the inhabitants of the inland villages sometimes made hunting expeditions to the nesting places of wild-fowl in the lakes of the interior uplands. Although numbers of birds were sometimes killed in this way, they were never a steady article of diet. The same is true of grouse. Always plentiful, these birds were commonly killed, but never in large numbers.

The basis of the food supply was fish. The river teemed with salmon, which enabled the country to support its relatively large population. Spring, sockeye, hump-back, dog, and cohoe salmon, all entered the river in thousands during the spring and summer, while the steel-head could be caught throughout the year. They were taken in weirs and their flesh smoked for winter use. Throughout the year, salmon was the principal article of diet. Second in importance was the olachen, a fish somewhat resembling a herring, which entered the river in great numbers during April or May. They were taken in purse-like nets,* allowed to rot for ten days or two weeks, and then boiled. The grease was skimmed off and kept indefinitely to be used as a relish for other foods. It was always a sign of poverty if a person were obliged to eat berries without olachen grease. Trout and bull-heads were found in the river, but were not sufficiently plentiful to be of importance.

Although no form of agriculture was practised, the Bella Coola used vegetable food to a considerable extent. Berries were abundant; some were eaten raw, but many more were pounded into a pulpy mass and dried in the sun. Cakes prepared in this way kept indefinitely and formed one of the regular winter foods. The bark of the hemlock and cottonwood was eaten, as well as the roots of many plants. In recent years many of these have not been used, so that an investigator is apt to overlook their great importance in early times. Although useless for food, the cedar was the corner-stone of Bella Coola material culture. From its trunk were split out, with wedges, the wide planks which formed

*See Appendix A for a description of olachen fishing.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

He is especially rich in caribou-skins, used for foot covering, and goat-skins, so treasured for their wool.[1] He and his wife have laid up abundant food, and, most important of all, his wife's family is wealthy. Rumours have spread that X will soon give a potlatch and perhaps one or more foreign chiefs has given him a large cone-shaped whistle, such as is used in swaok ritual (see Plate 12). These whistles, called qomo·ts, are often referred to as the "breath" or "voice" of a chief; they are also called sloptsta, the "heart" or "wind" of a chief; a third designation is nulwinuts. X carefully conceals a whistle in one of his boxes. Such a present expresses the kindly feeling existing between those akin to one another in that they have risen to a position of eminence above the common crowd. Its receipt spurs a man to greater efforts to amass the wealth necessary for giving a potlatch by keeping before his eyes the realization of what another has done. A rival chief never gives such a present. X returns each whistle secretly at the time of his potlatch.

Early in the autumn X decides that he has almost enough wealth. To complete the essential amount he will not hesitate to borrow from his friends. It is most unusual to be refused, for it is incumbent on X, unless he wishes to lose the esteem of the community, to repay his borrowings with heavy interest, and when X distributes his goods at his potlatch it will be announced how he has obtained them, and the lender is proclaimed as a person of sufficient wealth to be able to spare some of it. Goods so loaned are termed "belt goods," a reference to the manner in which a man fastens up his cape with a belt before setting to work. The assumption is that X will have to labour to repay his indebtedness. Failure to repay is a serious matter, and the lender would be justified in seizing a canoe or other valuable article as surety for his debt; in fact, feuds are commonly caused by unpaid debts. Men of business

[1] Formerly, when goat-skin blankets were highly valued, goats were never shot for fear of the blood staining the wool. Instead, they were cornered by dogs, and choked to death in nooses. For presentation, each skin was laid out on the floor and then cut into longitudinal strips, two, three, or four fingers wide.

Pre-
* 556 sently the guests assemble, those who are usual wearing on [575] their heads one or more weasel skins as a mark of membership [237] in the society. Each takes the seat to which he is entitled, [292] the chiefs behind the fire, or on either side of it, the commoners, [554] slaves, and foreigners in the two corners nearest the door. The heralds move to and fro between door and fire, their constant exchange of remarks adding to the general interest of the affair. It is the function of a herald to lend dignity to chiefs by [203] the tone of his observations, but should one fail to live up to his station, the herald is privileged to comment thereon. In some respects his position approximates that of a buffoon, but as a herald always receives valuable presents, the office is sometimes accepted by ambitious young men, willing to undertake the slightly derogatory duties in return for the substantial gain.

264 A number of young lads, friends or relatives of X, distribute the food. It is placed in boxes; an important chief is not called
* 556 upon to share with any one, whereas six or seven men of no [883] standing may partake from one box. These receptacles, with whatever food remains in them, are taken home by the guests; otherwise the host would be insulted. Many boxes are lost in [578] this way, a source of considerable irritation. After the first course, a second follows, consisting of a different kind of food in another box, and in some cases there is a third, and even a fourth course. A chief must never appear stingy. The more he gives, the more does his prestige increase. Also, a man who gives freely receives abundantly, so that generosity brings its reward.

583 Next, the father or other male relative of X's wife, or a
* 556 fluent friend who speaks for him, stands up and makes a speech, [537] extolling the fame of his own family by sketching in general
[425] outlines one of the myths of his ancestors, and announcing that X's wife is taking to her husband some portion of it. This may [424] be the prerogative of using a spoon carved, for example, with [532] the shape of a beaver; or a carved box, or a totem-pole with certain figures on it, or the right to use a painting of a grizzly bear on the wall of his house, or an ancestral name.

Poor people, white guests, or others from whom no return can 553 possibly be received, share equally in the distribution; the 556* money goes to all to validate the transaction. On the other 575 hand, X expects that the presents, if any, made to a few individuals after the general distribution, will be returned with interest. In selecting the recipients of these he has been animated, first, by the necessity of repaying old debts, and secondly by his desire to make good investments in the shape of presents to those likely to show their chiefly nature by returning with heavy interest. No request is ever made for such repayment, but as the transaction has been publicly announced, a man fears to fail to repay, since that would lower his prestige. No one may refuse a present, no matter how embarrassing it may be. [558]

After the gifts have been distributed the songs of the initiates are practised. Members of the nuuk society join in with the singers; the other spectators listen attentively, full of interest, but take no part. X with his helpers then gives food to all, and they depart. [533]

Before the coming of the white man a potlatch was a rare 535 event, and nuuk members were initiated at local gatherings. 556*
The period of confinement was the same as that just described, 575 but instead of merely practising the songs during the interval, 177 the initiates appeared and danced to them. It will be convenient here to describe that ritual, emphasizing the fact that at a potlatch, when the initiates can be confirmed in the presence of foreign guests, this preliminary rite does not take place.

After the distribution of goods the singers beat out* the 292 tune of any one of the initiates, and all emerge in close suc- 595 cession from the back-room, each wearing a blanket, without 556* distinctive design, a collar of dyed and pounded cedar-bark 575 decorated with pendant weasel skins, and the distinctive nuuk 237 head-dress (see Plate 15).[1] This consists of a circlet of grizzly bear claws, surmounted in front by a small forehead mask; from the inner side of the circlet there rise a number of sea-lion

*The present tense is used for uniformity.

[1] [See ill. 116, facing p 218 - ANALYST]

292 whiskers over which is scattered eagle down. From the back 535 of the head-dress hang weasel skins. In Bella Bella it is said to be customary for a skin to be added on every occasion when a * 556 sisaek is confined to the back-room. This may happen as many 575 as fifteen times to the child of wealthy parents, and a few Bella Coola have adopted the practice of marking each with a skin.
[237] Usually, some six or nine are hung in two tiers, without consideration of the number of times the wearer has been in seclusion. The central figure of the forehead mask is a head with [532] a hooked nose, the recurved hook being joined to the face itself. This figure does not vary with the wearer's ancestral myth, and no one knows what it represents. This design is [177] said to have been introduced to Bella Coola from the north a few generations ago; before that time the head-dress consisted [237] of a circular band of dyed cedar-bark, decorated with the tail [824] feathers of one of the large woodpeckers. The Bella Coola call it simply, "forehead mask." Each initiate carries a hollow [532] rattle, carved in the shape of a bird, which he holds in his right [534] hand, belly uppermost. Long, long ago, when a dancer failed to do so, the rattle became alive and the bird flew away; hence, this rule has been obeyed ever since.

535 Each initiate takes up his station in some part of the house behind the fire and dances to the beating of the sticks. The
* 556 left hand of each is clasped behind his back and in his right he 575 holds the rattle and keeps it in constant motion by shaking his wrist. Ability to do this is one of the marks of a good dancer.
Keeping the body stiff and the legs close together, he rises with slight jumps, barely altering his position on the floor. Sometimes he slowly turns around sunwise[11] in his series of jumps, at other times he does not alter his position. The head is bent from side to side and downwards at each jump, causing the eagle down to fly in all directions. Sisaek assistants blow more of the material on to the head-dress at intervals (see Plate 16).

[821] [11] The Bella Coola believe that the sun moves from east to south to west to [796] north. Many ceremonial movements follow this direction, which will henceforth be described as sunwise.

[See cat 116, facing p 219 - ANALYSIS]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

go to the homes of their friends in the village; it is a matter of convenience, not of ritual. 556* [574]

In the evening, there may be no rite of any kind, but X often invites everyone to his house for the performance of non-ceremonial dances. The singers strike up one of his susook or a'alk (I, p. 273) tunes and he dances to it. Then a tune belonging to one of his relatives is beaten out, and he too dances. After several have thus performed, a meal is served and all disperse. No supernatural beings are in attendance, hence there is no solemnity to the occasion; the evening's rites merely serve to show the guests the dances owned by their host and his family. 535 556*

As each party of guests arrives the same procedure is repeated. X provides food for those who have assembled from day to day, so he anxiously awaits the last-comers. When at last they come the guests from all other towns are in their allotted sections of X's house, and are free to make gibes at the tardiness of those latest in appearing. Occasionally, hard feelings are engendered in this way, although it is an established custom to mock at the last to arrive. They seat themselves and a small amount of food is given them. 556* 574 [628]

RITUAL CARRIED OUT BY THE GUESTS

Two youths, chosen by X for the purpose, sprinkle eagle down over the heads of all those present, as far as possible blowing it first over the chiefs. It serves as a token of good-will, and marks also the ceremonial nature of the occasion. Then a leading susook, perhaps a siki, stands up and says in effect: 556* [788] [237] [575]

"Thank you for coming. You are welcome. We thank you for coming to witness what X has done. He is delighted to have you here, because he has lost many of his relatives and wishes to perpetuate their memory. They would be grieved if he did not do so."

An elaborate meal is now served by a number of young men. [264]

1: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

237
532
575

PLATE 15

Sisiook head-dress

[facing p 218]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*556 flesh cut from the body is fastened to the point of the spear,
*773 making it so potent that when next the chief lunges at a salmon he transfixes it and brings it ashore. He warms the fish at a fire and then pounds it on a stone until it becomes a copper.

No Bella Coola has visited this distant river for many generations and the belief concerning the manufacture of ʇaitaimx̣ appears to have been handed down from dim antiquity. Coppers of this kind are said to have been considered much more valuable than the usual łälia, but were always uncommon. In addition to their ordinary uses, they had a certain curative value. If the owner of one was ill, he used to clean it [755] with a rough stone and water; then he would drink four cupfuls of the liquid which contained minute fragments of metal. In almost every case a speedy recovery followed. In all other respects łälia or taitaimx̣ could be used indiscriminately.

Łälia are likewise said to have a supernatural origin. When found in the forest, they are due to the supernatural salmon-[776] like being, sisiutł, having changed itself into one. None has been found in recent years because the sisiutł have moved away owing to their dislike of the smell of human footsteps and the taint of smoke.

These stories serve to emphasize the complete ignorance of [325] the Bella Coola concerning the methods of manufacturing coppers. It is possible that long ago they were able to make their own by pounding the native metal, but if so it is surprising that some traditions to this effect were not preserved. On the other hand, there is little reason to doubt their use of [177] coppers, obtained from the northern tribes, antedating the coming of the whites. All informants agreed on this point, and the frequent references to coppers in mythology likewise point to considerable age. In many of the ancestral myths there are accounts of the obtaining of coppers by some of the [551] first people, and many ancestral names, both of men and women, are derived from them.

[237] The Bella Coola attribute the value of coppers to the fact

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924)1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

of their occurrence in most ancestral myths.[4] There seems to be no mythological explanation for the casting of a copper into the fire after the passing of the representation of a deceased relative, but the desire of chiefs to use them at potlatches is the result of their use under similar circumstances by their ancestors. Some ancestral myths lack reference to coppers, but their use is common to all, whether or not embodied in such. It is said to be easier for a chief to acquire coppers if they had been used by his ancestors, but this is not essential. 556* 773 [769]

When arranging for the appearance of a dead relative, the donor of a potlatch is careful either to possess a copper, or to be able to borrow one at the right moment. As soon as the masked figure has disappeared, the donor stands up, breaks or bends his copper, and throws it into the fire "to make bone for the deceased." No matter how valuable a copper may have been, it is now worthless; its value has been expended on the purpose for which it has just been employed. It lies unheeded in the flames, a valueless article belonging to no one. 556* 769

At some convenient time, either hours or days later, any chief may remove the copper and give it to a poor man, only taking care to choose an individual who has not recently received one. It is said that the gift is "to patch his canoe." It is now the poor man's property, but it has no value, since no goods have been expended for it. The new owner straightens and repairs it, if necessary by riveting on the broken piece, thus making it ready for further use. The poor man may keep the copper for years, or it may be only a few weeks before some chief, preparing for a potlatch, offers, perhaps, $20, for it. In the old days, values were computed in slaves, canoes, salmon, and other commodities, but now in dollars. If two chiefs should happen to want it, the poor man may haggle about the price, though in such a case the two rivals would probably agree amicably rather than lower their dignity by seeming to be interested in a matter of money. It is to the advantage of a 556* [735] [325] 435 556* 437

[4]Abalone-shells and moosehides are treasured for the same reason; the former are mentioned in several origin myths, the latter in two at least. [237]

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*539 manner in which he had shielded them from the falling fish. Sonxwaāks alone kept his original name.

When returning they made presents of abalone-shell[42] to everyone they met, and reaching Kimsquit they made very valuable gifts to all the people. The four had been absent about six months, and as they approached their home the three elder brothers poked fun at Älusqox, saying:

"You will find that your wife has gone to another husband while ours will be waiting for us."

They found the reverse to be true. Älusqox's wife alone had remained faithful to her absent husband; all the others had taken new consorts. The three fickle wives regretted what they had done as soon as they saw the wealth brought back by their former husbands but it was too late to change their course, so they were left lamenting. Many people were rather jealous of Sonxwaāks's success, but he distributed valuable presents to all. Soon after this the three brothers married new wives, refusing to take back their former ones, much as the latter desired it.

Another informant stated that the first settler at this village was a single man, Swaāks, who brought a stone hammer as a present from Älquntām.

ORIGIN MYTH OF Nutsqwalt[43]

In the beginning of time Älquntām sent down to the Dean River four brothers, ıyuyuyut, Yeälos, Spänbätlinaix, Twalosdimut, and their sister Sximāna. They brought with them a herald, Nusqwalaix, who was a kingfisher, and two men, Xomtsla and Qwlaiyu, who had the prerogative of dancing at weddings. The five came as black bears, and for a long time retained that form. Yeälos carried with him from Nusmāt-a several moosehides, a stone axe, some dyed cedar-bark, sticks for making fire, and the prerogative of a kusiut dance. After tarrying a few days at their landing place, the party set out down the river, with Nusqwalaix flying in front as guide. He was a kingfisher at the time and used to make short flights with quivering wings, and then stop until his bear friends had caught up with him, exactly as those birds do at the present time when a canoe travels up a river. On reaching Nutsqwalt, "The Place of Many Spawning Sockeye Salmon," about a mile and a quarter from the mouth of the river, on the south-east side, they camped for the night.

[237] [301] [435]

[42]This was formerly valued very highly, both for its use as beads and ornaments, and because it had to be imported from a great distance.

[43]Related by Jim Pollard.

1:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

000 the perils of infancy. During this period, the mother observes 846 various magical taboos to ensure the welfare of her offspring,
237 and endeavours to strengthen herself by rubbing her own body with non-odoriferous oils obtained from dog-fish, geese, or fresh
853 olachen. Soft pounded salmon and water are added to an infant's diet as soon as possible, though nourishment from the breast frequently continues until a child is two, or even three 862 years of age. It is not uncommon to delay weaning until the mother is again pregnant, when the child is deterred by the application of soot to the breasts. Marital relations are recom-
846 menced as soon as the mother is strong enough; there is no specified period of abstinence, nor does it matter whether or not the woman is lactative.

845 Occasionally, an infant is born with teeth; such an one is thought to be the reincarnation of a dead ancestor, though no one knows which. A similar belief is held respecting a child with dimples in the lobes of its ears; these are regarded as remnants of the holes pierced for ear-rings. A child that cries in the womb is said to have great intellect.

847 In former times infanticide was practised for various reasons. If a woman died in giving birth, it was customary for her mother to kill the child unless one of her relatives was able to suckle the motherless infant who was then given to her. It was not unknown for the mother of a large family to ask the midwife to kill the child in order to avoid an addition to her responsibilities. An unmarried girl who became pregnant
[848] often went alone to the forest, delivered herself without assistance, and killed her infant. This was considered to be the kindest act, since an illegitimate child was said to be, "Like a Dog." In some cases the prospective mother requested a friend to cause abortion by kneading the stomach and uterus, a method said to be effective and seldom fatal. How to do
[195] so is common knowledge, but to practise it is considered disgraceful, and the term ixwotl, applied to such an one, is among 842 the most foul of Bella Coola opprobriums. It is believed that a woman who has had several children can in some way prevent

*575 not considered necessary. With few exceptions, hereafter to 796 be noted, kusiut masks are burnt at the conclusion of each
532 ceremony, a practice which probably originated in order to [171] avoid the possibility of their being seen by the uninitiated. The Bella Coola state that this is one of the most striking differences between their rites and those of the Bella Bella.

*575 Next in importance to masks are whistles (see Plate 2).[1]
796 The large, cone-shaped form used in sisaok ceremonial is re-
534 placed in kusiut dances by a smaller type consisting of portions of wood glued together, which can be blown with ease from beneath a concealing blanket. Another type has bellows con-
[237] sisting of a mountain goat bladder, which is held beneath the arm-pit so that it can be worked invisibly. During the summer the whistles are kept by one individual, usually a [422] marshal. Specific information concerning the ownership of these whistles could not be obtained; it appears that any kusiut can make one, or have one made for him by a skilled carpenter, and that their retention by one person during the [426] summer is merely for convenience. They are freely lent to anyone for use in a ceremony.

*575 In some dances special objects are used in connection with 796 dramatic performances, such as bull-roarers, wooden repre-
532 sentations of animals, birds, or miniature human beings. One old man described a pipe formerly used at Täl·io, which had [534] a carved bowl as large as a tea-cup with three radiating stems.
[824] It was carved from a knotty excrescence on a beech bole. Little could be learnt of its history, except that it was supposed to have been carved by a chief with the design of his patron and displayed through pride.

*575 The usual guests at a performance of the type just sum-
609 marized are the dancer's fellow-villagers and any strangers
796 who happen to be present in the town. Great as is the desire of the kukusiut to impress their uninitiated tribesmen, they [648] are still more eager to impress strangers, hence the presence [123] of Carriers adds piquancy to the rites. The writer believes that his presence and interest encouraged the Bella Coola to

[1] [see category 116, p 84(B) - ANALYST]

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

*575 call is that something strange has happened to the "mortal." At intervals throughout the day he repeats this announcement, 203 and towards nightfall goes around calling:
796 Skinap, skinap, kukusiaot, "Cure, cure, ye members of the kusiut society, power has come to the son of the chief [or to the mortal]."

The kukusiut assemble in X's house, taking their places around the fire; the uninitiated crowd near the doorway. X is seated among his relatives and some of the senior members of the society behind the fire. A herald calls out:

"I want a siki to help X."

*575 In every village there are at least two kukusiut who have, embodied with their kusiut names, the professional prerogative 791 of acting as healer to every novice; it is believed that the 796 ancestor of each obtained a name and this right through a [424] revelation from some supernatural healer. Since that time the owner of the name has been able to insert some of his own ever- [773] present power into a neophyte to enable him to sustain the dangers of admission to the society. This is the fiction taught to the uninitiated. The profession of siki can be trans- [425] mitted by willing like any other prerogative and it occasionally happens that the same individual is siki for both kusiut and susook. In answer to the herald's call, the two siki come forward and crouch behind the fire, one on either side of it. [302] Their faces are blackened with soot, and each wears a blanket, [292] decorated with dyed cedar-bark, thrown loosely over his [237] shoulders, leaving the chest and stomach bare except for an apron of deer hooves or puffin beaks. Meanwhile beating sticks are distributed among most of the kukusiut who strike furiously on the floor with them, without any attempt to keep time; the sole object is to produce the greatest din possible.

One of the siki contorts himself in an amazing manner, presses his hands against his stomach as if to force something from it, and rolls from side to side on his haunches, until at length he produces, as if from his body, a rock crystal (see Plate 3).[1] He waves this to and fro in his hands, then goes

[1] [see category 116, p 84(C)- ANALYST]

[Kusiut Society Initiation]

X sometimes receives two prerogatives at his initiation, one from each parent, 575* or from some other interested relative. In this case both are 796 expounded. The singers listen intently, knowing that they [425] will later be called upon to compose songs on the theme, or [553] themes. According to some informants they immediately sing [533] one, as if they had just created it, though it was really prepared in advance. The kukusiut listen until they have mastered it.

Helpers now distribute the food provided by X's father, 575* or whoever is responsible for his initiation. At every kusiut 796 ceremonial the marshals are the first recipients, then the 556 singers, and finally the others without distinction. As the [264] guests are eating, X's father gives presents to all, without deference to rank. An announcer calls out:

"Here are [for example] ten bear-skins from X's mother. They are to obtain for him his cedar-bark bracelets."

These goods are then distributed. Similarly other gifts from various relatives are handed out for his anklets, his blanket, his collar, his head-dress, and all other parts of his clothing. As each item of his ceremonial costume is validated, [425]
X dons the prepared article. A novice's head-dress consists [292] of a round roll of dyed cedar-bark, covering a grass frame; in [184] Stuix and the other villages of the upper valley this is decorated with a tuft of swan's down. The kukusiut of these villages [237] also wear a distinctive decoration consisting of a swan's skin with the feathers attached. In recent years it has been customary to pile all the goods together and distribute them as älq̄-ll, which has the significance of "something that has vanished for the novice's dyed cedar-bark." Theoretically, the aim of the donor is to bestow his presents on all equally, but if he finds that he has some remaining, he gives these to the chiefs, or to the relatives of someone whom he expects will soon be a novice. None of the goods used in general distributions are returnable, but a chief who receives an extra gift at the end usually remembers from whom it was received and cancels his indebtedness at the earliest opportunity. There is no close connection between the disbursements and the worth of the

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

[The Dance of Noakxnim]

if he so desires. The kukusiut listen to the song, and when it is resung they join in. They practise it repeatedly, until familiar with both words and tune. This part of the ceremony lasts for about two hours. 575* 796* [533]

The singers, and any others who are prepared to beat time, are always provided with long, flat, thin sounding-boards to increase the din of the pounding. When the marshals decide that the song is sufficiently familiar, they tell some of the kukusiut to carry these boards to the lowest house of the village. They do this, and also scatter clean sand on the floor, as is customary whenever a supernatural being is to enter. The uninitiated persons within the house watch with great interest. The singers enter and take their places behind the fire, then other kukusiut and finally X himself; his face is unblackened, but he wears his two eagle tails in his hair and a collar of dyed cedar-bark. On his head is a thin cylindrical circlet, about four inches high, of the same material, ornamented with swan's down by the inhabitants of the villages of the upper Bella Coola valley. The collar consists of a roll of grass, entirely covered with dyed cedar-bark from which pendant tassels of the same hang down over his chest; similar ones are worn by sisaok dancers, except that the tassels hang down their backs. Every kusiut dancer wears these two ornaments, and those who have the necessary prerogative adorn themselves with an apron of deer hooves or puffin beaks. Blankets are always worn. Kukusiut women wear in addition woollen pubic garments. [292] [534] 575* 796* 292 [424] [237]

As the singers beat out X's tune, accompanied by the voices of themselves and other kukusiut, he dances. Since his style is typical of all kukusiut except Cannibals and a few others, it will be well to digress at this point in order to describe it. X raises his arms until their upper parts are approximately the height of his shoulders, and project outwards and slightly to the front; they are bent at the elbows with the forearms vertical, thus bringing the hands opposite the top of the head. Both wrists are shaken constantly, the muscles of the lower 575* 796* 535

shals tells a herald to call them in; they enter joyfully, though somewhat fearfully, and stand or crouch on either side of the doorway. In Kimsquit they gaze on the masks, wondering what they are. The singers strike up the first of X's songs and he dances, while singers and kukusiut men sing the words and the women drone. To the uninitiated it appears most impressive and desirable, while even the prosaic white man can hardly remain indifferent. At intervals a whistle, which the uninitiated believe to be the voice of the call, sounds eerily from beneath the armpit of a reliable kusiut. After a short interval, X's second song is sung, and so in succession the eight. Then the singers strike up any well-remembered tune, perhaps one used last year, and the owner dances. This is repeated for eight or ten songs. At later qotlim, every kusiut who has had a call during the season must dance; the ceremony tends, therefore, to become longer and longer as time goes on, although the singing of the songs of a previous year is omitted. When enough performers have danced, a shaman's song is often sung and the owner dances "to clear the house." At this point the uninitiated spectators are told to withdraw. Then a meal is served to the sisaok who, as members of a similar organization, are honoured guests and have been seated together in a corner, resplendent in their weasel-skin ornaments. After their departure, the kukusiut eat more leisurely, while one marshal after another advises them as to their conduct. Then presents of comparatively small value are distributed. The marshals would consider it unbecoming for X to provide over-lavishly. The first gifts are to the singers, the next to the makers of the masks. Though these presents are, in essence, pay, they are never thought of in that light; X is under obligations, X has cleared himself of those obligations, is the Bella Coola attitude. When all is over, X once more dances to one of his softly sung songs. Then one of the marshals calls out to open the door and the guests disperse, except the novices who sleep in X's house.

2:McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

the packers were to meet them. They were not due to arrive for several hours, so Sänuxımäxots cooked the goat and had a plentiful meal ready for his followers. They asked whether he had had any luck, and he answered casually that his son had killed one, but when they expressed regret at his lack of fortune, Sänuxımäxots pointed to the pile of dead goats, visible in the distance, and said: 539* 224

"See what my son killed."

Never before had there been such a slaughter of goats at one time, and it was obvious that no time could be lost if the meat was to be smoked before winter. Fortunately, there was a large cave in the vicinity where they established their headquarters. The packers were divided into two parties; some brought in the carcasses, while others kept a fire smouldering, tended the drying meat, and boiled out the grease. It was a slow process and there was a heavy snowfall before it was finished. The snow drifted into the narrow valley to such a depth that it was impossible to think of leaving. The beleaguered hunters were well provided with food; melted snow gave them water, and the cave was sufficient shelter, so their confinement was more irksome than dangerous. Nor did it prove profitless. The smell of food attracted two martens which were so unafraid that they were killed with sticks. All the hunters began to make traps which soon provided them with enough skins to make several of the much-prized blankets. 539* [251] [237]

So the winter dragged away. The wife of one of the packers had a reputation for faithlessness and her husband's companions used to tease him by saying that his wife would have remarried before he got home. This wore on his nerves until he determined to try to reach the village in spite of the snow. He constructed a pair of snow-shoes and set out, carrying with him enough marten-skins for four blankets, packed in a sack made from the stomach of one of the goats. The journey was less difficult than he had feared; he camped for one night, and reached his own village soon after dusk of the next day. Looking through the doorway, he saw his father throwing food into the fire and realized that someone must have died. He called out anxiously, but his parent, who had long since abandoned hope for his son's safety, could not believe that his voice was real, and was not convinced until he actually stood before him. The long-absent one asked for whom the food was being thrown on the fire, and his father replied: [481]

"For you. We thought you must be dead and have burnt almost all your personal possessions."

"That does not matter," replied the son. "We have plenty of meat, grease, and furs."

2: McIlwraith E-5 (1922-1924) 1948
NE6 Bellacoola NE6

*539 [237] As soon as the weather moderated, the rest of the party returned, each carrying enough marten skins for at least one blanket. Some had so many that three or four cloaks could be made, in addition to the large supplies of smoked goat meat and grease.

THE SUCCESS OF A LAZY HUNTER

*539 224 [177] [411] [439] In the early days, when the visit of a trading vessel to Bella Coola was a rare event, it is remembered that an Ăsăn·ăn·i chief bought a musket from the captain of the Beaver. He paid for it a pile of beaver-skins which, when stacked up, was equal in height to the length of the weapon. This was one of the first muskets owned by a Bella Coola and the chief took great care of it, never treating it roughly, and hanging it with ropes from the roof of his house whenever he was not actually using it. One day a certain Snăkelt asked the owner to lend him the musket to hunt goats. This was no slight request, and it was surprising, since Snăkelt was not a hunter, but merely packed in meat killed by others. At first the chief was unwilling to allow his prized weapon out of his sight, but at last consented when Snăkelt promised to give him half the goats that he might kill.

Snăkelt probably thought that even temporary possession of the mysterious musket would make it possible for him to kill goats, but when he had climbed up into the mountains, and stalked for hours, he had not succeeded even in approaching one. He knew that if he returned home, unsuccessful and without some plausible excuse, he would be laughed to scorn, so he determined to cover his failure. First he beat the musket on a boulder until it was bent and battered, then he took a sharp rock and pounded himself until he was covered with blood from head to foot, as if he had been caught in a land-slide. When near the village, he lay down on the ground and called faintly for help; at first the people could not locate the sound, but after a short search someone found the would-be hunter, apparently in the last stages of exhaustion. Help was called, and Snăkelt carried home, moaning feebly and saying that he would die. He could just whisper that he had been caught in a slide on the other side of the mountain, this explanation being necessary since no one had heard one in the near vicinity. As the apparent sufferer was lying in his house, one man noticed that the patient's wounds were from gashes, not from bruises, and loudly protested that Snăkelt must have mutilated himself to conceal his lack of success. Everyone came crowding around and agreed that this must be the case; Snăkelt finally admitted the deception and congratulated his discoverer on his powers of observation. After a few days, he was as well as ever, but the chief had lost his precious musket.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15
Sekani NE14

Abies sp.

Northern Carrier: Bark boiled in water and the decoction taken internally as a purgative.

Gum used as an ointment on wounds, and especially on burns.

Sikani: Gum applied to wounds.

Gitksan: Juicy inner bark, scraped from the trunk of the tree, after removal of the outer bark, taken internally for constipation.

Gum from the bark blisters taken internally as a purgative and diuretic for "consumption," gonorrhoea, and many other serious ailments. Applied externally to cuts and sores, especially the sores of gonorrhoea.

The young cones, obtainable in August, sliced across, mashed, and used for the same purposes as the gum from the bark blisters.

See also fern, page 48.

Pseudotsuga taxifolia Britt., Douglas Fir

Bella Coola: Gum boiled and taken internally, while warm, as a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Gum, spread on red cedar bark, applied to cuts. (One informant said that although gum of scrub pine (see page 49), hemlock (see page 51), and tideland spruce (see page 51) were good, Douglas fir gum made cuts worse.)

Gum mixed with dogfish (shark) oil or, if that were not available, eulachon oil, taken, two spoonfuls at a time, with warm water, as an emetic and purgative for colds, rheumatism, gonorrhoea, constipation, intestinal pains, and diarrhoea.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Tsuga heterophylla (Raf.) Sarg., Western Hemlock, and Tsuga Mertensiana Carr, Mountain Hemlock

Bella Coola: Leaves chewed and applied to burns.

See also scrub pine (page 49).

Gum warmed and applied to cuts. Not boiled for a diuretic for gonorrhoea.

Burning twigs applied to the skin for various internal ailments.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Picea sitchensis Carr., Tideland Spruce

Bella Coola: Tips of small, but not of large, spruces mixed with blue currant (Ribes bracteosum Dougl.), young juneberry (Amelanchier florida Lindl.), and crushed branches (leaves and stems) of garden snowberry (Symphoricarpus racemosa Michx.), boiled and taken internally for gonorrhoea.

Sap from the peeled trunk taken in doses of from half a cup to a cupful as a laxative from May to August.

5: Smith E-5 (1920-1923)1929 NE6 Bellacoola NE6
Carrier NE7
Tsimshian NE15

T 137
757
[828]
[756]

Smoke from the burning roots inhaled for bad dreams, influenza, and rheumatism (a remedy avoided by medicine men, lest it destroy their magical power). Roots themselves considered poisonous.

Leaves used to sit or lie on when taking a sweat bath for rheumatism; also spread over the afflicted parts.

Calla palustris L., WATER ARUM

Gitksan: Roots well boiled and the decoction taken internally for cleaning the eyes of the blind, for hemorrhage, for short breath, and influenza.

B
C
T 137
757

LILIACEAE, LILY FAMILY

Clintonia uniflora Kunth., QUEENS CUP

Bella Coola: Boiled and used to wash the body. One leaf toasted and applied as a poultice to eyes or wounds.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Not used.

Smilacina racemosa L., FALSE SOLOMON'S SEAL

Bella Coola: Not used.

Southern Carrier: Not used.

Gitksan: Roots boiled and decoction taken internally as a very strong medicine for rheumatism, sore back, and kidney trouble. A purgative. Bark and leaves useless. Roots mashed and bound on cuts.

T [752]

Veratrum viride Ait., FALSE HELLEBORE

Bella Coola: Small bulbs or scrapings of large bulbs, boiled, and one cupful or less of the decoction, according to the strength of the patient, taken internally for chronic cough, gonorrhoea, constipation, pain in the stomach, and many illnesses. Two or three cupfuls acted as an emetic. Said to be poisonous if eaten raw.

B
C 137
757

